But to return unto the Turks, having thus taken Ramagista and Nicoles, on which the whole Island did depend, all other Cities of it, and the whole by consequence, were forced to submit to the Turkish Tyranny. The Noblemen, and Citizens of principal quality, either most cruelly massacred in the Sack of those Towns, or banished for ever their Native Country, as men whose living there might possibly endanger their new Conquest. But the Country People, Artificers, and Per-tops of inferior rank, permitted to enjoy both their Lives and Livelihoods, together with their several and respective Religions in the same manner as before: paying such ordinary Taxes as were laid upon them. And so, this goodly Island came into the hands of the Turks, who have hitherto enjoyed the possession of it. For notwithstanding that the Venetians in the year next following, with the help of the Pope and King of Spain, gave the Turks that great and memorable overthrow, at the famous Battle of Lepanto; yet did they nothing, in pursuit of so great a Victory, for the recovery of this Island: and indeed they could not, the Confederates returning home, and dissolving their Fleet, as soon as they had secured their own Estates by the overthrow of the Turkish Navy. And though the Venetians, to put the best face they could on so great a loss, so highly pleased themselves with the following Victory, that they put the same in balance with the loss of Cyprus, yet an ingenious Turk, to let them see the folly of so vain a boasting, compared the losing of Cyprus to the loss of an Arm, which could not without a Miracle be recovered; and the loss at Lepanto to the shaving off of ones beard, which grows the thicker for the cutting, as indeed it proved. For the next year the Turks armed out another Navy, no less formidable than the other had been before, braving the strength of the whole Christian Forces, either not then disbanded, or reassembled.

What the Revenues of it were to the Kings hereof, I cannot certainly determine. The profits of Salt only, and that of the Custom-house, yielded yearly to the Seignior of Pehke, which it was in their hands, a million of Crowns. For the Customs and Profits of the Salt were farmed for 500000 Crowns per Annum, which being turned into the chief Cyprian Commodities, were counted double worth that money, when unladed at Venice. To which if we should add the Lands of the former Kings, and other ways of raising Money on the Subject, I cannot see, but the Turado of the Crown must needs amount constantly to a Million and a half yearly, if it were not more.

The Arms heretofore quarterly, first Argent, a Cross potent between four Crosses Or; secondly Barre, with eight pieces Arg. and Azure, supporting a Lion Passant Guard. Or; thirdly, a Lion Guard; and fourthly, Argent, a Lion Guard; as Barre, a French Herald hath given the Blazon.

On the East of Cyprus towards Syria lie four small Islands, which Pholomy calleth by the name of Clides, not far from the Promontory of that name; both Promontory and Island now called St. Andrews; and towards the West another little knot of Islets, which he calls Carpasie; but nothing memorable in either. So I pass them over.

There are in Cyprus,

OF SYRIA.

SYRIA is bounded on the East with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Cilicia and Armenia Minor, from the last parted by Mount Taurus; and on the South, with Palestine, and some parts of Arabia. The length hereof, from Mount Taurus to the edge of Arabia is said to be five hundred twenty and five miles; the breadth, from the Mediterranean to the River Euphrates, computed at four hundred and seventy, drawing somewhat near unto a Square.

In the Scripture it is called Aram, and the People Aramites, because first peopled and possessed by Aram the Son of Sem; though Hamaib, Arpad, and Sidon, the Sons of Canaan, did also put in for a share; and yet not called thus by the Scriptures only, but by some of the Heathen Writers also: For Strabo doth not only acknowledge, that the Syrians in his time were called Aramei, but citeth Pollidonius, a more ancient Writer, for proof that the Aramei, which Homer speaketh of, must be those Syrians: further averring, that the Syrians called themselves by the name of Aramei, or plainly Aramites. But by the Greeks they are called Syriani, Syriani, from the City Tyre, called anciently by the name of Sur, or Tsir (of which more hereafter) either because the Tyrians or Tsirians, had in those times the command of the Sea-coasts of this Country; or else that Tyre or Tsir being the chief Mart-Town of all those parts was the place where they traded with these Aramites. Conforming to which ancient Appellations, the City of Tyre is again called Sur, and this Country Soria. Others conceive, that being when the Greeks first knew it, a part of the Assyrian Empire, the Seat of which was then at Ninive, it was called Syria for Assyria; as afterwards Assyria had the name of Syria (of which more anon) when the Seat of that great Empire was removed to Antioch. And this may very well be so, considering that by the like decoration we have turned Hispania into Spain, as the Greeks before us did into Spania, by which name it occurs, Rom. 15. 28.

But here we are to understand, that though the Syria of the Romans, as it was a member of that Empire, was limited within the bounds before laid down, yet anciently as well the Aram of the Hebrews, as the Syria of the Greeks and Romans, was of greater Latitude: of which, because it may be useful to the understanding of Holy Scriptures, and of some Classick Authors also, I shall enlarge a little further. For Aram, taken in the largest acceptation of it, extendeth from the coast of Cilicia, North

North, to Idumea towards the South; from the River Tygris in the East, to the Mediterranean Sea upon the West; containing besides the Syria of the Greeks and Romans (in which Palestine was also included) Arabia the Desart, and Petrea, Chaldea, Babylonia, and all those Provinces to which the name Aram is either prefixed or subjoined in the Book of God, as Aram-Nabaraïm, Aram-Sobab, Padan-Aram, Aram-Maacbab, Sede-Aram, Aram-Beit-Rehob, all mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. Some do extend it further yet, and do not only bring Armenia within the Latitude of this name, which they derive from Aram-minni, whole neighbourhood to Syria may give some colour to the error; but even those People of Cappadocia bordering on the Euxine Sea, the Inhabitants of which were anciently called Leuco-Syri, or White Syrians. But this not having any good warrant or authority wherewithal to back it, shall not come under the compass of this consideration. But for the rest, I find it generally agreed upon amongst the Learned, that Aram-Nabaraïm, is the same with the whole Country of Mesopotamia, so named both by the Jews and Græcians, because it is environed with the two famous Rivers of Tygris and Euphrates, which Priest by a meer Latin name, would have to be called Medanua; but Ister Amma by his leave would express it better. And as for Padan-Aram wherein Laban dwelt, which is called Sede-Aram by the Prophet Hosea, Ch. 12. ver. 13. that is a part only of the other; the whole Country of Aram-Nabaraïm, or Mesopotamia, being divided into two parts, whereof the more fruitful lying Northward, is called Padan-Aram, or Sede-Aram, to whose Inhabitants Xenophon gives the name of Syrians; the barren and most desert lying towards the South, which by the same Author is called Arabia. For Aram-Maacbab, mentioned 1 Chron. 19. 6. it is conceived to be that part of Syria which was after named Comagena, whereof Samosata was the Metropolis, or Mother-City. And as for Aram-Sobab, of which, and of Adadexar the King thereof, there is so frequent mention in the Books of the Kings and Chronicles, it was the Province lying on the North-East of Damascus, and so extending to the Banks of the River Euphrates, and is the same with that which afterwards was called Palmyrena, from the City of Palmyra. South-West of which, amongst the petty Kingdoms on the North of Gisfur in the Land of Palestine, lay the Kingdom of Aram-Beit-Rehob, confederate with Ammon in the War which they had with David, 2 Sam. 10. 6. Nor did the Greeks less extend the name of Syria, than the Hebrews did the name of Aram, if they stretched it not further. Certain I am, that Strabo comprehendeth the Assyrians in the name of Syria, where he affirmeth, that the Medes over-ruled all Asia, απὸ τοῦ ὀρέου ἔως τοῦ ποταμοῦ, the Empire of the Syrians (he meaneth the Assyrians) being overthrow. And in Herodotus it is said, that those whom the Barbarians call Assyrians, οὗτοι μὲν Ἑλλήνων ἀναλοῖσσι Σέλευς, were called Syrians by the Greeks. And to that purpose Justin also, Imperium Assyrii, quæ postea Syri dictæ sunt, Annus 1300 tenuere. But these all write after the time that Selucus and his Race had the possession of the Eastern Empire; who living for the most part in Syria, from whence they might more easily furnish themselves with Souldiers out of Greece (as they did most commonly for all their Military Expeditions) caused all the other parts of their large Dominions to be called, in tract of time, by the name of Syria. But on the other side, as the Syria of the Romans extended not so far to the East and South, as the Aram of the Hebrews did; so it contained some other Regions, that is to say, those of Phanicia and Pale- stine, which were not comprehended in the name of Aram, as being planted by a People of another Race; and of different Fortunes, till brought together under the command of the Babylonians. In which regard we will treat severally of the natures of the Soil and People, their Originals, Government, and Successes, till we have brought them into one hand, and then continue their Affairs, as one joint Estate. But first we will survey the ancient and present Fortunes of Christianity, and other Religions herein embraced or tolerated, wherewith the whole, according to the bounds and limits before laid down, is alike concerned.

And for Religions in this Country, here is choice enough; those namely of the Mahometan, Christian, Pagan, and one compounded out of all, which is that of the Drusians: The Mahometan embraced by the generality of the People throughout the whole, and by all that be in any Office or Authority, is only countenanced and approved of, though all the rest be tolerated. The Pagan entertained only in the mountainous Countries bordering on Armenia, inhabited by a People whom they called Cordi, or the Curdnes, supposed to be descended from the ancient Parthians, as being very expert in Bows and Arrows, their most usual Arms. A Race of People who are said to worship alike both God and the Devil; the one, that they may receive benefits from him; the other, that he may not hurt them. Se alios deos colere ut profum, alios ne nocent, as Lactantius doth affirm of the ancient Græcians. But their principal Devotions are addressed to the Devil only, and that upon good reasons, as themselves conceive: For God, they say, is a good man, and will do no body no harm; but the Devil is a mischievous fellow, and must be pleased with Sacrifices, that he hurt them not. And for the Drusians, they are conceived to be the remainder of those Franks (by which name the Turks call all Western Christians) who driven unto the Mountains (whence they lost the Sovereignty and Possession of the Holy-Land) and defending themselves by the advantage of the place, could never be wholly rooted out by the Turks, contented at the length to afford them both peace, and liberty of their Religion. But they have so forgot the Principles of that Religion, that they retain nothing of it but Baptism, and not that generally neither; accounting it lawful, most unlawfully to marry their own Daughters, Sisters, or Mothers: and yet conform unto the Turks in their Habit only, wearing the white Turbans, as the Turks do; but abhorring Circumcision, and indulging to themselves the liberty of Wine, by Law forbidden to the Turks. A people otherwise very warlike, stout, and resolute; with great both constancy and courage, resisting hitherto the Attempts of the Turkish Sultans. The Country they possess environed with the Confines of Toppa, about Casana Palestine, betwixt the Rivers of Jordan and Orontes, extending Eastwards as far as the Plains of Damascus; so that here is no part of Syria, except Comagena, unto which their Habitations reach not.

But for the Christian Faith, it was first preached here by some of the dispersed Brethren (which fled from the rage of persecution in Phanice, and the City of Antiochia, amongst whom St. Peter, as he passed through all quarters, Acts 9. 31. is by the Fathers said to have been the chief. The Church more fully planted in it by Barnabas first, after by Paul and Barnabas jointly; who spending there a whole year together, enlarged the Borders of the Church, and gained much People, as is said Acts 11. 19. &c. inasmuch that here the Disciples were first called Christians, ver. 26. Not called so accidentally, as a thing of chance, but on a serious consideration had lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South, being but a branch or excursion of it, called Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives some hint, in which both pass for one, by the name of Libanus.

The whole Country was anciently divided into these six parts, viz. 1. Phœnicia. 2. Palestine. 3. Syria specially so called. 4. Comagena. 5. Palmyrene. And 6. Cala-Syria, or Syria Cava. But Palestine, coming under a more distinct consideration, we shall now speak only of the rest.

1. PHOENICIA.

PHOENICIA is bounded on the East and South, with Palestine; on the North, with Syria, properly and specially so called; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called by the Græcians, from the abundance of Palm-trees therein growing; the word Phœnix in that language signifying a Palm. And for a further proof hereof, (for I know there are other Etymons and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was anciently the special Cognisance or Ensign of this Country; as the Olive-branch, and Cory of Spain, the Elephant of Africk, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile of Egypt, being peculiar to those Countries. And in an old Coyn of the Emperor Vespasian's, stamped for a memorial of his conquest of Judea, the Impress is a Woman sitting in a sad and melancholick posture, at the back of Palm-trees, with these two words, Judea Capta, inscribed thereon; in which, no question may be made, but that the desolate Woman signifieth the Land of Judea, and the Palm Phœnicia; Phœnicia being seated immediately on the North, at the back of Jenny.

But it was thus first called by the Græcians only, the Latins and other People after them taking up that name. For by themselves, and the people of Israel their next Neighbours, they are called Canaanites, or the Posterity of Canaan, five of whose sons, viz. Zidon, Harkî, Arvadî, Senarî, and Chamathî, were planted here: the other six inhabiting more towards the South and East, in the Land of Palestine. For further evidence hereof we may add these reasons; first, that the same Woman which in St. Matthews Gospel, Chap. 15. 22. is named a Canaanite, is by St. Mark, Chap. 7. 26. called a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, where mention is made in the Book of Joshuah, of the Kings of Canaan; the Septuagint (who very well understood the History and Language of their Country) call them Βασιλεις της φοινικας or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, the Pœni, or Carthaginians, being beyond all dispute a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Original, would answer that they were Chaneî; meaning (as St. Augustine that Countryman doth expound their words) that they were Originally Canaanites, of the Stock of Canaan. And lastly, from the language of it, which anciently was the old Hebrew, Canaanitish, or the Language of Canaan; spoken both here and in Palestine also before that Country was possessed by the House of Jacob: as appears plainly by those names, by which the places and Cities of Canaan were called, when and before the Israelites came first to dwell amongst them, which are merely Hebrew. And so much, as unto the Language is acknowledged by Bochartus also, who in the entrance of his Book inscribed (hanaan, declares what profit may ensue from that undertaking to the Hebrew Tongue; Cajus Phœnicia lingua dial. Qus fuit, of which the Phœnician language was a dialekt only.

The Country of it self not great, extended in a good length, from the further side of Mount Carmel; where it joyas with Palestine, to the River Palemus on the North, by which parted from Syria: but withal so narrow, that it is little more than a bare Sea-coast, and therefore very rightly called Terrarum angustissima by a modern Writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increase of trade; to which no Nation under Heaven hath been more addicted; than by the natural commodities which the land afforded; yet for the quantity thereof, no place could be more plentifully furnished with Oyl, Wheat, and the best sort of Balm, and most excellent Honey; the lower part hereof being designed for the seat of Asker, of whom Moses prophesied, Deut. 33. 24. that he should dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Country generally, was well-conditioned, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautiful Cities, than such a span of earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammianus, Aelius monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, plena gratiarum & venustatis, urbibus decorata magnis & pulchris, &c. i. e. Falling from Mount Libanus, lyeth the Country of Phœnicia, full of all graces and elegancies, adorned with great and beautiful Cities, of which the most renowned for the fertility of their soil, and the fame of their achievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The People anciently, by reason of their Maritime situation, were great Adventurers at Sea, trading in almost all the Ports of the then known World, and sending more Colonies abroad upon foreign Plantations than any Nations in the Earth. An active and ingenious people, said to have been the first Navigators, the first builders of Ships, the first inventors of Letters, (of which hereafter more on some other occasion) and the first Authors of Astronavigation, the first that brought Astronomy to an Art or Method, and the first makers of Glas. Defamed in holy Scripture for their gross Idolatry, by which they laid a stumbling-block at the feet of the Israelites; Astartis (or Astarte) the goddess of the Sidonians (but whether Juno, Venus, or some other, I dispute not here) being so highly prized amongst them, that Solomon himself, when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. Once yearly, as Eusebius telleth us, they sacrificed some of their Sons to Saturn, whom in their Language they called Moloch; And in the inmost retreats of Libanus had a Temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of most filthy lusts, intemperately using the natural Sex, and most unnaturally abusing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Christian faith prevail so far, as to extinguish these ungodly rites, till Constantine finally destroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them, but the shame and infamy. St. Austin addeth, that they did prostitute their Daughters unto Venus, before they married them; and it is most likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cyprians being so near neighbours, and subject for a time to the same Princes also, could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another.

Rivers of note there can be none in so narrow a Region but what are common unto others, and shall there be spoken of. Most proper unto this is the River of Adonis, (now called Canis, so named most probably from Adonis the Darling of Venus, whose Rites are here performed with as much solemnity, as they be in Cyprus. His Obsequies celebrated yearly in the month of June, with great howlings and lamentations, Lucian fables that the River usually streameth blood upon that Solemnity; (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the Mountains of Libanus;) to give the better colour to their Superstitions. But the truth is, that this redness of the water ariseth only from the Winds; which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, do thereby carry down the stream a great quantity of Minnim, or red Earth, from the sides of those hills, wherewith the waters are discoloured.

discoloured. Such use can Satan make of a natural Accident, to blind the eyes and captivate the understandings of befottered People.

Chief Mountains of this Country are, 1. Libanus, spoken of before, which hath here its first advance or rising. 2. Carmel, which Platony placeth in this Country, of which it is the utmost part upon the South, where it joyneth with Palestine. Washed on the North-side with the Brook Chifon, on the West with the Mediterranean Sea; steep of ascent, and of indifferent altitude; abounding with several sorts of Fruits, Olives, and Vines in good plenty, and stored with Herbs both medicinal and sweet of smell. The Retreat sometimes of Eliab, when he fled from Jezabel; whose Habitation here, after his decease, was converted to a Jewish Synagogue. To this place (being then in the possession of the Kings of Israel) did that Prophet assemble the Priests of Baal; and having by a miraculous Experiment confuted their Idolatrous follies, caused them to be cut in pieces on the Banks of the River Chifon near adjoining to it. Upon this visible declaring of the Power and Presence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew perfwaded that Oracles were there given by God; by Suetonius called the God Carmelus. Where speaking of Vespasian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperial Dignity, he addeth, Apud Judeam Carmeli Dei Oraculis consulentes ita confirmaverunt, &c. That consulting in Judea the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was assured that whatsoever he undertook should succeed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Friars Carmelites, as Successors unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Eliab, had their names from hence: the Ruins of whose Monastery are still to be seen, with a Temple dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; and under that a Cave or Chappel, said to have been the lurking place of that Holy Prophet, in the time of his troubles.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Ptolomais, now nothing but a ruin of what it hath been, but formerly of great strength and consequence. Named Act at the first, a Refuge for the Persian Kings in their Wars against Egypt; Enlarged, or rather new built by Ptolomy, the first of that Race, by whom called Ptolomais, which name still continued, though Claudius Cæsar planting there a Roman Colony, would fain have had it called Colonia Claudia. After the Conquest of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omer the great Caliph, it returned towards its first name, and was called Acom, or Act: both names still remaining in vulgar speech, as that of Ptolomais amongst Latin Writers. Situate in the flourish of it on a flat or level, in form of a triangular Shield; on two sides neighboured by the Sea, which comes up close to it; on the third looking towards the Champaign: environed with a double Wall, to each Wall a Ditch, fortified on the outside with Towers and Bulwarks; within the Walls so strongly housed, as if the whole Town had been a Conjunction of Fortresses, and not ordained for private dwellings. In the midst of the City was one Tower of great strength and beauty, which had sometimes been the Temple of Belzebub, and was therefore called the Castle of Eliab; on the top whereof was maintain'd a perpetual Light, like the Pharos of Egypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to such Mariners as made towards this Port. Took from the Christians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wrested by the Turks with the rest of Syria. It became Christian again Anno 1004. in the Reign of Baldwin the first, Brother of the famous Godfrey of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, by the help of the Gentile; who for their pains had the third part of the City assigned unto them. Recovered by Saladini to the Turks, and from him taken again by the Western Christians, under the conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the first of England, Anno 1191. it continued in the possession of the Kings of Hierusalem, notably defended by the Hospitallers (now Knights of Malta) till the year 1291. When besieged by an Army of an hundred and fifty thousand Turks, it was forced to yield, though lost by inches; and the Turks feasting left the Christians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground, demolishing the large Walls and Arches of it, which lie like massy Rocks on their old Foundations. Memorable in those times for the brave service here done by the Christians of the Western parts, of which none more renowned than those of our Richard the first, and Edward the first: This latter here treacherously wounded by an Infidel, with a poisoned Knife, the venom whereof could by no means be asswaged, till his most virtuous Wife herein proposing a most rare Example of conjugal affection, sucked it out with her mouth. And for the former, he became so terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their Children began to cry, they would say, Peace, King Richard is coming; and when their Horses started, they would spur them, saying, What you Jades, do you think that King Richard is here? By the Mammalucks, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for habitation rather than defence: not peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have to many, but for the Haven adjoining; which though a small Bay, and of very ill Anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Western World, trading here for their Cotton Wools, with which the neighbouring Country is abundantly furnished. I have staid the longer in this place, by reason of the great fame and importance of it, as being the last Hold which the Christians had of all their Conquests; with the loss whereof, they laid aside all thoughts of those Holy Wars. 2. Tyre, seated in a rocky Island, about seventy paces from the main Land; well built, and circular of form, as well by Art as Nature impregnablely fortified. A Colony of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Isa. ch. 23. v. 12. called the Daughter of Sidon: but by them built upon an high Hill, the Ruins whereof, by the name of Palatyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining still. Removed unto the Islands by Agenor King of the Phœnicians, and by him named Sor, or Tzor, from the rocky situation of it (as that word importeth.) Mollified by the Greeks to Tyrus, and from them taken by the Latins, though known to them also by the name of Sarra (the Tyrian Purple being by Virgil, and some others of the ancient Poets, called Surra or Ostrum;) and now at last returned to its first original name, vulgarly at this day called Sur. A City in elder times of great Trade and Wealth; the Prophet Isa. ch. 27. v. 8. calling the Merchants hereof Princes, and her Chapmen the Nobles of the World. Excelling all others of those times both for Learning and Manufactures, specially for the dying of Purple, first here invented; and that as Julius Pollux said, by a very accident; the Dog of Hercules (or if not his, some Dog or other) whose lips by eating of the Fish called Conchylis, or Purpura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reason of the Wealth and Pleasures, her destruction was fore-signified by the holy Prophets; accomplished in God's own time by Nebuchadnezzar, who with great industry and toil joyed it to the Continent. But his Works being demolished by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrians, it was after seventy years again re-edified; and having flourished after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the Great was again demolished, to whose indefatigable perseverance nothing was impossible. For having filled the Channel with the

Stones and Rubbish of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge Beams brought from Libanus, he made a passage for his Army; and having once approached the Walls, he over-topped them with Towers and Frames of Timber, that at last he made himself Master of it, putting to the Sword all such as resisted, and causing two thousand of them to be hanged in cold blood, all along the shore, for a terror to others. This Rendition of the Town was divined by the Sooth-sayers, who followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a dream which he had not long before; For dreaming that he had disported himself with Satyrs, the Diviners only making of one word two, found that Satyrus was no more than Tyrus; that is, Tus Tyrus: and it happened accordingly. Recovering once again both her Riches and Beauties, she became a Confederate of the Romans in the growth of their Fortunes; endowed by them with the Privileges of their City, for her great fidelity. Made in the best times of Christianity the Metropolitan See for the Province of Phœnicia, the Bishop hereof having under him fourteen Suffragan Bishops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year six hundred thirty and six, and having groaned under that yoke for the space of four hundred eighty and eight years, was at the last regained by Gurimund Patriarch of Hierusalem, in the Reign of the second Edwin, the Venetians contributing their assistance to it, Anno 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladine; but finally brought under the Turkish thralldom, Anno 1289, as it still continueth. Now nothing but an heap of Ruins; but the very Ruins of it of so fair a prospect, as striketh both pity and amazement into the beholders, shewing them an exemplary pattern of our humane frailty. Subject at the present to the Emir or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the best of the Levant, but of no great trading. 3. Sarepta, by the Hebrews called Sarphath, situate on the Sea-coast betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in Holy Writ for the Miracle here performed by the Prophet Elijah, in raising the poor Widows Son; in Heathen Writers for the purest Wines, little inferior unto those of Falerneum in Italy, or Chios in Greece: Of which thus the Poet;

Vina mihi non sunt Gazetia, Chia, Falerne, Quæque Sarcapno palmitis missa bibas.

In English thus,

I have no Chian or Falerneum Wines,
Nor those of Gazæ or Sarcapno Vines.

4. Sidon, the ancientest City of all Phœnicia, and the most Northern of all those which were alligned for the Portion of the Sons of Asser; beyond which the Country of Phœnicia having been hitherto nothing but a bare Sea-coast, beginneth to open towards the East in a fine rich Valley, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South; once clofed up from the rest of Syria with a very strong Wall, long since demolished. It was so called from Zidon, one of the Sons of Canaan, who first planted here; not (as some say) from Sida the Daughter of Belus, once a King hereof; this City being mentioned in the Book of Jobana, when no such Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightful Soil, defended with the Sea on one side, and on the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it and Libanus, from whence descended those many Springs with which they watered and enriched their most pleasant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are said to be the first makers of Chrystal Glasse, the Materials of the Work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Ptolemais, and only made fusible in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zorobabel had their principal Work-men, both for Stone and Timber, in their several Buildings of the Temple. The People hereof so flourishing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zachariah, chap. 9. v. 2. calleth them the wife Sidonians. A City which at several times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre; the Mother of it in the times of Heathenism, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when instructed in the Christian Faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother-Church. The City in those times very strong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-side a Fort or Citadel mounted on an inaccessible Rock, and environed on all sides by the Sea; which when it was brought under the command of the Western Christians, was held by the Order of the Dutch Knights; and another on the South-side of the Port, which the Templars guarded. Won by the Turks, with the rest of this Country, from the Christians, and ruined by those often interchanges of Fortune, it only sheweth now some marks of the ancient greatness; the present Sidon standing somewhat West of the old, and having little worth a particular Description, in respect of what it was in her ancient Glories. The Haven at this time decayed, or serving at the best for Gallies, with a poor Blackhouse, rather for shew than service: The Walls of no greater strength, and as little beauty, and the Buildings ordinary; but that the Mosque, the Bannia of Bathes, and the Cane for Merchants, are somewhat fairer than the rest: yet gives a Title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greatest Princes of all this Country, of whom more hereafter. 5. Berytus, originally called Geris, from Gerges the fifth Son of Canaan, took this new name from Berith, a Phœnician Idol herein worshipped; and now called Barutti. Destroyed by Tryphon in the Wars of the Syrians against the Jews; it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colony, and honoured with the name of Julia Felix, Augustus giving it the Privileges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified; and of no mean esteem in the time of the Christians, when made an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tyre. Being a place of no great strength, yet aimed at by every new Invader, it hath sped better than the rest of these Cities (though stronger than this) retaining still her being, though not all her beauties; well stored with Merchandise, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitful Valley, which they call St. Georges, in which there is a Castle, and in that an Oratory of the same name also: All sacred to St. George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a Kings Daughter; but what Kings I know not, nor they neither. 6. Biblus, sometimes the Habitation of Hevi, the fourth Son of Canaan, and then called Hevea. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyras, Father and Grandfather of Adonis by his Daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already spoken when we were in Cyprus. Of such esteem in the Primitive Times of Christianity, that it was made a Bishops See; desolate and of no repute since it lost that honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7. Oribosia, called also Anasaradus, because opposite to Aradus, another old City of this Trade; but in after-Ages called Toriosa, and by that name well known in the Histories of the Holy Wars, undertaken by the Western Christians: To whom it made such stout and notable resistance, that though besieged on all sides with united Forces (the whole Army formerly divided, sitting down before it) yet after three Months hard Siege, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themselves with spoiling the adjoining Country. 8. Tripolis, seated in a rich and delightful Plain, more fruitful fruitful than can be imagined; one of which Fruits they called by the name of Ammazza Franchi, i.e. Kill Frank, because the Western Christians, whom they call by the name of Franks, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is said to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripolis no less than 200000 Crowns. As for the Town, it standeth about two miles from the Sea, at the foot of Mount Libanus; so called because built by the joyned Purges of three Cities, that is to say, Tyrus, Sidon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, till made one of the Episcopal Sees, belonging to the Archbishop of Tyre in the Primitive times. But thriving by degrees, it grew to principal account by the time that the Western Christians warred in the Holy Land: When conquered by them, it was made one of the Tetrarchies, or Capital Cities for the four Quarters of their Empire, which were Jerusalem for Palestine, Edessa for Comagena or Mesopotamia, Antioch for Syria, and this for Phœnicia. Committed at the first taking of it, to the custody of Raymond Earl of Tolouse in France; whose Posterity, whilst it lasted, had from hence the Title of Earls of Tripolis. A City, which I know not by what good hap, hath sped better than any of those parts, retaining still as much in strength and beauty as ever it had, if not grown greater by the ruine of all the rest. Situate two miles from the Sea, as before is said; but not above half a mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the West side of it: Compasped with a Wall, and fortified with seven Towers, of which the fourth is commonly called the Tower of Love, because built by an Italian Merchant, who was found in Bed with a Turkish Woman, for which he had forfeited his life, if not thus redeemed it. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbouring bank of Sand, which every day groweth greater and nearer to it; by which in time there is a Prophecy which faith it shall quite be choaked: On both sides of it many Store-houses for the Merchant to stow his Goods in, and Shops to sell them: the way from thence unto the City, having on both sides very pleasant Gardens, more curiously kept, than usually amongst the Turks. The Town it self stretched out in Length from South to North, is situate, as before was said, at the foot of Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many pleasant springs into the Chief of their Gardens: in which, and in those towards the Haven, and on other sides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great store of Silk-worms, selling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in the Stuff or Manufacture. Their Buildings generally low, and the Streets but narrow, except that leading towards Aleppo, which is fair and open. Over the Brook, at the East-side of the City, are built two Bridges; and on the South-side a strong Castle mounted on an Hill, built by the French when they had the Custody hereof: now Garrisoned for the Grand Signior with two hundred Janizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolitan or chief City of Phœnicia, honoured with the residence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the most part dwelling in this Town, and enriched with a great part of the Trade of Scanderone, or Alexandretta, removed hither some forty years ago by the Turks appointment; that Haven lying unfenced, and more open to Pirates.

That the Phœnicians were descended of the Sons of Canaan, hath been proved already. And being descendants of that Stock, they were at the first governed like them, by the Chiefs of their Families, whom they honoured (as most Nations did) with the Title of Kings. But most of the Canaanitish Kings being overcome and slain by Joshua, Agenor a stout and prudent man, one of those many Kings, which commanded in those parts of the Country, seeing how impossible it was to resist that Enemy, borrowed some Aid from Ægypt, where he had his Breeding, to make good the Sea-coasts of his Country; in which the Philiistines, who interposed upon those Coasts betwixt him and Ægypt, concurred also with him. By which assistance, and by the fortifying of Sidon, Tyre, and Ace (or Ptolemais) which were all the Cities of this Country that were then in being, he did not only preserve his own Estate from the present danger, but left it so assured to the Kings succeeding, that neither Solomon, nor David, nor any of the Kings of Israel, durst attempt upon them. To Agenor succeeded his Son Phœnix, (Cadmus, his elder Brother, going into Greece in search of his Sister Europa, ravished by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his death) from whom, as some conceive, this Country had the name of Phœnicia. And though I have declared my self for another reason of this name, which I like much better; yet I shall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bocharius, who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the Sons of Anak, (as if the old Phœnicians were such Giant men) which must first be contracted in Beannack, then by the Greeks turned into Phœnace, and at last into Phœnix. Such far-fetched and extorted Originations never please my fancy, who had much rather hearken to the old received opinions touching the first Originals of Names and Nations, where there is not very pregnant Reason to persuade me otherwise, than strain my self so far for a new Invention, or hearken unto those that do. But for what cause soever they were named Phœnicians, certain it is, they were a very active and industrious People, trading in most parts of the Mediterranean, and planting Colonies in many. Thebes and Sephyra in Bœotia, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain; Utica, Leptis, Carthage in Africk, were of their foundation. Nay, if we may believe Bocharius, there was no Island or Sea-coast in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or British Ocean, wherein they did not keep some Factory, or erect some Colony. What Kings succeeded Phœnix in a constant and continued course, I can nowhere find. Most like it is, they were not under the command of any one Prince; and that besides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were some others who called themselves Kings of Phœnicia also, as well as they. Of which sort were Cyniras, Paphus, and Pigmalion, who had their Regal Seat at Biblus, and Lorded it over a good part of Cyprus, as did also Belus, who gave some part of that Isle to Tenecus, as is said before. There is also found mention of one Phœstis, a Phœnician King, at such time as the Greeks conquered Troy. After him none, till the subjugation of this Country by the Babylonians; Tetramistes, Tennes, and Strato, mentioned in succeeding times, being Tributaries to the Persian, and no absolute Princes. Whether it were that the Phœnicians were made subject to the Kings of Tyre, or that the Kings thereof did nothing to preserve their memory, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that the Kings of Tyre came in short time to be of very great repute, and to possess themselves of the Coasts of Syria and Phœnicia, and a great part of Cyprus; whereby, and by the benefit of their Trade and Shipping, they grew rich and powerful, and of great consideration in Affairs of the World. The Names and History of whom I shall here subjoyn, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of TYRE.

A. M.

1. Abibalus, as Josephus, Abemalur, as Theopompus.

phibul Antiachenu calleth him, Co-temporary with Samuel; supposed to be the same which the Son of Syrach mentioneth, Ecclef. 46. 18.

2 Saron, the Son of Abibahu, whom David, as Eusebius saith, compelled to pay tribute; complained of by that Prophet, Isa. 83. 7.

2931 3 Hiram, the Son of Saron, confederate with David, to whom he sent Cedars, with Carpenters and Masons, towards his Buildings in Jerusalem, after he had beaten thence the Jebusites; as he did afterwards to Solomon when he built the Temple. Much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles. 53.

2955 4 Balestarius, or Bazorus, succeeded Hiram. 7.

2983 6 Asturnus, brother of Abdasturus, recovered the Kingdom to his house, out of the hands of the Ujjerpers. 12.

2995 7 Asturnus, or Atorburnus, as Theophilus calleth him, the younger Brother of Asturnus. 9.

3004 8 Pheller, the Brother of these three Kings, and youngest Son of Balestarius, reigned eight months only.

9 Ibbabahu, called Ethbaal, 1 King. 18. 13. Son of Asturnus, slew his Uncle Pheller, and so regained his Fathers Throne; before which he was the High-Priest of the Goddess Astarte, or Astaria, (a Dignity next to that of the King.) He was the Father of Jezebel, the Wife of Ahab, so often mentioned in the Scripture. 32.

3037 10 Badazar, or Bazar, Son of Ethbaal. 6.

3043 11 Metimnus, by some called Marginus, Son of Badazar, the Father of Elisa, whom Virgil celebrateth by the name of Dido.

3052 12 Pygmalion, the Son of Metimnus, who slew Sichem the Husband of his Sister Elisa to get his riches; but yet was couzened of his prey: his Sister Elisa accompanied with her brother Barca (the founder of the Noble Barcine Family, of which Annibal was) and her Sister Anna, flying into Africk; where she built the renowned City of Carthage. The names of his Successors we find not till we come to 13 Eshuleur, descended from a Son of Pygmalion, who overthrew the Fleet of Salmanassar, the Assyrian, in the Port of Tyre.

14 Ethbales, or Ethbaal II. who vaunted himself to be as wise as Daniel, and to know all secrets, as saith the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 28. v. 1, 2. And yet not wise enough to preserve his Kingdom from Nabuchodonosor; who after a Siege of 13 years took the City of Tyre, and subjected it unto his Empire.

15 Baal, the son and successor of Ethbaal the second, but a Tributary to the Babylonians.

After whose death the Tyrians had no more Kings, but were governed by Judges, or by such titular Kings only as were sent from Babylon. And though Tyre and Sidon did recover breath in the fall of the Babylonian Empire, and the unfeignedness of the Persian; yet being of the Persian faction, and having dependance on that Crown, they were by Alexander held unworthy to continue. Who therefore deposed Strato the King of Sidon, and overthrew the City of Tyre; in the taking whereof he had spent more time, than in forcing all the Cities of Asia.

After this time Phenicia, being reckoned as a part of Syria, followed the fortune of the whole, subject unto the Syrian Kings of the house of Selucus, till made a Province of the Romans; subject to the Constantinopolitans till the fatal year 636. when subdued by the Saracens. Successively conquered by the Turks, Christians, and after their expulsion by the Turks again, then by the Mamelukes of Egypt, and finally with the rest of Syria, by Selimus the first united to the Turkish Empire. Subject at this time, or of late, to the Emir of the Druisians, (commonly called the Emir of Sidon) of which people we have spoken before. A people who in the time of Amurath the third, were governed by five Emirs or Princes; one of which was Man-Ogli, who so resolutely resisted Ibrahim Bassa, Anno 1585. This Man-Ogli then kept his Court or residence at Andriene, a strong place situate on a hill, and was of that wealth, that he sent to make his peace unto the above-named Ibrahim, 320 Arcubuses, 20 Packs of Andriene Silks, and 50000 Ducats more, 480 Arcubuses, 1000 Goats, 150 Camels, 150 Buses, 1000 Oxen, and 200 Weathers. By these rich gifts we may not a little conjecture of the Revenue of the present Emir of Sidon; who since the year 1600. hath reduced almost all the Countries belonging once to five Princes, under his own Empire; containing the Towns and Territories of Gaza, Barns, Sidon, Tyre, Acra, Saffet, (or Tiberias) his seat of residence, Nazareth, Cana, Mount Tabor, Elkisse, &c. This present Emir, by name Faccardine, was not long since driven out of his Country by the Turks, and forced to fly to Florence; but he again recovered his own, laid siege to Damascus, and caused a notable Rebellion in Asia; not quenched in a long time after. And finally, having possessed himself of the City and Castle of Damascus, prepared for the taking of Hierusalem also; threatening to make the Christians once more Masters of it. This was in the year 1623. How he sped afterward, and whether his Son, as stout and valiant as himself, hath since his death succeeded him in his Estates, I am not able to say: having of late heard nothing of them.

SYRIA PROPRIA.

SYRIA PROPRIA, or Syria especially so called, is bounded on the East, with Palmyrene; on the West, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Cilicia; on the South with Phenicia, and some part of Celo-Syria.

This part of Syria I take to be the Land of Hamath, so often mentioned in the Scriptures, the Kingdom of Toi or Tow, next neighbour, and sworn Enemy to Adadazar King of Aram-Sobab: who hearing of the great difficulty which David had given unto that King, sent his Son oram, or Adoram, (for the Scripture call him by both names) with Presents to him, as well to congratulate his success, as to be assured for times to come of his love and amity. So called from Hamath one of the Sons of Canaan, who fixed his dwelling in these parts, and left many Cities of that name in Syria and Palmyrene (which we shall meet withal in the course of this work) either built by him or his Posterity. Now that the Land of Hamath was this part of Syria, I am persuaded to believe by these following reasons, viz. 1 From the neighbourhood hereof to Arpad or Arphad, conjoined together, as in Isa. 10. 9. and Jer. 49. 23. So in other places, viz. Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? 2 King. 18. 34. The Kings of Hamath, and the King of Arphad, &c.

Isa. 37. 13. And we know well that Arpad was the name of an Island over-against the mouth of the River Euphrates, one of the Rivers of this Country: so called from Arpad, one of the Sons of Canaan, alluded to by the Greeks and Romans in the name of Aradus; by which this Isle was known unto them. 2ly. By the vicinity which it hath to Palmyrene, the Aram-Sobab of the Scriptures, to which it joyneth on the East, with the King whereof (as bordering Princes use to be) the Kings of Hamath for the most part were in open War. Of which see 2 Sam. 8. 9, 10. and 1 Chro. 8. 9, 10. 3ly. From the authority of St. Hieron, who finding mention in the Prophet Amos, Chap. 6. 2. of a City named Hamath the Great, determineth it to be that City which afterwards was called Antiochia (the principal City of this part, and indeed of Syria;) the title of Great being added to it, to difference it from some other Cities of this name of inferior note. And 4ly. from comparing the places in Scripture, with the like passage in Josephus the Historiographer. The Scripture telleth us, that Hierusalem being forced by the Babylonians, Zedekias the King was brought Prisoner to Nebuchadnezzar, being then at Riblah, 2 King. 2. 6. to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, ver. 21. where the poor Prince first saw his Children slain before his face; and then miserably deprived of sight, that he might not see his great misfortunes, was led away to Babylon. Ask of Josephus where this sad Tragedy was acted, and he will tell us that it was at Reblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria, Antiq. 1. 10. c. 10. And if we ask Saint Hieron what he thinks of Reblatha, he will tell us that it was Urbs ea quam nunc Antiochiam vocant, the City which in following times was called Antioch. On these grounds I conceive this part of Syria to be the land of Hamath intended in the Texts of Scripture above-cited; though there were other Towns and Territories of the same name also.

The Country is naturally fertile; the hedges on the high-way sides affording very good fruits; and the adjoining fields affording to the Passenger the shade of Fig-trees. Were it not naturally so, it would not be much helped by Art or Industry as being very meanly peopled, and those few people without any encouragement either to plant fruits, or manure the Land. Their Sheep are commonly fair and fat, but so overlaid in the tail, both with flesh and fleece, that they hang in long wreaths unto the ground, dragged after them with no small difficulty. Pliny observes it in his time, that the tails of the Syrian Sheep were a Cubit long, and had good store of wool upon them. Natur. Hist. 18. c. 48. and Modern Travellers report, that the tails of these heep do frequently weigh 25 pound weight, and sometimes 30 pounds and upwards. The like hath also been affirmed of the sheep of Palmyrene comprehended in old times in the name of Syria. And that may probably be the reason why the rumps and tails of Sheep (and of no beast else) were ordained to be offered up in sacrifice, of which Lev. 3. 9. But besides the store of Wool which they have from the sheep, they have also great plenty of Cotton Wool, which groweth there abundantly; with the seeds whereof they sow their fields, as we ours with Corn. The stalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but as tough as a Bean; the head round and bearded, in the size and shape of a Medlar, and as hard as a stone: which ripening breaketh, and is delivered of a white soft Bombast, intermixed with seeds; which parted with an instrument, they keep the seeds for another sowing, and sell the Wool unto the Merchant: a greater quantity thereof issuing from that little shell, than can be imagined by those who have not seen it.

The people heretofore were very industrious, especially about their Gardens; the fruitful effects whereof they found in the increase of their Herbs, and Plants. Whence the Proverb, Multa Syrorum Olera. But withal they were observed to be very gluttonous, spending whole days and nights in feasting, great scoffers, and much given to laughter. Crafty and subtle in their dealings, not easily to be trusted but on good security; and so were the Phenicians, their next neighbours also. Hence came the Greek Adage, which Suidas speaketh of, Σύροι πλεονεκτοῦντες, Syri contra Phenices, used by them when two crafty Knaves endeavored to deceive each other. They were noted also to be superstitious, great Worshippers of the Goddess Fortune, but greater of their Syrian Goddesses, whatsoever she was. Affirmed by Plutarch to be a Womanish and effeminate Nation, prone unto tears, and such as on the death of their friends would hide themselves in caves from the sight of the Sun. Herodian addeth, that they were wavering and unconstant, lovers of Plays and publick Pastimes, and easily stirred up unto Innovations. But at this time, they are almost beaten out of all these humours, having been so often cowed and conquered, that they are now grown servilely officious to them that govern them: not without cause, defective in that part of industry which before enriched them.

Where by the way we must observe, that this Character of the people, and that of the Country belong not to this part alone, exclusively of those which follow; but to all Syria, and every part and Province of it, except Phenicia, which being planted by a people of another Stock, hath had its character by it self. The whole by Ptolomy divided, besides Comagena, Palmyrene, and Celo-Syria, into many petit Regions, and Subdivisions, as 1 Pieria. 2 Casios, from the hills adjoining. 3 Selencin. 4 Apamene. 5 Laodicea. 6 Cyrrhestica. 7 Chalcidice. And 8 Chalybanotis, from their principal Cities. Of which in all he musters up the names of an hundred and upwards, then of some note, most of them now grown out of knowledge, and many of them of no mark or observation in the course of business. So that omitting his method, we will follow our own, and take notice only of such places as ancient were, or at this present are, of most observation and importance in the course of Story: with reference notwithstanding to the subdivisions made by Ptolomy, as they come in my way, reckoning Cyrrhestica, Chalybanotis, Casios, and the Territories of Selencin, Laodicea, and Apamea, into Syria Propria; and Pieria into Comagena.

First then to begin with those Cities which I ye most towards the East, we have in Cyrrhestica, 1 Zeugma, on the banks of the River Euphrates, memorable for the passage of Alexander the Great, who there passed over his Army on a Bridge of Boats. 2 Berraa, supposed by some both ancient and modern Writers, to be that which is now called Aleppo, but the position of the place agreeth not with that supposition; Aleppo being placed by our modern Geographers, in the 72 degree of Longitude, and the 38 of Latitude: whereas Berraa is assigned by Ptolomy, to the 36 degree of Latitude, and the 71 of Longitude. Besides that, the River Singus, on which Aleppo is situate, keepeth it self almost on an even course in the Latitude of 37 between 20 and 30 minutes over: which is more by a degree and a half than the site assigned unto Berraa. 3 Cyrrus, as in the Latin Copies of Ptolomy, mislook for Cyrrhus, once the chief City of this part, from hence called Cyrrhestica. 4 Heraclea, near which Minerva had a Temple; in which, as in that sacred to her in Laodicea, they used once yearly to offer a Virgin for a Sacrifice, but afterwards on the sight of that gross impiety, changed it to an Hari. 5 Regia, now Rugia, two days journey from Antioch, took by the Christians in the beginning ginning of the Wars for the Holy Land. 6 Hierapolis, of great renown in those dark times of Ignorance and Idolatry for the Syrian Goddess therein worshipped; from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy City: being formerly by the Grecians called Callinice; by the Syrians, Magog; one of the first seats of Magog the Son of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Goddess so esteemed in those wretched times, that from all parts, Affrica, Babylonia, Arabia, Cilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and costly offerings. Nero himself, who scoffed at all Religions else, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her, and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice, the wife of Seleucus, in the midst of the City, compassed with a double wall, about the height of 300 fathom: the roof thereof inlaid with Gold, and made of such a fragrant and sweet-smelling wood, that the cloaths of them which came thither retained the sent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places inclosed for Oxen, and Beasts of sacrifice; and not far off a Lake of 200 fathom in depth, wherein they kept their sacred fishes: the Priests attending here for their several Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, besides many more subservient Ministers. The tricks and jugglings of these Priests to deceive the people, he that list to see, may find them copiously described in the Metamorphosis of Apuleius: which, changing both the names and times, may serve for a relation of those gulleries and Arts of Leger-de-main which the Friars and Pardons have practised in the Church of Rome: 7 Chalyban, whence the parts adjoining were called Chalybanus; conceived by Pestellus, and some others to be Chalepium, or Aleppo; but on no good grounds, this City having one degree less of Northern Latitude, than Berries had. 8 Barharissus, in the same subdivision, near the banks of Euphrates. 9 Chalcis, the principal of that part of Syria Propria, which is called Chalcedice, but not otherwise memorable. 10 Telmedissa, another Town of the same division, and as little famous. 11 Seleucia, so named from the Founder of it, the first Eastern Monarch of that Race, and the greatest Builder of the World, founding nine Cities of this name, sixteen in memory of his Father Antiochus, six by the name of Laodice his Mother, and three in honour of Apamia his first Wife; besides many others of great note in Greece and Asia; either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this the Country hereabouts had the name of Seleucia. 12 Laodicea, one of the Cities founded by Seleucus, in honour of Laodice his Mother, from which the Region adjoining is called Laodicea: Built by him in the place where formerly stood the City Rhamantus, so called from a certain Shepherd, who being frook with a flash of lightning, cried out amazedly Rhamantus; that is to say, Dans ad excelso; before which time it had been named Lewia Ate, from the whiteness of the Sea-cliffs next to which it is situated: the Country round about commended anciently for the best Wines, and choice of every excellent Fruits. 13 Apamea, so named in honour of Apamia, the Wife of Seleucus; which together with Laodicea and Seleucia before mentioned, having the same Founder, and maintaining a strict League of amity with one another, were commonly called the Three Sisters. From this the Country near is called Apamea. 14 Emesa, (now Hama) the Episcopal See of Eusebius, hence called Emesenus, who flourished in the time of Constantine, the Son of Constantine; in whose name are extant certain Homilies, justly conceived to be of a later date. The City seated in a spacious and fruitful Plain of Apamea, watered with many pleasant and cheerful Riverets: once of great note, as may easily be conjectured from the walls hereof, which are still perfect and entire, built of polished stone, and of very large circuit; but the dwelling-houses so decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy observation. 15 Epiphania, in the cantred or subdivision of Casotis; called at first Hamath, from Hamath a Son of Canaan, the founder of it; and upon that account mistaken by St. Hierome for another Town of the same name, in the Tribe of Naphthali; so different from this place both in Longitude and Latitude (as we shall shew hereafter when we come to Palestine) that they can by no means be the same. But that old Town being gone to ruin, it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania; obeyed therein as Josephus telleth us, by the Macedonians; though the Syrians still called it Amaba, as in former times. Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. 16 Larissa, which still preserveth its old name, being now called Laris; much mentioned in the Wars of the Holy Land, especially for the death of Baldwin the first, Brother of Godfrey of Bouillon; and second King of Hierusalem, Anno 1118. 17 Gebal, the Gabala of Pliny, and others of the ancient Writers, situate on the South of Laodicea, from which twelve miles distant; mentioned Psalm. 83. as a confederate with Tyre, and other uncircumcised Nations, in their hatred and designs against the Israelites: at this day called Gaballa (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembered in the Stories of the Holy Wars. 18 Albaria, distant two days march from Antioch, remembered also in the Wars of the Holy Land. 19 Aradus, one of the Co-founders of Tripolis, situate in a rocky Island of a mile in compass, directly opposite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and distant from the Continent about twenty furlongs. So called from Arvad, one of the Sons of Canaan, and mentioned by that name in the Prophet Ezek. 27. 8, 11. This once a Kingdom of it self, containing not this Island only, but some part of the Continent; especially about Antaradus (so called because built over against it) situate on the Northern banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have spoken in Phanicia. 20 Daphne, about five miles from Antioch; but afterwards by the continual enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it; so named of Daphne, one of the Mistresses of Apollo, who was here worshipped by the name of Apollo Daphneus, and had here his Oracle and his Grove, with other the Additaments appertaining unto those Idolatries: as much esteemed by, but more sumptuous than those of Delphos. The Grove about ten miles in circuit, environed round with Cypresses, and other trees, so tall and close to one another, that they suffered not the Sun to enter in his greatest heat; the ground perpetually covered with the choicest Tapestry of Nature, watered with many a pleasant stream, derived from the Cassian Fountains as it was given out; and yielding the most excellent Fruits both for taste and suture, to which the wind and air participating the sweetness of the place, did add a most delightful influence.

A place devised for pleasure, but abused to lust: he being held unworthy of the name of a man, who transformed not himself unto a Beast, or trod on this unholy ground without his Charybdean, inasmuch as they which had a care of their good names, did forbear to haunt it. A fuller description of it he that lists to see, may find in the first Book and eighteenth Chapter of Solomon's Ecclesiasticus History, who is copious in it. The Temple said to have been built by Seleucus also, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of being Emperor; and therefore much resorted to by Julian the Apostata, for that purpose also. But the Body of

Babylas

Babylas the Martyr and Bishop of Antioch, being removed thither by the command of his Brother Galerius, then created Cesar by Constantius, the Devil and his Oracles were both frightened away, as the Devil did himself confess to Julian; who being desirous to learn here the success of his intended Expedition into Persia, received this Answer, That no Oracle could be given so long as those Divine Bones were so near the Shrine. Nor was it long after, before the Idol and the Temple were consumed by a fire from Heaven; as was avowed by those who observed the fall of it; though Julian did impute it to the innocent Christians, and in revenge caused many of their Churches to be burned to ashes. 21 Antioch, situate in that part hereof which is called Casotis, first built, or began rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Asia, by whom named Antigonis; but finished and enlarged by Seleucus, after he had overthrown and slain him at the Battle of Issus. Built near the place, and partly out of the Ruins of an ancient City, in the second Book of Kings called Riblah in the Land of Hamath; Hamath the Great, in the sixth of Amos; by Josephus and the Syrians, Reblata. Memorable in those days for the Tragedies of Jeboab and Zedechias, Kings of Judah; the first of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty, by Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, 2 King. 23. 33. the other of his Eyes and Children, by the command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was said before. In following times it was by some Greek Writers called Epidaphne, from the nearness of it to that Grove: as afterwards in the times of Christianity, by the name of Theopolis, or the City of God; either from the many Miracles there done in the Primitive time, or from the great improvement which the Christian Faith did here receive, where the Disciples first obtained the name of Christians. The Royal Seat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria; and in the flourish and best fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary Residence of the Præfetti or Governours of the Eastern Provinces; next, of the Præfetti Prætorii Orientis, who had not only the superintendency over the Dioecese of the Orient, though that large enough; but also of the Dioecese of Egypt, Asia, Pontus, Thrace, extending to his jurisdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured also with the Residence of many of the Roman Emperours, especially of Venus and Valens, who spent here the greatest part of their times; and from the first dawning of the Gospel, with the seat of the Patriarch. A Title of such eminency in all times of the Church, the second in account to the See of Rome (till Constantinople being made the Imperial City, got precedence of it) that there are at this time no less than four great Prelates which pretend unto it, that is to say, the true Patriarch, governing the Christians of those parts, whom they call Syrians or Melchites; the Pseudo-Patriarch of the Jacobe and Maronite Sectaries, both which, for the greater credit to their Schisms, do assume this Title; and finally, a titular Patriarch nominated by the Pope, who since the time that the Western Christians were possessed of these Eastern Countries, hath assumed a power unto himself of nominating Patriarchs for Alexandria, Hierusalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City seated on both sides of the River Orontes, about twelve miles distant from the Shores of the Mediterranean; the River Pharfar passing on the South-side of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration, compassed with a double Wall, the outermost of which was of Stone, the other of Brick, with four hundred and sixty Towers in the Walls, and an impregnable Castle at the East-end thereof; and on the other side defended with big broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoining a deep Lake, coming out of the River Pharfar, before-mentioned. Adorned in former times with many sumptuous Palaces, and magnificent Temples, answerable to the Reputation of so great a City; till taken by the Saracens, and after by the Turks and Mamelucks, men careless of all State and Beauty in their fairest Cities, it began to grow unto decay. Recovered by the Western Christians from the power of the Turks, after a Siege of seven Months, June 3. Anno 1098, confirmed in their possession by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very fight hereof within few days after (June 28.) obtained against Corbanas, Lieutenant to the Persian Sultan; in which, with the loss of four thousand and two hundred of their own, they slew a hundred thousand of the Enemy. The Town and Territory given by the Conquerors to Bobemund a Noble Norman, and Prince of Tarentum; who by practising with one Pyrrius, who had the command of one of the chief Towers thereof, afterwards called St. Georges Tower, was secretly let into the City, and so made way for all the rest. Bobemund thus made the Prince, or as some say, King of Antioch, left it to Bobemund his Son about ten years after; succeeded in this Principate by Tancred and Roger, Princes of great Renown in those Holy Wars; which last unfortunately slain by the Turks, not far from Aleppo, in the year 1120. Baldwin the second having revenged his death by a signal Victory, joyined this Estate to the Kingdom of Hierusalem. Betrayed above sixty years after this, that is to say, in the year 1188, it came into the Power of Saladine, the victorious King of Egypt and Damascus, and therewithal no fewer than five and twenty Cities which depended on the fortunes of it: the glories of this famous City so declining after this last Tragedy (but whether laid desolate of set purpose, or destroyed by the injury of the time, I am not able to declare) that it is grown the Sepulchre of what once it was, and lieth buried in its own sad Ruins, hardly preserving the repute of a sorry Village. Such is the instability of all worldly Glories. Some other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembered the same day with Antioch.

As for the Story of this Province, as a State distinct, we find it had a King of its own, called the King of Hamath (the Kingdom of Tol or Tou before remembered) who together with the King of Arpad, commanded in this part of Syria, and the Isles adjoining, Vassals in time succeeding to the Kings of Tyre, who lorded it over all the Sea-coasts hereof, and consequently had great influence on the Inlands also. And it continued in this State till the Assyrian Kings began to turn their Forces Westwards when added to that Empire by  Tiglath Pileser, after the subversion of the Kingdom of Damascus; or by Salmanser, after the destruction of that of Israel. The proud but dreadful vaunt which Sennacherib, the Successor of those mighty Monarchs, made to Hezekiah, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arpad? shews clearly, that those Kingdoms had been conquered not long before; and therefore needs by Salmanser, or Tiglath Pileser. Afterwards, in the struglings betwixt the Babylonians and Egyptians, for the chief Command, it was a while at the devotions of the King of Egypt, it being at Reblata in this Province, that Jeboabaz King of Judah was put into Bonds, by the command of Pharaoh Necho, as was said before. But Necho being not long after vanquished by Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, it returned again to that Crown, and after followed the same fortunes with the rest of Syria.

3 COMAGENA.

COMAGENA is bounded on the East with the River Euphrates, by which parted from Mesopotamia; on the West, with the Mountains called Amanus, which divide it from Cilicia; on the North, with Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Minor; on the South with Palmyrene. Called also Euphratenfis and Euphratesia, when a Roman Province, by reason of its situation, bordering on that River.

The reason of the name I find not amongst my Authors; but find that many Learned men conceive it to be that part of Syria, which the Scriptures call Syria Maachab, mention whereof is made 1 Chron. chap. 19. ver. 6. gain-fayed by others, because they find a place called Maacha in the Tribe of Manasse; but with no great reason, as I take it. For being it is joyned (in 1 Chron. 19. v. 6 above-mentioned) in the same action with Mesopotamia, and Syria Sobab; and not so only, but placed between them in the Method of that holy Penman, I dare not think but that they were all very near neighbours, and ranked according to the natural situation of them. Which agreeth very well with the site of Comagena, having Mesopotamia on the East, and Aram-Sobab on the South. Nor is it any stronger proof unto the contrary, that Maacha is a Town of the Tribe of Manasse; than if a man should say, that there is no such Province as Mansfield in High Germany, because there is a Town of that name in England; or no such place as Savoy amongst the Alps; because there is a House of that name in L and n.

As for the People hereof, besides what they have common with the rest of the Syrians, they were of old much given unto Divination, and for that cause derided thus in the sixth Satyr of Juvenal.

*Spondet amorem tenerum vel divitis orbi
Testamentum ingens, calida pulmone Columba
Trallato, Armenius vel Comagenus Aruspex.
Petræ pullorum rimabitur, exta Castelli, Interdum & pueri. Factas quædã deferas ipse.*

Thus Englisht by my honoured Friend
Sir Robert Stapylton.

A childless rich mans Legacy, or young Love,
Are found 'till Lights of a warm trembling Dove,
By Comagenè Sooth-fayers; they look into
A dead Chicks breast; the same the Armenians do,
They view the Entrails of a Dog, and reach
A Child perhaps: They do it, and then preach.

Chief places of this part, 1 Samosata, the Metropolis or Head City of it, when a Roman Province, situate near the Banks of Euphrates, over which it had a Bridge for passage into Mesopotamia. Unfortunate for being the Birth-place of Lucian, that profane Scoffer of Christianity, though otherwise a man of a quick Wit, and of great Abilities: as also of Paulus Samosatensis, Patriarch of Antioch, condemned of Heresy in a Council holden in his own City, Anno 273. (by the great and most Learned Bishops of that Age, there assembled together) for teaching, That our Saviour was no other than a natural man; but neither God, nor the Son of God, as the Scriptures testify. 2 Germanicia (by some called Germanicopolis) on the other side of the Country, near the Mountain Amanus; no less unfortunate than the former, in being the Birth-place of Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople, who troubling the Peace of the Church with Heterodoxie, and impertinent niceties about the blessed Mother of Christ, as also about the Nature and Person of Christ himself, was thereupon condemned of Heresy in the Council of Ephesus, Anno 435. In former times called Adada, as some Write Adapa; but took this new name from Germanicus Cæsar, in honour of whom it was made a Roman Colony by Augustus, testified by this Inscription extant in Onuphrius, viz. COLONIA JULIA GERMANICIA, SACRA, AUGUSTA, FOELIX. 3 Singa, so called from the River upon which it is situate. 4 Antiochia penes Taurum, so called because seated at the foot of that Mountain, to differ it from the other of this name in Syria. 5 Pinara, one of the chief Cities of that part which is called Pieria. 6 Doliche, a small Town, but made an Episcopal See in the best times of the Church, as appeareth by the Acts of the Councils of Antioch and Constantinople, in which there is some mention of the Bishops of it. 7 Aleppo, now the principal of all the Country, supposed by some to be the Sepharvaim, mentioned 2 King. 17. 24. It was thus called, as some say, from Halep, which in the Language of those parts signifieth Milk, afforded liberally by the rich Pastures round about it: as others more improbably from Aleph, the first Letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, because the first in estimation of the Cities of Syria: Most probably from Alepius, Lieutenant here in the time of Julian the Apostata, who did here many notable Exploits, and amongst others, in or near the Ruines of some old Town of these parts, not yet agreed on (in case it be not Sepharvaim before-mentioned) advanced this City. Situate on the Banks of the River Singa, which rising out of the Hill Pierus, with many windings and turnings, runneth through Comagena, and there falleth into Euphrates. Destroyed by Hasael, King of the Assyrians, at such time as the Western Christians were possessed of this Country, and the Holy Land: but being repaired and re-peopled, became by reason of the commodious situation of it, to be much frequented by Merchants from all parts of the World. Situate in the midst betwixt Tripolis, Borsus, and Alexandretta, the three prime Ports of Turke on the one side, and the Persian Territories on the other: it was made choice of for the Staple of the Eastern Commodities, brought to Euphrates, and then boated to this Town by the River Singa. A City of great Trade at present, the English Merchants (amongst others which frequent the same) having here three Houses for the Stowage and disposing of their Commodities, and a chief Officer or Superintendent over the whole Factory, whom they call the Consul of Aleppo. But greater was the Trade hereof in the former times, before the Portugals found out a way by Sea to those Eastern Countries, since followed by the English, Hollanders, and other Nations. The building of it low, but of one Roof high (as in most Towns of Syria) with a plain top plaistered to walk upon; and with Arches before their doors or Houses: as well to pass dry under them in time of Rain, as to shew their Wares. Pleasantly seated amongst Gardens, with the sweet smells whereof very much refreshed; the ordinary Residence of a Turkish Basha; safe rather in the remoteness of it from any Enemy, than the strength of the place, as being nothing less than well fortified. Near one of the Gates they threw a Sepulchre, by them affirmed to be Saint George's (whom of all the Christian Saints they only worship) before which they maintain a Lamp which burns continually. 8 Aman, in the way betwixt Tripolis and Aleppo, supposed by some to be that Hamath, mention whereof is made 2 King. chap. 17. 12. A City of a large circuit, pleasantly seated on two Hills, which give it a fair prospect over six of the neighbouring Villages; a thing not to be boasted of, as the World now goeth, by many of the Syrian Cities. On a third Hill once stood a Castle, now decayed, ruinous, beneath it

4 PALMYRENE.

PALMYRENE is bounded on the East, by the River Euphrates; on the West, by Syria properly and specially so called; on the North, with Comagena; and on the South, with Mount Libanus; dividing it from the Province of Cælo Syria; and part of Arabia Deserta.

It took this name from Palmyra the chief City of it. When conquered by the Romans, and made a distinct Province of it self, it had then the name of Syria Secunda, and Salutaris: called Syria Secunda, to distinguish it from Syria Prima; and Salutaris, in regard of the medicinal waters springing in many places of it. But before it had any of these names, it was in the Scriptures called Aram-Sobab, whereof Adad-exar was King in the time of David, as we read 2 Sam. 8. 3. and 1 Chron. 18. 3.

The Country destitute of Rivers fit for Navigation, save that it bordereth on Euphrates; but liberally furnished with those hot Springs good for many Diseases, which gave it the name of Salutaris. Of which thus writeth Marcellinus, lib. 14. In his tractibus navigerum nusquam visitur flumen, as in locis plurimis aque suapte natura calentes emergunt; ad usum apia multiplicium medelarum. So he: The sense whereof we had before.

Places of most observation, are 1 Palmyra seated in a Desert and sandy Plain, one of the Cities built by Solomon in the Wilderness, mention of which is made 1 King. 9. 17, 18. this Palmyra being supposed to be that City which is there called Tadmor, or Tamar in the Vulgar Latin. The cause for long time of much contention betwixt the Parthians and the Romans, as situate in the borders of either Empire; not fully settled in the Roman, till that they had subdued Zenobia, then the Queen hereof. By Adrian the Emperour, who repaired it, it was called Hadrianople, but it held not long; the old name in short prevailing above the new. 2 Gazer. 3 Bethboron the upper. And 4 Bethboron the nether, said to be fenced Cities, with Walls, Gates, and Bars, 2 Chron. 8. 4. And 5 Balath; four of the other Towns here built by Solomon; but either quite worn out of knowledge, or called by new names in the time of Ptolemy, who saith nothing of them. 6 Adada, built as the name doth intimate, by some of the Adads Kings of this Country, or of Damascus, to which last made subject. 7 Sura, more towards the River Euphrates, in the Notitia, called Flavia Firma Sura; which sheweth that it was either repaired, or made a Colony by the Emperour Vespasian, whose fore-name was Flavius: honoured with an Episcopal See also in the times next following, as appeareth by the Acts of the Council of Constantinople. 8 Hamath, on the banks of the River Euphrates, which if it were lawful for me to criticize upon my Author, I should conceive to be Hamath of the Scriptures, which is called Hamath-Sobab, 2 Chron. 8. 3. against which Solomon prevailed: the mistake from Camatha to Alamatha, being not uncalle in the transcripts. Confirmed herein by that passage in 2 Chron. 18. 3. where it is said, that David smote Hadad-exar King of Sobab unto Hamath, as he went to establish his Dominion by the River Euphrates: By which it seemeth that Hamath stood upon that River, as the Camatha or Alamatha of Ptolemy is said to do. And if it were the same, as I think it was, I should conceive it to be the chief Seat of those Kings, and the principal City of this Kingdom: the word Sobab, being added to it, not only for distinctions sake, but in way of eminency. But if the judicious Reader approve not this criticism, I should next think that this Alamatha of Ptolemy were that it a fair River which runs gently by its environed round about with Orchards of Palm-trees, and very good fruits. 9 Chalmadora, seated by Ptolemy on Euphrates, of which no ruines now remaining, unless the name be changed to 10 Byrrha, as perhaps it may be: that being made by Ptolemy, the most Northern Town of Comagena; this the utmost Town which the Egyptian Mamaluck (then Lords of Syria) had upon this River, and the boundary betwixt them and the Sultans of Persia. Memorable for an old Ceremony here used by those Amaluck, who accounted not themselves worthy of the name of a Sultan of Egypt, till in this place in solemn pomp in the sight of their Army, they had forced their Horse into the River, and made him drink of the waters of it: testifying by that Ceremony, as well the extent of their Dominions, as their readiness to defend the same against all Invaders. A Ceremony performed with great State by Camfon Gaurus, in the War betwixt him and Selimus the first. But for all this he lost the field, and his life to boot in the fight near Aleppo; and therewith did not only leave him Syria as the fruits of his Victory, but opened him a fair way to the conquest of Egypt, which soon after followed. And hereto I refer the Cities of 11 Hena, and 12 Isab, with their several Territories, mentioned together with the City of Sepharvaim, Isa. 37. 13. and 2 King. 18. 34. it being probable, that if Sepharvaim were the City now called Aleppo, as the Jews that dwell there say it was, that then the other two joyned together with it, must be hercabouts, though we find no tract of them in the old Geographers.

And if they were (as it seems probable to me) we have then more Kings in this Province in the elder times, than the Kings of Maachab; unless perhaps it may be said that the Kingdom of Maachab (or of Aram-Maachab) being broken in pieces, these petit States arose from the ruins of it. Of little observation in the course of business, whether entire or subdivided into parcels; but that the King hereof (the King of Maachab) aided the Ammonites against David with 1000 men: no very great number I confess (as one who lay more out of the danger than the rest of the Syrian Confederates did) but sufficient to engage him in the quarrel with them. Nor find we any thing after this touching their affairs, but that the Kings of Hena, Isab and Sepharvaim (who shared the greatest part amongst them) being swallowed up by the Assyrians (as the fore-mentioned Texts do expressly say) some Colonies of the People hereof were sent by Salmanasser the Assyrian Monarch, to plant the desolate dwellings of the Tribes of Israel, as appeareth plainly in 2 King. 17. 24. A course in which the Conquerour dealt exceeding wisely, by weakening thereby the great Cities and mightier States of this Country, which otherwise might have been apt enough to revolt again; and strengthening therewithal their conquests in the Land of Israel, which otherwise had lain open to the next Invader, and yielded little or no profit to the publick Treasury. More politick in this than the Babylonians, in the like dissolution and destruction of the Kingdom of Judah. After this time it followed the same fortune with the rest of Syria, till Tigra-ner the last King hereof was subdued by the Romans. At what time all the rest of Syria being reduced under the form of a Province, this part being then in the possession of Antiochus, Son of that Antiochus surnamed Eusebes, whom Tigra-ner had spoiled of his estates, was left unto him by the Conquerours with the title of King. Continuing in his Line till the death of another Antiochus, the last King hereof, when made a Province of the Empire by Tiberius Cæsar, as is said by Tacitus: Qu. Servus being sent hither as the first Roman Prætor for the government of it; though Sueton. doth refer it to the times of Vespasian.

that Elam, or Helam, next unto which David discomfited that great Army of the Mesopotamians, mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16, 17. 9 Rafab, a Town of note in the time of Ptolemy; but of greater in the Holy Scripture, where it is represented to us by the name of Rejeph, Isa. 3. 20. Rejeph Civitas Syriae, as Saint Jerom hath it: and if a Town of Syria, then most like this, 10 Beisab, and 11 Berobai, two other Cities of this Kingdom, taken by David in his War against Hadad-ezar, 2 Sam. 8. 8. the last supposed to be the Barabene of Ptolemy, though placed by him among the Towns of Arabia Deserta, to which it seems it was allotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria, as the rest, was once a distinct Kingdom of it self, by the name of the Kingdom of Sobab, or of Aram-Sobab. The first King thereof, whose name occurs in Holy Scripture, being Rehob, the Co-temporary of Saul King of Israel, by whom discomfited in battle, as is said 1 Sam. 14. 47. But Adad-ezar the Son of Rehob, a Prince of greater power and valour than his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command (as is said 2 Sam. 10. 19.) conceived himself a fit match for David, and thereupon opposed his passage, as he went to recover his border at the River Emphrates. In which Action though he lost a thousand Chariots, and twenty thousand Foot, and seven hundred Horse, yet would he not to end the war: but first with the Syrians of Damascus, and after with the Ammonites and their Confederates; and finally by the aid of the Mesopotamians, renewed the Quarrel. But being discomfited also in this last enterprise with the loss of forty thousand and seven hundred men, and his life to boot, the Kingdom of Zobab was brought under by the Kings of Damascus. The story of this war we have in 2 Sam. ch. 8. v. 10. in 1 Chron. ch. 18. and 1 King. 11. 23, 24. yet were not the Kings of Damascus so well settled in it, but that David had possessed himself of Beisab and Berobai, and other pieces of importance: the Regal City of Hamath-Zobab being won by Solomon, and many of the best Towns of it built by him to assure his Conquest. But the Kingdom of Solomon being rent in pieces in the next Succession, the Kingdom of Zobab fell unto those of Damascus; and so continued till Damascus it self was conquered by the Kings of Affria: unless perhaps that Hamath, which Jeroboam the second is said to have subdued (together with Damascus it self) to the Crown of Israel, 2 King. 14. 28. were this Hamath-Zobab, as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the affairs of this Country, till the time of Gallienus the Roman Emperor: during whose reign, amongst the rest who canonized that Empire, betwixt themselves commonly called the Thirty Tyrants, Odenatus a man of great power and virtue assumed the Imperial habit, and took unto him the command of these parts of Syria, together with Mesopotamia, and some other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapor the King of Persia; against whom he had so good an hand, that he discomfited him in battle, seiz'd upon his Treasures, and took many of his Nobles, and most of his Conquibues. For which great acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus, he was not long after slain by Maeonius his Cousin German. Who by that murder hoped to obtain the Principality of Palmyrene; for by that name it was now called; but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate Widow, a most masculine Lady, not only preserved the Principality of Palmyrene for the use of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple habit, and the command of his Army: which she managed with great wisdom and gallantry, the rest of the time of Gallienus, all the reigns of Clau- dus, and Quintillus, his two next Successors. But vanquished and took Prisoner by Aurelianus (who had the happiness to unite the broken limbs of that Empire into as strong a body as ever formerly) she was in triumph through Rome. The terror of her name, and the unusualness of the sight, so generally heightening the expectation; Ut ea specie nihil unquam esset pompabilius, saith Trebellianus Pollio. That never any shew was esteemed so glorious. A Lady of so strong a virtue, and of such command upon her self, that she is said never to have made use of her husbands company when she perceived her self with child. After this nothing singular in the story of Palmyrene, but when all the rest of Syria was subdued by the Christians of the West, this Province and the next only was made good against them by the Turkish Sultans of Damascus.

COELOSTRIA.

COELO-STRIA is bounded on the East with Palmyrene, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with Palastine; on the North, with Palmyrene, and some part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the interposition of Mount Libanus: on the South, with Inura, and Arabia Deserta also.

This is the Syria so much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, called by the Greeks, Celo-Syria, i.e. Syria Cava, because partly situate in the hollow Vallies intersected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus; and sometimes also Syro-Phoenicia, from the intermixture of those people; as the Phoenicians which went with Dido into Africa, were called Libo-Phoenices. By the Romans when made a distinct Province of that Empire, it had the name of Phoenice Libani, or Phoenicia Libanensis, to difference it from the other Phoenicia, which they call Martima. But before all this by the Hebrews named Aram, Damasek, Syria Damascena in the Latin, from Damascus the chief City of it: unless perhaps we should rather say, that Aram-Damasek contained only that which lay between the Mountains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus, the rest being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Palastine and Arabia Deserta, as perhaps it was.

Chief Rivers hereof, are 1 Abana, and 2 Pharpar, the Rivers of Damascus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 King. 5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adoni, spoken of a bread; the other that which Ptolemy calleth Chrysorrhoas, or the golden Flood; which rising in the Hills of this Country, passeth by Damascus, and so together with the other into the Mediterranean Sea. Chief Mountains of it, 1 Alfadamus, by the Phoenicians called Syrian, by the Amorites, Samir; a ridge of Hills which beginning at the East-point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, shutting up on that side the Land of Israel, whereof more in Palastine. 2 Hippus, a ledge of Mountains in the South parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deserta.

Towns of most consideration in it, 1 Heliopolis so called from an Image of the Sun there worshipped in the time of Paganism, now Bellebe, or (as some say) Balbec. 2 Chalcis, more Eastward toward Damascus, which gave the title of a King to Ptolemy Menais, and his Son Lysanias, the Kingdom then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Inura in Palastine. But that Family being either expired or grown out of favour, and Abila with Inura otherwise disposed of; the title of the King of Chalcis, with the Town and Territory, was given to Herod, brother of Agrippa the first, King of Jewry. Erroneously supposed by some Learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Country called

Chalcidice

Chalcidice takes denomination; that Chalcis being placed by Ptolemy a degree and a half more East than Damascus, and two degrees more towards the North; where as this Chalcis lieth on the West of that City, in the shades of Libanus, and in the very same degree of Northern Latitude. 3 Abila, seated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Heliopolis and Chalcis, from whence the Country round about it is called Abilene; given to Lysanias, the Son of the former Lysanias, King of Chalcis, with the Title of Tetrach, Mentioned Luke 3. 1. with those other Princes which shared Palastine amongst them. Not that he was the Son of Herod, as anciently Beda and Euthymius, and of late times some very industrious men have been of opinion: but partly because the Cities of the Chalcis and Abila of right belonged to those of the Tribe of Nephthali (though never conquered or possessed by them) and so to be accounted a part of Palastine; and partly because the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when Saint Luke wrote that Gospel, was possessed together with the rest by King Agrippa. Restored (as it seemeth) to the former Family, after his decease; for known it was by the name of Abila Lysania in the time of Ptolemy. 4 Adida, memorable for the Victory which Aretas King of Arabia obtained near unto it, against Alexander King of Jewry, the Kingdom of Syria then lying open as a prey to the next Invaders. 5 Hippus, or Hippone, as Pliny calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that name. 6 Capitolias, now called Suete. 7 Gadara. 8 Seythopolis. 9 Gerasa, and 10 Philadelphia, reckoned by Ptolemy as Cities of Celo-Syria; but of right belonging unto Palastine, where we mean to take notice of them. 11 Eden, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites, and anciently of such esteem, that the whole Country of Damascus was called Beis-Eden, Ames 1. 5. 12 Damascus, situate in a large Plain environed with Hills, and watered with the River Chrysorrhoas, which with a great noise descendeth from the Mountains, and so abundantly serveth the City, that not only most of the Houses have their Fountains of it; but their Orchards and Gardens have some Rivulets conveyed into them. The Country round about abundantly enrich'd with plenty of most excellent Wines (the Vines hereof bearing Grapes all the year long) and great store of Wheat; as their Orchards with variety of most delicate Fruits: our Damascens, (or Pruna Damascena, as the Latins call them) coming first from hence; as also our Damask Roses, but infinite sort of their natural Sweetness, by the transplantation. A place so furnishing of Delights, so girt about with odoriferous and curious Gardens, that the vile Impostor Mahomet would never be persuaded to come into it; for fear (as himself was used to say) left being ravished with the ineffable pleasures of it, he should forget the business he was sent about, and make there his Paradise. But Mikhaïus, one of his Successors, having no such scruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the most part) till the building of Bagdat by Bagiaser the twentieth Caliph, about an hundred years after this Removal: the Regal Seat before that time being at Mecca, Cufa, or some other of the best Towns of Arabia Felix. The chief Buildings of it, of late times (till destroyed by the Tartars) were a strong Castle, in the opinion of those times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamarlane, whom nothing was able to withstand; and as majestic a Church, garnished with forty sumptuous Porches, and no fewer than 9000 Lanthorns of Gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who fled thither for Sanctuary) was by the said Tamarlane most cruelly and unmercifully burnt, and pulled down unto the ground. Repaired by the Mamelucks of Aegypt, when Lords of Syria, it hath since flourished in Trade, the People being industrious, and celebrated for most excellent Artizans; the branching of Satins, and fine Linnen, which we call by the name of Damask; being amongst many others, one of their Inventions. Renowned in the Old Testament for the Kings hereof, and the birth of Eliezer, Abraham's Steward (so honourably ancient 'twas this City;) and in the New, for the Conversion of St. Paul, who first preached the Gospel in this place, and here so narrowly escaped the snares of his Enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the House in which he was, by the help of a Basket.

But ancient and honourable though this City of Damascus was, we find nothing of the Story of it, till the time of David; the Kings thereof until those days, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the Kings of Zobab. The first Exploit ascribed unto them in the Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Adad-ezar, upon his first defeat by David: in which action having lost 22000 men, they were so broken, that they did not only suffer David to put Garrisons in the best Cities of Damascus, but patiently became his Servants, and brought Presents to him, 2 Sam. 8. 5, 6. The name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Josephus affirmed out of Nicolaus Damascenus, to have been Adad (a name much cherished and assumed by the Kings Successors) who keeping constant to the party of Adad-ezar in his following Wars, was at last slain with him, in that great discomfiture which David gave them, mentioned in 2 Sam. ch. 10. v. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of those Kings, that being supplied to us by Josephus out of their Records; who also added, That Rezin, one of the chief Commanders of Adad-ezar, taking this advantage, not only usurped his Masters Kingdom, but made himself Master of the Kingdom of Damascus also. From this time forward the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the Tradition of Josephus only, but founded plainly on the Scriptures, of which see 1 King. 11. v. 23, 24. the Scriptures after this taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the name of Kings of Syria) but of those that reigned in Damascus; who in short time had swallowed up the petit Kingdoms of Geshur, Issak, Rebobi, besides that of Sobab before-mentioned.

The KINGS of SYRIA or DAMASCUS.

- 1 Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Adad-ezar King of Sobab, in whose quarrel he was vanquished and slain by David.
- 2 Rezin, of whom the Scripture saith, in the 2. of Chron. that when David slew them of Sobab, he fled from Adad-ezar his Lord, and gathered men unto him, with certain Captains over a Band; and went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.
- 3 Adad II. an Idumean, supposed to be of the Family of Adad-ezar, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Aegypt, where he married Taphnes the Queens Sister; and hearing that both David and Isab were dead, returned again into his Country, and as some write, expelled Rezin out of Damascus; and reigned there as King.
- 4 Hезion, Successor unto Adad.
- 5 Tabrimon, the Son of Hезion, as is said 2 King. 15. 18.
- 6 Ben-hadad, the Son of Tabrimon, Rival by Af King

King of Judah, to aid him in his Wars against Bascha of Israel.

- 7 Ben-hadad II. Son of the former, twice invaded Israel in the reign of Achab; but both times notably repulsed: the first time by a Sally of 700 men, at the Siege of Samaria; the next at Aphec, where with the like number in effect, he was taken Prisoner, and his Army routed.
- 8 Hazael, Captain of the Host to Ben-hadad, anointed King of Syria by the Prophet Elisha, whom God appointed so to do, that by his hands he might avenge himself on Ben-hadad, whom Hazael slew; but he proved as ill a neighbour to the Kings of Israel, as those before him. He attempted upon Judah also in the time of Joas, but bribed with the Treasures of the Temple, he withdrew his Forces.
- 9 Ben-hadad III. Son of Hazael, discomfited in three set Battels by Joas King of Israel.
- 10 Ben-hadad IV. Son of Ben-hadad the third.
- 11 Ben-hadad V. Son of Ben-hadad the fourth.
- 12 Ben-hadad VI. Son of Ben-hadad the fifth, in the time of one of which three Kings, but which one we find not for a certain, Jeroboam the Son of Joas King of Israel subdued both Chamath, and Damascus; of which see 2 King. 14. v. 18.
- 13 Rezin II. Son of Ben-hadad the sixth, and the last King of Damascus, who joining with Pekah King of Israel, against Abaz King of Judah, enforced him to call unto his aid Tiglath Pileser, King of Assyria; by whom Rezin was taken and beheaded, and the City of Damascus won; the Kingdom of Syria by that means united to the Assyrian Empire.

After this time, the Syrians continued subject to the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Persians, became a part of their Estate: remaining so till the first Battel betwixt Alexander and Darius, fought near Issus in Cilicia. The Victory wherein falling to the Macedonians, gave him without more trouble than the Siege of Tyre, the possession of Syria and Phœnicia. He dying not long after his Conquest of Persia, this Country lay as it were at stake betwixt Ptolomy King of Egypt, and Antigonus the chief Lord of Asia: but the possession of it, together with the rest of the Persian Empire, in both Asia's, fell in conclusion to the share of Seleucus, for his many great and signal Victories firnamed Nicator, a man strangely preferred. For being at the first Governour of Chaldaea only, he was forced to leave Babylon, and to forsake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadful to all the Macedonian Captains; and to fly into Egypt, where he became Ptolomy's Admiral. After which Ptolomy fighting a pitched Field with Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him, and having won the Battel, gave him aid and licence to recover his former Government. Seleucus, well beloved of the People, soon made himself Master not of Chaldaea only, but of all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being seconded by his good Friends Ptolomy, Cassander, and Lysimachus) he encountered Antigonus at Ipsus in Asia, where Antigonus himself was slain, and his whole Army routed. This Victory made Seleucus Lord of all Asia, from whence passing over into Europe, he vanquished and slew Lysimachus: Seven Months after which Victory, he was slain by Ptolomy Ceraunus, whose Patron and Protector he had formerly been; being yet the last Survivor of all Alexander's Princes, and the only Possessor of all the Dominions which his Master had, by the way of Conquest, Egypt excepted. His Successors, although they were Lords of all Asia, yet since in Syria they kept their residence, to the end that they might the better furnish themselves with Souldiers out of Greece upon all occasions, as was said before, they were commonly called the Kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatness of Estate and Power, which Seleucus left them; though being a full-bodied Tree, and of several Limbs, it endured the lopping off of many Branches, and many a sad blow at the very Root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of this House, Arfaces a Noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Persian Empire, lying on that side of Euphrates; and erected the so much celebrated Parthian Kingdom, whereof more in Persia. And in the Reign of Antiochus Magnus, so called for his Victories in Egypt, Judea, and Babylonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Asian Provinces on this side Mount Taurus, not wanting many provocations to incite them to it: for he not only had made War against Ptolomy Philopater King of Egypt, whom the Romans had taken into their Protection; but stirred up the Cities and States of Greece against them: invaded Lysimachia, and some other parts of Europe, in defiance of them, and had received Annibal the Carthaginian, and Thos the Aetolian, their most mortal Enemies, into his Dominion, governing his Counsels by the influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that Ambition and Avarice, to add to their Fame and Empire by the overthrow of so great a Prince, did persuade much with them. So that the point being brought to a ready issue, they pleaded it on both sides in the Battel of Magnesia, a City of Lydia, to which Antiochus brought an Army of 300000 Foot, and as many armed Chariots, besides store of Elephants, if the Roman Writers be not over-lavish in their Reports. But rejecting the Advice of Annibal, and committing his Affairs wholly to Evil-Counsellors, he was vanquished by no more than four Legions of Enemies, and for his Peace compelled to quit all his Asian Provinces on that side of Taurus, and to pay 15000 Talents in ready money for the charge of the War. The rest of his Estates they were content he should enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile cessisset (as Florus handsomely puts it on him) because he had so easily relinquished that. Afterwards in the civil Broils among themselves, about the Succession of the Kingdom, Alexander King of the Jews took from them many of their best Towns in Palestine, as Joppa, Gaza, Anbedon, Azotus, Rhinocorura, almost all Samaria, and Gantoniuu, with Scythopolis, Gadara, and many other strong Towns in Cæle Syria. Finally, when they had consumed almost all the Royal Race, and changed their Kings no less than ten times in forty years (a sure sign of a falling and expiring Kingdom) they were fain to cast themselves upon Tigranes the King of Armenia, a puissant and successful Prince, till engaged in the Quarrel of Mithridates against the Romans: by whom stripped of all his Estates on this side Euphrates, he was fain to content himself with his own Armenia, leaving Syria to the absolute disposal of Pompey, who presently reduced it to the form of a Province. This said, we have not much more to do with the House of Seleucus, but to lay down their Names, and times of their several Governments, till we draw towards the last end of

THE MACEDONIAN KINGS OF STRIA.

A.M.

3654 1 Seleucus Nicator, the first King of this House. 31. 3685

- 3685 2 Antiochus, firnamed Soter, or the Saviour; memorable for nothing so much, as marrying with Stratonice his Father's Wife, in his Father's life-time.
- 3704 3 Antiochus II. by his flattering Courtiers firnamed Theos, or the God; but being poysoned by his Wife, he proved a Mortal.
- 3719 4 Seleucus II. firnamed by the like flattery Callinicus, or fair Conquerour, because shamefully beaten by the Parthians.
- 3739 5 Seleucus III. called for the like reason Ceraunus, or the Thunderer; the eldest Son of Callinicus.
- 3742 6 Antiochus III. firnamed Magnus, the younger Son of Callinicus, a Prince that embraced many great Actions, and was fortunate in his Successes beyond Euphrates: he plagued the Jews, but lost all Asia Minor unto the Romans.
- 3778 7 Seleucus IV. called Philopater, the Son of Antiochus, who first began to cast his eye upon the Riches of the Temple at Hierusalem.
- 3790 8 Antiochus IV. firnamed Epiphanes, or the Illustrious; but more truly Epimanes, or the Mad. The great Scourge of the Jews; Brother of Seleucus Philopater, with whom beginneth the Story of the first Book of the Maccabees.
- 3802 9 Antiochus V. called by the name of Eupator, the Son of Epiphanes; who by Lysias his Captain tyrannized over the poor Judeans, for the little time that he reigned; as did also
- 3804 10 Demetrius, firnamed Soter, Son of Seleucus Philopater, by the hands of Nicanor: having possessed himself of the Diadem, by the death of Eupator, slain in his favour by the Souldiers who revolted from him. He was afterwards deposed for a time by Alexander Bala, pretending himself to be the Son of Eupator, supported herein by the Antiochians.
- 3814 11 Alexander Bala, discomfited in his first Battel by Demetrius, whom he slew and vanquished in the second; married Cleopatra Daughter of Ptolomy Philometor, by whose aid he was victorious. But a Quarrel breaking out between them, Ptolomy invaded Syria, and caused himself to be crowned King of it; Alexander being slain by some of his Souldiers.
- 3819 12 Demetrius II. firnamed Nicanor, Son of Demetrius the first, recovered his Fathers Kingdom, a Friend of the Maccabees, but so cruel to his own People, that he was driven out of his Kingdom by Tryphon General of his Armies.
- 3821 13 Antiochus VI. firnamed Eutibates, the Son of Alexander and Cleopatra, advanced unto the Throne by Tryphon, and after slain by him to make way for himself unto the Diadem.
- 3824 14 Tryphon, called also Diadorus, having driven out Demetrius, and slain Antiochus, made himself King.
- 3827 15 Antiochus VII. firnamed Seder, Brother of Demetrius, having overcome and slain Tryphon, succeeded him in the Estate; for a while victorious against the Parthians, but afterwards overcome and slain by them.

After whose death Demetrius Nicator (having lived in Parthia since the loss of his Kingdom) was restored again unto the Throne; which having held about four years, he was again dispossessed and slain by

- 3843 16 Alexander II. firnamed Zebenna; an Egyptian of mean birth, set up by Ptolomy Energetes, and pretending himself to be the adopted Son of Antiochus, afterwards vanquished and slain by
- 3845 17 Antiochus VIII. from the crookedness of his nose firnamed Gryphus, Son of Demetrius, aided herein by the Egyptians, with whom reconciled: having reigned about eight years in peace; embroyed him in war with his half Brother Antiochus firnamed Cyzicenus; which with variable success on both sides, continued till the time of his death, having reigned 29 years in all.
- 3874 18 Seleucus V. Son of Antiochus Gryphus, in the beginning of his reign overcame and slew his Uncle Cyzicenus; but being vanquished by Antiochus firnamed Eusebes or Plus, one of the Sons of Cyzicenus, he fled into Cilicia, and was there burnt in his Palace.
- 19 Antiochus IX. firnamed Eusebes, having first vanquished Seleucus, and afterwards Antiochus, another of the Sons of Gryphus, was crowned King of Syria; but slain not long after in the Persian wars.
- 20 Philip, and Demetrius III. firnamed Eucerus, younger Sons of Gryphus, jointly Kings of Syria but reigning in their several parts. Of which Demetrius intending to dispossess his Brother, was himself vanquished, and forced to fly into Parthia; leaving the whole Kingdom unto Philip. During which amongst themselves Syria was invaded, and in part conquered by Aretas King of the Arabians, and Alexander King of the Jews.
- 3884 21 Tigranes King of Armenia, during these dissensions was by the Syrians chosen King, that by his power they might be freed from the Jews and Arabians: the most puissant Prince that reigned in Syria, since the time of Antiochus the Great, as being King of Syria by election, of Armenia by succession, of Media by conquest. But engaging himself with Mithridates (whose Daughter he had married) against the Romans, was vanquished by Lucullus: who with the loss of five Romans only, and the wounds of an hundred, is reported to have slain of his Enemies above 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquished by Lucullus, he yielded himself to Pompey (who being appointed Lucullus Successor, deprived him of the honour of ending that War) and retaining to himself Armenia only, he left all Syria to the Romans, having reigned eighteen years. And though Antiochus Comagenus, the Son of Eusebes, petitioned Pompey for a restitution to the Throne of his Ancestors, yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying, That he would not trust the Country into such weak hands as were not able to defend it against the Arabians, Parthians, and the like Invaders; and so reduced it presently to the form of a Province. The government of this Country under these new Lords, was accounted to be one of the greatest honours of the Empire: the Prefect hereof having almost regal jurisdiction over all the Regions on this side Euphrates, with a superintendency over Egypt. Niger, the concurrent of Sycerus was Prefect here; and on the strength hereof presumed on that competition. So also was Cassius Syrus, who being ing a Native of this Country, and well-beloved by reason of his moderate and plausible demeanour, had almost tumbled M. Antonius out of his Throne. On this occasion it was enacted by the Senate, that no man hereafter should have any military or legal command in the Province where he was born: Left perhaps supported by the natural propension of the people to one of their own Nation; and heartened by the powerableness of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himself, which was common to the Senate and people of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and passed but for one Province only, Phœnicia being taken also into the account; which made the Antiochians so proud and insolent, that Adrian, in his time intended to subduct Phœnicia from it, Ne tot civitatum Metropolis Antiochia diceretur (saith Gallicanus) that Antioch might not be the chief of so many Cities. But what he lived not to accomplish, was performed by Constantine, by whom Phœnicia was not only taken off, but Syria it self divided into four distinct Provinces, as was shewed before, each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City; but all subordinate to the command of the Comes, or Prefect of the East, as he to the command of the Præfatus Prætorii Orientis, the greatest Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often spoke already.

For the defence hereof as well against all Foreign invasions, as the insurrections of the Natives (a wavering and inconstant People) the Romans kept here in continual pay four Legions, with their aids, and other additaments. For so many Mutinians had here in the time of Galba; and by the strength and reputation of those Forces, was able to transfer the Empire upon Vespasian. And though the Constantinian Emperors to whose share it fell, in the division of the Empire, rather increased than diminished any part of this strength; yet when the fatal time was come, and that Empire was in the declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Hameer their third Caliph, Anno 636. possessed themselves of it, Heraclius then reigning in Constantinople. And it continued in their power till Tangelipix the Turk, having conquered Persia, and the Provinces on that side of Emperaters, passed over the River into Syria, and made himself Master of a great part of that also. A quarrel falling out betwixt him and the nearest Kinsmen, and thereby a great stop made in their furthest progress, was thus composed, by the mediation of the Caliph of Babylon, in the time of Axon his Successor. To Cutha Moser was assigned a convenient Army, to be by him employed against the Christians, with Regal power over the Provinces by him gained, without relation or subordination to the Persian Sultan: of whose successes and affairs hath been spoke elsewhere. To Melech and Ducat, two others of his discontented Kinsmen, but all of the same Selucian family, he gave the fair Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and those parts of Syria, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, who then held all Phœnicia, and the Sea-coasts of Palestine; to be held in fee and vassalage of the Crown of Persia. To these two brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkish Kingdom in Syria: who, with their Successors, by reason that here they held their residence, caused themselves to be called

THE TURKISH KINGS OF DAMASCUS.

- 1075 1 Melech and Ducat, the first Turkish Kings of Damascus, by the gift of Axon, the second Sultan of the Turks in Persia, added to their Dominions all the rest of Syria, together with part of Cilicia, and some

- neighbouring Provinces in the Lesser Asia.
- 2 N. N. Sultan of Damascus, at such times as the Christians of the West won the Holy Land: against whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damascus; and in a set battel discomfited and slew Roger the Norman, Prince of Antioch.
- 1146 3 Noradine, (the Son of Sanguin) General of the Armies, and Son-in-law to the former King, succeeded him in the estate. A noble Prince, memorable amongst other things for a gallant answer made to his Commanders, when they perswaded him to take the advantage on the death of Baldwin the third, and to invade Jerusalem whilst the Christians were busie in solemnizing his Funerals. Not so, faith he, Compassion and regard is to be had of the just sorrow of these Christians, who have lost such a King, as could not be equalled in the world.
- 1175 4 Melechfala, Son of Noradine, contented by reason of his youth, by his Nobles, and Souldiers, who made choice of Saladine for their King; by whom dispossessed first, and after vanquished.
- 1176 5 Saladine, the Turkish Sultan of Egypt, having vanquished the Persians, or Partians, coming under the conduct of Cacedo, Uncle to Melechfala, to restore that Prince to his estate, remained King of Damascus: and by the puissance of his Armies, recovered from the Christians all Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Jerusalem also.
- 1199 6 Eladel, or El-Aphzal, the eldest Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Damascus; which he exchanged for that of Egypt with his Brother Elaziz.
- 7 Elaziz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded upon this exchange in the Realm of Damascus, murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.
- 8 Saphradine, the Brother of Saladine, having barbarously murdered eight of the Sons of Saladine, (the youngest called Saphradine escaping only, who was after Sultan of Aleppo) possessed himself of the Kingdom of Damascus, left at his death to Corradine, his Son or Nephew.
- 9 Corradine, Son or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death left Sultan of Damascus; to which all Syria and Palestine were then made Provincials. But the treacheries and murders of Saphradine crying loud for vengeance, Haalon the Tartar, in the year 1262. having taken the King of Damascus Prisoner (but whether Corradine, or some other, I am not able to say) brought him before the walls of the City, threatening to kill him in the sight of the people, if they did not deliver it unto him. Which the Citizens refusing to do, the wretched King was torn in pieces, and the City taken by assault: the Kingdom taken by the Conquerours conferred upon Agab the Son of Haalon. And so ended the Selucian Family of the Kings of Damascus in the person of Corradine, or the Son of Corradine, most miserably murdered by the Tartars; as it had done in Egypt 17 years before, in the person of Melechfala, and Elmutan, the Son of Meledine, as villainously deposed and murdered by the Mamalucks. So slippery is the foundation of those Kingdoms that are laid in blood.
- Nor did this Kingdom hold long in the hands of the Tartars, Tartars, recovered from them in short time by the Mamalucks, then Kings of Egypt: from them once more regained by the furious Tamarlane: who in the year 1400 besieged Damascus with an Army of 1500000 men, (if the number be not mistaken, and one Cypher added more than should) in pursuit whereof he filled up the ditches with his Prisoners, put all the people to the Sword; and with great Art raised three Towers as a Trophy of his victory, built with the heads of those whom he had so slaughtered. A man so strangely made up of vice and virtues, that it is hard to say which had the predominancy. But the violence of this tempest being overblown, the Mamalucks, from whom he had also conquered the Kingdom of Egypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damascus, continuing in their power till the year 1516, when Soliman the first discomfited Campion Gauran the Egyptian Sultan in the fields of Aleppo. Upon the news whereof the Citizens of Damascus, fearing the spoil of their rich City, then of very great trading, set open their Gates unto the Visitors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria, by their example. By means whereof, without any more blows, the Turks became Lords of this Country; as the next year of Egypt also, by the vanquishment and death of Isonbeims who succeeded Campion: so rooting out the name and government of the Mamalucks, and adding those rich Kingdoms to the Turkish Empire.

And so much for Syria.

MOUNT HERMON.

IN our passage out of Celo-Syria into Palestine, we must cross Mount Hermon; a ledge of Hills; which beginning at the East point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places, and by several Nations called by divers names. By the Phœnicians, Syron; and by that name remembered in the Book of Psalms; But Aladannus they are called only where they border upon Celo-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Trachonitis from Arabia Deserta, they are called by Moser and the Scriptures Hermon, part of the Kingdom of Og, the King of Basan, as is said, Joshua, chap. 12. 6. Syrian by the Sidonians, as is affirmed, Deut. 3. 9. Running further after this unto the South, they are called Gilead or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonitis, after the name of the Region along which they pass, and are conceived to be the highest part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long ridge of Mountains which there taketh beginning. And so we are to understand the words of the Prophet Jeremy, saying, Galaad in mibi Caput Libani, as the Vulgar readeth it. That is to say, that as the head is the highest part of a man; so these Hills, or this part of them, was the highest of all the branches, or spurs of Libanus, called Galaad by Jacob, from that heap of stones which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a witness of the Covenant which was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. 27. the word signifying in the Original, An heap of Witness. And Laban said, This heap is a Witness betwixt me, and thee this day; therefore was the name of it called Galaad, ver. 28. By these Hills, and the main body of the Anti-Libanus lying on the North, and the Mountains of Phœnicia and Idumea on the West, the Land of Palestine is so shut up on every side, that no Fortrefs can be stronger by Wit or Art, than that Country by Nature: the passages in some parts so narrow, as hardly to afford passage for a single person. Claudius, undique montibus, hinc abruptis rupibus, & profundis vallibus concursu Torrentium, inde alibi & implexis an fratribus sic contrahitis, ut per angustos colles vix pateat transitus viatori, as my Author hath it. I had almost forgot to add, that that part of these hills, which is commonly known in Scripture by the name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sibon, as Deut. 4. 48. where it is said, that the Israelites possessed the Land from Aroer on the bank of the River Arnon, even to Mount Sibon, which is Hermon. As also that one of the highest tops or Summits of it, had the name of Amanas, alluded to by Solomon in the fourth of the Canticles, by some mistaken for Amanus, a branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia in the Lesser Asia, with which Solomon had but small or no acquaintance. And so having cleared our selves of so much of this Mountain, as lay before us in our way, we pass over to Palestine: where we shall meet with it again, (or rather with the Western parts and branches of it) under the names of Gilead and Trachonitis, as a part of that Country.

O F

PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is bounded on the East, with the Hills last mentioned, by which parted from Calo-Syria, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; and some part of Phoenicia; on the North, with the Anti-Libanus, which divides it from Syria, and the rest of Phoenicia; and on the South, with some part of Arabia Petrea.

It was first called Palestine from the Philistines, the most potent Nation of those parts. A name first found in the History of Herodotus, but generally used in times succeeding by the Greeks and Romans. And this I look on as the proper and adequate name of the whole Country, according to the bounds before laid down; the others, by which commonly called, being more restrained, and properly belonging to so much hereof, as was in the possession of the Tribes of Israel. And of this sort are 1 Canaan, or the Land of Canaan, so called from Canaan the son of Cham, by whom first peopled after the Flood. 2 The Land of Promise, because by God promised to Abraham, and his seed, for an habitation. 3 Israel, from the Israelites, or sons of Jacob, whose surname was Israel. 4 Judea, and by us Jewry, from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, the most prevalent of the Tribes of Israel. And 5 Terra Sancta, or the Holy Land, because the subject of the greatest part of the Holy Scripture; and that the work of our Redemption was herein accomplished by our Lord and Saviour. Which notwithstanding we must know, that though these names do many times by a Synecdoche, express the whole Country of Palestine; yet neither the Canaanites or the Israelites were ever Masters of the whole: except only in the time of David, and of some of the Maccabean Princes, as also in some part of the reign of Herod the Great; all which had the good fortune to command it totally.

But being the most considerable people of it were the Tribes of Israel; we will first look upon the Country People under that capacity. And for so much hereof as was held by them, it is situate between the 3d. and 4th. Climates; the longest day being fourteen hours and a quarter. The whole length but 200 miles, and not above 80 in breadth; yet was of such a fruitful soil, that before the coming in of the Israelites, it had 30 Kings; and after the coming in of that people, so extremely populous, that David numbered a Million and 30000 fighting men, besides those of the Tribes of Levi and Benjamin. But of the fruitfulness hereof more shortly.

As for the People they were by composition of a middle stature, but strong of body: in their best times a murmuring and stiff-necked generation, never well pleased either with God or Man, with their Priests or Princes; seldom conform unto the Commandments of their God, nor very much constant to themselves; So crippled in their goings betwixt Superstitions and Idolatry, that they knew not how to walk uprightly: Idolatrous above measure, and incorrigible in it, till their coming back from the Captivity of Babylon; and after that as superstitious and severe, in the point of their Sabbath, as they had formerly been exorbitant in the worship of Idols. No Medium on either side, but extreme in both. Divided anciently into these four ranks, that is to say, 1 Jews, 2 Hellenists, 3 Proselytes, and 4 Samaritans; all of them pretending a right unto this Country, though not all of them dwelling in it.

Of these the first called Jews, from Judah, the predominant Tribe; and Hebrews, from Heber the son of Seth, grand-son of Sem, and one of the Ancestors of Abraham, were such as naturally descended of the Tribes of Israel, and lived for the most part in their own Country, adhering to the Law of Moses, and embracing the whole Canon of the Old Testament, from the Book of Genesis to the Book of the Prophet Malachi. Called also Israelites, because descended from the loyns of their Father Jacob, to whom God gave the name of Israel, for his great honour. But after the ten Tribes were carried away by Sargon to an endless captivity: and two Tribes (with the remainder of the rest) returned from that temporary one which they found in Babylon, the name of Israelites was laid by, and that of Jews assumed, as more proper to them. These read the Scriptures, and executed all Divine Offices in their natural Hebrew.

2. The Hellenists, were such as were Jews by parentage, but lived dispersed in most Provinces of the Roman Empire: called by that name (we may English it, the Grecizing Jews) because they read the Scriptures in the Greek or Septuagint's Translation; and performed all publick Offices in that language also. In other things, as superstitious in their Sabbath, as tenacious of their Circumcision, and others of the Rites and Ceremonies of the Law of Moses, as the Jews of Palestine; and for that reason, scorned and decided by the Gentiles, amongst whom they lived; Credas Judaeus appello, saith one of their Poets, relating to their circumcising; Requitque Sabbath paleis, saith another of them, with scorn enough unto their Sabbaths. Novi illic ritus & ceteris moralibus contrarii, saith Tacitus, a greater Author of the whole body of their Rituals, or Acts of worship.

3. The Proselytes were such as not being Jews by birth, or descent of Parentage, conformed themselves unto their customs, and desired to be admitted to their Religion. And these were also of two sorts, the one called, Proselyti Potentes; and the other, Proselyti fideles. The first of these, admitted by the Jews to the worship of God, and instructed in the hopes of the life to come, were only tied to those Precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call the Precepts of the sons of Noah; but were neither circumcised, nor otherwise conform to the Law of Moses. Which Precepts of the sons of Noah, so called, because supposed to be given by Noah unto his Sons, when he came out of the Ark, were seven in number: that is to say, 1 That they dealt uprightly with every man. 2 That they blessed and magnified the Name of God. 3 That they worshipped not any false Gods, but to abstain from Idolatry. 4 To refrain from all unlawful lusts and copulations. 5 To keep themselves from theft and robbery. 6 And from shedding blood. And 7 Not to eat the Flesh or Member of any Beast, taken from it when it was alive, by which all cruelty was forbidden. These, though they were admitted to the Worship of God, and might repair unto the Temple; yet because of their Uncircumcision, they were not suffered to converse with the Jews, nor to come into the same Court of the Temple with them: but were accounted as unclean, and had their Court apart assigned them in the Worship of God, which was called Atrium Gentium, or Immundorum, and was the outermost of all. The other Proselytes, which was called Proselyti fideles, conformed in all things to the Jews, as in Circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, and all other Ceremonies: and were accounted of as adopted Jews; privileged as they were, to worship in the Inner Court: bound as they were, from eating or drinking with a Gentile; and in a word, partakers with them in all things both divine and humane, and different in nothing from them but their Race or Parentage. These last in the New Testament called simply Proselytes, without any addition: the former by the name of Samaritans, or the worshipping Gentiles, of which see Act. 16. v. 14. & ch. 17. v. 4, 17. & ch. 18. v. 4. &c.

4. As for the Samaritans, they possessed a great part of this Country, which the Proselytes did not; yet were not so much Jews as they. But of these more anon, when we come to Samarita, the proper place of their abode.

As for the natural Jews themselves, they are divided also into several Sects; as, viz. 1 Esseni, 2. the Sadducees, 3. the Scribes, 4. the Pharisees, 5. the Herodians, and 6. the Gaulonites, or Galileans. The Essenes, or Esseni, derive their name, as some conceive, from Asca, which signifieth sacred, to do, because they laboured with their hands: as others say, from Asa, which signifieth superior, or to cure diseases, because they were much given to the Study and Practice of Physick, Their beginning is not yet agreed on. The first time they were heard of, was in the time of Jonathan, the Brother of Judas Maccabaeus, about 150 years before Christ's Nativity: then mentioned by Josephus, Antiqu. Judaic. lib. 13. cap. 9. A Pythagorean kind of Jew, and not much differing in opinion from those old Philosophers, professing as they did, 1 Community of Goods, 2 Abstaining even from lawful pleasures, 3 Forbidding of Oaths, 4 Forbearing Wine, and drinking Water, 5 Ascribing the conduct of Affairs to fate or destiny, And 6 Using only inanimate or unbloody Sacrifices. Some other Dogmata they had, but these the principal: forbidding Marriage not being common to the Sect, but only to some few amongst them. And though we find no mention of them in the New Testament, the Sect in those times being small and inconsiderable; yet it is thought that St. Paul alludeth to their Tenets: as where he adviseth Timothy to make use of Wine, and glanceth upon those who prohibited Marriage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. or condemned others in the use of Meat and Drink, Coloss. 2. 16. As for the manner of their life, they lived together as it were in Monasteries, or Colleges, and in every one had their Expositor, or Orator: admitting none into their Fellowships or Society, unless he brought all he had into their common Treasury; and not then neither under a three years Probationaryship. More of them he that listeth to see, may satisfy himself in that Tract of Philo, intituled De Vita contemplativa; where he most copiously describeth their Institutions and course of life: mistakingly applied by Eusebius to the Primitive Christians, as if that Tract had purposely been composed of them, by that learned Jew.

2. The Sadducees either derive their name from Sadoc, who lived about the time of Alexander the Great, and is thought to be the first Founder of them; or from Sadoc an Hebrew word signifying Justice; the men pretending to be so exact and strict Justitarians, as if they would justify themselves before God's Tribunal. The occasion of the Sect or Heresie (for both it was said to arise from a mistake of Amigonus, a right learned man; who teaching, That we ought not to serve God, as Servants do their Masters, for the hope of Reward; occasioned Sadoc and Baitus, two of his Auditors; to conceive that there was no Reward nor Recompence for a Godly Life; and consequently, no Resurrection nor World to come, neither Angels nor Spirits. These were the most capital of their Errors, as appeareth Act. 23. 6. 8. Math. 22. 3. Luk. 20. 27. &c. But other Dogmata they had, not mentioned in the Holy Scripture; ascribing nothing unto Fate or Predetermination; but all things altogether to a mans free-will; 2 Teaching the Soul to be annihilated at the hour of death; 3 Rejecting all Traditions; and 4 Allowing no more Scripture than the five Books of Moses. In most of their opinions contrary to the Scribes and Pharisees, but joyning with them both in opposing Christ; and though like Sampson's Foxes they looked divers ways, and were tied together by their Tails only; yet in those Tails they carried Firebrands to destroy God's Harvest, and had done it, if they had been able.

3 But indeed the Pharisees were the men, who were the Master-wits in the Arts of Mischief, Hominis robustior impietatis, in the Father's words. Fellows of such a perfect and concocted malice, that they were almost able to possess the Devil. Their name they derive from Pharez, which is to separate. Separatists we may rightly call them: For they were first apocryphos his tan tan, separated to the Study of the Law of God, as Saul was brought up to that purpose at the feet of Gamaliel: And secondly, apocryphos his tan tan, separated from the rest of Mankind, by a more strict profession of sanctity; as the Pharisee boasted of himself, that he was not as other men, or as that Publican. And that they might so seem unto simple men, they did thridly separate themselves from the Society and Conversation of others not so pure as themselves, whom they called Populum terrae, or the Sons of the Earth, upbraiding Christ that he kept company with Publicans and Sinners; and more than he, used a particular kind of Habit, and had a Garb unto themselves which no others had; using it for a by-word amongst themselves, that Vestes Populi Terrae sunt concalcatio Phariseorum. To which end, as their countenances were more clouded and severe than others; so did they wear their Phylacteries of a broader size than others did: which, by the way, were scrolls of Parchment bound about their Heads, and upon their hands, wherein were writ the Ten Commandments of God; foolishly so interpreting the words of Deut. And they shall be as Frontlets between thine Eyes, &c. 10. v. 8. They began at the same time with the Sadducees; which was about 300 years before Christ's Nativity: As for their Dogmata, besides those specified above, which were also practicable; they maintained, 1 A Pythagorean Metempsychosis, affirming that the Soul of a Righteous man passed from one into another at the time of his death: from from whence the divers opinions touching Christ our Saviour, Mat. 9. 14. are supposed to spring; as if his Body had been animated with the Soul of Elias, John the Baptist, Jeremy, or some other Prophet. 2. They adhered so tenaciously to unwritten Traditions, that in comparison of them they neglected the written Law, as riches, and sufficient, or impertinent. And 3. ascribed so much sanctity unto frequent washings, especially when they came from Market, Mark 7. 4. (where possibly they might meet with some unclean persons) and before their sitting down to Meat, Mat. 15. 2. that if they came unto a place where there was not water enough both to drink and wash, the Pharisee would rather chuse to wash than drink, though he died for thirst. More of them he that list to see, may find it copiously set down in the four and twentieth Chapter of Saint Matthew; and thither I refer the Reader. By means of which pretensions to a great sanctity, and some other Arts they had to abuse the People, they grew so strong, and had such store of followers and dependants on them, that they became formidable in short time to their Kings and Princes. Inasmuch that Alexandra durst not enter on the Government in her Childrens nonage, as Josephus telleth us, Antiq. lib. 13. cap. 23. until she had permitted all things unto their disposing; 2. Jud. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. and promised to do nothing without their advice. And this she did by the direction of King Alexander, her dying Husband: whose Government, as she found by too sad experience, had in many things proved unsuccessful, 2. Jud. 1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. because she had put some scorns upon them, and otherwise offended that prevailing Faction. A Faction so predominant amongst the People, faith the same Josephus, Antiq. lib. 19. cap. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. that whatsoever they pleased to spread abroad, either of the High Priest, or the King himself, how false or scandalous soever, it was received for truth without more dispute, or any inquiry made into it.

4. But of the Pharisees enough, of the Scribes anon. Proceed we now to the Herodians and the Gaulonites, whom I look not on, as either the Authors or Promoters of any Sect of Religion in the Jewish Church; but as the names of two opposite Factions in the Civil State. The first were such who depending upon Herod's Fortune, as he did on the pleasure of the Roman Emperours, solicited the paying of Tribute to the Romans; and earnestly pressed upon that point, that Herod might be thereby the more endeared to his Masters of Rome, and they to him. Upon this ground nick-named Herodians by the People, as men that more endeavoured the greatness and Estate of Herod, than the prosperity and liberty of their Native Country. And possible enough it is, that some amongst them, seeing the Magnificence of Herod's Palace, and experimentally knowing his Power, might fancy him to be the Messiah so long looked for, and thereby own this Name with a better Title, than the others did. Opposite unto these, were those called the Gaulonites. (we may call the one the Court-Faction, the other the Faction of the Country, or Common people; so named from one Judas a Gaulonite, as Josephus calleth him, from the place of his birth; a Galilean, as Gamaliel calleth him, Act. 5. 37. from the place of his abode or habitation. By him the Jews were practised with to deny this Tribute, telling them that it was a manifest token of their servitude, and that they ought to know no Lord, but the Lord of Heaven: drawing them finally on this ground into open Arms, in which Action he and his Adherents perished, and were brought to nothing. Most of his followers were of Galilee, though he had some Disciples in Jerusalem and Samaritan also: and of these Galileans were those poor men, whose blood Pilate is said to mingle with their Sacrifice, Luk. 13. 1.

The Language of this People, by them called the Hebrews, was naturally and originally the same which Abraham found in the Land of Canaan, at his coming thither, as hath been shewn before when we were in Phenicia. Used by them constantly till their subjugation by the Babylonians, when being led captive to that Country, and conforming themselves to the Speech and Dialect of it; they came at last to speak a kind of broken Language, neither true Chaldean, nor good Hebrew; but one made of both. Chaldean as to the main body of it; but Hebrew as to the affixes, points, and Conjugation: being the same with that which we now call the Syriack. And at their coming home, after seventy years, had so far lost the knowledge of their Mother-Tongue, that they were not able to understand the words of the Holy Scripture, when Ezra read it in their hearing: Inasmuch that he was forced to employ some learned in that Tongue to expound it to them. To this the Scribes so often mentioned in the New Testament, must refer their original: there being no such Office heard of till the time of Ezra, though long before that time the Law had ordinarily been read unto them in the Feast of Tabernacles. For this cause they were called Scribes of the Law, Ezra 7. 6. Doctors of the Law, Luk. 5. 17. and simply by the name of Lawyers, Luk. 7. 30. as men whose Office was to expound the Law, and make it intelligible to the People. These we may best resemble to the Canonists in the Church of Rome, or the Divinity-Reader in some School or College: and grew to such great estimation in the Jewish State, that it was hard to say at last whether the Pharisees, or they were the better men. For what the Pharisees gained on the common people by pretence of sanctity, these got more justifiably by their zeal to the written Word, which they endeavoured to preserve from the common dangers both of corruption and contempt. And though I look on those men especially, as the name of a Function, not a Sect; yet being they held so close to the Pharisees, and concurred with them in most of their Superstitions, as appeareth Mat. 23. I consider them as a strong and potent Faction, of great authority and influence in affairs of moment.

For matters of Religion, the People of this Land were privileged above all others, had they had the grace to make good use of it: the Law being given to them by God the Father, the Gospel preached amongst them by God the Son, and that Gospel countenanced and confirmed before their eyes, by the miraculous Operations of the Holy Ghost. The Government of that Church in the time of the Law, by a subordination of Priests and Levites to their several Heads; the Priests divided by King David into twenty four Ranks or Classes, each Class serving in their turns at the Holy Temple: the Chiefs or Heads of which several Classes, made but that Body of men which are called Principes Sacerdotum, or Chief Priests, so often mentioned in the Writings of the Holy Evangelists. Overall which there was one Supreme, whom they called Summus Sacerdos, or the High Priest, descended lineally from Aaron, till the Romans out of avarice and reason of State made the Office saleable. And because possibly the High Priest might be under some pollution, and so uncapable by Law to perform his Office, he had his Suffragan (or Sagan) to discharge it for him. Of which sort was Zephaniah, the Sagan or second Priest to Semiah, mentioned Jer. 52. 24. And of this sort is Annas thought by some to have been to *Caiph*as; and for that cause the title of High Priest to be given to both, Luk. 3. 2. though others think that Annas was High Priest in right, and the other in fact: the one being deposed by the Romans, and the other super-induced into the place. In time of Christianity they were governed as in other Churches, by a subordination of Priests to Bishops. The first Bishop said to be St. Jamer, the Son of Alpheus, commonly called the Lord's Brother; affirmed by Ignatius, Scholar to the Apostles, in his Epistle ad Trallianum, by Eusebius, who lived in the Apostles times, as St. Hierom and Eusebius cite him; as also by Clement of Alexandria cited by Eusebius, Hist. l. 7. c. 14. by Cyril of Hierusalem, Catechism. 4. and 14. Epiphanius, Heret. 78. n. 7. St. Ambrose in Gal. 1. St. Chrysostom on the last of St. John's Gospel; St. Hierom in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers; St. Augustine cont. Crescon. l. 2. c. 37. To whom there may be added the joyned consent of 289 Prelates, assembled in the sixth General Council holden at Constantinople, affirming James the Lord's Brother to be the first Bishop of Jerusalem: all of them, with the Fathers before mentioned, taking the word Bishop in that sense, in which it generally passed for the times they lived in. His Successors subject at the first to the Bishop of Cæsarea, as their Metropolitan; though privileged in their own Diocese, with the rights of Patriarchs, as appears evidently by the Acts of the Nicene Council. But afterwards for the greater honour of the Holy City, wherein our Saviour wrought the work of our Redemption, it was ordained at Chalcedon, that the Bishop of Jerusalem should have as well the jurisdiction as the name of a Patriarch: the three Palestines (for Constantine had before divided it into so many Provinces) being subducted from the power of the See of Antioch, to make up his Patriarchate. So stood it in elder times, but now by the incroachment of Mahometanism the Christian faith is obscured, and the beauty of it is eclipsed, that were it not for some Sects of Christians dwelling in Mount Sinai, and about Jerusalem, it might be said without any manifest untruth, to be quite extinguished.

But to look back upon the Country, it cannot be described more fully and significantly, than Moses hath done it to our hands, in Deut. 8. Where it is said to be a land of Brooks and Waters, of Fountains and Depths, that spring out of the Valleys and Hills; a Land of Wheat and Barley, and Vines, and Fig-trees, and Pomegranates; of Oyl-Olive, and Honey: a Land, wherein was bread, without scarceness; a Land whose stones were as Iron, and out of whose Hills one may dig Brass. An ample commendation; and yet in some sort short of the fertility of this flourishing Country, which did not only consist in the choice and plenty, but the perpetuity of its fruits: it being on record in the Epistles of the Emperor Julian (surnamed the Apostate) that the Fig-trees, and other fruit-trees herein, were seldom or never without fruit: the old not fully falling off, till the new come on. Which his report, if true, (as certainly he did not love our Saviour so well as to flatter the Country for his sake) we have then an answer to the difficulty, which hath so much perplexed all Commentators of former times; and that is, why our Saviour should curse the Fig-tree for not bearing fruit, when the Text saith, that the time of fruits was not yet come, Mar. 14. 13. For though the time for new fruits was not yet come (it being then but early Spring) yet our Saviour being hungry might expect to find some of the old, and failing of his expectation lay that curse upon it. Nor is this solution of the doubt discountenanced, (rather much confirmed) by the Character and condition of the Country; as it stands at present; naturally adorned with beautiful Mountains, and luxurious Valleys, the Rock affording excellent Waters, and the air never pinched with colds, nor scorched with heats. And though either by the negligence of the Inhabitants, or some curse laid upon the Land, far short of that fertility with which once it flourished; Yet still Figs, Olives, Pomegranates, Palm-trees, are here very frequently to be seen: some store of Wine, with Oranges, and the Apple of Paradise, which they preserve upon the Trees all the year long (which agrees very well with that of Julian spoken of before) as well furnished with Honey and Sugar-canes; and also with Goats, Swine, Hares, Quails, and Partridges: but pestered so in many places with Rats and Mice, that if it were not for certain Birds which feed upon them, it were not possible for the people to have any Harvest. Balm they had anciently, not now. Nor any Nuts, Pears, Plums or Cherries, but what are brought hither from Damascus.

Principal Rivers of this Country, are 1. Chifon, the Chorasan of Ptolemy, which riseth out of Mount Tabor in Galilee, and falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Mount Carmel in Phenicia. 2. Cedron, a Torrent rather than a River, passing betwixt Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives; but more remarkable for many notable actions, than many others of a greater both name and course. For over this Brook did David pass when he fled from Abalom; and over this our Saviour, the Son of David, passed, when he went to his Passion. On the Banks hereof did Asa the King of Judah burn his Mothers Idols, 1 King. 15. as Josiah did the Vessels which were made for Baal, 2 King. 23. 3. Zared, And 4. Naphtha, which arising out of the hills of the Tribe of Judah, have their fall into the Mediterranean. 5. Arnon, his course in the Mare Mortuum. 6. Jaboc, oft mentioned in the Scriptures, which issuing out of the Mountains of Galaad, And 7. Hermom, which springing from the hills so named, lose themselves in Jordan. 8. Jordan, so called from Jor and Dan, two neighbouring Fountains, out of which he seems to take his source; though they do also fetch their spring from Phiala, a round deep Well at the foot of Anti-Libanus, about twenty four miles from the Fountains, into which he maketh his way like a Mole under ground. A river of more fame, than length, breadth, or depth, running from North to South, almost in a straight line to the Dead Sea, where he endeth his course; not navigably deep, nor above 10 yards in breadth, where broadest; shadowed on both sides with Poplars, Tamarisk-trees, and Reeds of many several sorts, of some of which the Arabians make Darts & Javelins, of others Arrows, & some again they fashion into Pens to write with. Passing along it maketh two Lakes, the one in the Upper Galilee, by the Ancients called Samachonitis, dry for the most part in Summer, and then covered with shrubs and sedge; not mentioned in the holy Scriptures: the other in the Lower Galilee, about an 100 furlongs in length, and about forty in breadth; called the Sea of Galilee from the Country, the Lake of Tiberias, from a City of that name on the banks thereof, & for the like cause called also the Lake of Genesareth. And here it is to be observed, that the River passeth thorow this Lake with so swift a course, that it preserves it self distinct from the waters of it both in taste and colour, as is affirmed of Nilus for a long space in the Mediterranean; and other great Rivers in their falls. Finally, having run thorow the Plains of Hiericho, it finisheth its course at last in the Mare mortuum, or Dead Sea. Honoured with the name of a Sea, because salt; and large, seventy miles long, and sixteen broad; furnishing with Salt the whole Land of Jewry, but called the Dead Sea, either because it had no visible efflux into the Ocean, nor is it at all increased with the waters of this River, and many many other Torrents which fall into it; or because no living Creature is nourished in it, suffocated with the Bituminous favour which it sendeth forth, from the abundance of which matter it is also called Lacus Asphaltites. Nigh hereunto stood the once famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, with three others more, whence the Valley had the name of Pentapolis, destroyed for their abominations by a fire from heaven: the fruits here growing, being only, but not in substance; the fruits here growing, being very fair unto the eye, Sed levi tactu pressa in vagam fastidium pulverem, but if touched, moulder into althes, as Solinus hath it.

Chief Hills and Mountains of it, besides Anti-Libanus, and Mount Hermon, spoken of already, which be only borderers, are 1 Mount Sion, memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently the Holy Hill of Sion. 2 Mount Moriah, famous for the intended Sacrifice of Isaac, and the Temple of Solomon. 3 Mount Calvary, on which CHRIST suffered, supposed to be the burial-place of our Father Adam. 4 Mount Tabar, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5 Mount Olivet, from which he ascended into Heaven. 6 Mount Garizim, whereon stood the Samaritan Temple, their ordinary place of Worship, mentioned Job. 4. 20. 7 The Mountains of Saron, stretching with intermixed Valleys from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre, there ending in a white cliff, and for that cause called Capo Bianco by the Sailer. The whole Mountain pleasantly enriched with the fragrant smells of Rosemary, Sweet Marjoram, Hyssop, Bayes, and other Odoriferous Plants which do grow there naturally; but for all that, destitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jacals, and such Savage Creatures. 8 The Mountains of Gilboa, the highest on the West of Jordan, as 9 those of Basan, celebrated for their height in the Book of Psalms. And 10 those of Abarim, on the East-side of it: from one of the Summits of which last called Nebo, by some Writers Pisgab, the Lord gave Moses a Survey of the Land of Promise.

As for this whole Country comprehended in the name of Palestine, it hath had divers divisions, according to the quality of the people, or the will of those who have been formerly Masters of it. Divided first betwixt the Philistines, Perizzites, Hittites, Jebusites, and others of the Sons of Canaan, on this side Jordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Amorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the Sons of Jacob, it was divided into the twelve Tribes, of 1 Judah, 2 Benjamin, 3 Simeon, 4 Dan, 5 Aser, 6 Nephthali, 7 Zabulon, 8 Issachar, 9 Gad, 10 Reuben, 11 Ephraim, and 12 Manasseh. When that great breach was made by Jeroboam, in the Kingdom of David, it was broken into the two Kingdoms of Judah and Israel; of which the first contained only the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other Ten. When the Israelites were led Captive into Assyria, and a new set of People planted in their rooms, those new-comers from Samarita, and their Capital City, had the name of Samaritans: and when the men of Judah were released of their long captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themselves the name of Jews. After which time, the whole Country of Palestine anciently possessed or subdued by the seed of Abraham, was divided into 1 Perea, 2 Judea, 3 Galilee, 4 Samarita, 5 Judea, and 6 Idumea. When conquered by the Romans, all these were joyned into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at least subordinate. But Constantine not liking of the one or the other, went a way by himself, and cast it into three Provinces, viz. 1 Palestina

Prima, 2 Palestina Secunda, and 3 Palestina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the first being Cæsarea Palestina; of the second, Samarita; of the third, Hierusalem. But this division of Constantine growing out of use, we will adhere unto the former: Beginning first with those parts thereof which lay on the other side of Jordan, because first conquered and possessed by the house of Israel; who at that Gate found entrance into all the rest; and coming round to Idumea, which last of all these Provinces was added to the State of Jewry. In the Geography whereof, I must confess my self a Debtor to Sir Walter Raleigh, whose industry herein hath saved me a great deal of search, though sometimes I make bold to differ from him, and add to him, as I see occasion.

1 P E R E A.

P E R E A, is that part of Palestine, which lyeth betwixt the River Jordan, and the Mountains of Arnon, (which divide Palestine from Syria and Arabia) East and West; and reacheth from Pella in the North, to Petra the chief Town of Arabia Petraea, in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Egypt, who describes it thus: Perea Judæa pars est superior, Arabiæ & Egypto proxima, asperis dispersis montibus, & a cæteris Judæis, Jordane amne discreta. Perea (saith he) is the furthest part of Judea, neighbouring Arabia and Egypt, interperfed with rough and craggy Mountains, and parted from the rest of the Jews by the River Jordan. So called from the Greek word Περα, in regard of the situation of it on the other side of that River; and not immoderately might be rendered by Trans-Jordana. Blessed properly might be rendered by Trans-Jordana. Blessed with a rich soil, and large fields beset with divers Trees, especially of Olives, Vines, and Palms. The habitation in times past of the Midianites, Moabites, and Ammonites, as also of the two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I shall speak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the Children of Lot, as the first occupants heretofore; upon the knowledge of whose affairs, the State and Story of the Israelites hath so much dependance.

And first the MIDIANITES inhabited on the South-East of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Country; descended from one or more of the five sons of Midian, the son of Abraham by Keziah, mentioned Gen. 25. 4. who leaving the rest of their brethren to seek themselves new habitations, more towards the Banks of the Red Sea, and the Deserts of Arabia Petraea; continued near unto the place of Abraham's dwelling; and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in blood and marriages, came in short time to lose all the knowledge of the true God, and to worship Idols, as the rest of their neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1 Recome, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was slain by Jeshubab, afterwards called Sebah; 2 King. 14. 7. accounted at that time a City of the Edomites; next of the Israelites or Arabians, and by them called Hagar. Best known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Petra, and by that name we shall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia. 2 Midian, on the Banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary residence of their Princes; absolute of themselves at first, as in other places; but at the time when Moses and Jeshubab led the people into their possessions, subjected unto Sihon King of the Amorites; whose Dukes their five Kings and Princes are said to be, Josh. 13. 21. A people whom the Israelites had neither Commission or intent to make War upon, if they had not caustily provoked them, at the request of the Moabites, by sending amongst them (as Balaam the false Prophet had advised) the most beautiful of all their women, not not only to entice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worship of their Idols also. A mischievous and successful plot, but alike dangerous to both parties: God sending, a fierce Plague amongst the Israelites, which cost them the lives of 24,000 persons, besides such as perished by the sword; and giving a command to Moses, to avenge him of the Midianites, who had so provoked him. On which Commission Moses culled out 12,000 men, and sent them under Phineas against the Midianites: by whom all their Princes were slain, their Cities and goodly Castles burnt with fire, their men, women, and male-children put unto the sword, as is related in the one and thirtieth Chapter of the Book of Numb. Yet notwithstanding this great slaughter, they recovered their former power, if not a greater, and after the death of Barak, the Judge of Israel, did for the space of four years so afflict that people, that they were fain to hide themselves in the Caves and strong holds of the mountains, as is said Judg. 6. 2. their enemies having left them neither Sheep, Oxen, nor Ass, or any sustenance at all, v. 4. But Gideon being raised up by God for their deliverance, encountered with their four Kings, and put them to flight: of which four Oreb and Zac were taken and slain by the Ephraimites; at the passage of Jordan, Zeba and Zalmunna taken by Gideon himself, and executed by his own hand, as the story telleth us. In this War there are said to have perished of this people and their Confederates, no fewer than 120,000 persons, by which fo weakened that we hear no more of them from this time forwards, in any action of importance; their name and Country being first incorporated into that of the Edomites, and after into that of the Israelites, and other the Inhabitants of Arabia Petraea.

2. The MOABITES possessed all the Country, from the Midianites in the South, as far as to Esebon in the North, on both sides of the River Arnon: having Jordan on the West, and the Hills of Abarim on the East. Possessed at the first by the Emmins, a race of Giants, whose chief City was Sheneth Kiriatbaim. But these being vanquished and broken by Cedorlaomer and his Associates, of which see Gen. 14. 5. their forlorn seats were taken up by the Moabites, descended from Moab, one of the sons of Lot, who lived here in great prosperity till the time of Vabeh, Grand-father unto Balaam, the son of Zippor; from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab on the North of the River Arnon, and made that River; which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North bound or border of it. In which estate it stood in the time of Moses.

Chief Cities of it at that time, were 1 Rabbat, the Regal seat of Balaam; the King of Moab, the Rhabmabum of Ptolemy. 2 Diblatbam, destroyed with the rest of Moab, by Nebuchadnezzar, as is said Jer. 48. 22. 3 Gallim, the Principality of Phaith the Son of Lailah, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Misbah, formerly married unto David, 1 Sam. 25. 44. 4 Muthana and 5 Nathaliel, thorough which the Israelites passed, after they had left the Well called Beer. 6 Baniath, where Moses was encamped when he sent to Sehon to demand a passage through his Country, Numb. 21. 19, &c. 7 Mizpah, the City of Refuge to the Father and Mother of David, in the time of his troubles under Saul. 8 Hor, the chief City of Moab, not meddled with by Moses in his march this way, the Lord himself forbidding him to touch upon it, or distress it, because it had been given by him for an inheritance to the children of Lot, Deut. 2. 29. Which prohibition was not only for this place particularly; (though this particularly there mentioned) but for all the Lands and Territories then in their possession. 9 Kir-hazareth, of which note for the barbarous and inhumane fact of Abel the Moabite King, who being besieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom, without hope of escape, sacrificed his own eldest Son on the wall thereof; which so moved the Kings of Judah and Edom, that they forsook the King of Israel whose the quarrel was. So the siege was raised, 2 King. 3. 17.

Now as Moses did not at the present disobey God's Order, in leaving the Moabites in quiet; so neither did the Moabites on their parts provoke him to any hostile act, giving him a free and open passage in his march for Canaan; out of an hope that when the Amorites were subdued, they should be put into possession of their lost Estates. And though they were deceived of that expectation, the Israelites looking on that Country which they had conquered, as the spoils of the Amorites, and giving it for a possession to the Tribe of Reuben: yet durst they not do any thing in the way of arms, but sent for Balaam the false Prophet, to call them by his Curses and Incantations into some Diseases, whereby their strength and courage might be taken from them. Balaam the Son of Zippor was at this time King After whom we find not the name of any other, till we come to Egion, who with the help of Ammon and Amalek, overmastered Israel, and for the space of 18 years tyrannized amongst them: when slain in his own House, and afterwards 10,000 of his people by the hand of Ehud. But this indignity was in the times succeeding revenged by Saul in some part, who made war upon them; but more by David, who subdued them, and made them Tributaries: and not so only, but subjected them to the vilest Offices, as is intimated in that form of Speech, Moab is my wash-pot, Psal. 60. 8. Taking their opportunity, they withdrew themselves from the House of David, and put themselves under the command of the Kings of Israel, to whom they paid for Tribute in the time of Abah, 10,000 Lambs, and 20,000 Rams, with their fleeces on; but quickly weary of those payments, and revolting from the House of Abah also, they were invaded by Jerobam, aided herein by the Kings of Judah and Idumea; by whom being vanquished, Moab their King was fain to shut himself up in Kir-hazareth, as was said before. After this joyning with the Ammonites and the Idumeans or sons of Edom, they invaded Jehoshaphat King of Judah, to whom God gave a memorable and signal Victory, without blow or Battel: the Ammonites first setting upon the Edomites; and after upon one another, till they were almost all destroyed, 2 Chron. 20. 23. From this time we hear nothing of them; but probably they recovered some part of their former Dwellings, when that two Tribes and a half on the East of Jordan were carried away captive by Tiglah Pileser. Possessed heretofore, and of other their habitations, till the reign of Zedekias King of Judah; when vanquished, with the rest of these Nations, by the Babylonians and Assyrians under Nebuchadnezzar. Nor find we any mention of them in the Ages following; the name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of use: the South parts of their Country laid to Arabia Petraea, as the East parts were to that of Arabia Deserta; and all the rest, as well as that which had been conquered by the Jews, swallowed up in the general name of Palestinians.

3 The AMMONITES inhabited on the North-East of the River Arnon, and possessed all that Tract from Arnon, on the Head of the River, to the City of Rabbat; and on both sides of the River Jaboc, as well within the Mountains of Galaad as without the same. The Seat in elder times of the Rephaim, and Zanzumim, a Giant-like Race of men, as the Emmins were; but vanquished also, as the others, by Cedorlaomer.

Chedorlaomer; Ashtareb and Heth being then the principal of their Habitations. Succeeded too in their desolate and forsaken dwellings, by the children of Ammon, the other Son of Lot, and the Brother of Moab; both Houses running the same fortune: These Ammonites being conquered, and deprived of the best part of their Country on the South-side of Jaboc, by Og King of Basan: as the Moabites, at the same time, of theirs by Sehon. A Monument of which subjection was the Bed of Og, found in the City of Rabbah, the chief City of Ammon, there to be seen when Moses had subdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth Deut. 2.

Chief Cities at such time as the Israelites first conquered the Land of Canaan, were Rabbah, the Regal City of their Kings; taken by Og of Basan, as is said before; but again quitted as it seemeth on the coming of Moses, that he might be better able to keep the Field. Memorable in succeeding times for the death of Uriah, slain here by a design of David's when besieged by Joab. Who having brought it to terms of yielding, sent for the King to come before it, that he might have the honour of taking a place so defensible, environed in a manner with the River Jaboc, and therefore called the City of Waters, 2 Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, who having made himself Master of those parts of Arabia, which lie near unto it, and liking the convenience of the situation, honoured it with the name of Philadelpia, 2 Dabema, supposed to be Rithma, by the Learned Jnnius, mentioned Numb. 33. 18. (the Hebrew Letters D and A being much alike) a place of great strength amongst the Ammonites, 3 Minneib, in the South Border, and 4 Abel vinearum in the East Border of Ammon; both mentioned in the pursuit of that People when subdued by Jephthah, 5 Mispha, sometimes one of the Cities of the half Tribe of Manasse, and at that time honoured with the residence of Jephthah; but afterwards recovered by the Children of Ammon: in whose hands it was, when utterly destroyed and burnt by Judas Maccabaeus, 1 Mac. 5. 35. 6 Maged, and 7 Bosor, two other strong places of the Ammonites, there also mentioned; but said to be in the Region of Galaad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Country of the Ammonites lying on this side of the Mountains, was at that time called.

As for those Ammonites, they had nothing at all to do with Israel as they passed towards Canaan; neither provoking them, nor being provoked by them, to any acts of hostility. Afterwards not well pleased that they were not restored to the possession of those Lands which had been taken from them by Og of Basan, (conferred by the Decree of Moses on the Tribe of Gad) they joyned with the Midianites in their Expedition. But worsted by the puillance and good fortune of Gideon, they lay still a while, till stirred up by some secret motion from Almighty God, to avenge him on that sinful and idolatrous People, who by worshipping the gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger. Prosperous in it for a time, till his wrath was pacified; who having made use of them to chastise his People, delivered up his Rod to be burnt by Jephthah, vanquished and driven home by him with a very great laughter. Not so much crushed by the unsuccessfulness of this attempt, but that in the time of Saul they brake out again and besieged Jabesh Gilead; Nabab, a cruel Tyrant, being then their King; who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loss of every man's right eye: to the end that using to carry a great Target on their left Arms, where-with the eye on that side was wholly shadowed, they might by this means be disabled from all future service. But Saul, came time enough to save them from that shame and loss; from that cause so offensive to Nabab, that to despight him, he shewed friendship to David in the time of his trouble. A countess which David was so mindful of, that he sent Embassadors to Hannu the Son of Nabab, to make acknowledgments of it, and to confirm the amity which he had with his Father; but found to ill requital from him: that instead of thanks and kind acceptance, his Messengers were despitfully handled, their Beards half shaven, and their Garments cut off by the knee. Incensed therewith he sent Joab against them, by whom the Country was laid waste, and Rabbah their chief City taken; their Kings Crown, weighing a Talent of Gold, set on David's head, and all the Prisoners executed with great severity, some of them being cast into Lime-kilns, and the rest torn in pieces with Saws and Harrows. Quiet a long while after this, we hear no great news of them till the reign of Jehoshaphat, against whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open War; but fell by one anothers Swords, as was said before. Not well recovered of this blow, they were subdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Judah, and so continued in the time of Joatham his Son: who so increased the tribute laid upon them by his Father, that it amounted to an hundred Talents of Silver, ten thousand measures of Wheat, and as many of Barley. Taught by this Lesson how to value the Kings of Judah, they continued either quiet Neighbours, or obedient Subjects, though much improved in power and reputation, by regaining the greatest part of their ancient Dwellings, on the removal of the two Tribes and an half, on the East of Jordan, to the Land of Assyria, by Tiglab Pileser. For after this (with reference to the common danger) Bauhis their King was so strict a Confederate with Zedechias, that when Nebuchadnezzar had taken Zedechias with him unto Babylon, and left Gedaliah as his Deputy to command the Country, Ismael, one of the blood of the Kings of Judah, was sent by Bauhis to slay him. But he paid dear for his attempt; his Country being shortly conquered by the Babylonians, and the name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Gracians when they came to Lord it over them, to those of Gileaditis and Philadelpia; according to the new name of their Principal City, and the old one of the Mountains and Hills adjoining.

4 The REUBENITES took name from Reuben, the eldest of Jacob's Sons by Leah; of whom, in the first Muster which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000 fighting men; and 43700 at the second Muster, when they passed over Jordan. Their dwelling was on the East of that famous River, having the Gadites on the North, the Desert Arabia on the East, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of most observation here, 1 Abel-Sittim, seated in that part of the Country which was called the Plains of Moab; the last incamping place of Moses: afterwards by the Jews called simply Sittim: Memorable for the Wood so often mentioned in the Scriptures, of which the Ark of the Lord was made. In after-times by the Greeks and Romans it was called Abila, mistook by some for that Abila or Abilene whereof Lyfianus was Tetrarch: that Town and Territory, as Josephus doth affirm expressly, being situate amongst the spurs and branches of Libanus, far enough from hence. 2 Bethaborab, or Beth-Bara, where John baptized, and Moses made his last and most Divine exhortations to the Tribes of Israel, contained in Deuteronomy. 3 Macharus, the strongest in-land in-land City and Castle in those parts of the World; standing aloft upon a Mountain every way inaccessible: first fortified by Alexander Jannaeus King of the Jews, as a frontier Town against the Arabians; and afterwards demolished by Gabinus, one of Pompey's Lieutenants, in the War against Archelaus. Unfortunately remarkable for the death of John Baptist, where murdered by the command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Country of Peraea. 4 Lafa, or Lefbah, of which Geogravians by the Greeks called Calirbae, by reason of the fair Fountains springing from the Hills adjoining: out of which issue Springs both of hot and cold Waters, as also bitter and sweet; all which soon after joyined into one stream, make a wholesome Bath, especially for Cerviculus and contraction of Sinews. 5 Machab, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Joab, 1 Chron. 19. 7. In the time of the Greeks laid with some other Towns of this Tract unto Cela-Syria; but in the declining times of the Seleucian Family, regained unto the Crown of Jerry by Alexander, the second King of the Race of the Maccabees; and finally, with eleven others in those parts, delivered by Antipater the Father of Herod into the hands of Aretas King of the Arabians: hoping thereby to give him to the side of Hyrcanus the Son of Alexander, whose cause Antipater most favoured. 6 Bosor, or Bosra, a City of Refuge, and one of those that were assigned unto the Levites on that side of the Water. 7 Livai, a Town new built by Herod, in honour of Livia, the Mother of Tiberias Caesar: different from that which the Geographers call 8 Libar (though by some confounded) the same with Leban, mentioned Deut. 1. 1. 9 Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, giving name unto the adjoining Desert, from whence Moses sent his Ambassage to Sehon King of the Ammonites. 10 Bamath-Baal, the chief City of the worshippers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balaac to curse the Israelites. 11 Heshbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Amorites. 12 Adam, or the City Adam (Jos. 3. 17) where the Tribes passed dry-foot over Jordan, opposite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nebos, from which Moses took a view of the Land of Canaan: an Hill as it seemeth of two tops, whereof that which looketh towards Jericho is called Pisgab: that which looketh toward Moab being called Hur: Here is also a high Hill named Peor, where the filthy Idol Baal was worshipped also, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor.

5 The GADITES were so called from Gad the seventh Son of Jacob, begot on Zilpah the Hand-maid of Leah; of whom were found at the first Muster when they came out of Egypt, forty five thousand, five hundred and fifty fighting men; and at the second, when they entered the Land of Canaan, forty five thousand bearing Arms. Their situation was betwixt the Reubenites on the South, and the half Tribe of Manasse upon the North; the River Jordan on the West, and the Mountains of Arnon on the East; by which last parted from the dwellings of the Children of Ammon.

Cities of most observation, 1 Aroer, on the Banks of the River Arnon, the principal City of the Gadites. 2 Dibon, more towards Jordan; of great note in the time of Joshua, and of no small account in the time of Saint Hierom. 3 Beth-nimrab, of which Esay prophesied that the Waters thereof should be dried up; seated upon the Arnon also. 4 Nattoroth, more in the body of the Tribe. 5 Beth-baram, mentioned by Josephus, chap. 13. v. 27. by Josephus called Betarampha; a new built by Herod Antipas, and called Livias; in honour of Livia the Wife of Augustus Caesar, translated into the Julian Family; who, also laid, unto it fourteen Villages, to make it of the greater Power and Jurisdiction. 6 Beth-zabab, by Josephus called Yezabab; the habitation of Miriam, who in the Siege of Athens, when destroyed by Athenes, was compelled by Famine to eat her own Son. 7 Succoth, not far from the River Jordan, so called from the Tents, or Booths which Jacob set up there, in his passage from Mesopotamia to the Land of Canaan: the People of which Town having denied relief to Gideon, as he followed the chase of Zibab and Zalmunna, were, by him, miserably tortured at his return, under a Triumph or Threling Car, where-with he tore their flesh, and bruiled their bodies. 8 Jabzar, another of the Regal Seats of Sehon King of the Ammonites, first taken by Moses, after recovered by the Moabites, (as appeareth Ira. 16. 8.) then possessed by the Ammonites; and finally from them regained by Judas Maccabaeus, 1 Mac. 5. 8. 9 Mahanaim, so called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Jacob (Gen. 32. 2.) as ready to defend him against all his Enemies, the word in the Original importing a double Army. A place of very great strength and safety, and therefore made by Abner the Seat Royal of Ishbosheth, the Son of Saul, during the War he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David, during the Rebellion of his Son Abshalom. 10 Rogelim, the City of Barzillai the Gileadite, so faithful to David in that War. 11 Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead, so called from the situation of it near the Mountains of Gilead: a Town of special note in the Book of God: particularly for the Pacification here made betwixt Jacob and Laban, for the death of Abah King of Israel, who lost his life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally, for the Election of Jehoi to the Crown of Israel, Anointed at the Siege hereof, by a Son of the Prophets. 12 Peamel, so called from the interview, which the Lord pleased to bestow there on his Servant Jacob, at his return out of Mesopotamia; mentioned Gen. 32. 22, the word signifying the place of the face or vision of God: defaced by Gideon for their churlish usage of him, when he craved relief of them against the Midianites, to whom, together with the Moabites and Ammonites, the whole Territory appertaining to these two Tribes, did once belong. But being from them taken by Og King of Basan, and Sehon King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of those Kings to the hands of Moses; by whom assigned unto the Tribes of Gad and Reuben, for their habitation, Continuing theirs till the fatal period of the Kingdom of Israel began to approach; at what time these two Tribes, with the half Tribe of Manasse lying on the East of Jordan, being carried captive into Assyria, by Tiglab Pileser, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their ancient dwellings. Of which possessed, till their subversion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Country coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the name of Peraea, for the reason formerly delivered. And being won piece-meal by the Maccabaeus, came with the rest of the Kingdom of Judah, to the possession of Herod the Great, by whom bequeathed at his death unto Herod Antipas, one of his Sons, who held it, together with both Galilee, under the name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Peraea, as Josephus or of Galilee only, as Saint Luke; who being dead, it was bestowed on Agrippa King of the Jews, of whom more hereafter.

2 ITURÆA.

ITURÆA hath on the East and North, Celo-Syria; on the West, the River Jordan; and on the South, Peræa. So called from Itur one of the sons of Ismael, seated in this Tract; though lost by his Posterity to the Amorites, one of the most powerful Tribes amongst the Canaanites; and by them made the Patrimony of the Kings of Babylonia. The Race of which King ending in Og, the wealthiest and best parts hereof, were given by Moses to the half Tribe of Manasse, such parts of it as lay towards Damascus being seized on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdom of it self, called the Kingdom of Gessur, and the more mountainous and unpleasant left to the first Inhabitants, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdom of Gessur, and those of the half Tribe of Manasse, shifting from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Græcians, the name of Ituræa revived again and grew into very good esteem: the Ituræans being reputed for good Soldiers, especially at the Bow and Arrows; of which thus the Poet in his Georgick, lib. 2.

— Ituræa nati sequenter in Arcis.

Of the best Ewe that can be had

The Ituræan Bows are made.

The whole Country in the times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonitis, and Ituræa (specially so called: this last again being subdivided into Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Panæas). For whereas it is said in St. Luke's Gospel, that Philip the Brother of Herod was Tetrarch of Ituræa, and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Josephus, that for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Panæas: it must needs be that the four last mentioned Provinces make up that one, which by St. Luke is comprehended in the name of Ituræa; distinct from that of Trachonitis, though a part thereof. Inhabited in the time of Josephus, as in those of Joshua and David, both by Jews and Syrians; the Syrians dwelling in the mountainous and more barren parts; the Jews in that which was assigned them in the time of Moses; the whole not yielding unto Galilee for extent of ground, but far inferior to it for wealth and fruitfulness; not well inhabited where best, and in some places which are desert and very barren, hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but wild fruits. Such was it in the time of Josephus, and not bettered since.

TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Country, which beginning at the borders of the Ammonites, where the Hills are called the Mountains of Gilead, extendeth it self Northwards as far as Libanus: the Hills in those parts being by the Jews called Galead, Syrian, and Hermont; but by the Græcians, for the craggy and roughness of them, by the name of Trachones. The people maliciously bent and much given to Witchcraft, as we find in Strabo. Montanum regionem incolant Ituræi & Arabes, malefici omnes. So he, or his Translator rather, for I have not the original by me. Where by Arabians he meaneth those of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the same with Ituræa, though differing from it as the Cosswold Countries do from the rest of Gloucestershire, or as a part doth from the whole, because united by that name into one Estate at the time he lived in. Solei & Trachonitis Ituræa nomine appellari, saith the learned Grotius, according to the general consent of the ancient Writers. A people generally addicted to spoil and robbery, living especially on the spoil of those Merchants which traded to and from Damascus: till with some difficulty restrained to a more orderly life by

Herod, on whom Augustus Cæsar had bestowed the Country, to the end that by strong hand he might hold them in.

The People and the Country by Josephus are thus described. "The Trachonites (saith he) have neither Towns, nor Lands, nor Heritage, nor any other possessions, but only certain Retreats and Caves under the ground, where they lived like Beasts: and having made abundant provision of water and victuals, were able to hold out a long time against any Assailant. For the doors of their Caves were made so narrow, that they could be entered but by one at once; and the way to them not direct, but full of turnings and windings, not possibly to be found out but by the help of a Guide: The whole Country naturally consisting of craggy Rocks. The passages of the Caves once entered, they were found to be very large and spacious, sufficient to contain great multitudes of those Thievish people, who when they had not opportunity to spoil their Neighbours, would rob one another, and omitted no kind of wickedness, being so accustomed to theft, that they could not live otherwise. So he. But I conceive this is not meant generally of all the people, but only of some body of Thieves or Out-laws, which possessed themselves of the fairs of the Mountains; and from thence issued to assault and spoil the Passengers. For it is afterwards expressed, that revolting upon the news of Herod's death, and committing new outrages, they no sooner heard of his recovery, but they fled the Country, and betook themselves unto a strong Castle in Arabia, where they increased to the number of 1000 persons. So that there is no question to be made at all, but they had Villages & Lands, and Heritages, in the more civil parts hereof, though not amongst those Mountainers which Josephus speaks of. And amongst those, I reckon, 1. Gerra, 2. Elere, 3. Neluxa, 4. Adrama; all named by Ptolemy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees or upwards: more towards the East than well agreeeth with the position of this Country, or with any part of Batanea, lying more towards the West than Trachonitis, though to that part of Ituræa, by him ascribed. Hither also I refer the City of 5 Tisbe, the Country of old Tobit, and of the Prophet Elias, 6 Tob, where Jepthabe lived in exile, when oppressed by his brethren, till the necessities of his Country called him to the publick Government. 7 Hippus, at the foot of those Mountains, reckoned amongst the Cities of Celo-Syria, differing in soil as well as Etymology from another of the same name in Batanea: this being so named from the Mountain Hippus, under which it standeth; that from a Garrison of Horse there placed, as shall there be shewn. 8 Babira, on the borders of this Country towards Batanea, built there by Herod, and planted with a Colony of the Jews, which came thither from Babylon; but the better to suppress the insolencies, and prevent the Robberies of this thievish people, accustomed (as before is said) unto spoil and rapine.

BATANEÆ is that part of Ituræa which anciently made up the best and greatest part of the Kingdom of Babylonia, whence it had this name: the changing of S. to T. as Assyria into Asyria, and the like, being usual among the Greeks. But that Kingdom being brought to an end by Moses, it was given to the half Tribe of Manasse, so called of Manasse the son of Joseph; of whom there were found at the first muster near Mount Sinai, 32200 men able to bear arms; which though consumed in the Deserts, yet were they of such a swift increase, that there were found 52700 fighting men of them, when they passed over Jordan. Their Territory on that side of the River, stretching from Jaboc on the South, to the Realm of Gessur on the North; and from the Mountains unto unto Jordan, East and West, was exceeding fertile: replenished with all sorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodliest woods in that part of the world; the Oaks of Babylonia being celebrated in the holy Scriptures.

It had in it sixty fenced Cities when first conquered by those of this Tribe. The principal of which, 1. Pella, formerly called Banai, but being rebuilt by Selenus, the great King of Syria, was by him called Pella; with reference to a City of that name in Macedon, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Selenus owed his greatness and whole estate. Destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, because not willing to admit of the Law of Moses; it was afterwards restored by Pompey to its former lustre. Memorable in Church story for the Admonition or premonishment, given by a voice from Heaven, to the Christians dwelling at Hierusalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella, that so they might escape that destruction, which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. 2. Edrey, the Seat-royal of the Kings of Babylonia, 3. Carnaim, on the banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Macabæus, who set fire on the Temple of the Idols there, and burnt therein all such as fled thither for Sanctuary. 4. Ephron, a strong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the same Judas Macabæus, for refusing to give a passage to his Army, 5. Jabesh-Gilead, more near unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures, for the siege of Nabab King of the Ammonites, the raising of that siege by Saul, and the gratitude of the people towards him again, in taking down, embalming, and the entombing the bodies of him and his sons, which the Philistines had most despitefully hanged on the walls of Beisfan. 6. Atharoth, a City of great note in the elder times; the seat of the Rephaim, a Giant-like Race of men, of whom descended Og of Babylonia; from whence the Country adjoining had the name of the Land of Giant. 7. Atharoth, the Goddess of the Sidonians, had here her Worshippers. 8. Gaulon, sometimes possessed by Og of Babylonia, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of such esteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North part of Babylonia or Batanea was called Gaulonitis; divided into Superior and Inferior, so often mentioned by Josephus. And of this City or Country was that Judas of Galilee, spoken of in the fifth of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 9. Gamala in the lower Gaulonitis, so called because the Hill upon which it stood was fashioned like the back of a Camel: invincibly situate, strengthened both by Art and Nature, and at the last with so great difficulty and hazard of Vespasian's person, stormed by Titus, that the Romans in the heat of the execution, spared neither Women nor Children; in so much that all the Inhabitants perished, except some few women which had hid themselves. 10. Gadara, after ten months siege, taken and destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, repaired by Pompey, and by Gabinus made one of the five seats of Justice for the whole Country of Palestine: the other four being Hierusalem, Jericho, Hamath, and Sephorah. 11. Gersa, or Gergesa, the chief City of the Gergesites, the people whereof on the loss of their Swine intreated our Saviour to depart out of their Coast, as St. Matthew hath it. St. Luke, and St. Mark ascribe it to the people of Gadara. Not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangelists at odds in their Relation; but because they were two neighbouring Cities, and their fields lay in common pour cause de voisinage, as our Lawyers phrase it; and so the story might be common to both alike. 12. Hippus, not far from the River Jordan, so called from a Garrison of Horse there placed by Herod, not far from the Mountain Hippus, as some suppose, which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 13. Julia, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Ituræa, in the Southern border of his estate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa; to ingratiate himself with Julia, the Wife of Tiberias Cæsar. 14. Abel, by Josephus called Abel Maachab, for distinctions sake: where Sheba that grand Rebel besieged by Joab, and the City brought into some danger, had his head cut off, and thrown over the Wall, at the persuasion of a wife Woman of the Town. So the rebellion ended, and the City was saved.

North of Babylonia, or Batanea; lyeth the Kingdom of GESSUR, by a latter name called AVRANTIS, from Haaran, a chief City of it, mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel, Chap. 16. 18. A Kingdom spoken of by Moses as the Northern bound of the half Tribe of Manasse on that side of Jordan, Deut. 4. 14. by Joshua as the Northern border of the Kingdom of Babylonia, Chap. 12. 5, but reckoned as a part of Syria because held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. A Kingdom, though of no great Territory, yet of some consideration in the eye of the World: David esteeming the alliance of the Kings hereof of some use unto him; and therefore marrying Maacha the daughter of Tolmai King of Gessur, by whom he had Abshalom and Tamar. And to this King it was that Abshalom fled on the killing of Amnon, abiding here three years, as the story telleth us.

Conterminous to this, or at least not very much distant from it was the petty Kingdom of Idub, which sent 12000 men to the aid of the Ammonites against David; and not far off, but more towards Palmyrene, or Aram-Zobab, that of Beit-Rehob, Confederate in the same War also with the other Syrians; mention whereof is made in the second Book of Samuel, Chap. 10. 6. Which whether they belonged to Syria, or to those North parts of Ituræa, is of no great certainty, and as little consequence. For after this their greatest and last exploit we hear no more news of them; swallowed up not long after (as it seems) by the Kings of Damascus.

To return therefore into Gessur more certainly within the limits of Palestine, the places of most observation in it, were 1. Gessur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2. Mabacab, or Macui, as some call it; conceived to be that Maacha mentioned in Chron. 19. 6. But of this we have already spoken in Compend. 3. Chauran, or Haaran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezechiel, Chap. 47, whence these Northern parts of Palestine were called Auranitis. 4. Chasfar-Haran, there mentioned by that Prophet also, 5. Ur, near the borders of Damascus; the first habitation of Ur the son of Aram, and Grand-child of Sem, by whose name so called: supposed to be the Founder of Damascus also, and that more probably, than that the Country thereabouts should be the Land of Hus ennobled by the dwelling and story of Job, 6. Sutia, mentioned by Bochartus, and by some conceived to be the habitation of Bildad, surnamed the Shuhite, one of Job's three Friends; mentioned in that story: but both of him, and Job himself, and the Land of Hus, we shall speak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Fort of great strength and use, for the commanding of the Country; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the second, by digging with incredible labour through the very Rock upon which it was seated.

As for the fortunes of this dart, after the Tribes on that side of Jordan were led captive into Assyria, and the Kingdom of Damascus subverted by Tiglah-Pileser; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian and Persean Empires; together with which it came to the Macedonian Kings of the Race of Seleucus; in the declining of which House it was conquered (or at least the greatest part thereof) by Antiochus the Great, King of the Jews of the Race of the Maaseer, but lost again for the most part in the time of Hircanus the son of Alexander; yet afterwards made up the greatest part of the Kingdom of Chalch, possessed by Ptolemy the son of Menemus, in the beginning of Herod's greatness: who dying left it to Lysanias his eldest son; murdered about seven years after by Maec. Antioch, on the suggestion of Cleopatra, who pretently seized on his Estates, but Antony and Cleopatra, having left the Stage, Lysanias a son of the murdered Prince entered next upon it; by the permission of Augustus; During whose time Zenodorus, Lord of the Town and Territory of Panear, farming his Demesnes, and paying a very great rent for them, not only suffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and infect the Merchants of Damascus; but received part of the Booty with them. Augustus, on complaint hereof, gave the whole Country of Trachonitis, Batanea, Golanitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Ascalonite, before created King of Jenny; that by his puissance, and power he might quell those Robbers, and reduce the Country into order: Leaving unto Lysanias nothing but the City of Abila, (of which he was the natural Lord) wherof and of the adjoining Territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herod's good fortune end in this; For presently on the death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Augustus gave him also the District of Panear, (of which we shall speak more when we come to Galilee); which with the Countries formerly taken from Lysanias, made up the Tetrarchy of Philip his youngest Son; affording him the yearly Revenue of 100 Talents, which made 375000 l. of English Money. On Philip's death, his Tetrarchy was by Cæsar Caligula conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his son Archelaus; whom he had also dignified with the title of King; after whose death, and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next succeeded, his estates escheated to the Romans, and have since had the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

3. GALILEE.

GALILEE is bounded on the East, with Batanea, and part of the half Tribe of Manasse on that side of Jordan; on the West, with the Sea-coast of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean; on the North, with Anti-Libanus on the South, with Samaria. So called, as some say, from Gelilab, a Phœnician word signifying as much as borders; because the bordering Country betwixt them and the Jews.

The Country not so large as that on the other side of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fertile of itself, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman, and so well cultivated in old times, that there was hardly any waste ground to be found in it. Thick set with Cities, Towns, and Villages, in the time of Josephus, and those so populous and rich, that the smallest Village in it is affirmed by that Author, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitants. A number beyond all parallel, if reported rightly, and not mistaken in the transcripts. The people from their childhood very stout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want, or dread of penury; which seconded by their vast and almost incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough piece of employment when subdued by Titus. And this, together with their zeal to the Jewish Religion, makes it more than probable, that there was something in them of the ancient Israelites; and that they were not merely of an Affrian, either stock or spirit, but intermixt with such remainders of the Tribes as had saved themselves, either by flying to the Mountains, or hiding themselves in Caves and Desarts; or otherwise were inconsiderable for strength and numbers; in the great Transplantation of them made by Salmanasser. And in this I am the more confirmed by their speech or language, which was the same with that of the natural Jews, differing no otherwise from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern English doth from that which is spoke in London; as appears by the communication which the Dan of Asaph had, with St. Peter, in the High Priests Hall, in which he plainly understood him; but so that he pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Transplantation been so universal, as some think it was, and that both sick and sound, old and young had been carried away, and none but Colonies of the Affrians to fill up their places; it must needs be, that those New-comers would have planted their own language there, as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britons, on this side of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this side of Jordan, especially Simon and Dan, which either bordering upon Judah, or having their Lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or subjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was anciently into the Higher and Lower. The Higher so called from its situation more amongst the Mountains, had also the name of Galilee Gentium, or Galilee of the Gentiles; and that either because it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the rest of the Jews; or because a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyre. But for what cause soever it was called so, first certain it is, it held this name unto the last known by it in the time of the Apollies, as appears by St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. 4. 15. The Lower Galilee is situate on the South of the other, memorable for the Birth and Education of our blessed Saviour, whom Julian the Apollate called for this cause, in scorn, the Galilean; as for the same, the Dickies generally had the name of Galileans imposed upon them, till that of Christian, (being a name of their own choosing) did in fine prevail. Both or the greatest part of both, known in the New Testament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapoliensis, mentioned Mat. 4. 25, Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to say, 1. Cæsarea Philippi. 2. Afer. 3. Cades-Nephthalim. 4. Sepphet. 5. Chorazin. 6. Capernaum. 7. Bethsaida. 8. Jonopata. 9. Tiberias. And 10. Synopolis. By which account it stretched from the Mediterranean to the head of Jordan, East and West; and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a square of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Israel, the whole Galilee was so disposed of, that Afer, Nephthalim, and a part of the Tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higher; Zabulon, and Issachar in the Lower; according to which distribution we will now describe them.

The Tribe of NAPHTHALI was so called from NAPHTHALI the sixth Son of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel, of whom at their first muster were found 53400 fighting men, and at the second 44540 able to bear arms. The Land allotted to them lay on the West side of the River Jordan, opposite unto the Northern parts of Israel; where before we left: having on the West, the Tribe of Afer, and that of Zabulon on the South. Within which Tract were certain Cities, which they never conquered; and one which appertained to the Tribe of Dan; the chief of those which were with-held by the Gentiles, being Chalcis, Abila, Heliopolis, Cities accounted of as belonging to Calo-Syria, where they have been spoken of already.

That which did appertain to the Tribe of DAN lay on the North-East part, heretofore confronting the most Northern Northern parts of Israel, as before was said; where the Danites held one Town of moment, besides many other of less note. And it seemed destined to this Tribe by some old Prefage; the Eastern Fountain of Jordan (which hath its original in this Tract) being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Chedorlaomer and his Associates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a possession in it. Of which see Gen. 14. 14. The Town of moment first called Leshem, by some Writers Lais; afterwards subject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon strength thereof made good against those of Naphthali; but taken by some adventures of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is said, Josh. 19. 47. That finding their own Country too little for them, they went up and fought against Leshem, which they took, and called DAN. Accompanied after this exploit, the utmost bound Northward of the Land of Canaan, the length thereof being measured from Dan in the North, unto Beerseba in the South: remarkable for one of the Golden Calves which was placed here by Jeroboam, and for the two spring-heads of Jordan, rising near unto it. When conquered by the Romans it was called Panear, from a Fountain adjoining of that name: which with the Territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, who held it of the Roman Empire, as before is said, was given by Augustus Cæsar unto Herod the Great; and by him at his decease to Philip his youngest Son, with the Tetrarchy of Itures and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cæsarea Philippi, partly to curry favour with Tiberius Cæsar partly to preserve the memory of his own name: and partly to distinguish it from another Cæsarea, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, and called Cæsarea Palestina: and being so repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name, Mat. 16. 13, when St. Peter made that confession or acknowledgment of his Lord and Master, that he was CHRIST the Son of the living God. By King Agrippa, who succeeded him in his Estates, in honour of the Emperor Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the Adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance: the Town being called Cæsarea Panear in the time of Ptolemy, and simply Panear, as before, in the time of St. Hierom. Of this Cæsarea was that Woman whom our Saviour cured of the bloody Flux, by touching but the Hem of his Garment: who in a pious gratitude of so great a mercy, erected two Statues in this place, representing CHRIST, and her self kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Julian the Apollate, by whose command it was cast down, and a Statue of his own set up in the place thereof, miraculously destroyed by a fire from Heaven. The City being at that time, and long before, an Episcopal See. Of less note there were, 1. Haleb, and 2. Reccath, both situate in the confines of it. And not far off the strong Town and Castle of 3. Magdala, (the habitation as some say of Mary Magdalen) where the Pharisees desired a sign of our Saviour CHRIST, as is said Mat. 15. 39. & 16. 1. the same, or some place near unto it, being by St. Mark (reporting the same part of the Story) called Dalmannutha, Chap. 8. 10. 11. But whether this Castle did anciently belong to these Danites, or to those of Naphthali, or to the half Tribe of Manasse beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of those which were in the possession of the Tribe of NAPHTHALI, the Cities of most eminent observation were, 1. Hazor, or Azor, by Junius and Tremellius called Chatzar, the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendezvous of 24 Canaanite Kings in the War with Josiah; by whom it was taken notwithstanding, and burnt to ashes. But being afterwards rebuilt, it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who so grievously for the space of 20 years, afflicted Israel; till vanquished by Deborah and Barak. Destroyed in that War and repaired by Solomon, it continued in so good estate in our Saviour's time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis; it being so still, but known by the name of Antiochia. 2. Capernaum, seated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee; of which Country it was accounted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour; with whose presence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decapolitans. Some marks of its former greatness is retained when St. Hierom lived, who confesseth it to be a Town of some good capacity; but so decayed in the time of Breidenbach and Brochardus that it consisted but of six poor Fishermen's houses. 3. Hamath, so called from Hamathi the Son of Canaan, planted in these parts; a Town of such esteem in the elder times, that it was reckoned to be one of the Gates of the Land of Canaan; and therefore called in Scripture, Inimicus Hamath, or the entrance of Hamath; as Nehem. 34. 8. Josh. 13. 5. Judg. 3. 3, 8. Mistaken by St. Hierom for another of the same name in Syria, by the Greeks and Romans after them, called Epiphania. And in this I say he is mistaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolemy two degrees more Eastward than Cæsarea Philippi, the most Eastern City of all Galilee; & two degrees more North than that, though the most Northern City of all Palestine. The ground of this mistake we have seen before. Won by the Syrians of Damascus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Israel, by Jeroboam the second Son of Joa; and after added by the Romans (as were Synopolis, Pella, Gadara, and some others of this tract) unto Calo-Syria. 4. Kadish, to difference it from others of the same name; called Kadish Naphthalim, high seated on the top of an Hill, as is said, Josh. 20. 7. the King whereof being taken and slain by Joshua, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Most memorable for the Birth of Barak, who discomfited Sisera, Lieutenant of the Host of Jabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Jewish State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, in the time of the Romans; and an Episcopal See in the first ages of Christianity. 5. Riblah, watered with the fountain of Danphni, a little Rivier, which hereabouts falleth into Jordan; to which City, as some say (but I think erroneously) Zedechias the unfortunate King of the Jews was brought prisoner unto Nebuchadnezzar who caused his children to be slain before his face, & then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Error in them that say it the Scene of this Tragedy being by Josephus laid in Riblah (or Riblah) a City of Syria; the same which in succeeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Josephus, who for so long was Governor of both the Galilee, cannot be conceived to be so ignorant of the State of this Province, as to transfer that bloody execution to a City of Syria, if it had been acted in this Country. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greatest Towns in the Tribe of Naphthali, should be capable of the Court and Train of that mighty Monarch; especially for so long a time, as he is said to have attended in that place, the success of his forces then before Hierusalem, and the disposal of the State when the Town was taken. 6. Sapher, another of the Decapoli Cities, strongly if not impregnable seated; one of the strongest Fortresses of the Western Christians, as it was after their expulsion of the Turks and Saracens; who from hence waited and subdued all the neighbouring Country, as far as to the very Sea. The only place, not of this Country only but of all the East, in which the Jews (who possessed a third part of this Town) have any new or shadow of a Common Common wealth. 7 Bethlehem, mentioned Jos. 19:38, made tributary unto those of this Tribe, though others were possessed by the Canaanites, who held against them. 8 Cartham, or Kirjathaim, situated near the Mountain, which in following times was called Mount Christ, because much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choice of his Apostles; as is said Mark 3: 13 and where he made also that Divine Sermon recited in the 5. 6. and 7. Chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel. 9 Maseboth, a place of a great strength, but forced by Bacchides, General of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees. 10 Cimithi, a strong City, after called Genezareth; whence the Lake of Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring near unto it, is sometimes called the Lake of Genezareth, as Lev. 5: 1, &c.

2 The Tribe of ASER, was so called from Aser, the eighth Son of Jacob, begotten of Zilpah the Handmaid of Leah; of whom at their first Muster when they came out of Egypt, were found 41 500 persons able to bear arms, all above twenty years of age; and at the second Muster when they entered the Land of Canaan, 53 400 fighting men of the new increase. The portion of the Land allotted for their habitation was plentiful in Wine, Oyl, and Wheat, with great store of Palm-trees, extending from the Coast of Sidon, to Ptolemais, thirty miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eastward to the Tribe of Nephthali, some twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Ptolemais, Tyre, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command; yet had they in this narrow compass many beautiful Cities and Towns of note; which they were quietly possessed of, till their subjugation by the King of Affria.

The principal of those, and others which have since been founded, 1 Aphek, memorable for the great slaughter there made of the Syrians, when besieged by Bahadad, of whom 100000 were slain by the Israelites under the leading of Abab, and 27000 killed by the fall of a Wall. 2 Gabala, mentioned by Ptolemy amongst the mid-land Cities of Phoenicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe: one of those twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refusal peopled by the Israelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards rebuilt and strongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3 Gisela, a Town of great strength and consequence; the birth-place of John or Jebucanan, one of the three seditious in Jerusalem when besieged by Titus, where he did more mischief than the Enemy. Attempting to betray this City to the power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrans an opportunity to be Masters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being rebuilt by the authority of Josaphus, then Governour of Galilee for the Jews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon compulsion. 4 Cana, for distinction sake called Cana-Major, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower Galilee, affirmed for the dwelling of that Woman, whose Daughter Christ delivered of an evil Spirit; called by Saint Matthew a Woman of Canaan, chap. 15, a Syro-Phoenician by Saint Mark, chap. 7, the Syro-Phoenicians of this Trade being originally of the Race of Canaan, as was said before. 5 Hethlon, or Cethlon, the furthest City of the North; as 6 Messal, or Masbal, to the South, of the Tribe of Aser. Of later date there are 7 Thoron, a strong place, built by the Christians on the Hills near Tyre, to hinder the incursions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situated in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, of great importance in the Wars of the Holy-Land, and giving name to the Noble Family of the Lords of Thoron; one of which being Countable to King Saladin the third, fifth buried in the Chappel adjoining to it, a curious piece of workmanship, and dedicated by the name of the Blessed Virgin, St. Sophia, so named from the strength and beauty of its situation on the high grounds near the River Nile, and its proximity to the great Republic which Saladin the victorious King of the Turks received before it being forced to take his Siege with dishonour and loss, on the coming of the Christians Armies. Some others Forts here are of the same erection, as 9 Montfort, and 10 Mount Royal (or Castrum Regium) belonging to the Dutch Knights of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended against the Infidels.

3 The Tribe of ZABULON, was so called from Zabulon the tenth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah; of whom there mustered near Mount Sinai 57 400 able men; and 65 000 at their second Muster, when they came into Canaan. Their Territory lay on the South of Aser and Nephthali; and the North of Zabulon, extending from the Lake of Tiberias to the Mediterranean.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Jokneham, the King, whereof was slain by Josaphat, and the City given unto the Levites. 2 Zabulon, or the City of Men; a stately and magnificent City, till burnt to the ground by Cestius a Roman President. 3 Cana-minor, so called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Aser, the birth-place of Nathanael, and as some say of Simon Zelotes; memorable for the Marriage at which our Saviour wrought his first Miracle, of turning Water into Wine: Called in Saint John's Gospel Cana of Galilee. 4 Beisab, standing in the Border betwixt both Galilees, and therefore strongly fortified by Josaphus against the Romans. 5 Dabban, where Josaphus found his Brethren as they fed their flocks; and where the Prophet Elisba strook blind the Syrians, who besieged him in it. 6 Beisaida, situate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, the birth-place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip; but most renowned for the Miracles and Preaching of our Lord and Saviour. 7 Nazareth, now a small Village, seated in a Vale betwixt two Hills, not far from Ptolemais or Acon; upon one of which two Hills it was formerly built, where still are to be seen the ruins of many Churches here founded by the Christians; it being in the flourishing times of Christianity an Archbishop's See. Of great esteem for being, if not the birth-place, yet the habitation of the Virgin Mary, who was here, saluted with those joyful tidings by an Angel, as the fate in her Chamber. Of which Chamber it is said in the Papish Legends, That it was after the Virgin's death had in great reverence by the Christians, and remained in this Town till the Holy Land was subdued by the Turks and Saracens, Anno 1291. Then most miraculously transported into Selavonia; but that place being unworthy of the Virgin's Divine Presence, it was by the Angels carried over into the Sea-coast of Italy, Anno 1294. That place also being infested with Thieves and Pirates, the Angels removed it to the little Village of Loretto, where her Miracles were quickly divulged; inasmuch that Paul the second built a most stately Church over this Chamber, and Xistus the fifth made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our famous Lady of Loretto. Here did our blessed Saviour spend a great part of his Life before his Baptism; from whence both he and his Disciples had for many years the name of Nazarenes. 8 Josaphat, a strong place seated on the top of a Mountain, near the Lake of Genezareth, fortified by Josaphus in the War with the Romans, but after a long Siege taken by Vespasian, and in it Josaphus the Hittorian, chief Governour of the City; and of both the Galilees. 9 Tiberias, raised out of the

the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in honour of Tiberius Cæsar. Situated in a fruitful Soil, on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of the Lake or Sea of Tiberias; This City being held to be the greatest of the Lower Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decaplitian Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called Saint Matthew from the Receipts of the Custom-house; and near unto it, that he raised the Daughter of Tairus. 10 Bethulia, more within the Land, seated on an high Hill, and of very great strength, as appears by the story of Judith and Holofernes. 11 Japba, a place of like strength, but forced by Titus; who in the fury of the storm slew in it above 15000 persons, and carried away with him 2000 Prisoners. 12 Sepbonis, or Sippora, the habitation of Jacobim and Anna, the Parents of the blessed Virgin; fortified with strong Walls by Herod the Tetrarch, who made it his Regal Seat for the Lower Galilee. Before that time, it had been made by Gabinus, one of the five Juridical Refuges for the Palæstinians; after that not without great difficulty forced by Vespasian; and is nothing now but a Castle known by the name of Zapher, or Saffer. The ordinary Residence, for the most part, of the Turkish Sanziak who hath the Government of this Province; and lately, if not still, of the Emirs of Sidon; Eaccardine the late Emir having been made the Sanziak of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not far off is Mount Tabor, famous for the transfiguration of our Saviour; for a sumptuous Chappel built on the top of the Hill in memory of it, by the Emperess Helen, Mother of Constantine the Great; and for the Fountain of the Brook Chifon, which presently divided into two Streams, runneth Eastward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias; and Westward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4 The Tribe of ISSACHAR is so called from Issachar the ninth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah, of whom were found at the first Muster 54 400 fighting men, and 64 300 at the second Muster. Their Lot, in the partition of the Land amongst the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulon, and the half Tribe of Manasse on this side Jordan, North and South; extending from that River to the Mid-land Sea. A Territory not so well replenished with strong and eminent Cities, as was that before; nor yielding so much matter of observation in the course of business.

Those of most note in it, 1 Tarichea, on the side of the Lake, about 8 miles from Tiberias, of great strength both by Art and Nature; as witnessed the notable resistance which Vespasian found when he besieged it, by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible slaughter. 2 Cishion, a City of the Levites. 3 Remeth, called also Jarmuth, another City of the Levites; where the Hills of Gilboa take beginning, and thence range as far as the Mediterranean Westward, and the City of Fezzeel towards the East. 4 En-hadda, near which Saul being discomfited by the Philistines, slew himself for grief; or else for fear of falling into the hands of those merciless Enemies, against whom he had so often returned victorious. 5 Naim, on the Banks of the River Chifon, where CHRIST raised to life the Widow's Son. 6 Hapharaim, or Aphraim, on the banks of the same River also. 7 Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul consulted; and the discomfiture of the Midianites by Gideon, who perished at Endor, and became as the dung of the Earth, faith the Royal Psalmist. 8 Dabarab, one of the Cities of Refuge. 9 Arbela, not far from the Cave of the two Thieves, which so greatly infested Galilee in the time of Herod. And 10 of a later date the Castle of Pilgrims (Castrum Peregrinorum in Latine Writers) built by Raymond Earl of Tripoli, and after fortified by the Templars, for the security of such as travelled to the Holy Land, and for long time the Magazine or Store-house of the Western Christians, now called Tortosa. Situate on the Shores of the Mediterranean, near a spacious Bay, on the North-side whereof Mount Carmel, described already.

As for those Galileans which succeeded in the place of these Tribes, they were for the most part originally such as were sent hither by Salmanassar to inhabit there, when the Israelites were led away into endless thraldom; but intermixed with some Remains of the ten Tribes, as was said before. And yet as if they had been wholly of the same extraction, with the rest of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much despised by the Jews (as witnesseth that scornful by-word, Can there any good come out of Galilee?) as the others were: though these as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themselves. In which so zealously affected, that neither threats nor force could make them offer Sacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperours, whom they looked on as the Enemies of their Law and Liberty. Brought under the command of the King of Jewry by the Maccabees, and with the rest of that Kingdom bestowed on Herod, named Antipas, the second of his Sons then living with the Title of Tetrarch, which he enjoyed till the death of our Saviour; and on his deprivation (being banished to Lyons in France by the Emperour Caligula) bestowed upon Agrippa his Brothers Son, the first King of the Jews so named: Under him, and his Son Agrippa the second, it continued till the general Revolt of the Jewish Nation. Subjected by the Sword of Titus to the Power of the Romans, it hath since followed the same Fortune with the rest of Palæstina.

4 SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the East with the River Jordan; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Galilee; and on the South with Judea. So called from Samaria, the chief City of it, of which more hereafter.

The Country interchangably composed of Fields and Mountains, excellent good for Tillage, and full of Trees, yielding variety of Fruits: watered both with the Dew of Heaven, and many fresh Springs which the Earth affordeth it; occasioning thereby abundance of Grains, and consequently of Milch-beasts exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no less populous; but now famed for neither.

The People for the most part were originally the descendants of those Affrians whom Salmanassar sent hither to possess the dwellings of the captive Israelites. Gentiles at first, till better instructed by the Lyons whom God sent amongst them, and after by the Priests sent hither by the Kings of Affria; they entertained the five Books of Moses, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 Kings 17. Further than this they would not go, rejecting all the rest of the Sacred Canon; and no strict Observers of this neither. And though at first they so embraced the Worship of God, as that they still adhered to the gods of the Nations where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Akimach, Nibhas, Tarrah, and the rest of that rabble, mentioned 2 Kings 17; yet they were soon taken off from those impieties, and became zealous in the worship of one only God; erroneous chiefly in the place which was destined to it. The wicked policy of Jeroboam the Son of Nabat, was as natural to them, as if they could not have possessed his Estates without it; and therefore would not suffer their people to go up to Hierusalem to worship, as the Law required. More pious in this than their Predecessors, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan and Beisbel, or any other parts of their Dominions: though to divert the People from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as sacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Jews. Schismatical enough in this, but not Idolatrous and Schismatical too as the others were; yet so conceited of themselves, and their own perfections, that they imagined themselves defiled by any company but their own. If therefore they had visited any of their neighbour Nations, at their return they used to sprinkle themselves with Urine: but if by negligence, or the necessity of business, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themselves, cloaths and all, in the next Fountain. But in this the Jews cried quittance with them, not so much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appeareth John 4. 5. but loading them, on the other side, with all the bitterness of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of people (saith the Son of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that sit on the Mountains of Samaria, the Philistines, and the foolish People that dwell at Sichem, Eccles 10. And this continued to the times of our blessed Saviour, whom when the Jews endeavoured to reproach with their heaviest calumnies, they could find out none so great, as to say that he was a Samaritan, and (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converse with Devils and familiar Spirits.

Of these there were some Sects also, as amongst the Jews. 1. The Dositheans, so called from Dositheus or Dosthai, supposed to be the first Priest who was sent thither by the King of Assyria: agreeing with the Jews in Circumcision, and the Sabbath, and the Doctrine of the Resurrection, (in which last they differed from the common Samaritan, who was a Sadducee in that point) but differing from them in some points of as signal consequence. For they rejected the Writings of all the Prophets, as not divinely inspired by the Holy Ghost; they ate of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoreans, abstained from Marriage like the Essenes; and in the point of Sabbath-keeping out-went the Pharisees; it being resolved upon amongst them, That in what posture soever a man was found on the Sabbath-day mornings, in the same he was to continue without alteration the whole day after. 2. The Selvians, so called from Sebus, or Sebiab, one of the Companions of that Dosthai; who though they kept all the public Festivals, as the Jews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the same time: transferring the Passover to August, the Pentecost to Autumn, and the Feast of Taboracles to the time of the Passover; nor suffered for that cause to worship in the Temple of Garizim. 3. The Goribeni, who kept the same Festivals, and observed the same times of those Solemnities, as the Law required; but kept only one of the seven days of those great Festivals, and laid by the rest, as days of ordinary labour. In other points not differing from the other Samaritans, who though at first possessed of all the Land belonging to the Ten Tribes of Israel, were yet reduced at last to a narrower compass: shut up betwixt Galilee and Judea, within the ancient Territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manasse, on this side of the Water.

1. The half Tribe of MANASSES on this side of Jordan, was situate betwixt Issachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South; extending from the Mediterranean, to the Banks of that River. In which the places of most consequence and consideration, 1. Beth-san, environed almost with the Land of Issachar, situate near the Banks of Jordan, where it beginneth again to streighten and be like it self, having been almost lost in the Sea of Galilee; first called Nisja, and so called by Bacchus, or Liber Pater, the Founder of it, in memory of his Nurse there buried; but the Children of Manasse not being able to expel the Natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-san, or the House of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Scythians invaded those parts of Asia, and compelled some of the Jews to serve them against the rest (whom notwithstanding their good Service they put all to the Sword) they new-built this City: called therefore by the Gracians, Scythopolis, or the City of Scythians; and by them reckoned as a City of Calo-Syria. Memorable in the Old Testament for the hanging of the dead bodies of Saul and his Sons on the Walls hereof, by the barbarous Philistines; in the time of our Saviour, for being the greatest of all the Decapollitan Regions; as afterwards in the flourishing times of Christianity, for being the See of an Arch-bishop: now nothing but a desolate Village and an heap of Rubbish, out of which many goodly Pillars, and other pieces of excellent Marble, are often digged. 2. Terzab, used by the Kings of Israel for their Regal Seat, till the building of Samaria, and the removal of it thither. 3. Acrabata, the Territory whereof called Acrabataena, was afterwards made one of the Trochies of Judea. 4. Theber, not far from Samaria, where the Ballard Abimelech was wounded with a Stone, which a Woman threw at him from the Wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to slay him, that it might not be said he perished by the hands of a Woman. 5. Ephra, or Hephra, in which Gideon dwelt: near whereunto there stood an Altar consecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon: and not far off the fatal Stone on which Abimelech slew 70 of his Brethren. An Heathenish cruelty, and at this day practised amongst the Turks. 6. Asophon, an ignominious Village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolemy Lathurus here gave to Alexander the King of the Jews: which Victory he used with so great barbarity, that he slew all the Women as he passed along, and caused young children to be sod in Caldrons. 7. Bezek, the City of the bloody Tyrant Adoni-Bezek, whose Story (touched upon before) see at large in Judges, chap. 1. By Josephus it is called Bala, and seemeth to be the place in which Saul assembled the chief strength of Israel & Judah, to the number of 33000 men, for the relief of Jabesh-Gilead, then distressed by the Ammonites. 8. Jezreel, the Royal City of Abah, and the Kings of his Race, situate on the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa: so near unto the Borders of Issachar, that some have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in sacred Story for the stoning of Nabab by the procurement of Jezabel, and the breaking of Jezabel's neck by the command of Jehu. A City which gave name to the Plains adjoining, called the Valleys or Plains of Jezreel (but by the name of Campus Magnus in the Book of Maccabees, lib. 1. cap. 10.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: famous for the great and many Battels which have been fought in it; namely, of Gideon against the Midianites, of Saul against the Philistines, of Abah against the Syrians, of Jehu against Jehoram; and finally, of the Christians against the Saracens. 9. Megiddo, unfortunately observable for the death of the good King Josiah, slain hereabouts in a Battel against against Pharao Necho King of Aegypt; and before that of Abasiah King of Judah, who received his death-wound at Gaber, a Town adjoining, when pursued by Jehu. 10. Dora, or Dor as the Scripture calls it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Cattle of Pilgrims in the Tribe of Issachar. A very strong and powerful City, and therefore chose by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having first treacherously taken, and barbarously murdered Jonathan the Maccabean, after he had received 200 Talents for his Ranfom; and no less villainously slain Antiochus the sixth of Syria, his Lord and Master whom he succeeded in his Throne, was by Antiochus the seventh, with an Army of 120000 foot, and 8000 horse, besieged in this City, and most deservedly put to death. 11. Cesarea, anciently called the Tower of Straton, from Straton a King of the Zidonians; new-built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Amphitheatre, both of polished Marble, with a fair and capacious Haven, which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection, in honour of Drusus Caesar, Son-in-law of Augustus, he caused one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Drusus, the City it self to be called Cesarea Palestine. The stateliness and magnificence of which City (when first built by Herod) he that lists to see may find the same described at large by Josephus the Jew, in the 15th Book of Antiq. cap. 13. In this City was Cornelius baptized by St. Peter: Here did Paul plead in defence of Christianity before Festus then the Roman President: and finally, here Herod Agrippa was smitten by an Angel, and devoured by Worms, after his Rhetorical Oration, which his Parasites called the voice of God, and not of man. The Metropolis of all Palestine, when one Province only; as afterwards of Palestina prima, when by Constantine, or some of his Successors, cantoned into three: the first Bishop hereof being said to be that Cornelius, whom Saint Peter here initiated in the Faith of CHRIST. 12. Antipatris, another City of Herod's building, in the place where Kapharsalama, mentioned 1 Maccab. 7. 31. had sometimes stood; who in honour of his Father Antipater, gave it this new name. Near hereunto did Judas Maccabeus overthrow a part of Nicanor's Army: and not far off, the Mountain where Obadiab the Steward of Abah hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preserved against the fury of Jezabel: Finally, to this City it was that Saint Paul was conveyed by the command of Lysias to save him from the Jews, who lay in wait to destroy him.

2. The Tribe of EPHRAIM was so called from Ephraim, the second and youngest Son of Joseph; of whom were mustered in the Defarts 45000 fighting men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan; where their Lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manasse, on the North; and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South, extending from the River Jordan to the Mediterranean.

Places of most consideration, 1. Saron on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitful Valley which reacheth from Cesarea Palestine, as far as Joppa. 2. Lydda, upon the same shores, where Saint Peter (virtute Christi, non sua) cured Aeneas of the Palsy. By the Gentiles it was called Diopolis, or the City of Iupiter; but by the Christians, in the time of the Holy Wars, it had the name of Saint George's; partly from a magnificent Temple which the Emperor Justinian there erected to the honour of that blessed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongst them, that he suffered Martyrdom in that place. An opinion founded on mistakes, first of a Cenotaphium, or an empty Monument erected in this City to preserve his memory, for the Grave in which he was interred: the other, in taking the word Passio, used in the Martyrologies, for the place of his suffering, which is meant only of the Story or Celebration. But howsoever they entituled it by the name of Saint George's, as was said before, and made it on that account also an Episcopal See. 3. Ramatha, or Arimathea, a City of the Levites, supposed to be the dwelling of Joseph, who begged of Pilate the Body of CHRIST. 4. Helen, or Ajalon, a City of the Levites also; by some placed, and perhaps more fitly, in the Tribe of Dan, and there we shall hear further of it. 5. Thamnath-Cores, given by the Israelites to Joshuah, who enlarged the same, and made it a strong and goodly City; honoured with the Sepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the Nine Worthies of the World; and afterwards made one of the Presidents of Judea, by the name of Thammitica. 6. Adsa, or Adasa, where Judas Maccabeus with 3000 Jews overthrew the Army of Nicanor. 7. Jeser, called otherwise Pelcri, which gave name and birth unto the Peletibites, part of David's Guard, under the governance of Benaiah. 8. Silo, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain; the receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carried thence by the Philistines. 9. Michmash, the habitation of Jonathan, one of the Maccabean Brethren, situate in the middle way from Samaria to Hierusalem, now called Byra. 10. Naiotb, where Saul prophesied. 11. Beiboron, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow which Judas Maccabeus here gave to Lysias. 12. Pirbatson, on the Mountain Amelec, the City of Abdon the Judge of Israel. 13. Sichem, called also Sicchor, the habitation in the old times of Sichem the Father of that Hamor, who deflowered Dinah the Daughter of Jacob; the City for that cause destroyed by Simoon and Levi; repaired again, and afterwards by Abimelech levelled with the ground; a third time re-edified by Jeroboam the Son of Nebat, & a third time ruined by the Kings of Damascus: yet notwithstanding these blows, it was of good esteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two days, and converted many. Memorable for Jacob's Well, which was very near it; more for his neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the blessings were to be read to the people (of which see Deut. 11. 27. and Josh. 8. 23.) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the use of the Samaritan Nation, at the cost and charge of Sanballat, a great Prince amongst them. Who having married his daughter to Manasse, brother of Jaddus, the High Priest of the Jews; and fearing he would put her away to avoid the sentence of Excommunication, which he was involved in for that Match, promised him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple answerable to that of Hierusalem, and make him the High Priest thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not stood above two hundred years, when destroyed by Hyracanus the Maccabean; the place remaining notwithstanding a place of worship, as appeareth John 4. 20. As for the City of Sichem, or Sicchor, it was by the Grecians called Nicopolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperor Vespasian, who caused it to be called Flavia Cesarea: of which Colony was that renowned Justin Martyr. 14. Samaria, the Metropolis of the Kingdom of Israel, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Samron (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coast) whence it had the name. A stately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brocardus, who had traced the ancient Ruins of it, to be bigger than Hierusalem. Destroyed by the Affrians when they carried away the Ten Tribes; but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sons of Hyrcanus above-mentioned. But Herod the Great, who was pleased with the situation of it, did again re-edify it, in more stately manner than before; as appeareth by the great store of goodly Marble Pillars, and other carved Stones, in great abundance found amongst the rubbish: and having rebuilt it to his mind, inclosed it with a strong wall, and beautified it with a goodly Temple, in honour of Augustus Caesar, whom the Greeks call Sebastos, he caused it to be called Sebastie. Memorable after this new erection from the Sepulchre of John Baptist, and being made the Metropolis of Palestina Secunda, (by consequence an Archbishop's See) now nothing but a few cottages filled with Grecian Monks.

Nor were the Samaritans themselves (so called from this their principal City) less subject to the vicissitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Descended for the most part from the Assyrians, and such other Nations as were fitter thither to fill up the empty places of the captive Tribes: but called Cuthians by the Jews, either because most of them were of Cuth, a Region of Perfis, as Josephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzestan; or else by way of scorn, for Chusites, as being of the Posterity of the accursed Cham, by Chus his son. Having embraced the Law of Moses, they began to think better of the Jews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the observation of the said Josephus, that as often as the Jews were in any prosperity, then they called them Cozins, and would be of the same Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were strangers which came thither out of foreign Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in that Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Jews a release of the seventh years Tribute, the Samaritans desiring the like exemption, pleaded for themselves Ephraim &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews, though it pleased the Sidonians to call them Sicchemites. But when Antiochus raged against them with fire and sword, the Samaritans sent Letters to him, disclaiming all relation to those of Judab, and challenging their descent from the Medes and Persians. Nor were they content only to disclaim all kindred with the Jews, in the times of trouble, when any persecution rose against them for the Law of God; but did them also all ill Offices, and joyned with their Enemies to their destruction: especially after the Jews had refused to admit of their assistance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindred with great malice, and no less perverseness. But the fortune of the Jews did at last prevail, the whole Nation being subdued by Hyrcanus the Maccabean, who destroyed their Schismatical Temple also, and levelled Samaria it self to the very ground. After this, subject to the Jews, who possessed themselves of most of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrower compass than they were in formerly: but still so hated and contemned, that nothing was able to appease that inveterate malice, which they had conceived; till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to seek their dwellings in other Countries. Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Palestina Secunda: successively subject with the rest, to the Persians, Saracens, and Turks, who do now possess it.

5 J U D E A.

J U D E A is bounded on the East with the Dead Sea, and the River Jordan; on the West, with the Mediterranean; on the North with Samaria; and on the South with Idumea. So called from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judab, who after their return from the captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Jew unto all the Nation, as they did that of Indea to this part of the Country.

The Soil of the same nature with that of Samaria, before described; but that it is more swelled with Hills, and more stored with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we shall say no more, as to the general character and description of it; but look on the particular parts as it stood divided betwixt the Philistims, the Tribes of Dan, Simeon, Judab and Benjamin.

And first, the PHILISTIMS commanded all the Sea-coasts from the South of Phoenicia, to the North of Idumea; or from the Castle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both into the account. But Joppa, and all the Towns on the North of that, being taken in by the Israelites, they held no more than six Towns of any importance, with the Countries and Territories adjoining to them: but those so populous and strong, that by their own power, and the alliance of the Edomites, and the rest of their Neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them under terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we sum up the story and successes of their affairs.

In the mean time let us survey the Country which was holden by them, notwithstanding all that could be done against them by the Kings of Israel; and therein we shall find worth our observation, 1 Geth, or Gath, the birth-place of the huge Giant Goliath, slain by David; as also of many others of the like Gigantique proportion, slain by David's Worthies. Destroyed by David, or rather slighted and dismantled, it was re-built by Rehoboam the Son of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Judab, who found the Philistims there garrisoned but ill neighbours to him, and finally laid waste by Hazeael the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in St. Hierom's time; till in these last ages Falk the King of Hiersusalem erected there a new Castle, from the ancient ruins. From hence, as I conceive, the Idol Dagon, so much worshipped by these Philistims, was by the Syrians and Phoenicians called Azer-Gath; and not from Gath a Syrian Queen, as is said by many. 2 Accaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably against the Danites and Judeans. Much spoken of in the holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worship of Belzebub, that is to say, the Lord of Flies: so called by the Jews, either in contempt of the Idolatries committed to him, or because of that great multitude of Flies which attended his Sacrifices, whereof some say, the Temple of Hiersusalem was wholly free. But whatsoever he was, or for what cause so named, certain it is that he was here had in especial honour, and therefore called in Scripture the god of Accaron: and hither Abasiah the King of Israel sent his Messenger, to enquire of this Idol, concerning his health: 3 Ashdod, (by the Gracians called Azotus) memorable in Holy Writ for the Temple of Dagon, into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to stand upright when the Ark is near. Near to this Town was Judas Maccabean overcome & slain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria, and not long after the Town it self was taken by Jonathas the brother of Judas, who put the Citizens to the sword, and burnt all such as fled into the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, consumed in the same fire with the Idolaters. Rebuilt by Gabinus a Roman General, in the times of Christianity it was was made an Episcopal See; and continued a fair Village till the days of St. Hierom. 4 Ascalon, on the Seaside also, said to be built by Ascalus a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a war against the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and strongest Cities of the Philistims, of great note amongst the Gentiles for a Temple, dedicated to Dirceus, the Mother of Semiramis, here worshipped in the form of a Mermaid: & for another of Apolo, wherein Herod the Father of Antipater, and Grandfather of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Ascalonite) is said to have served as the Priest. It had in the first times of Christianity an Episcopal See; and in the course of the holy Wars was beautified with a new wall, and many fair buildings by King Richard the first, 5 Gaza, more within the Land, on the River Bejor: a fair and strong Town, formerly called Alsa, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or else it was so called by the Persians, in regard that Cambyses here laid up the Treasure which he had provided for the War of Egypt, the word Gaza in the Persian Language signifying treasures. Of which Cambyses it is said by Pomponius Mela, Cum armis Egyptum peteret, huc belli opes & pecuniam invulsi curavit. After which it was made the Receipt of Treasury, in which the Persians laid the Tribute of the Western Provinces, whence all riches had in time the name of Gaza. Once Calb took it, but not able to hold it against the Philistims, he again deserted it. Destroyed by Alexander the Great, and re-built again, it made notable resistance against the Maccabees; till at last forced by Simon the brother of Judas, who liked the place so well that he intended to have made it his place of residence: not so decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the days of Brochardus. And it is still the best of all this Coast, built on an hill encompassed with rich and pleasant Vallies; the buildings low and mean, as in other places: but some of them adorned with pillars of fair Parian Marble, digged out of the remaining ruins. 6 Maïma, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it self by Constantine, by whom called Constantia: but restored again by Julian unto those of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maritima.

These were the chief places holden by the Philistims, a strong and Giantlike race of men, such as the Scripture calls by the name of Anak, or the Sons of Anak. Originally descended from Casubim and Captiborim, of the race of Misraim the Son of Cham: as appeareth both by the common consent of ancient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jer. 47. 4. and Amos 9. 7. These being settled first in the borders of Egypt and Idumea, where the Casubim gave name unto the Province of Casitis, and the Mountain Casius; proceeded Northwards and subdued the Avim, a Canaanitish people, planting themselves in their habitations, as is said expressly Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Isaac went down to Gerar. Governed at first by one King, whom they called always by the name of Abimelech, as the Egyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh; sometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but still united in the times of approaching dangers. Too strong to be subdued by the Tribes of Israel, they made head against them, and mastered them at several times, for above 150 years, tyrannizing over them, till broken by Samson, and for a time kept off by Samuel. Recovering again, they vanquished the Israelites in the time of Saul, whom they discomfited, and hanged his dead body barbarously on the walls of Bethsan. But David, a more fortunate Prince, overthrew them in many set batels, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the strongest Towns they had;

and by that means fo weakened them; that they durst not stir all the time of David, nor a long while after. Beginning to be troublesome in the days of Ozias King of Judab, they were warred on by him, their Army overthrown, Isa and Amcia, two of their strong Forts, took and razed, and the Town of Gath again dismantled. In the time of the Idolatrous Achaz, associating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the destruction of Judab) they brake out again; took Beisfemes, Ajalon, Timnah, and some other Towns; carried away many Prisoners, and slew much People: But the good King Ezekiab made them pay dear for it, taking from them, the greatest part of their Country, betwixt Gath & Gaza. Which notwithstanding, they recovered to so great esteem, that the whole Country had from them the name of Palestine. But broken by degrees by the Maccabees, they lost both their power and reputation, palling in common estimate as a part of Jewry: the fortunes of which it followed for the time succeeding.

2 The Tribe of DAN is so called from Dan the fifth Son of Jacob, by Bilhah the Hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were mulctured at Mount Sinai 62700 fighting men; and 66400 at the second muster, in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim, on the North, Simeon on the South, the Tribe of Benjamin, on the East, and the Mediterranean on the West.

Places of most note in it, 1 Joppa (now called Jaffa) once a famous Mart-Town, and the only Haven to Judea in foregoing times: the Town where Jonah took ship to fly unto Tarshish, where Peter raised Dorcas from death to life; & where he lying in the house of one Simon a Tanner, was in a Vision taught the conversion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood. And here they say reigned Cepheus, whose Daughter Andromeda was by Perseus delivered from a Sea-monster, some of whose bones the people used to shew to strangers, even to the flourishing of the Romans. Just as our citizens of Covenry and Warwick shew the bones of the Dun-Cow of Dunsmear heath, and the bones of I know not what Giant, slain by Guy Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garrisoned by the Syrians, who having in the Port a Fleet of good power & strength, invited 200 of the chief Citizens to go aboard with them, & there drowned them all: for which their Fleet was fired by Judas, and such as did escape the fire, fell upon the sword. Twice taken by the Romans, & the second time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250. the holy Wars then drawing to their final end. Now nothing standing of it but two little Turrets, where are certain Harquebusses for defence of the Haven, none of the best-defended from the South & West-winds with eminent Rocks, but exposed to the fury of the North: which makes it more unsafe than the open Seas when enraged by Tempests. Not much frequented by the Merchants, who trade here but for Cottons only, & hold their Factory not far off in a Town called a Rama, by the Moors called Ramula, situate in a sandy plain, on the rising of a little Hill; built of Free-Stone, but the streets thereof narrow, and the houses contemptible. More beautiful in the ruins of some Christian Churches, and a Monastery built by Philip the Good of Burgundy, where the House of Nicodemus stood, than in any of the remaining Edifices. 3 Famnia, near Joppa, where Judas burnt the rest of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was seen to Hiersusalem, 240 furlongs off: mentioned by Prothomy, and in the times of Christianity an Episcopal See; now not discernable in the ruins. 4 Cedar or Cedron, fortified against the Jews by Cendebeus one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hereabouts was overthrown thrown by the Maccabees. 5 Modin, a small Town, but honoured with the birth and sepulchre of those Maccabees; the Sepulchre being seven Marble Pillars of so great an height, that they served as a mark for Sea-men. 6 Gibbethon, in the Country called Makris, a City of the Levites, but afterwards possessed by the Philistines, at the siege whereof Nadab, the Son of Jerobam King of Israel, was slain by Baspha, who succeeded; and Omri chosen King on the death of Zimri. 7 Cariathirim, where the Ark of the Lord was kept for 20 years, in the house of Aminadab; that is to say, from the sending it home by the Philistines, till brought to Hierusalem by David. 8 Beth-Jemes, to which the Ark was brought by a yoke of Kine, turned loose by the Philistines: for irreverent looking into which there were slain by the immediate hand of God, no fewer than 50070 persons of this City. 9 Israh, near which is a Fountain, called the Fountain of Ethiopia, because Philip there baptized the Ethiopian Eunuch. 10 Caspin, taken with great slaughter by Judas Maccabeus. 11 Lachis, remarkable for the death of Amasaiah King of Judah. 12 Ajalyn, a City of the Levites also, touched upon before in the Tribe of Ephraim in the borders whereof we find it situated; and therefore by some Authors reckoned to the same Tribe, and by some to the other, in the Valley whereof the Moon is said to have stood still at the prayers of Jehshuah, as the Sun did over the City of Gibson: the motion of the Heavens being staid, that he might have the more time for execution on the Kings of the Canaanites. To this Tribe also belonged the Town and Territory of Dan, or Leshem, afterwards called Cesarea Philippi, in the Tribe of NEPHTHALIM; whereof we have there spoke already.

3 The Tribe of SIMEON was so called from Siméon the second Son of Jacob by his first Wife Leah: of whom were found at the first muster 55300 able men, and but 22200 at the second muster, when they came into Canaan. Where they enjoyed but a small Territory to themselves, their Lot falling amongst the Philistines, whom they were not able to expel: and therefore they were taken into the Tribe of Judah, where they were permitted to enjoy some Towns and Villages, intermixed with that more potent Tribe. Afterwards in the reign of King Hazeckiah, some of them possessed themselves of Gedar, belonging to the Children of Ham; and others passing Southwards into Idumea, smote the Amalekites which inhabited in the mountains thereof, & dwelt in the places by them conquered. But for all this, wanting room for themselves and their children, many of them undertook the Office of Scribes or Scriveners, and dispersed themselves amongst the rest of the Tribes, teaching their Children to write, and giving themselves to the employment of Publick Notaries: God herein venging the Curse which Jacob had denounced on Siméon, that he should be divided and scattered in Israel. But for their fixed habitation which fell to them by Lot, it lay betwixt Dan upon the North, and Idumea on the South; the Tribe of Judah on the East, and the Philistines upon the West.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Gerar, the Royal seat of the two Abimelechs, Kings of the Philistines, with whom Abraham and Isaac had to do; and probably of some other of their Kings and Princes, till subdued by the Israelites. Situate in the South border of Canaan, not far from the Wilderness of Beerseba, but in a very healthful air; called therefore Regio salutaria in the times succeeding. 2 Seceleg, or Ziglag, belonging to the Philistines till the time of David, to whom given by Abishai King of Gath, for his place of retreat, when persecuted by Saul, from whom flying he lodged here all his goods and carriages; sacked by the Amalekites, but the booty recovered from them speedily by the diligence and good fortune of David. 3 Haim, a City of the Levites. 4 Cariath-Sepher, that is to say the City of Books, seated within the bounds of Siméon, but belonging to Judah: which some hold to be the University or Academy of old Palestine. A City of the Levites also, and at first possessed by the Sons of Anak, or men of a Gigantine stature, but taken by Othniel the Son of Kenan, on the promise and encouragement which was given by Caleb, that whosoever took it should have his Daughter Aschab to Wife. Afterwards it was called Debir, Judg. 1. 11. known in the time of St. Hierom by the name of Daema. 5 Chorma, conceived by some to be that place mentioned Num. 14. 45. to which the Canaanites and Amalekites pursued those of Israel. 6 Beerseba, or Puteus juramenti, so called those of the Well of waters, and the Oath which was there sworn betwixt Abraham and Abimelech, Gen. 21. 31. Memorable in the Scripture for the Grove which Abraham there planted, the wandering of Hagar thereabouts, when she was cast out of Abraham's house with her young Son Ismael, and the dwelling of Isaac, for which cause called the City of Isaac. Situate in the extreme South border of the Land of Canaan, the length whereof is often measured in the Scripture from this Town to Dan; and for that cause well fortified by the Western Christians, when they were possessed of this Country; as standing on the borders of Idumea, and the Desarts of Arabia, in the way from Egypt.

4 The Tribe of JUDAH was so called from Judah the fourth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah: of whom there were numbered at the first general muster taken near Mount Sinai, 76600 fighting men; and no fewer than 76500 at their entrance into the Land of Canaan. The greatest Tribe, and therefore answerably fitted with the largest Territory, bordering on the Dead Sea, East upon Siméon West; the Tribe of Benjamin on the North, and the Idumeans on the South. Comparatively large, with reference to the other Tribes; but otherwise unable to contain or feed those infinite multitudes, without the extraordinary providence of Almighty God, which are recorded to be in it: King David mustering 470000 fighting men of this Tribe alone; which was more than half the number found in the rest of the Tribes. A Tribe which had a native Sovereignty over all the others; the Scepter, the Legislative power, and the World's Misshab being all promised to them.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Arad, situate in the entrance of Judea, in the way from the Wilderness of Edom. 2 Hebron, one of the ancientest Cities of Canaan; the Seat of the Giants called Anakim, or the Sons of Anak. This word Anak signifieth a Chain worn for Ornament, and it seemeth that this Anak enriched with the spoils of his enemies, wore a Chain of gold, leaving both the custom and name to his posterity. We read the like of Manlius Torquatus in the Roman Histories. This Town did Abraham buy for a burial-place for his dead; in which his Wife Sarah was first buried, and after her four of the Patriarchs. Adjoining to this Town is the Plain of Mamre, where Abraham, the Father of the Faithful, sitting in his Tent, was visited from Heaven by God in the shape of a man. Here David kept his Court before the winning of Hierusalem, to this place came the Tribes to anoint him King over Israel, and thither came Abishalom, under the pretence of paying his vows, to usurp the Kingdom of his Father: 3 Tecoa, the City of Amos the Prophet; and also of that Woman, who by the words which Isaac put into her mouth, persuaded the King to call Abishalom from exile. In the Wilderness of this Tecoa there assembled the Inhabitants of Moab, Ammon, and

Mount Seir, to overthrow Judah. But the Lord being appeased by the publick Feast, proclaimed and kept by Jehosaphat and the people, sowed dissensions amongst them: so that the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them; and when they had made an end of the Inhabitants of Mount Seir, every one helped to destroy one another. 4 Ceriath, or Cariath, the birth-place of Judas, hence first named Heuriot (or the man of Cariath) who betrayed our Saviour. 5 Jeber, or Jetter, in the North border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis, a City anciently of the Levites, and called in St. Jerom's time Jethira, and then altogether replenished with Christians, now nothing but the name remaining. 6 Maresa, the native Soil of the Prophet Micah, near whereunto first Asa King of Judah discomfited the vast Army of Terab the Arabian or Ethiopian, consisting of above a Million of men; and afterwards Gorgias was overthrown by Judas Maccabeus. 7 Emaus (after called Nicopolis) memorable for the third overthrow which Judas gave to the said Gorgias for our Redeemers shewing himself after his resurrection to Cleophas and another of his Disciples; and for the hot Bathes hereabouts, which gave the name of Salutaris to this part of Palestine. The Sovereign virtue of which Waters Sozomen, a Christian, attributes to the washing of Christ's feet in them, as he passed by at that time; but Josephus a Jew, ascribes (as is most likely) unto natural causes. 8 Hazor, or Chalfor, one of the frontier Towns towards Idumea. 9 Odalla, or Hadullan, an ancient & magnificent City taken and destroyed by Joshua, and long after much enlarged and beautified by Jonathan, one of the Maccabees. 10 Cella, or Keila, where David sometimes hid himself when he fled from Saul; by him delivered afterwards from the assaults of the Philistines. 11 Eleutheropolis, or the Free City, not far from Hebron; a City of later date than any of Judah, mentioned by Ptolemy, and much remembered by St. Hierom. 12 Azecha, not far from Emaus, to which Joshuah followed Debir the King of Eglon, and his four Associates, whom he discomfited in the cause and quarrel of the Gibeonites; molested by them for submitting to their common Enemy. Seated in the Vally of Terebinth, and of very great strength; presuming upon which, it revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the same time that Libna and the Edomites had revolted from him. 13 Beth-Sur, or Beth-Sora that is to say, the house on the Rock, so called from the situation on a rocky hill, one of the strongest places of Judah: Fortified first by Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, after by Judas Maccabeus; and finally made impregnable by his brother Siméon. 14 Adcrum, bordering on the Dead Sea, beautified also by Rehoboam. 15 Zoar, in former times called Bela, but took its name from the words of Lot, alleging that it was but a little one, Gen. 19. 20. as the word Epibor doth import, in whose escape it was preserved, being otherwise one of the five Cities of the Region called Pentapolis, doomed unto destruction; the other four Sodom, Gomorrab, Adama and Seboim, being at the same time destroyed by fire and brimstone. 16 Masfada, frequently mentioned by Josephus, as a place of great strength both by art and nature, and as it is by him described (in the seventh Book de Bello Jud. cap. 28.) to be thought impregnable; and therefore made by Herod (in the time of his troubles) the place of refuge, in which he disposed of Marianne his betrothed Wife, her Mother Alexandra, with divers honourable Ladies; and where they were preserved in safety against all his Enemies, till he came armed with power from Rome, to dislodge their Forces, which was done accordingly. First built by Jonathan the brother of Judas Maccabeus, as a sure place of Refuge against the Syrians; and afterwards so esteemed by Herod for the reason above mentioned, that he not only much enlarged it, with all the requisite additions of strength & beauty, but built within the verge thereof a magnificent Palace. The whole environed with a wall of 7 furlongs compass, 12 cubits high, 88 cubits broad, built of white stone, and situate on a high Mountain called Collis Achille, washed on the East-side by the Dead Sea, or Lacus Asphaltites, and by that secured; on the other sides fenced with such deep ditches that it was a terror to any man to look down into them; besides which natural situation, it was fortified by Herod with 27 Turrets, who left therein as in a place impregnable and inaccessible, a Magazine of Arms and all warlike furniture for an Army of 10000 men, all sorts of Victuals to sustain them, and ground enough within the Walls to yield corn sufficient, when time and a long siege should consume those Victuals. A place of such strength and so great concernment; that it held out against the Romans (when Vespasian and his Son Titus managed that great War) after all the rest of Judea had been conquered by them. 17 Libna, a strong City seated in a corner of Judah, running between the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin. This City revolted from Joram King of Judah, at the same time the Edomites did, and continued a Free State, even as long as Judah continued a Kingdom. 18 Ziph, in the Wilderness, wherein David hid himself from the fury of Saul. Hither, when Saul pursued him, David came into his Camp (the Watch being all asleep) and took thence his Spear and a Cruse of Oyl, and departed. Abishai indeed would fain have killed him: but David, though he knew that Samuel had by God's command abdicated Saul from the Kingdom, and that himself was appointed in his stead, would not touch him; but left him to the judgment of the Lord, whose anointed he was. 19 Beitchelem, or (to distinguish it from another of this name of Babylon so called) Beitchelem-Judah, where Christ was born; and the Innocents suffered for him before he had suffered for them. In this general Massacre of young Children, a son of Herod's, which was at nurse, was also slain, which being told unto Augustus, he replied, He had rather be Herod's Swine than his Son. His Swine being safe in regard the Jews were forbidden hog-meat; but his Sons frequently made away, upon fears and jealousies. A Town for this cause had in great respect by the primitive Christians, beautified by Helen with a stately Temple, which yet standing entire by the Lady Paula (much extolled by St. Hierom) with some goodly Monasteries, in one of which the body of that Father lieth; and by the Western Christians, with a See Episcopal. On the Frontier of this Country towards the Philistines, was that strong Castle which Herod repairing, called Herodium, seated on a Hill, the ascent into which was made with 200 steps of Marble, exceeding fair and large. In this Country also are the hills of Engaddi, in a Cave of which David cut off the Lap of Saul's Garment; and all along the bottoms whereof were the Gardens of Balsammum or Opobalsammum, the trees of which were by Cleopatra (at such time as she governed M. Antony and the East) sent for to be replanted in Heliopolis of Egypt; and Herod, who durst not deny them, plucked them up by the roots, and sent them to her.

5 The Tribe of BENJAMIN took name from the twelfth and youngest Son of Jacob, by Rachel his best beloved Wife, who died in that Child-birth: of which at the first muster near unto Mount Sinai, were numbered 35000 able men; and at the second muster, when they entered the Promised Land, there were found of them fit for Arms 45600 persons. A Tribe in great danger to have been utterly cut off, by the folly of the men of Gibeon, all Israel arming against it as one man. For besides those that perished in the former Battles, there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the Sword: the fury of the Conquerors after that great Victory sparing neither man nor beast, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities also which they came unto. So great an havoc was there made of innocent Maidens, that when the edge of this displeasure was taken off, there were not Wives enough found for those young men which had escaped: The other Tribes having bound themselves by a solemn Oath, not to bestow their Daughters on them: inasmuch that they were fain to provide themselves of Wives of the Daughters of Jabesh-Gilead, a Town of the Manassites beyond Jordan, whom they took by assault: and of the Daughters of Shilo, whom they took by stratagem. The whole Story see at large in the Book of Judges, c. 19, 20, 21.

The Territories of this Tribe lay betwixt those of Ephraim on the North, and Judah on the South, having the Dead-Sea to the East, and the Tribe of Dan to the Westward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities were, 1. Michmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 2. and the abiding place of Jonathan, one of the Macabean Brethren, 1 Maccab. 9. 73. 2. Mispah, famous in being the ordinary place of assembly for the whole body of the People, in matters of War and Peace: as also in that standing in the midst of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the Seat of Justice, to which Samuel went yearly to give Judgment to the People. 3. Gelah, the North border of the Kingdom of Judah toward Israel. 4. Gibeon, the Country of Saul, the first King; where the abusing of the Levite's Wife by the young men of this Town, had almost rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the Garden of Israel. 5. Ai, a great and strong City, in the Siege of which the Israelites were first discomfited: but when by the death of Achan, who had stolen the accursed thing, the Camp was purged, Joshuah by a warlike Stratagem surprised it. 6. Gibeon, the mother-City of the Gibeonites, who prefiguring the unresistible Victories of the Israelites, came to the Camp of Joshuah, and by a wife obtained peace off him and the People: Employed by them in hewing Wood, and drawing Water for the use of the Tabernacle, after the fraud was made known unto them, called Nethinims, Ezra 4. 3. from Nathan, which signifies to give, because they were given to the service of the Tabernacle first, of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, slew some of them, for which fact the Lord caused a Famine on the Land; which could not be taken away till seven of Saul's Sons were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This Famine did God send, because in killing those poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken which Joshuah and the Princes swore concerning them. In defence of those Gibeonites it was that Joshuah waged War against the Kings of the Canaanites, and Rayed the motion of the Sun by his fervent Prayers. 7. Jericho, destroyed by the sound of Rams-Horns, was not only levelled by Joshuah to the ground, but a Curse inflicted on him that should attempt the re-building of it. This Curse notwithstanding, at the time when Ahab reigned in Israel (which was about five hundred years after the ruin of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleasantries of the place, re-edified it. But (as it was foretold by Joshuah) as he laid the foundation of the Walls, he lost his eldest Son; and when he had finished it, and was setting up the Gates thereof, he lost also the younger. It may be Hiel when he began this Work, minded not the Prophecy, it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Joshuah not so much to proceed from the Spirit of Prophesy, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being spoken in way of wish, or execration. And it is possible, it may be, he chose rather to build the eternity of his name on so pleasant and beautiful a City, than on the uncertain lives and issues of two young men. 8. Anathoth, the birth-place of the Prophet Jeremy, and the Patrimony of Abiathar the High-Priest, sent hither by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own, when deposed from his Office by that King. 9. Nob, called 1 Sam. 22. 19. the City of the Priests, sent hither by the relief which Abimelech the High-Priest had given to David, the Ark of the Lord then residing there. 10. Gilgal, upon the bank of Jordan, where Joshuah did first eat of the Fruits of the Land, and kept his first Passover; where he circumcised such of the People as were born during their wandering in the Wilderness; and nigh to which he set up twelve Stones, for a Memorial to Posterity that the Waters of Jordan did there divide themselves, to give passage to the twelve Tribes of Israel. Here Agag, King of the Amalekites, was hewn in pieces by Samuel; and here Samuel once every year administered Justice to the People. For being seated in the midst of the Land of Israel, betwixt North and South, and on the East-side of the Country near the Banks of Jordan, it served very fitly for that purpose: as Mispah also did, which stood in the same distance, in regard of the length of the Land of Canaan, but situate towards the West-Sea, near the Land of the Philistines: used therefore interchangeably for the ease of the People. 11. Bethel, at the first called Luz, but took this new name in remembrance of the Vision which Jacob saw here, at going towards Mesopotamia, as is said Gen. 28. 19. It signified the House of God, and was therefore chosen by Jerobeam, for the setting up of one of his golden Calves; though thereby (as the Prophet said) he made it to be Beth-aven, the House of Vanity, Hos. 4. 15. & 10. 5. For then it was a part of the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, and the Southern border of that Kingdom on the Coast of Ephraim: but taken from it by Abijah the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a member of his Kingdom, till the destruction of it by the Chaldeans. Called with the rest of those parts, in the time of the Macabees, by the name of Apharata, which signifieth a thing taken away, because taken away from the ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1 Mace. 11. 34. where it is said, to have been taken from the Country of Samaria, and added unto the borders of Judea. 12. Ramath, another place there mentioned, and said to have been added to the Realm of Judah, having been formerly the South border of the Kingdom of Israel; and therefore strongly fortified by Basia, in the time of Asa King of Judah. 13. Chadid, or Hadid, one of the three Cities (the other two being 14. Lod, and 15. Ono) which were inhabited by the Benjamites after the Captivity. Destroyed in the Wars with the Kings of Syria, and afterwards re-built by Simon the Macabean.

But the chief Glory of this Tribe, and of all the rest and not so only, but of all the whole World besides, was the famous City of Hierusalem; seated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be ascended with steep and difficult Ascents (except towards the North, environed on all other sides also with some neighbouring Mountains, as if placed in the midst of an Amphitheatre. It consisted in the time of its greatest flourish of four parts, separated by their several Walls, as if several Cities; we may call them, the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City, seated upon their several Hills. Of these, that which we call the City of Herod, had formerly been beautified with the Houses of many of the Prophets as in our Saviours time with that of Mary the Mother of John Mark, mentioned Acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Christians: the Western part whereof was wholly taken up by the Palace of Herod, (a wicked but magnificent Prince) for cost excellent, and for strength invincible; containing Gardens, Groves, Fishponds, places devised for pleasures, besides those for exercise. Fortified with three Towers at the corners of it. That on the South-East of the Wall, fifty Cubits high, of excellent workmanship, called Mariamne's Tower, in memory of his beloved but insolent Wife, rashly murdered by him. Opposite to which, on the South-West corner, stood the Tower of Phasolus, so called by the name of his Brother, seventy Cubits high, and in form resembling that so much celebrated Egyptian Pharos: and on the North Wall, on a high Hill, the Tower of Hippick, exceeding both the rest in height by fourteen Cubits, and having on the top two Spires; in memory of the two Hippick, his very dear Friends, slain in his service in the Wars.

2. On the South-side stood that part which was called the Old City, possessed if not built by the Jebusites, and therein both the Mountain and Fort of Sion: but after called the City of David, because taken by him; who thereon built a strong and magnificent Castle, the Royal Court and Mansion of the Kings succeeding. In the West part hereof stood the Tower of David; a double Palace built by Herod, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cesar, composed of Marble; and every where interlaid with Gold; and not far off, the House of Annas and Caiphas, to which the Conspirators led our Saviour to receive his Trial.

3. That which was called the Lower City, because it had more in it of the Valley, was also called the Daughter of Sion, because built after it, and did in Majesty and greatness exceed the Mother. For therein upon Mount Moriab, stood the Temple of Solomon (whereof more anon) and betwixt it and Mount Sion, on another Hill, the Palace which he built for his Wife the Daughter of Egypt; and that which he founded for himself, from which by an high Bridge he had a way unto the Temple. West hereof, on a lofty Rock over-looking the City, stood the Royal Palace of the Princes of the Macabeans, re-edified and dwelt in by King Agrippa, (though of Herod's Race) and not far of the Theatre of Herod's building, adorned with admirable Pictures, expressing the many Victories and Triumphs of Augustus Caesar. In this part also stood Mount Aera, and on that once a Citadel built by Antiochus King of Syria; but razed by Simon one of the Macabean Brothers, because it over-topped the Temple; the House of Helena Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganism to Judaism, had here her dwelling, and here died: and finally, Herod's Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain 80000 people, whom he entertained sometimes with such Shews and Spectacles, as were in use amongst the Romans. And in this part also, on a high and craggy Rock, not far from the Temple stood the Tower of Babylon, whereon the same Herod built a strong and impregnable Citadel, in honour of Mark Antony, whose Creature he first was, called by the name of Antonias, creating a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them fifty Cubits high, and the other seventy; afterwards garrisoned by the Romans, for fear the Jews presuming on the strength of the Temple, might take occasion to rebel.

4. As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a Suburb only unto all the rest; inhabited by none but mechanical persons, and the meanest Tradesmen; but after encompassed by Agrippa with a Wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with ninety

Turrets. The whole City fenced with a wonderful circumvallation on all parts thereof; having a Ditch cut out of the same Rock, as Josaphus an eye-witness writ, eth, sixty foot deep, & no less than two hundred and fifty foot in breadth. First built, say some, by Melchisedeck the King of Salem; by the Jebusites themselves say others: by whomsoever built, called at first Jebusalem, afterwards Jerusalem, with the change of one letter only: enlarged in time, when made the Royal Seat of the House of David, to the magnificence and greatness before described, till it attained unto the compass of thirty furlongs, or seven miles and an half. Unconquered for the first four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Israel; and when David attempted it, the people presumed so much on the strength of the place, that they told him in the way of scorn, that the blind and the lame which they had amongst them (as the Text is generally expounded) should defend it against him. But as I think, the late learned Mr. Gregory of Christ-Church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text than this, who telleth us, That the Jebusites by the Blind and Lame (as they knew well what the Israelites called Blind and Lame) did understand those Tutelar Idols, on whose protection they relied (as the Trojans did on their Palladium) for defence thereof: and then the meaning must be this, Those gods whom you of Israel call blind and lame, shall defend our Walls. Why else should David say, (had they meant it literally) that his soul hated the lame and the blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. or why should the People of Israel be so uncharitable as to say, That the blind and lame should not come into the House (or the Temple of God) were it meant no otherwise? But notwithstanding these vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Joab, that fortunate and courageous Leader; and made the Royal Seat of the Kings of Judah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the Materials whereof there were in Lebanon 30000 Workmen, which wrought by 10000 every Month; 70000 Labourers, which carried Burdens; 80000 Quarry-men, that hewed Stones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overseers of the Work, no less than 3300 men. The Description of this stately Fabric, we have in the first of Kings, cap. 6. 7. In the year of the World 2350. it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar at the taking of Hierusalem: re-built again after the return from the Captivity; but with such opposition of the Samaritans, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tools in one hand, and their Swords in the other, to repulse, if need were, those malicious Enemies. But yet this Temple was not answerable to the magnificence of the former; so that the Prophet Haggai had good occasion to say to the People, cap. 1. ver. 3. Who is left amongst you that saw this House in her first Glory? is it not in your eyes, as nothing, in comparison of it? Nor fell it short thereof only in the outward Structure, but some inward Additaments: For it wanted, 1. The Pot of Manna, which the Lord commanded Moses to lay up before the Testimony for a memorial, Exod. 16. 32, &c. 2. The Rod of Aaron, which only budded of all the Rods of the Princes of Israel, and was commanded to be kept before the Ark of the Testimony, for a token against Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Numb. 17. 10. 3. The Ark of the Covenant, the making whereof we have Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4. The two Tables of the Law, writ by God's own finger, and by Moses laid up in the Ark of the Covenant, Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5. The Fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned Lev. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 12 which

6 IDUMEA.

IDUMEA, or the Land of EDOM, is bounded on the East and South, with Arabia Petrea, on the North with Judea; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from the Edomites, or Children of Esaú, whose name is Edom, Gen. 36.1. the Father of the Edomites, v. 43. by whom it was planted and possessed; or as others say, from the Idumei, a people of Arabia; who in a mutiny being forced for to forsake their Country, came and settled here. The first the more certain of the two, and therefore I adhere to that.

The Country towards the Sea side very fat and fruitful; but where it bendeth towards Arabia, exceeding mountainous and barren. Hereof it afforded Balm, nor now; but still it hath some store of Palm-trees, for which much celebrated by some Writers of ancient times as Arbusto Palmarum dicitur Idume, in the Poet Lucan. Sandy, and full of vast Deserts, for which, and for the want of water, it is thought unconquerable. For though they have many Wells there for the use of the Natives, yet to them only are they known, and not obvious at all to the eyes of strangers, nor not upon the strictest search that can be imagined. But all places are not so well furnished, as appeareth by the sad condition which the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom were fallen into, when they led their Armies through the Deserts of this Country, against the Moabites, finding herein no water for man or beast: inasmuch that the King of Israel said, Alas, that the Lord hath called these three Kings together, to deliver them into the hands of Moab, 2 Kings 3.10. Not otherwise delivered out of this perplexity, but by a miracle from Heaven: God sending them the next day an abundance of water, without wind or rain, or any other visible means.

The people anciently rude and barbarous; greedy of change in government, easily stirred to insurrections, and in love with tumults. Professed enemies to the Jews, till conquered by them; and when compelled by Hircanus to the Jewish Religion, they were at the best but false friends; and in the siege of Hierusalem by Titus, did them more mischief than the Romans. At this time subjected to the Turks, and differ not much in life and custom from the wild Arabians.

Rivers of note there are none, where so little waters. One Lake it hath, though possibly it hath been better, had they been, without it, now small, and every day growing less; the passage being long since barred, which it had to the Sea. Anciently, though then narrow, it was two hundred furlongs, or five and twenty miles long; bordered on each side by hills of sand, which born by the winds into the water did thicken the same, that it was not easy to be discerned from the dry Land: inasmuch as whole Armies have been swallowed up in it. Thence called Barabrum by the Latines; The true name of it formerly was the Lake of Sybon. By the Latians it is now called Lago di Tevero, by the Natives Bayrema; the utmost bound of Palestine, where it joyneth on Aegypt.

The chief Mountains of it, are, 1. Mount Seir, the first habitation of Esaú, after he left his dwelling in the Land of Canaan, to make room for Jacob, as is said Gen. 36.7.8. Not called so, unless by Anticipation (a thing not unlawful in the Scriptures) till the coming of Esaú thither; the word Seir signifying hairy, or bristled, such as Esaú is described to be, Gen. 27.11. To this St. Hierom doth accord, deriving the name of Seir from Esaú, Sumpto ab Antore nomine. His reason is, Seir quippe interpretatur lippidus & pilosus qualis Esaú fuit. So he in his Comment on Isaiah, chap. 21. For the same cause, is the whole Country of Edom, sometimes called Mount Seir, in Scripture, by the name of this Mountain, as a Chron; 20.23. The second hill of note is that called Cassius, not far from the Lake of Sybon, now nothing but an huge heap of sand; formerly famous for a Temple of Jupiter, and the Sepulchre of Pompey the Great; who being bawling murdered here (after his defeat near Pharjalia by Julius Caesar) by the command of Ptolemy the younger, King of Aegypt, unto whom he fled (or rather by the command of Achilles who then governed his Counsels) by the piety of a private Souldier was here interred in an obscure and homely, but honest Sepulchre. The Sepulchre afterwards re-edified, and made more suitable to the man, by the Emperour Adrian. The piety of the Souldier not a whit the less for the cost of the Emperour; in whose name Lucan had bestowed this Epitaph, on that first Monument.

Hic situs Est Magnus, places hoc, Fortuna Sepulchrum Dicitur Pompeii, quo condidit malum illum, Quam terra caruisse Socr.

Which may be Englished to this purpose.

Here Magnus lies, Such, Fortune, is thy doom
That this vile earth should be great Pompey's Tomb.
In which even Caesar's self would rather have His Son-in-Law interr'd, than want a Grave.

Places of most consideration in it, 1. Dinhabath, the City of Bela, the first King of Edom. 2. Avith, the City of Hadad. And 3. Pan, the City of Hadad, two others of the Kings hereof; which three are mentioned Gen. 36.32.35.39. 4. Berzama, placed here by Ptolemy, supposed to be the same with Beerseba in the Tribe of Simoon, the utmost border Southwards of the Land of Canaan, of which more there. 5. Caparvot, 6. Gammavot. And 7. Elasa, all of them mentioned by Ptolemy; which sheweth them to be of some consideration in those times, though now forgotten with the former. 8. Antbedon, on the South side of the River Besor, opposite to Gaza in the Tribe of Simoon, which is situate on the Northern bank. A Port Town, once of good repute, till defaced by Alexander King of the Jews, re-edified afterwards by Herod the Great, and named Agrippias, in honour of Agrippa, the Favourite and Son-in-Law to Augustus Caesar. 9. Kassa, a Fort of consequence, not far from Massada, before mentioned, when we were in Judea; taken by Herod in his way to relieve that Castle. 10. Raphia, memorable for the great defeat which Ptolemy Philopater there gave unto Antiochus, surnamed Magnus. 11. Rhinocentra, so called from a mishap which befel the Inhabitants hereof, by mangled and defacing their noses. By Pliny and Strabo called Rhinocentrus; and at this time Pharamica. Memorable for an old built ill-grounded tradition, that here the World was divided by lots, betwixt the Posterity of Noah: and so considerable in the Wars of the Holy Land, that it was so strongly fortified by Baldwin the first, to obstruct the passage of such Forces as usually came out of Aegypt, to aid the Turks. 12. Otracine, now Stagioni, on the Sea side beneath Antbedon, and that part of the Country which from Mount Casius hath the name of Cassotis, ascribed by Ptolemy to Aegypt; but being they are both on the North of the Lake of Sybon, more properly belonging to Palestina. But most of these being now buried in their ruins, there are left none but a few Castles and scattered Villages: the Villages inhabited for the most part by Arabians, the Castles garrisoned by Turks. The chief of which lying on the Sea, in the Road of Aegypt, are 13. Hamon, a small Castle not far from Gaza, used chiefly for a Toll-booth, to receive custom of such Merchants as pass that way. 14. Harisa, a small Castle also, serving specially for the same same use; but stronger, and of more importance, because near the Sea, from which not above two miles distant; and for that cause garrisoned with an hundred Souldiers: Environed with a few Houses, by reason of the commodity of the water, which is sweet and wholesome: else little better than a Desert. 15. Cassio, another Castle or rather Toll-booth, with a Garrison of about sixty Souldiers in it, seated in a place so desert and unfruitful, that nothing vegetable groweth in it; but a few starved Palm-trees. The Water which they have there, so bad and brackish, though esteemed good enough for the common Souldiers; that all which the Captain drinketh is brought from 16. Tina, a Town upon the Sea-shore, about twelve miles distant, and the last upon this Coast towards Aegypt.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were the Horites, the Horites which dwell in Mount Seir, as we read in Genesis 14.6. that is to say, which dwell in that hilly Country which afterwards was called Mount Seir. But whether it was so called from Esaú's dwelling here, as is said before, or from Seir the Horite, mentioned Gen. 36.20. as perhaps may probably be supposed, need not now come into dispute. Broken by Chedorlaomer, and his Associates, they were the more easily subdued by Esaú, who leaving the Land of Canaan to his Brother Jacob, Gen. 6.7.8. because those parts in which they dwelt did not afford them room enough for their several Cattel, came into this Country; and having destroyed the Horites from before them, succeeded in their Habitation, and dwelt there in their stead even unto this day, Deut. 2.22. 'Tis true, we find Esaú in Mount Seir, before this remove: for it is said, that Jacob at his first coming out of Mesopotamia, sent Messengers before him to Esaú's Brother, unto the Land of Seir, the Country of Edom, Gen. 32.5. And hence a Question hath been moved, How Esaú dwelling there before Jacob's coming, can be said to remove thither to make room for him. To this Sir Walter Raleigh, and some others answer, That at the time when Jacob came out of Padan-Aram, Esaú dwelt in those parts of the Mountains which lie on the East of Jordan, called afterwards Galaad and Mount Hermion, by which Jacob must needs pass in his way to Canaan, which Mountains then were called by the name of Seir and from thence Syrian by the Zidonians, or Phoenicians in the Ages following: from whence driven by the Amorites, at such time as they vanquished those of Moab and Ammon, they were forced to seek themselves on the South of Canaan, where Moses found them. But with this I am by no means satisfied. For besides that it maketh Esaú to carry a Mount Seir with him whithersoever he went; it doth expressly differ from the plain words of Scripture, both in occasion, and the time of his settling there: the Victories which the Amorites had over the Ammonites and Mogabites, being then fresh and newly gotten, when Moses with the Children of Israel came into these parts; which was at the least 200 years after Esaú did withdraw himself to the Land of Edom. And therefore I should rather think, that Esaú finding himself distastful by his Father and Mother, in regard of his Canaanitish Marriages, and the hatred which he bare to Jacob, departed from thence, and sojourned in the South parts amongst the Horites of Mount Seir; that thither Jacob sent his Messengers, to make Peace betwixt them; that the Reconciliation being made, Esaú returned unto the place where before he sojourned; and having brought thence his Children, Cattel, and the rest of his substance, fixed himself again near the House of his Father: and finally, That on Isaac's death, finding his Family increased, his Herds and Flocks augmented, and the rest of his substance also, doubled by the death of his Father, he thought it fit also to enlarge his dwelling, and so removed once more to Edom. A thing not needful to be done, had he dwelt in Galaad, Hermion, or any other part of that Mountainous Tract, considering the great distance betwixt those Mountains and the City of Hebron, in which Isaac dwelt; nigh to which Jacob also had set up his dwelling.

But on what ground soever Esaú left the possession of the Land of Canaan to his Brother Jacob, certain it is, he did it not without some strong impussions from the Spirit of God, by whom the possession of that Land was designed for Jacob, to whom the Blessing and the Birth-right had been both preferred. And though Esaú over-ruled by Almighty God, seemed to have forgotten all Displeasure against his Brother; yet the quarrel begun by them in the womb of Rebecca, broke out more violently in the time of their Possession. Inasmuch that Moses could by no means obtain a passage through Edom into the Promised Land, though he sought it by fair addresses, and pressed it by all those motives and inducements, which a wife and an understanding man could have set before them. For though the King of Edom then being, seemed to pretend nothing but the safety of himself and his People; both which he might have hazarded (in all humane reason) by opening the closures of his Mountains, and letting in a Nation mightier than his own; yet it is possible there might be as much of stomach, as worldly Policy; and that as well the buying of the Birth-right for so slight a trifle, as the getting of the Blessing by such fraudulent means, might not be forgotten. For he not only denied them passage, and sent word expressly they should not go thorow; but came against them with much people and a strong band, as is said Numb. 20.20. But the Edomites could not for all this prevent their Destiny, or make the Word of God to be ineffectual; by which it had been signified, when they were yet in their Mothers womb, that the Elder should serve the Younger. Nor verified in Esaú's person; for Jacob called him his Lord Esaú, professed himself to be his Servant, and willingly submitted to his Superiority, but in the Issues of them both: then specially when David had subdued the Edomites, and made them Homagers and Vassals to the Crown of Judah, 2 Sam. 8.14. Nor is less intimated in those words of the 60 Psalms, where it is said, Over Edom will I cast my shoes; it being a custom of old times to fling their shoes upon a Country conquered, or designed for Conquest, Præstatio calcamenti super Regionem aliquam, denotat subjugare, as my Author hath it. And in allusion unto this, there is a Story in the Chronicles of the Kings of Man, how Magnus King of the Illes sent his Embassadors to Murchard a King in Ireland, commanding him on the next Christmas day to carry openly the shoes of King Magnus upon his shoulders; in testimony, saith the Story, that he was his Vassal. The casting of the shoe on a Conquered Country, or the treading of it under feet, another Ceremony of this nature, mentioned Deut. 33.29. do come both to one, and signify that Vassalage or bondage, which such a captivated Country was reduced unto.

But on the other side, there was another part of the Heavenly Oracle, which made for Edom. Isaac had signified to Esaú, that though the Blessing given to Jacob could not be revoked, and that he must content himself with being a servant to his Brother for a certain season; yet there should one day come a time, in which he should not only break that yolk from off his neck, but obtain the Dominion over him, Gen. 27.40. The first part verified, when the Edomites revolted from the Kings of Judah, in the time of Joram, or Jehoram, the Son of Jeho-

Jehosophat: and instead of a Vice-Roy sent unto them from the Court of Hierusalem, set up a King of their own Nation; never returning after that to the House of David. For though Joram made War presently upon them, and got the Victory; yet he did not prosecute it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their strong Holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got honour enough in the eye of the world by being Master of the Field; or shewing his abilities in command of a greater Army, than the Edomites could bring against him. The like error was committed by Amaziah, who by a vast Army of 300000 fighting men, did no greater wonders than the killing of 10000 and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left Garrisons in any of their defensible places, nor reduced any part of their Country under his obedience. And for the latter part thereof, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Anapath, an Idumean, Herod the Ascalonite, his Son, and their Successors; who in the decrepit age of the House of Jacob, being King of the Jews, and Lorded over them with insolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate passage of their State and Story. It seemeth that at first they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of those several Families, of which they were the Heads or Princes. But as Ambition and Power did prevail among them, the more potent having vanquished or awed the rest, took to himself the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their several Cities in which they reigned, seem to have been chosen by Election; or otherwise to come in by strong hand, as the Sword could carry it. The names of which are thus set down in the Book of Genesis.

The KINGS of EDOM.

- 1 Bela, the Son of Beor.
- 2 Jobab, the Son of Zerah.
- 3 Haham, of the Land of Teman.
- 4 Hadad, the Son of Bedad, who warred against the Midianites, and vanquished them in the Fields of Moab, Gen. 36. 35.
- 5 Samlab, of Mafekah.
- 6 Saul of Reboboah, by the River Euphrates.
- 7 Bahal-Hanan, the Son of Achbor.
- 8 Hadar, the Son perhaps of Baal-Hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whose death the Heads of the several Families resumed the Government again; ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Sovereign or Supreme. And all these Kings they had, before there reigned any King in Israel, Gen. 36. 31. that is to say, before any form of Supreme Government was established amongst them in the person of Moses, called by the name of a King in the Book of Deuter. chap. 35. v. 5. But this distinct Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at such a time as the Children of Israel came out of Egypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moses sent Messengers from Kadesh, to desire a passage for them through his Country. Which being denied, and the Edomites in Arms to defend their Passes, Moses forbore to force his way, though the nearest for him: partly because he had no mind to spend those forces in fighting with Hills and Defarts, which were designed for the conquest of another Country; but principally, because God commanded him not to meddle with them, or to take so much as a foot of their Country from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no such obligation, having vanquished the Syrians, and other Nations round about him, followed his fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garrisons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his Servants. Governed from thenceforth by a Deputy or Vice-Roy (as is said before) till the time of Joram the Son of Jehosophat King of Judah, in whose Reign they revolted, as before was said. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeavoured; that so the Word of God might be all in all. Only the Simoonites in the Reign of Hezekiah, wanting Pasture for their Cattel, and room for themselves, seized on the parts that lay nearest to them, destroyed the Inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their Habitations, because there was pasture for their Flocks, 1 Chron. 4. 39. Provoked wherewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them, no People were more mischievously bent against Judah, than these Edomites were: no men so forward of themselves, to assist Nebuchadonazer against Hierusalem; none that so vehemently cried, Down with it, down into the ground, none half so ready to set fire unto the Holy Temple. But they got little by this Service to the Babylonians, their own thralldom following close upon that of Judah, with whom made fellow Subjects to the Chaldeans; as afterwards to the Persians, and Kings of Syria, of the Race of Selucus. In the declining of that House, subdued by Hyracanus the Son of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabean Princes; by whom they were compelled to be circumcised, and to receive the Law of Moses: not only reckoned after that, as a Province of the Jewish Kingdom, but as natural Jews. Which notwithstanding, and that the setting of that Crown on the head of Herod and his House, being originally Idumeans, might in all reason have extinguished their inveterate malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Forgetting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians, they would needs aid the Romans against them also: putting themselves into Hierusalem, when besieged by Titus, only of purpose to betray it; joyning with the seditious there, doing more mischief in the City than the Enemy had done without: and finally, setting fire to the second Temple, as they had done unto the first. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

Having thus gone thorow with the story of those neighbouring Nations which encompassed Canaan, it will be seasonable to look on the affairs of the Canaanites first, and after on the House of Jacob, who possessed their Country. First for the Canaanites, they descended from Canaan the Son of Cham, who with his eleven Sons were here settled immediately after the Conquest of Babel. Of those twelve (taking in the Father) five planted in Phenicia, and the Coasts of Syria; that is to say, Sidon, Hark, Arvadi, Semari, and Hamathi: the other seven in those parts, which we now call Palestine, though not all of that; the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Amorites, and Isurians, being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of those seven came those seven Nations, which by Gods appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Jebusites, the Hivites, the Gergesites, and the Perizzites. But from which of the Sons of Canaan these last descended, is not yet agreed on; unless perhaps they were descended of the Sinites (not otherwise reckoned in this Muster) and got the name of Perizzites on some new occasion. Governed at first by the chieft of their several Families, with the names of Kings; the number of which increased, as their Families were subdivided into smaller Branches: inasmuch as Joshuah found 31 Kings of the Canaanites only, besides what might descend from those who were settled in Phenicia, and the Borders ders of Syria. The most potent of these Nations were the Amorites, the Jebusites, and the Canaanites properly so called. Of which the Amorites had not only enlarged their Borders beyond Jordan, but in the Reigns of Og and Sibon, ruling at the same time at their several parts, had thrust the Isurians, Ammonites, and Moabites out of most of their Countries; and so restored the same again to the Race of the Emmins and Zanzumims (of which Line Og and the Kings of Basan were) who had been dispossessed thereof by the Sons of Loth. These vanquished in the time of Moses, and their Habitations assigned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half Tribe of Manasse. The Canaanites properly so called, as they were the first which fought with the House of Jacob; so they were the last of all these People, that contended with them. The first fought with them under the Conduct of Arad their King, who thinking it more safe and prudent to encounter the Enemy in another mans Country, than to expect them in his own, gave Battel unto Moses in the Desarts of Moab; and having cut off some of the out-parts of his Army, and taken a few Prisoners, he went home again. But Jabin, under whom they make their second on-set, went to work more resolutely; and taking a time when the Iniquities of that People cried aloud for vengeance, so prevailed against them, that he tyrannized over them for the space of twenty years. After which time, his Army being discomfited by Barak, in the time of Deborah, Sisera, his great Captain, slain by Jael the Wife of Heber the Kenite, and most of his Cities taken and possessed by the Israelites, he perished himself in the close of that War; for it is said, That they prevailed against Jabin the King of Canaan, till they had destroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Jebusites, they were grown so formidable (at the time of the coming of the Hebrews) to the rest of their Neighbours, that their King Adonibezek bragged, that he had cut off the Thumbs and great Toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the crumbs which fell under his Table. But being vanquished by Judah, he was served in the same kind himself by Judah and Simon, and carried to Hierusalem, where he died: the whole Country of the Jebusites, and the City of Hierusalem it self, the Fortrels of Mount Zion excepted only, being made a prey unto the Victor. And though the Jebusites held that Fortrels till the time of David, yet being they were only on the defensive side, and made no open War against those of Israel, I reckon the Canaanites as the last which did contend with them for the chief Command.

The Canaanites thus conquered, and for the most part worn out of the Country, the Israelites succeeded in their Possessions: according to the promise of God, made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac, and confirmed to Jacob. Governed after the death of Moses and Joshuah, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many passages in the Book of Judges; the Judges (as the Scripture calleth them) not being the ordinary Magistrates, but raised up occasionally by God for some special purpose, according to the exigence of their Affairs; Carrying in this a likeness unto the Dictators in the State of Rome. So that the Government at first was an Aristocracy; though to say truth, it was rather a Theocracy, as the Fathers call it; that is to say, a Government wherein GOD presided more immediately, than in other Nations. And thereupon when the People cried out to Samuel to have a King, God said unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the People, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them, 1 Sam. 8. 7. God was their King, and he had mightily reigned over them since they came out of E- gypt; but they desired to have a King like other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to fight their Battels a King whom they might see with their bodily eyes, and converse with him in such manner as the People did; which dwelt round about them. And so came in the Monarchy or Kingly Government, begun in Saul, but confirmed in David; the first a Benjamite, the second of the Tribe of Judah; of which Jacob had foretold at the time of his death, that the Kingdom of his People should be vested in it. But there were only three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole House of Israel; the Kingdom after Solomon's death, being rent in twain: ten of the twelve Tribes revolting unto Jeroboam the Son of Nebai; and only Benjamin and Judah, and so much of the Tribes of Dan and Simon as lay intermingled with and in the Tribe of Judah, remaining firm to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, who misguided by some evil Counsellors which were about him, had given occasion to the breach. A breach that could never be soldered nor made up again, notwithstanding the fair opportunities which were after offered of uniting Judah unto Israel (for so the two Kingdoms were distinguished in the time of Josiah; & rejoyning Israel to Judah, in the time of Asa. The opportunity offered to Asa King of Judah, for regaining the revolted Tribes, was the confusions which in his time had fallen out amongst them, by several Factions; each challenging the privilege of making a King unto it self: Nadab the son of Jeroboam being slain by Baspha, Eli the son of Baspha murdered by Zimri, Zimri deposed by Omri the Father of Abah, and Tibni a Competitor against Omri also. During which time; as the People must needs suffer many great oppressions; which might make them think of their Allegiance to the House of David: so could not Asa have wanted many fair advantages (had he made his best use of them) of working on that divided Kingdom, and reducing it back unto this house. But there were two reasons which prevailed more against this re-union than any that could be presented to invite them to it. First, the imperiousness and arbitrary Government of the Kings of Judah, putting to death, without formality of Law, those that had displeased them, as in the case of Shimei, Joab, and Adonijah, in the days of Solomon: and railing on the Subject what fumes they pleased, though more for ostentation of their own magnificence, than the necessities of the State. Of which exactions Rehoboam the Son of Solomon was so far from promising a release or some mitigation at least, that he threatened to make them more than double to what they had been formerly: And how knew they but that Asa, and all such as descended from him, might be of the same temper also, and act according to those Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the Kings of Israel holding by no other Title than the Love of their People, and the moderate and regular form of their Government over them, had put their mouths into such a taste of the sweets of Liberty, and made them so much Masters of their own both Lives and Fortunes, that Naboth durst deny his Vineyard to Abah, though offering full compensation for it; and Abah durst not question the life of Naboth, but by suborning Witnesses to accuse him of Blasphemy. So that the present confusions under which they suffered, by the change and violent death of so many Kings one after another, being only temporary; and not likely to continue long, were no persuasions unto them to accept of Asa, and much less to offer themselves unto him; who conceived all adversity to be far more tolerable, than the weighty Scepter of that House. And there was something also of preceding profit, which swayed the business. The people were obliged by the Law of Moses to make three chargeable Journeys yearly to Hierusalem, to worship there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double Tenth yearly out of their Estates (beside Offerings and other Casualties) to the Priests and Levites. Jeroboam out of an ungodly policy, fearing these frequent Journeys unto Hierusalem might be an occasion of reducing them to the House of David, released them of that charge and trouble, by setting up a new form of Worship, erecting golden Calves for them in Dan and Beisels, and leaving every man unto the liberty of his own opinion, so it ended not to the Establishment of the old Religion. And on the other side, the Levites which dwelt amongst them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform to these new impieties, and finding that their Ministry was no longer useful, withdrew themselves into the Kingdom of Judah, and left the ancient places of their Habitations: by means whereof, the people were released of those payments also. If they returned again to their old obedience, and accepted Asa for their King, they must return again also to their old Religion; the golden Calves of their own Imaginations and Inventions, must no more be worshipped: and (which no doubt prevailed most on the common people, who like that Religion best which costs them nothing) the ancient payments to the Priests and Levites must come up again. Rather than so, they were resolved to suffer yet a little longer, to please themselves in expectation of more settled times: and so no falling off to Asa, though as moderate & religious a Prince as they could have wished for, had they had power of fashioning a King to their own desires. Now as this opportunity of rejoyning Israel unto Judah, proved unsuccessful unto Asa; so did the like of uniting Judah unto Israel, prove as unprofitable unto Joas the Son of Jeroboam, and Grand-child of Jehu King of Israel, who being provoked by Amaziah King of Judah, made War upon him; and not only discomfited him without Battel, and took him Prisoner without blows, but led him captive to the very Walls of Hierusalem; and by his Authority got the Gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with this honour (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Israel) he caused 400 Cubits of the Wall to be broken down; through which breach he entered triumphantly in his Chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him: and being entered, lacked both the Royal Palace and the Holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Joas, of uniting Judah unto Israel; and this the loss of it. For the People, otherwise like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whose noble acts they had heard much speech, were so exasperated by these rash and unseasonable outrages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not safe from; and as a covetous and ungoverned Tyrant, not able to conceal the fulcra of his own prosperities. If he were thus unsatisfiable in his covetousness, and insupportable in his pride, when he was a Candidate for their Kingdom; when in all common prudence he would have sought their love, and insinuated into their good opinions, by easing them of former Taxes, and shewing them fair hopes of his moderate Government: what must they look for when their Towns were filled with Garrisons, Hierusalem stuffed with armed Troops, and all the Princes of the House of David, from whom they might expect Redemption from cruel Bondage, destroyed or banished, or otherwise made unable to afford them succours? Rather than so, they were resolved to rise as one man against him, and let him see, that neither their Army was so scattered, nor themselves so cowed, but that they durst adventure it to a further trial. The fear of which made Joas sensible of the loss of his opportunity: and so content with Hostages for his safe retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his Victory, than the spoil and honour. And that this possibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the success of the affair to a further hazard, may be made probable by the like occurrence in the Story of Guicciardine, which in brief is this; Peter de Medicis had very weakly opened the Gates of Florence to Charles the Eighth, then in his passage towards Naples. Charles entrench it triumphantly as a conquered City, armed in compleat manner, and his Lance on his Thigh; his whole Army with him. Many insolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to fight in defence of their Liberties. Charles willing to go forwards on his march towards Naples, propounds Conditions in writing: but so intolerable, that Peter Capponi, one of the chief Citizens, catching the Papers out of the King's Secretaries hands, and tearing them before his face, Do you (saith he) send your Trumpets, we will ring our Bells, and see what will follow. Which stout and peremptory dealing did daunt the French, that they condescended upon very easie terms to abandon the City, and restore all the places appertaining unto their Estate, which were then in his power. The like consideration probably might prevail with Joas, as did then with Charles; and prompt him not to fight with an enraged multitude in the streets of a City, where he could make no use of his Horse; and where he might be more galled with Women and Children, throwing Stones or Darts out of their Windows, and from the tops of their Houses; than with an armed Enemy in the open Field. Nor wanted Joas an example of this kind, in the times before him; even that of Abimelech, in the Book of Judges: who having taken the Town of Thebes, and forced all the Men and Women into the Castle, was slain there by a piece of a Mill-stone, thrown at his head from one of the Towers of it by the hands of a Woman.

To proceed further in the Story of these several Kings or recapitulate the sum of their principal Actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unnecessary: the Scripture being in the hands of all sorts of persons, in which their Actions and Successions are at large contained. So that I only shall subjoin their names, with the time of their Reigns, and the year of the World in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the rest unto industry and search of the Christian Reader, of whose acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no question. This only I premise as concerning the Judges, That the time of their continuance in that authority, is not to be measured from the time of their coming to it, till the entrance of the next Successor, as in that of the Kings: these being occasionally raised by Almighty God, for some present Service, and no standing or established Magistrates; except Joses and Jephthah only, who held the Government during life; and managed it as absolute Princes.

3178 16. Menahem, the Son of Gadi. 10.
3188 17. Pekahiah, the Son of Menahem, slain by 3190 18. Pekah, the Son of Remaliah; served in the same kind, after a Reign of twenty years, by 3210 19. Hosiah, the Son of Ela; in the fifth year of whose Reign, and the eighteenth year from the death of Pekah, Sargon King of Assyria, having by a Siege of three years carried the City of Samaria, destroyed the Kingdom of Israel, and led the greatest part of the People into Captivity.

he

- he was slain by a Conspiracy of his Servants, when he had reigned but two years only.
- 3310 16 Jofab, the Son of Amon, a right godly King; unfortunately slain by Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, at the Battel of Megiddo. 31.
- 3341 17 Jehoabaz, the Son of Jofab, a King of three months only; deposed and sent Prisoner by Pharaoh Necho, to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, since called Antiochia.
- 18 Jehoiakim, the Son of Jofab, and half Brother of Jehoabaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necho, who changed his name from Eliakim, by which he formerly was called, into that of Jehoiakim. 11.
- 3351 19 Jehoiachim, or Jechoniah, the Son of Jehoiakim, at the end of three Months led captive unto Babylon, with his Wives and Mother, and the Great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.
- 20 Zedekiah, another of the Sons of Jofab, and Brother by the whole blood of Jehoabaz, made King by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Jehoiachim, or Jechoniah; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling against his Benefactor, contrary to the counsel of the Prophet Jeremy, he was taken Prisoner in the eleventh year of his Reign, Hiersalem destroyed, the Temple ruined, and the People carried captive to the Land of Babylon, A.M. 3362, where they lived in exile 70 years. Which time expired, Cyrus the King of the Persians gave them leave to return to their Country, and to re-edifie their City and Temple. Which work being finished by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah and Zorobabel; and the Nation again settled in some part of their old Possessions, they were after governed by their High Priests, and the Council of their Elders, which they called the Sanhedrim, the High Priest bearing the chief stroke, and being looked on as a man of the greatest Power. And therefore I will here subjoin the Catalogue of so many of them as governed the Affairs of this Country, from the Return of the People from the Captivity of Babylon, till the time of the Maccabees; who managed the Estate hereof both as Priests and Princes, till their Subjection by the Romans.

The High-Priests of the JEW S after the Captivity.

- A.M.*
- 3427 1 Josuah, the High Priest at the time of the Return, assistant to Zorobabel in rebuilding the Temple, which he lived not to finish; though continuing (as some say) in the Government 100 years. But I believe rather, that the Names of his Successors being lost, the whole time is ascribed to him.
- 3530 2 Jehoiakim, said to be the Son of Josuah, in whose time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah, the Temple was finished, and the Worship of God restored.
- 3580 3 Jonathan, or Johanan. 30.
- 3610 4 Jaddus, who entertained Alexander the Great coming to Hiersalem, (of whom more anon) the Brother of that Manasseh, for whose sake, and on whose occasion, the Temple on Mount Gerizim was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexander. 20.
- 3630 5 Onias succeeded Jaddus, as Jaddus had done Jonathan; not by Birth (as formerly) but by Election of the People.

- 3651 6 Simon, surnamed Justus. 9.
- 3660 7 Elexzer, the Brother of Simon. 32.
- 3692 8 Menelaus, the Brother of Elexzer and Simon.
- 3718 9 Onias II. 14.
- 3732 10 Simon II. 10.
- 3742 11 Onias III. the Son of Simon the 2d.
- 3787 12 Jafon, the Brother of Onias the 3d.
- 3789 13 Menelaus II. the Brother of Jafon, in whose time the Temple was profaned by the Syrians; at the Command of Antiochus Epiphanes.
- 3794 14 Alcimus, under whose Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Country and Religion, by whom succeeded in the Office of High Priest, after his decease. Among these none of greater note than Jaddus, High Priest at such time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria, marched towards Hiersalem, and was encountered by this Jaddus in his Priestly Vestments; assuring him in the Name of the most High God, and making it demonstrable from the Prophecie of Daniel, That he should prosper in his Enterprize against the Persians. An hope which Alexander did embrace with the greater confidence, because (as he affirmed to Parmenio his chief Commander) he had once at Diis, a City of Macedon, seen in a Dream or Vision such a Person as Jaddus was, so habited, and professing the same one God; by whom he was encouraged to pursue the Action which he had in hand, with assurance of Victory. And upon this the Jews were so much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own Laws, and to enjoy with Freedom their own Religion. But it held only for his own time: For shortly after his decease, they were on both sides plagued by the Kings of Egypt and Syria, who ransacked their Cities, slaughtered their People, made havock of their Goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of forbidden Meats, and offer Sacrifice unto Idols. At the last God raised up Mattathias (descended from Amoneus a Priest of the rank of Jarib) and his five Sons, to resist these Insolencies; who in the Reign of Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, undertook the Protection of the People, and gave unto the Syrians many notable overthrows; in somuch that the Jews made choice of Judas surnamed Maccabees (the eldest of the five Brethren) for their Prince or Governour.

The ASMONEAN Princes of JEWRY.

- A.M.*
- 3759 1 Judas Maccabees, the third Son of Mattathias above-mentioned, one of the nine Worthies, vanquished three great and puissant Armies of the Syrians, conducted by Apollonius, Gorgias, and Lysias, men of great renown, being Commanders of the Forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, before mentioned.
- 3805 2 Jonathan, the Brother of Judas, vanquished the Forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius King of Syria; and after many notable exploits and deeds of Arms, was treacherously murdered by Tryphon, aspiring at that time to the Syrian Diadem.
- 3823 3 Simon the elder, brother of Judas and Jonathan, subdued the Cit of Gaza, Joppe, and Jamnia, and cleared Judea of the Syrians; perfidiously slain in the course of his fortune, by his Son-in-law Pholomy. 8.
- 3831 4 Johannes Hyrcanus, the third Son of Simon (his two two other Brethren being in the power of Pholomy succeeded in the Government. He destroyed the Temple on Mount Gerizim, conquered Assamaria, and subdued the Idumeans, compelling them to be Circumcised; transferred the War into Syria; and dying, left the Sovereignty to his eldest Son Aristobulus.

The ASMONEAN Kings of JUDAH.

- 3862 1 Aristobulus, caused himself to be Crowned, and was the first King of Judah after the Babylonian Captivity; he starved his Mother, and slew Antigonus his Brother.
- 3863 2 Alexander, the Brother of Aristobulus, exceedingly enlarged the Kingdom of Jury by the conquest of Iturea, and some parts of Syria; but was withal so great a Tyrant, that he causelessly slew of his own Subjects fifty thousand in battel; and commanded 800 of his principal enemies to be hanged before his face. He left behind him two sons, Hyrcanus who was at last slain by Herod after all his troubles, leaving no issue Male behind him; and Aristobulus the father of Alexander, and of Antigonus, of whom more anon: of which two Alexander was the Father of another Aristobulus, the most beautiful Prince of all his time, and of Mariamne the wife of Herod, by whose command they were most villainously murdered.
- 3890 3 Alexandra, by some called Salome, the wife of Alexander, and following the counsel of her husband at the time of his death, committed her self and her Children into the hands of the Pharisees, then in great power and credit amongst the people; by means whereof she procured an honourable burial for her husband, obtained the Kingdom for her self, and finally left it to her Children, whose disagreements caused the ruine of this famous Family.
- 3899 4 Aristobulus II. the younger Son of Alexander, an active Prince, and beloved of the Military Men, having presently after the death of his Mother possessed himself of the greatest part of the Forts and Castles, by the forced consent of Hyrcanus his elder Brother, succeeded in the Kingdom and High Priesthood also; both which he held with great trouble and opposition both from his Brother and the Romans, whom most imprudently they called in to decide the Controversie. By Pompey sent Prisoner unto Rome (with Alexander and Antigonus his two Sons) he escaped thence and raised a new Army for the recovery of his Kingdom; but being forced to yield himself to Gabinus one of Pompey's Lieutenants, he was sent back again to Rome, where he died in Prison, having reigned three years and six months.
- 3903 5 Hyrcanus II. a Prince of weak parts, and not fit for Government, was made High Priest in the first year of his Mothers reign, but dispossessed of that dignity by Aristobulus his younger Brother. Restored again by the favour of Pompey, he was again disturbed in his possession by Alexander the eldest Son of Aristobulus; who escaping out of Rome, had raised some Forces, and began to dispute the Title with him: but was soon after discomfited by Gabinus afore-mentioned, and slain by Scipio, another of Pompey's Captains. After the death of Aristobulus, which hapned in the year 3903, Hyrcanus was lookt on by the People, not only as their High Priest, but as their Prince and King, commonly called so by Josephus in the course of his History. His affairs managed for the most part by Antipater (an Idumean born, and the Father of Herod) his constant and most faithful friend in all his troubles, who governed the Estate with great care and prudence. But he being made away by Poylon, Antigonus the younger Son of Aristobulus, set on foot his Title to the Kingdom, and drew in an Army of the Parthians to make it good; by whose aid, having treacherously insnared Hyrcanus, he cut off his ears (to make him incapable of the Priesthood for the time to come) and sent him Prisoner to Babylon; taking upon himself the Title of King, though never acknowledged for such by the Jewish Nation. But long he did not please himself with that Title neither, for being besieged in Jerusalem by Herod, then newly created King of the Jews by the Roman Senate, and by him taken Prisoner in the sack of that City, he was sent in bonds to Mark Anthony, and by him beheaded. As for Hyrcanus the rightful Prince of this Country, he remained Prisoner for a time amongst the Parthians, till hearing of the death of Antigonus, he returned into Jewry, and lived contentedly under the Government of Herod, of whose greatness he had laid the first foundation, and was by him in fine wickedly murdered.

The Idumean Kings and Princes of Jewry.

- A.M.*
- 3940 1 Herod the Ascalonite, surnamed the Great, Son to Antipater the Idumean, was by the power of Mark Anthony created, and by Augustus confirmed King of Jewry; under whom that Kingdom was more enlarged, and in greater splendor than ever it had been in since the time of David. A Prince of great Magnificence, but of greater Vices. During his Reign, the Scripter being now departed from Judah, the Lord CHRIST was born.
- A.Chrift.*
- 6 2 Archelaus, eldest Son of Herod at the time of his death, succeeded with the Title of King; but in truth and reality possessed only a Tetrarchy, or fourth part of the Kingdom, though the best and largest of the four, containing Judea, Samarita, and Idumea. The rest of Herod's Kingdom was divided into three other Tetrarchies, i.e. the Tetrarchy of Galilee and Petrea, given to Herod Antipas; Secondly, That of Iturea, given to Philip, another of the Sons of Herod; And thirdly, That of Abilene, conferred on Lysanias. Banished into France, his Tetrarchy was made a Province of the Roman Empire; governed by Pontius Pilate, at our Saviours Passion.
- 16 3 Herod II. surnamed Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Petrea, on the banishment of Archelaus, succeeded him, as chief of the Herodian Family, but not in his Tetrarchy; and at last followed him in his banishment also. This is he who murdered John Baptist, and in whose time CHRIST suffered.
- 40 4 Herod III. surnamed Agrippa, in honour of Agrippa the Son-in-law, and most trusty Favourite of Augustus Caesar, Nephew to Herod.

rod the Great, by his Son Arifobulus begotten on Mariamme of the Race of the Assimenes, was by Caligula first invested in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip, with the Title of King; and next, in that of Anipus also; and finally by Claudius, in that also of Lysanias, some part of the Tetrarchy of Archelaus being added unto his Dominions. This was the man that murdered James, and imprisoned Peter; and in the end was stricken by an Angel, and devoured by Worms.

- 47 5 Agrippa Minor, son of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom St. Paul pleaded in defence of the Gospel; and the last which had the Title of King of the Jews: for in his time the City of Hierusalem was destroyed by Titus, and the whole Kingdom made a Province of the Roman Empire, Anno 73.

And here it is to be observed, that when Salmanassar had subdued and captivated the ten Tribes of Israel, he sent new Colonies of his own to plant this Country; that so fruitful and well-situate a part of his Empire might yield its just tribute, and not lye open to the fury of the next Invasader. But the Romans not having (it seemeth) so much policy or providence, as those whom they counted barbarous; having laid the Country desolate, left it unfurnished of new Colonies: whereby the Persians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entering the Roman Empire at this door, have successively driven the Romans out of the whole house. Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakened, and almost utterly rooted out the Jewish Nation, we will relate some of their particular Massacres, which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the Enemy, than justly deserved by themselves; they willing, though (I suppose) not desiring, that the innocent Blood of our Saviour should be on them and their Children. First then the Inhabitants of Cesarea slew of the Jews in one day, about 20000, and such as fled were took and imprisoned by Florus the Roman Lieutenant of Judea. To revenge this slaughter, the Jews set upon the Syrians; in which skirmish 13000 of them were slain. The people of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the sword; they of Damascus, 10000; Antonia, a Roman Captain, slew in Ascalon 10000 of them, and Cestius another Captain, 8040 persons. Now to come to the wars here managed by Vespasian; This Vespasian in the siege of Apbela, slew and took prisoner, 17130 persons; In Samaria, 11600 persons; In Jotopata, 42200 persons; In Joppa, so many killed and drowned themselves, that the Sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies; and the rest so totally perished, that there remained none to carry tidings unto Hierusalem of the loss of the Town. In the City of Turicbea, were slain, and made captives, 45000 persons, besides those which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there perished 20000, and none left alive but only two women; In Gasala 5200 men died by the sword; in the City of Gadara there were slain 32200, besides an infinite number which had drowned themselves. In Hierusalem itself, there died 1100000 of them, partly by the sword, and partly by the Famine; the worse Enemy of the two; there were found 2000 in Privies and Sinks; and 9700 taken prisoners, inasmuch that 30 Jews were sold for a Penny. So punctual was the Divine Justice in retaliating to this wretched people, according to the measure of their Iniquities, that they who bought their Saviour for 30 pence, should be sold as thirly for a penny in the open Market.

Now that Jerusalem was able to contain such a number of people, is evident, in that when Cestius was Lieutenant of Jewry, the High-Priest did at his request, number the people which came thither to eat the Paschal Lamb; and found them to be two millions and seven hundred thousand living souls, all found and purified: For to Lepers, or men having a flux of Seed, or women in their monthly terms, or to strangers, it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid Siege to the City, it was in the Feast of the Paschever, when most of the people were there assembled; God (as it were) having thus imprisoned them. All these Massacres, besides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite numbers which were slain in the Fields and Villages, which drowned themselves, & which were privately made away, amounting all to almost 2000000 of people, hapned in the compass of four years; beginning at the 12th of Nero, and ending at the 2d of Vespasian; yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, till the year 136. For then this miserable people, having stirred two notable rebellions; the one under Trojan, and the last under Adrian the Emperor, were generally banished their native Country, and never again permitted to inhabit it, otherwise than as strangers. After this dissolution, the Jews were dispersed all over the World, and especially in Spain, where Adrian commanded many of them to dwell; yet they found every where so little favour, that having divers times been put to grievous mulcts and ransoms, they were at last thrust out of most of the Kingdoms of Europe also. They were banished out of England by Edward the first, Anno 1290. Out of France by Philip the Fair, 1307. Out of Spain by Ferdinand the Catholic, 1492. Out of Portugal by Emmanuel, 1497. Out of Naples, and Sicily, by Charles the Fifth, 1539. Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romish parts of Germany and Poland; in most Cities of Italy, especially Rome it self, where are no less than 15000 or 20000 of them; and also in the Popes Country of Avignon. The reason why they are permitted to live thus under the Popes nose, is pretended to be an expectation of their Conversion, which is a meer pretence indeed; the true reason being the benefit hence arising to his Holiness' Coffers; the hopes of their Conversion being very small, and the means less. For besides the scandal, Datum & acceptum, by the Papists fond worshipping of Images, so peremptorily contrary to the first Table of the Law; they are not permitted to see any Book of Christian Religion, no not so much as the New Testament. And (which worketh much upon men of their metal) because at their Conversion they must quit all their goods unto the Church, as being ill gotten, and by consequence the works of the Devil, which in their Baptism they promise to renounce. They have also a Synagogue at Amsterdam, and are pretty thick spread over the Dominions of the Turks: who, notwithstanding lo hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they used to say in the detestation of a thing, I would I might die a Jew. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unless he be first baptized. And though their multitudes be so great both in Thessalonica & Constantinople, that it is conceived they do amount to the number of 160000 persons; yet they are not only contemned but hated: but there, and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous assembly of the Common people, and constantly every Easter, whereforever they be, in danger of death. Inasmuch that if a Jew do but stir out of doors betwixt Mawndy Thursday at noon, and Easter Eve at night, the Christians of the East, amongst whom they dwell (though far fewer in number) will be sure to stone them, because at that time, they buffeted, derided, and in fine, crucified their Saviour. Hated in all the parts of the Turky Dominions, because employed as Publicans in gathering and enhancing the publick tributes, which they exact with all severity that may be, and improve unto the most. And no less hated in all parts of the Christian world, as Enemies to the Cross of CHRIST: so unclaimably addicted to their ancient Judaism, and to abhorring from the conversation of other men, that it is not possible they should reap any other harvest, than contempt and scorn from those amongst whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief: They are a people which know how to comply with the times, and the condition which they live in; especially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like Dogs, and used like Slaves, yet never shew so much as an Angry countenance. A Nation which will thrive whereforever they come, but most by Usury and Brokage; not lending any thing, but on pawns, and those once forfeited, never more redeemable. The best of both Sexes said to have an unfavourable rank, not incident (if not caused by fluttness) to other people: from whom as different in their habits as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain still Circumcision, as the badge and cognizance of their Nation; but mingled with many Ceremonies not prescribed by the Law, nor observed by the Ancients; placing a void Chair for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be present, though unseen at the Solemnity. And upon this they are so besotted, that they conceive the Female Sex incapable of eternal life, because not capable of Circumcision; and therefore use to name them with no other Ceremony, than at six weeks end to have some young Wenches lift up the Cradle with the Child in it, which the that standeth at the head, giveth the name unto. Of their Sabbath so extremely doating, that they have added to the Superstitions left them by the Pharisees: And herein they are so precise, that if a Jew travel on the Friday, and in the Evening fall so short of his Journeys end, that it amounts to more than 2055 Cubits, or six Furlongs, which they account a Sabbath-days journey, there must he sit him down and keep his Sabbath, though in a wood, or field, or the high-way side, without fear of wind or weather, of Thieves or Robbers, and without taking order for meat or drink: Pericula latronum pradonumque omni, penuria item omni cibi potisque neglectis, as Buxtorfius hath it. And so far have they gone in despite of Christ, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Ass out of a ditch; permitted in the strictest times of Pharisaical rigour. So pertinacious in retaining the difference of meats and drinks, that they will by no means sit at the Table with other men, and so precise in the dressing of it, that they will eat of no flesh but of their own killing only; and that too with such cautions and reservations, that if any of the entrails be corrupt or dislocated, they will sell the whole beast to the Christians for a very trifling. Beneficial in that only to the neighbouring Christians. Wine they forbear except it be of their own planting, not so much out of dislike of that Liquor, for they are generally good fellows, and love their bellies, as for fear the Wine should be baptized: a Ceremony much used in the Eastern parts. Of the coming of their Messiah so full of hopes, that there is no great Warrior stirring, but they look upon him as the man still some sad Tragedy or other, which they suffer under that perfwasion, makes them see their error: promising to themselves whensoever he cometh, a restitution of their Kingdom: and such felicities therein, in the literal sense of some Texts of Scripture, which carry in them a more mystical and sacred meaning. That in good time (but Gods, not theirs) they shall be made partakers of the several blessings which those Texts do speak of, both the hope and wish of all pious men; who cannot chuse but grieve to behold the natural branches, so long dismembered and cut off from the tree of life.

And this they neither hope nor wish for but on some fair grounds, presented to them by St. Paul, who saith expressly, that when the Fulness of the Gentiles is offered in, then shall Israel be saved, Rom. 11. 25, 26. The words are so plainly positive, that they need no Commentary. Or if they did, we have the general consent of the Ancients, besides the constant current of most modern Writers; who christen the glad hopes of their conversion to the Gospel, which the Apostle doth there aim at, Origen, Athanasius, Hierom, Augustine, Chrysostome, for the primitive times; Beda, and Hugo Cardinalis, in the times succeeding; Gorran, and Thomas Aquinas, for those of Rome; Calvin, Beza, Engelger, and Peter Martyr for the Reformed Churches; besides divers others of great note, so expound that Text, Nor want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much; which he that doth desire to see, may find with the Expositions of most Christian Writers, in a Book writ by Doct. Wiler, Entituled, De generali & universali Judaeorum conversione; and thither I refer the more curious Reader. Out of all I shall take these words of Peter Martyr, written on that passage of St. Paul to the Romans, viz. Non ita Judei perierunt ut nulla de illorum salute spes superis. The Jews (saith he) are not so wholly fallen from the favour of God, but that there still remains some hopes of their salvation. Of their Salvation then by the Gospel of Christ, when the Fulness of the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their restitution to their temporal Kingdom, is a further question; and not so clearly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be some what in that Book which may seem to intimate it. That the opinion of being restored to the Messiah, to that Temporal power which was taken from them by the Romans, was prevalent as well amongst Christ's Disciples, as the rest of the Jews, is, I take it, clear enough in the holy Gospel. In such a Kingdom, and no other, did the two Sons of Zebedee desire to sit on both hands of their Masters; and the same was it, and no other, which all of them expected, as appeared by the words of Cleophas, Luke 24. 21, that Christ should have restored unto them, Id est brought, said he, that this would have proved the man, that should have redeemed Israel. Redeemed Israel? From what? From sin and Satan, or the curse and bondage of the Law? Not so, Id est to give the Jewish, but from the yoke of Vassallage, which the Romans had so lately imposed on them, say the Fathers rightly. Touching the same it was that they moved him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the Kingdom of Israel, Acts 1. 6. In answer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no denial, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never must expect such a restoration; but only bids them off as unto the time, and bids them rest themselves on the pleasure of God the Father in whose hands the disposing of all Kingdoms was: Id est not for you (saith he) to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath in his own power, ver. 7. By which answer (as it seems to me) there is a possibility of restoring them to their Kingdom also; though not in the way, at that very instant when they were most desirous to have it done, or at any other time fit for them to know; that being a secret, which the Father hath reserved to himself alone.

But leaving these Speculations of a Restitution of the Throne of Israel, and the great Power and Privileges it may then enjoy, let us look back on the Estate in which it flourished in the former times, when the Fortes and Revenue of it were at the highest. And first for the Revenue, they amounted in the time of Solomon (as is said 2 Chron. 9. 13.) to 666 Talents of Gold; besides the benefits of his Customs and Imposts, which cometh cometh to 2997000 pounds of yearly income. A vast Sum for such a little Kingdom. Nor can we reckon them at less, if they were not greater in the time of David, of whom it is affirmed, 1 Chron. 22. 14. That he left to Solomon 100000 Talents of Gold; and 1000000 Talents of Silver towards the building of the Temple, besides 3000 Talents of Gold, and 7000 Talents of Silver, formerly depolited for that purpose, as is said 1 Chron. 29. 4. Which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jew's Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at 4500 pound, and a Talent of Silver at 375 pound, will amount in our money to 840125000 pounds. So vast a Sum, that it had been sufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other Materials. I conceive therefore with our learned and industrious Brerewood, that by the Talent in those places we are to understand a far lesser Sum than the ordinary Hebrew Talents: which whether it doth there signifie a Sicle only, which is half a Crown of English money, as Eusebius, cited by Eusebius, was of opinion; or that every Talent of Gold came to three Golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five shillings of English money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomasticon, I am not able to determine: But measuring it by the last estimate, which I more approve of, it will amount to two millions and two hundred ninety and five thousand pounds: a vast Sum for a King to leave in ready money, which was always exercised in war. And though I do not find expressly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto, after the division: yet by one circumstance I find them to be very great. For it is written, 2 Kings 18. 14. that the yearly tribute imposed upon Hezekiah, by the King of Assyria, was three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold; amounting (according to the ordinary Hebrew Talent, which questionless is there intended) to two hundred forty seven thousand and five hundred pounds of English money: and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue must be thrice as much, above that tribute: Else the Assyrian had not left him a subsistence for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of this Crown were less to Herod, than formerly to Solomon, or David; considering his vast expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, the immeasurable donatives bestowed upon Augustus, Livias, and the Court of Rome, together with the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death: not parallell'd by any King before or since, though of a more large and more ample Territory than he stood possessed of.

What forces the Kings of the Hebrews were able to bring into the field, may best be estimated by the Muster which David made, when he numbered the People: the enrolment of such as were able to bear arms, and fit for service, coming in all to five hundred thousand fighting men, in Judah only, and eight hundred thousand men in the Tribes of Israel. 'Tis true, that David never brought into the field so vast a multitude; but when the Kingdoms were divided, and was denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we find almost the whole number brought into the field: that is to say, 800 thousand on the side of Jeroboam, the King of Israel, and four hundred thousand by Abijah, the King of Judah. After this, out of that small Kingdom, Asa the Son of Abijah, being invaded by Zerah the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thousand men, which was more than the enrolment made in the time of David. An infinite proportion for so small a Kingdom; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above belief, had not that God who said to Abraham, that his Seed should be as the Stars of Heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the story and affairs of this Country since the time of Adrian, the Jews being all expelled their native Soyl, and Christianity in fine prevailing over all those parts; it was inhabited as the rest of the Empire was, by men of that Religion only: in this Country so advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Constantine, is reported to have built in it no less than two hundred Temples and Monasteries, in places of most note for the Miracles of Christ our Saviour, or the dwelling of some of his Disciples. In the year 615, the Persians, under the Conduct of Chosroes their King, became Masters of it; and possessed themselves of Hierusalem also: expelled thence by the valour and good fortune of the Emperor Heraclius, who recovering the Cross on which Christ suffered, out of the hands of the Pagans, carried it with as great a triumph into Constantinople, as David once did the Ark into Hierusalem, occasioning thereby the annual Festival on the fourth of September, called Holy-Cross-day, or Exaltatio Sancte Crucis. But this glory and rejoicing did not long continue: For within twenty years after the recovery of this City from the power of the Persians, it was again conquered and subdued by Homar, or Aumar, Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637. Under this yoke the captivated Christians had long suffered, when they changed the Tyrant, but not the tyranny, the Turks about the year 1079, overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their stead. Twenty years did the Christians languish under this oppression, when one Peter an Hermite, travelling for devotion to the holy Land, and being an eye-witness of the miseries under which they groaned; at his return, made his addresses to Pope Urban the second, acquainting him with the sad conditions of the poor Christians in those Countries. A Council thereupon is called at Clermont in France, where the Pope (willing to employ the Christian Princes further off, that he might the better play his game at home,) did so effectually advance and endear the business, that no fewer than three hundred thousand fighting men, under several Leaders, undertook the service. And it prospered so well with them in the first beginning, that having beaten the Turks out of Asia Minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and most of the strong Towns of Syria, they incamped before Hierusalem, and in short time took it, Anno 1099. after it had been four hundred years and upwards in the power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered with the title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, Son of William the Conqueror: but he upon the hopes of the Kingdom of England, refused that honour, never prospering, as it was observed, after that refusal. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, had the next offer of it, which with a religious joy he accepted of; though on the day of his inauguration he refused the Crown: affirming that it was not fit for a Christian Prince to wear in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World wore a Crown of Thorns.

The Kings of Hierusalem.

- 1099 1 Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine.
1100 2 Baldwin of Lorraine, brother of Godfrey, won Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.
1118 3 Baldwin II. surnamed of Bruges, Cousin of Godfrey, and Baldwin, the Former King, overcame the Sultan of Damascus; and enlarged his Kingdom by the addition of Tyre.
1131 4 Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having married Millicent, the daughter of Baldwin the second, succeeded succeeded after his decease; unfortunately killed with a fall from his Horse.

1142 5 Baldwin III. Son of Fulk and Millicent, fortified Gaza against the Caliph of Egypt; and recovered Palestine from the King of Damascus.

1164 6 Amalricus, the Brother of Baldwin the third, so distressed the Great Caliph of Egypt, that he was forced to call in the Turks to aid him; by whom slain, and his Kingdom transferred on Saracen the Turkish General.
1174 7 Baldwin IV. Son of Amalricus, overthrew Saladin the victorious King of the Turks in a Fight near Afsalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.

1185 8 Baldwin V. Son of Sybil the Sister of Baldwin the fourth, by William Marquis of Montferrat; unnaturally poisoned by his own Mother, having reigned only five Months to make way for her second Husband, called 1185 9 Guy of Lusignan, the last King of Hierusalem, that had the possession of the City: during whose time Saladin the Sultan of Egypt won that Kingdom, Anno 1187. which his successors defended against all invasions, till the year 1517. in which Selimus the first, Emperor of the Turks, added the Holy Land, together with Egypt, to his Empire. When Hierusalem was taken by the Christians, it is said that the German Emperours name was Frederick; the Pope's, Urbanus; the Hierosolymitan Patriarch, Heraclius; and that so also were they called, when the Christians again lost it. This is the conceit of Roger Hoveden, in the Life of Henry the Second; but how it can agree with Chronology, I do not see.

After the taking of Hierusalem by Sultan Saladin, the Christians retired their Forces into some of the other Towns of the Holy-Land, which they made good against the Enemy, and defended them under the Government of these three Kings following, viz.

- 10 Conrad Marquis of Montferrat, Husband of Isabel the Daughter of Amalricus King of Hierusalem.
11 Henry Earl of Champagne, second Husband of Isabel.
12 John di Brenne, Husband of Mary, or Yolanda as some call her, Daughter of Conrad and Isabel, the last Christian King that ever had possession in Syria or Palestine: inhabited ever since by Moors and Arabians; few Christians, and not many Turks but such as be in Garrisons only. Yolanda the Daughter of this John di Brenne, was Wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her right intitled himself King of Hierusalem: and so now do the Kings of Spain, as Heirs unto and Possessors of the Kingdom of Naples. Concerning which Title, it would not be amiss to insert this Story. When the Wars in Queen Elizabeth's time were hot between England and Spain, there were Commissioners of both sides appointed to Treat of Peace. They met at a Town of the French Kings, and first it was debated in what Tongue the Negotiations should be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the English Commissioners a thred gird, proposed the French Tongue as most fit; it being a Language which the Spaniards were well skilled in: and for these Gentlemen of England, I suppose (saith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the Language of the Low-Subjects; their Queen is Queen of France, as well as of England. Nay in faith my Masters, replied Doctor Dole (a Civil Lawyer, and one of the Masters of Requests) the French Tongue is too vulgar for a business of this secrecy and importance, especially in a French Town: We will therefore rather treat in Hebrew, the Language of Hierusalem, whereof your Master is King; and I suppose you are therein as well skilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this Title.

The Arms of the Christian Kings in Hierusalem was Luna, a Cross Croiset crossed, Sol; which was commonly called the Hierusalem Crois. But for their Forces and Revenues, I cannot see how any estimate may be made hereof, in regard they subsisted not by their own proper strength, but by the Purfes and the Forces of the Western Christians; more or less active in that Service, as zeal, or emulation, or desire of glory, were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, after the Recovery thereof from the power of the Turks, were,

1. Of the Sepulchre, said to be instituted originally by Queen Helena. The Mother of Constantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed first built: but more truly, by Philip King of France, Anno 1099. at such times as that temple was regained from the Turks. Their Arms the same with that of the Kings before blazoned, representing the five Wounds of our Saviour. CHRIST. At the first conferred on none but Gentlemen of Blood and Fortune; now saleable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciscans doth reside near that Temple.

2. Of Saint John of Hierusalem, begun by one Gerard, Anno 1114, and confirmed by Pope Paschal the second. Their Badge or Cognizance is a White Cross of eight points. Their duty, to defend the Holy-Land, relieve Pilgrims, and succour Christian Princes against the Infidels. They were to be of noble Parentage and Extraction; and grew in time to such infinite Riches, especially after the suppression of the Templars (most of whose Lands were after given unto this Order) that they had at one time in the several parts of Christendom, no fewer than 20000 Manours; and of such reputation in all Christian Kingdoms, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accomplished the Prince Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue is not a little diminished, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England, and other Protestant Princes, from the Church of Rome: who on that change, seized on all the Lands of this Order in their several Countries; and either kept them to themselves, or disposed them to others as they pleased. Of these we shall speak more when we are in Malta, where they now reside: advertising only at the present, that their first Great Master, was that Gerard by whom they were founded; the last that had his residence in the Holy-Land, one John de Villiers, in whose time being driven out of Palestine, they retired unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villars, Anno 1309. to the Isle of Rhodes; Out of which expelled by Solymann the Magnificent, Anno 1522. they removed from one place to another, till at last by the magnificence of Charles the fifth, Anno 1530. they were settled in Malta: and there we shall speak further of them.

3. Of the Templars, instituted by Hugh of Payen, Anno 1113. and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their Ensign was a Red Cross, in token that they should shed their blood to defend Christ's Temple. They were buried cross-legged, and wore on their backs the figure of the Cross; for which they were by the common people called Cross backs, or Crouch-backs, and by corruption Crook-backs. Edmund Earl of Lancaster, second Son to our Henry the third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crook-back; Which gave Henry the fourth a foolish occasion to feign, that this Edmund (from whom he was descended) was indeed the eldest Son of King Henry the third; but for his crookedness and deformity, his younger Brother was preferred to the Crown before him. These Knights had in all Provinces of Europe their subordinate Governours; in which they possessed no less than 16000 Lordships: the greatness of which Revenue was not the least cause of dissolving the Order. For Philip the Fair, King of France, had a plot to inveigle one of his Sons with the title of King of Jerusalem, and hoped to procure of the Pope the Revenue of this Order, to be laid unto that Kingdom, for support of the Title: which he thought he might the better do, because Clement the fifth then Pope, for the love he bore to France, had transferred his Seat from Rome to Avignon. But herein his hopes deceived him; for this Order being dissolved, the Lands thereto belonging were given to the Knights Hospitallers, or of St. John. The Crimes objected against this Order were, First, Their Revolt from their professed Obedience unto the Patriarch of Jerusalem, who was their Visitor: Secondly, Their unpeackable Pride: and Thirdly, Their sins against Nature. The House of our Law-Students in London, called the Temple, was the chief House of the Knights of this Order in England; and was by the Knights of St. John, whose principal Mansion was in Smithfield, sold unto the Students of the Law, for the yearly Rent of 10 l. about the middle of the Reign of Edward the third.

These three Orders Mr. Selden (and deservedly) putteth not in his Titles of Honour, in that they were prohibited to kiss a Woman; honourary Knight-hood, and the Love of Ladies, going together like Virtue and Reward.

Thus much for Palestine.

O F

ARABIA.

ARABIA hath on the East Chaldeas, and the Bay or Gulph of Persia; on the West, Palestine, some part of Egypt, and the whole course of the Red-Sea on the North the River Euphrates, with some parts of Syria and Palestine; and on the South, the main Southern Ocean. But at some times the name extended somewhat further. Pliny enlargeth it as far as Comagene, the North part of Syria; in regard that many Arabian Colonies had been there planted by Tygranes; and Xenophon comprehended in it the greater part also of Mesopotamia; because situate on the West of the River Tigris, and consequently the Western part of the Assyrian Empire, as the word Erech doth import, from whence some derive the Eryman, and name hereof. Which notwithstanding, in the general esteem of Authors, it is bounded only as before.

As for the Name, there be some that derive it from Arabus, a supposed Son of Apollo and Babylonica; others from three supposititious Sons of Janus Pater, one of the pretended Grandsons of Cham, who is fabled to have sent his Son Arabus into Arabia Deserta; Petrus, into Arabia Petrea; and Sabus, into Arabia Felix, the dwelling place of the Sabaeans. And for this trim conceit, we are beholden to the Berosus of Friar Annus. More probable is their conjecture, who derive the name from the Hebrew, Arab, signifying black; by reason of the swarth or tawny complexion of the Inhabitants who are inter nigrum & fulvum, as Veronanius an eye-witness hath informed us of them; on the same reason as one of the Provinces of Africa, is commonly entitled the Land of Nigrities. But the most likely origination of it, as I conceive, is from Harabi, which signifieth in the Hebrew a Thief or Robber, such as the Arabians, in all Ages have been known to be. According unto that of the Prophet Jeremy: In the ways thou hast sate, for them, as an Arabian in the wilderness, as our English reads it: Tanquam Latro insidians in solitudine, saith the Vulgar Latin, Jer. 32. St. Hierom, though he render it quasi Latro, as the Vulgar doth, yet in his Commentary he informs us, that the word doth also signifie an Arabian que gens latrocinii dedit usque hodie incurat Palestine fines, &c. which being addicted to Theft and Robbery, do to this day (saith he) infest the Coasts of Palestine, which border near them, and lay in wait for those which had any occasion to travel thither. Agreeable hereunto is the observation of Martin del Rio, Ad eo latrocinii infames sunt, ut Hebraei Arabes latronem denotat, sicut Chananæus Mercatorem, Chaldeus Mathematicum; i.e. So infamous were they for their Theft and frequent Robberies, that it was familiar with the Jews to call a Thief by the name Arabian, as by Chanaanite to signifie a Merchant, or to use the word Chaldean for a Mathematician. In the same sense they came in the succeeding times to be called Saracens, from Sarak, or Saraka, an Arabian word, which signifieth to steal; whereof more anon: No other wise than one of the American Islands had the name of Ladrones, or Insula Latronum, given by Magellanus, from the thieftfulness of the Inhabitants, who had stolen his Cock-boat.

I have staid the longer on the Name, because it doth expresse so much of the Character of the People also; living for the most part upon Spoil and Robbery, as all that travel that way know by sad experience. Of mean stature, taw-boned, tawny or swarth complexioned, having feminine voices; of swift but noiseless gait, and upon you are you are aware. Of no set-dwellings (except only in Arabia Felix) living in Tents, which they remove like walking Cities, for the benefit of Pasturage, and hope of Booty: for this last cause hanging about the skirts of more habitable Counties, and having robbed, retire with a marvellous speed; Mounted on Dromedaries for that purpose, a Beast of most incredible swiftness, satisfied with little Food, though without Water to it, and will easily carry a man an hundred miles a day, without any refreshing. Nor are such Horses as they have, though but poor and lean, of less speed, or less patient of travel; whom they twice a day with the Milk of Camels, and think them not worth keeping, if not able to out-go an Estrich. As now, now, so formerly, all Horsemen, and but ill appointed; fitter to rob and spoil than to deal with Souldiers; as riding stark naked, and trusting rather to the swiftness of their Horses, than any other resistance, where they were opposed.

Their Language is the Arabick, so called from this Country, but not proper to this Country only; Spoken in all places where Mahometanism hath got any footing: The Alcoran being writt in it, the publick Offices of their Religion performed in it, and the Tongue taught in Schools as generally, as with us the Latin: but made the natural Language in Mesopotamia, Syria, Palestine, the three Arabia's, Egypt, and all Barbary, except the Kingdom of Morocco. A great extent, but short of that which some give to it, who will have it spoken in two parts of the whole habitable World.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Paul, of whose being in Arabia, after his Conversion, he telleth us Gal. 1. 17. to which the coming in of the Saracens gave a great increase, in the time of Maria their Queen, during the Empire of Valentinian the first, Moses, a man of exemplary piety, and famed for many Miracles, being created their first Bishop; after more generally propagated over all the Country, by the King Alamandarus, Anastasius then reigning in the East. But long it had not been received, when supplanted by Mahometanism, which had its first beginning here; and hath so universally overpread the whole face thereof, that now there are no Christians left in all the Country, except only in Eltor, a Port Town in the Bay of Arabia Felix; in Arabia Petrea, the chief City of Arabia Petrea, and in two small Monasteries about Mount Sinai. It is in circuit about 4000 miles, but of so unequal and heterogeneous composition, that no general Character can be given of it; and therefore we must look upon it, as it stands divided into Arabia Deserta, 2 Arabia Petrea, 3 Arabia Felix, and 4 The Arabick Islands.

ARABIA DESERTA.

ARABIA DESERTA (called Beriana by the Turks) is bounded on the East with Babylonia; on the West with parts of Palestine, and Arabia Petrea; on the North, with Palmyrene and Mesopotamia, from which last it is parted by Euphrates; and on the South, by some parts of Petrea, and Arabia Felix.

It hath the name of Deserta, from the vast Desarts which are in it; and the inhabitedness thereof, called also by Aristides, Aspera, from the roughness; by Servius, Inferior, or the lower, in regard of the situation of it more towards the River; by Lucian, from the frequent bottoms and Vallies in it, Arabia Cava; and finally by the Jews it was called Kedar, from the blackness or swarthinness of the People, the word in Hebrew signifying as much as Sun-burnt; whence the People are by some Writers called Kedarani, and by Pliny, Gedec.

But the common and most usual name of it, is Arabia Deserta, agreeable to the nature of it, being generally a sandy Country, full of vast Desarts; in which all such as travel, use to carry their provisions with them, and to guide themselves in their Journey by the course of the Stars, though in some parts which lie near Euphrates, and the Mountains of Arabia Felix, it hath some few Towns, and those resorted to by Merchants. But this is only in those parts; the residue of the Country being so desolate and waste, that one who had travelled in it, doth describe it to be so wild a place, Ut nec homines nec bestia videantur, nec vias; imo, nec arbores, nec germes aliquod, sed non nisi montes saxos, altif- simi, asperissimi: A Country, saith Emilianus Melchior, where are found neither Men nor Beasts, nor so much as Birds or Trees, nor Grass, nor Pasture; but only stony, high, and most craggy Mountains.

The People for the most part used to dwell in Tents, alluded to by David, Psal. 120. v. 5. which they removed from place to place, as the Pasture for their Cattel failed them: taking no other care for Houses, than the Boughs of Palm-trees, to keep them from the heat of the Sun, and other extremities of Weather. Hence by the Ancients called Scenite, or men dwelling in Tents (in which respect the Jews call the Kedarians Kedarim, from the like course of life which these Kedareni or Arabians lived;) but the name reaching into the other parts of Arabia also, where they use the same kind of living: Of whom more anon.

Yet notwithstanding, most memorable is this Country in sacred Story, both for the dwelling-place of Job and the habitation of those Wise-men, who came out of the East unto Jerusalem, to worship Christ, the new-born King of the Jews. That Job was an Inhabitant here, appeareth by the situation of his dwelling, being in the East, as is said in the Story of him, chap. 1. v. 3. that is to say, the Country lying East to the Land of Canaan, as this part of it doth; and therefore called simply by the name of the East, as Jude 6. 3. where by the Children of the East, are meant expressly the Inhabitants of Arabia the Desart, who together with the Midianites and Amalekites oppressed those of Israel. Secondly, by the ill neighbourhood which he found from the Sabaeans, who inhabited in this part also; and of the Chaldeans, mentioned v. 17. the next Borders to it; and thirdly, by the inconsequences which needs must follow, if we place him, as some do, in the Land of Uz; near unto Damascus. For how improbable must it be for the Sabaeans of the Red Sea, or the Persian Gulf, or the Chaldeans dwelling on the Banks of the River Euphrates, to fall upon Job's Cattel grazing near Damascus, the Countries being disjoined by such vast Desarts, and huge Mountains, that it is impossible for any Strangers to pass them, especially with any numbers of Cattel, in respect of those large Mountains, deep Sands, and the extreme want of Water in all that passage? And how impossible must we think it, that the Pen-man of the Story of Job, who certainly was guided in it by the Holy Ghost, should be so mistaken, as to place Job's dwelling in the East, if the Land of Uz, wherein he dwelt, bordered on Damascus, which lay not on the East, but the North of Canaan? A City called Uz, or Uz there was, situate near Damascus, so called from Uz, the Son of Aram, Gen. 10. 23. A Land of Uz also amongst the Edomites, spoken of in the Lamentations of the Prophet Jeremy: Uz, v. 21. so called from Uz, one of the Posterity of Esau, mentioned Gen. 36. 28. And finally a Land of Uz or Uz, so called from Hus the Son of Nachor, the Brother of Abraham, mentioned Gen. 22. 21. which is that situate in this Tract, the Habitation and Possession of that righteous man: the Country hereabouts being called Asuria, and the People Asuite; though by mistaking in the Transcripts, we find them named Aslax, or Asia, in the fifth of Esdras. The like I say also of the Wise-men, or Magi, who came to Jerusalem from the East, That they dwelt in this Country, where the said Ptolemy placeth the City of Saba; according unto that fore signified by the Royal Psalmist, That the Kings of Arabia and Saba should bring their Gifts, Psal. 72. 10. Confirmed herein by the situation of the Country, lying East of Canaan; the Authority of those Fathers, who lived nearest to the time of our Saviour's Birth, Justin Martyr, Terullian, Cyprian; and by the testimony of Emilianus Melchior.

landinus Melchior above-mentioned, affirming on the credible report of the people hereof, that they came neither out of Mesopotamia, or Arabia Felix, as many wilemen do believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Desert, which City (saith he) when my self was there, was, as I judged, called Semiscasac.

Cities of note, in a Country so desert and uninhabited, we most look for few; yet some there are, inhabited by a more civil sort of people, whom they call by the name of Moors, giving that of Arabian to those only, who living roving and robbing up and down. Ptolomy gives the names of forty Cities and Villages in it (Civitates & vicus, saith the Latine) the memory of most of which is now utterly perished. Those of most observation, 1 Sabe or Saba, the habitation of the Sabæans who pillaged Job; so called from Sheba, the Grand-son of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25. 3. of whom, and of the rest of that Line, it is said, in the sixth verse of that chapter, that Abraham gave them gifts, and sent them away from Isaac Eastward, unto the East Country: now called Semiscasac, as is thought by Melchior. 2 The-man, which possibly may be the Country of Eliphaz the Themanite, one of the Visitants of Job. As 3 Shwab, on the North hereof, was probably of Bilkad, another of them, hence firamed the Shuite. 4 Tharsacat, by Pliny called Aphipolis. 5 Zagmais, near the Persian Gulf, in the Country of the Ranbeni, supposed to be descended from Mishma, the fourth Son of Ismael. 6 Phuntion, the 36th. 7 Obob, the 37th Mansion of the Children of Israel. 8 Rbeganna, another of those named by Ptolomy, in the Greek Copies called Beganna. Of any Town of note now being, more than Semiscasac before-named, I find nothing certain.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, of whom there is any certain Constat, where the Posterity of Hux, the Son of Nachor, and the Sons of Abraham by Keturah; of whose being settled in these parts, we had before good testimony from the Book of God: and intermix'd with them lived some of the Descendants of Ismael also. For if the Adubeni, whom Ptolomy calleth the Agubeni, fetch their original from Adbel the third, and the Ranbeni from Mishmai the fifth Son of Ismael, as some say they do, I see no reason but the whole Country might be called Kedar, from Kedar the second Son, as well as from the tawny complexions of the people of it. From them descended the Tribes or Nations (spoken of by Ptolomy, that isto say, the Orbeni, Chauabeni, Ansite, Maloni, Materni, and Agrei, besides the Adubeni, and Ranbeni, already specified. But being a dis-joynted People, nor under any settled form of Government, not possessed of any thing worth looking after, they were either held not worth the conquering, in regard of their penury; or else unconquerable, in respect of their Country, impassable for great Armies, by reason of the rolling Sands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive, that lying so near to the Chaldeans, they followed the fortunes of that mighty Monarchy: Subjects unto it whilst it stood, and after Tributaries unto those who successively possessed themselves of the Supreme Power. Not looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at Wealth as well as Honour in their Expedition: nor otherwise subject to the Turk at this present time, than as they make use of him and his protection in their frequent Robberies: but counted as, as a part of the Turkish Empire, because the more civil Arabians are indeed his Subjects.

2 ARABIA PETRÆA.

ARABIA PETRÆA (now called Barasband Baribalaba) hath on the East Arabia Deserta, and part of Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia; on the West, the Ilibmus which joyneth Africa to Asia, and part of the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the North, Palestine; and on the South a long Ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the rockiness of the Soil hereof, or more properly from Petra, the chief City of it, called also by Abibius, Sicarta, but I know not why: by the Hebrews, Chus, generally translated Æthiopia; by William of Tyre, Arabia secunda, Felix being reckoned for the first. By Strabo, Ptolomy, and Pliny, it is called Nabathæa, which name it had from Nabath, the eldest of the twelve Sons of Ismael; though properly that name belongeth only to those parts of it which lay next Judæa: fruitful, though joyning to the Deserts: and thus remembered by the Poet, as an Eastern Country.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nabathæaque regna recessit.

Eurus unto the East did lie.

Where fruitful Nabathæ doth lie.

The Country much of the same nature with the other, but in some parts thereof more fertile, if well manured: and in the time of Marcellinus, affirmed to be a rich Land, flourishing with variety of Trade and Traffick. But for the most part full of untravellable Deserts, except to those which carry their provisions with them for fear of starving, and go in great Companies, or Caravans, for fear of robbing: and yet much travelled by Merchants who traffick into Egypt and Babylonia; the Commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the Ships of Arabia, as their Seas, the Deserts. For upon one of these Camels, they will lay ordinarily 600 and sometimes 1000 pound weight: yet not afford him water above once in four days, not often in fourteen, if there be occasion. So that the Camel carrying so great a burden, and seldom fewer than 500 going in one Voyage, the Merchant, if he scape the robbing, makes a rich Return. Of these Deserts, the most memorable are those of Sin and Pharan, in which the Israelites so long wandered: not beautified with Grass, nor adorned with Trees, the Palm only excepted; nor furnished with Water, but by Rain or Miracle.

The People of it, for the most part, descended of the Sons of Chus and Ismael, intermixed with the Madianites, descending from Abraham by Keturah, and the Amalekites, descended probably from Amalek, the Grand-son of Esau, mentioned Gen. 3. 6. but all united at the last in the name of Saracens. This name derived, as some think, from Sarra, signifying a Desert, and Saken which signifieth to inhabit, because they live for the most part in these desert places: as others say, from Sarak, signifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia, before delivered. This last most suitable to their nature, and best liked by Scaliger. Saraceni à vicinis dicuntur ab Elfarak, i. e. à vicinis rapacibus, quod rapinis videntur. So he, in his second Book de Emend. Temp. A People not reckoned in the former times, till made remarkable by their Conquest of a great part of the World; but always counted warlike and Martial men. Of whom take this Character out of Marcellinus. "The Saracens (saith he) whom we are neither to wish for our Friends nor Enemies, are a Martial People, half naked, clad as far as the groin with painted Cassocks, ranging up and down on Camels and swift Horses, as well in peace as troublesome times. Nor used unto the Plough, to plant Trees, or get their living by Tillage; they wander from one place to another, without house or home, or any constant dwelling-place, or the use of Laws; nor can they long endure the same either Air or Soil, the manner of their living being always flitting,

flitting like ravenous Kites; which if they chance to spy a prey, snatch it up in their flight; if they chance to fall on it as it lieth on the ground, they make no long stay. Their food is chiefly upon Venison, and store of Milk, herbs which they gather from the ground, and birds which they get by fowling; but altogether ignorant of Corn and Wine. Their Wives they only hire for a time, though for a few of Matrimony they present their Husbands with a Spear & a Tent, as in way of Dowry; but they part with them when they please. Both Sexes most extremely given to carnal lulls, the women as rambling as the men, married in one place, and brought to bed in another, leaving their Children where they fall without more care of them. So far, and to this purpose he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principal are, 1 That called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which passing through this Country endeth his course in the Red Sea. 2 Rhinocorura, called in Scripture the torrent of Egypt, which rising in this Country, and passing by the borders of Idumæa, hath its fall in the Lake of Sirbon; and together with the waters thereof, loseth it self at last in the Mediterranean.

With Mountains it is better stored, and those of eminent observation, as 1 Mount Sinai, famous in all Ages for the promulgation of the Law; and of late times, for a Monastery of Maronites on the top thereof. The Hill so high, that both shores of the Red Sea may be thence seen; but ease of ascent by reason of steps cut out of the rock: which notwithstanding, he that beginneth to go up it at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the afternoon. The Monastery made an Episcopal See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the Letters of Eugenius Bishop thereof, to the Arch-Duke Charles, Anno 1569. complaining that the Turk had sold all their Land, and that himself and the Monks were fain to pawn their holy Vessels, and take up money on Usury. Here is also a Mesque, or Mosque of Turks, who resort in pilgrimage to this hill as well as the Christians. 2 Mount Horeb, where the Israelites worshipped the Molten Calf, about a mile and a half distant from Mount Sinai, but not so high: on the top of which is a Church also; and a Monastery of Coloires, or Greek Monks, at the bottom, exceeding hospitable to Strangers, whom they entertain of free cost, and cheerfully shew them all the places worth observation, which the Scripture mentioneth in that tract. Both hills by Ptolomy called Melani, or the Black Mountains; the last now called Orel. 3 Mount Hor, bordering on Idumæa; and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of most observation, 1 Petra, the name given to this part, at first called Reem, and at that time belonging to Midian: afterwards called Sela, when pertaining to the Idumæans. But falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Crat. Best known in holy Scriptures by the name of Selah, beforementioned, which signifies the same with the Latine Petra. A City of great note and strength in all times foregoing, taken by Amziab the King of Judah, 2 Kings 14. 7. and by him called Jock-beel; but in vain besieged by Saurus, a Roman General, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the perswasion of Anipater, to take a sum of money and raise the siege. Nor did the Emperor Trajan spend much better at it, his Souldiers being still beat off in all their Assaults, the very next man to him slain with a Dart, and himself forced to cast away his Imperial habit, and flee for his life; the heavens themselves, if Dion (who is never sparing of the like prodigies) may be believed, fighting against the Romans with thunder, lightning, whirlwinds, and tempests, as often as they made any approaches to it: But in the end subdued with the rest of the Country. In such esteem, by reason of the strength of it, by the Soldans of Egypt, that they kept here her choicest treasures; and in the course of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Christians, as the Key that opened the Gates of Palestine; on the South border whereof, not far from Mount Hor, before-mentioned, the Town is situate. The Metropolis of the Province when first under the Romans; and made the Seat of a Latine Bishop, when the Christians of the West were the Lords thereof. 2 Bosra, said to have been built by Augustus Cæsar, because by him repaired, when decayed and ruined; afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of the Romans. This last most certain, and for such testified by this ancient Inscription, in an ancient Coyn, COL. BOSTRAIN. T. R. ALEXANDRI T. ANE. Memorable also for the birth of Philip the Emperour, one of that Alexander's next Successors, by whom it was caused for a time to be called Philippur, for the Metropolitan dignity removed hither from Petra somewhat before the time of Justinian, but by whom I find not; and for being the Episcopal See of Titus (hence surnamed) Bosphorus, a reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apostate. A City of as great antiquity as the most that be, mentioned Gen. 36. 33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong; and is still remaining, & well known by the name of Bussheir, 3 Elama, on a bay of the Red Sea, called hence Sinus Ælamiticus. 4 Phara, reckoned by Ptolomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wilderness of Paran seems to take its name. 5 Berenice, so called from some of the Queens of Egypt, but better known by the name of Ezion-geber, one of the Stations or Incampings of the Children of Israel, made by Solomon the ordinary harbour for his Ships, which sailed to Ophir in the East-Indies. 6 Sur, the chief City of the Amalekites, giving name to the Wilderness or Desert of Sur, coming close up to it: remarkable for the first incamping of the Tribes of Israel after their miraculous passage over the Red Sea; and the defeat which Saul gave to the Amalekites, whom he smote from Havilah to this place. 7 Havilah, so called from Havilah the son of Chus, being the furthest border of these Amalekites. 8 Ismaeliter, on the Gulf of Persia, as Sur was on the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 8 Madian, so called of Madiam, the son of Abraham by Keturah, situate towards the Red Sea also; the City of Jetbro, whose Daughter Zipporah was the wife of Moses: who flying from the Court of Pharaoh, King of Egypt, was by God's secret providence directed hither: that keeping the Flocks of Jetbro in the Deserts adjoining, he might acquaint himself with the ways and passages, through which he was after to lead the house of Israel. 9 Rephaim, the encamping place of Moses, where he discomfited the Amalekites; and to which the said Jetbro came to him with his Wife and Children, advising him to ease himself of some part of that burden, which the Government of so great a People would else bring upon him. 10 Kadesh-barnea, the station of the Tribes, when the Spies which were sent to discover the Land of Canaan returned back unto them; memorable for the death of Miriam the Prophetess. And 11 Thara, no less memorable for the mutiny and punishment of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, the place remembered Num. 33. 27. But others will have 12 Makbeleh, mentioned 225, of that Chapter, to be the Stage of that action, the Scriptures being silent in this particular. The rest of their encamping places, being most of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpose, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do also some of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accounted of by Ptolomy lony, as Cities of this Province; but spoken of already in our Description of Palestine, to which more properly belonging.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Midianites, the Ismaelites, the Amalekites, and the Children of Chus, who dwelling promiscuously together, are sometimes used for one another: the Merchants which brought Joseph of his Brethren, being indifferently called Midianites, and Ismaelites, Gen. 37. 28. and Zipporah the wife of Moses, who questionless was a Daughter of Madian, being by Miriam and Aaron called an Ethiopian or Chusite, as in way of reproach, Numb. 12. 1. But being they were different Nations, and such as had some special engagement with or against the Children of Israel, we will consider them by themselves, till we have brought them into one body, by the name of Chusites, Ethiopians, or Arabians, which are all the same.

And first the MADIANITES were such of the posterity of Madian, the Son of Abraham by Ketura, who preserving the knowledge of the true God, withdrew themselves from all communion with the Idolatrous Canaanites, at such time as the rest of their brethren did associate with them; and fed themselves more towards the banks of the Red Sea, where they did all good offices to the Children of Israel, as they passed through their Country. Of these the Kenites were a branch, as appeareth Judg. 1. 16. where Jeshu the Prince or Priest of Madian, is called a Kenite: some of which turned Proselytes, and dwelt with the Ismaelites in Canaan, of which Race Heber the Kenite, the husband of Jael, who slew Sisera, was undoubtedly one. The rest, continuing mingled with the Amalekites, till the time of Saul, were by him warned (in memory of former courtesies) to withdraw themselves from them; lest they should perish with them in the same destruction. Afterwards we hear little of either people, losing their name in the greater Nation of the Ismaelites, with whom intermingled, or passing with them in the same common notion of Arabians, Chusites, or Ethiopians.

Secondly, nor were the AMALEKITES, though a greater and more powerful Nation, of much more continuance defended, as it is conceived, from Amalek, the Grand-son of Esau (though I deny not but there are some reasons to be urged against that opinion) and planted on the backs of the Edomites, as their Guard or Out-work. A people mischievously bent against those of Israel, as if they had inherited the hatred which Esau their fore-father did bear to Jacob, whom they violently set on at Rephidim, when they supported them spent and wearied with their flight from Egypt. And though discomfited in that battle, yet they continued in their malice against the Tribes, joining first with the Canaanites against them when they were in their March; and after with the Midianites, when not well settled in their new possession. A provocation so ill taken by the Lord of Hosts, because unnatural, and ill grounded, that he declared his resolution from the time of the Battle of Rephidim, to put out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, Exod. 17. 14. Accordingly, when the Children of Israel were provided for it, he commanded Saul to set upon them, and to slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, yea, their sheep and cattle. But some of them escaped this slaughter, and fell not long after upon Ziglaz, the retiring place of David, which they took and ransacked; but being by him followed on the first intelligence, they were easily overthrown, and the prey recovered. Their malice yet survived their power; and what they could not do by their forces, they endeavoured to effect by joining with the Ammonites, Moabites, and other Enemies of David, in their Wars against him.

And this was ultimum conam, one of the last flasks of their dying light; nothing done by them worth remembrance of the times succeeding, most of the Nation being worn out, and those few which were left, retiring to the Mountains of Edom, but thereof also dispossessed by the Simonites, during the reign of Hezekiah.

Thirdly, the ISMAELITES, descending from Ismael, the Son of Abraham by Hagar, branched into twelve great Nations, and grown wondrous populous, spread themselves over a great part of these three Arabias: all of them either Thieves or Merchants trading to Egypt in Spicery, and Balm, and Myrror, or robbing those which traded in the like commodities. Called also Hagarens in the Scripture, as 1 Chron. 5. 10. Psal. 83. 6, &c. and by that name well known to many of the ancient Writers. A people for the most part of a vagabond and roguish life, more given to spoil, than any honest course of living, which made every Traveller and Merchant to be armed against them, so verifying the prediction which was given to Ismael, that he should be a wild man, having his hand against every man, and every man's hand against him. St. Hierom so conceives that Prophecy to have been accomplished. More fitly verified perhaps, when in and under the name of Saracens, (by which, and by the name of Scenites, they were most generally known to the Greeks and Romans) they made such foul havock in the world, and were esteemed the common Enemies of all civil Nations. Never so governable in their belt and most orderly times, as to acknowledge King or Law, till made one body with the Chusites, and the rest of those Nations: and then no further, than it stood with their lust or liking.

Fourthly, As for the Chusites, though they permitted the Nations above specified, to inhabit in those Deserts and waste places, which themselves either could not people, or cared not for; yet were they always of most power, and gave name to that whole tract of ground, containing now all Petrea, the South part of Deserta, and the Mountains which divide Petrea from Arabia Felix; which from them was called Chus, or the Land of Chus. Rendered in all places of the Old Testament by the name of Ethiopia, first by the Septuagint, and afterwards by all the Fathers Greek and Latin, the Vulgar Translation of the Bible, and almost all the other Translations at this day extant. And rendered right enough at first, as in all times since, though by some mistaken: who having never heard of any other Ethiopia than that in Affrick, have transferred thither all those actions and Texts of Scripture, which are meant of this. The Septuagint, no doubt, were not so ignorant of the affairs of their next neighbouring Nation, as not to know by what name they were called by the Greeks, their then Lords and Masters. And he that looks into the History of Herodotus, who lived 150 years before that Translation, will find, that by the Grecians they were called Ethiopians, and called so questionless from the self same reason, that is to say, the swarthyness, or Sun-burntness of their complexion, as the Ethiopians of Affrick were, that name being framed from the Greek word Αἴθρ, signifying to burn; and Οἴ, a countenance, by reason of their tawny and Sun-burnt Countenances. For speaking of the huge Army of Xerxes against the Greeks, he doth thus proceed, Ἀγασθον δὲ δ' Αἰθίοπων ἦν ὡς Ἀγασθον ὁμοῦ ἔργα Ἀγασθον, &c. Ἀρσames (saith he) was Captain of the Arabians (he meaneth the Troglodytes) and Ethiopians "which are beyond Egypt: but the Eastern Ethiopians" were ranked with the Indians, nothing differing from "the other in the structure of their bodies, but their" "hair and voice only; the Eastern Ethiopians wearing" "their hair smooth, those of Lybia curled. The Ethiopians" "of

"of Asia were armed like the Indians, but the Ethiopians" "of Africa were arrayed with the skins of Beasts. Here then we have an Asian Ethiopia in the time of Herodotus, the same acknowledged by Pausanias an old Greek Writer, and by Philostratus after him, though they look for it in the wrong place: the first amongst the Seres, in the North of Asia, the other on the River Ganges, too much in the East. Nor doth Aethiopia, one of the old Cosmographers, published by Simplicius, shoot more near the mark, who speaking of the River Tigris, saith that it burieth it self, and runneth under the ground in Ethiopia. Which though Simler doth interpret of these parts of Arabia; yet questionless that Author meaneth it of the Country about Mount Taurus, where that River doth indeed run under ground, and having passed under those vast Mountains, riseth up again.

But what need further search be made to find out the situation of this Ethiopia, when it is bounded out so plainly in the holy Scriptures? For when it is said of Zipporah the Wife of Moses, that she was an Ethiopian woman, Num. 12. 1. who is well known to have been a Native of this Country; and when it is said in 2 Chron. 21. 16. that the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians that were near the Ethiopians, it must needs be that the Ethiopia there spoken, must be conterminous to the rest of Arabia, and be intended of that Country wherein Madian was. So where God threatneth by the mouth of the Prophet Ezekiel, That he would lay waste the Land of Egypt, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the borders of Ethiopia, Chap. 29. 10. that is to say, from one end thereof unto the other, it followeth necessarily, that Ethiopia there meant, must be this part of Arabia, or the Land of Chus, as the bound of Egypt most remote from the Tower of Syene, which all Geographers acknowledge to be in the extreme South parts thereof towards the Cataracts of Nilus. For to expound it, as some do, of Ethiopia in Affrick on the borders whereof Syene stood, and stood so indifferently betwixt it and Egypt, that Stephanus, an ancient Writer, makes it very doubtful to which of the two it did belong, were to make the Scripture speak plain non sense: as plain as if a man should say, that the French conquered all the Neighbourlands from Graveling to Flanders; or that the Sword hath ranged over all England, from Brimwich to Scotland. As then we have found this Ethiopia of the Old Testament to be near the Philistines on the one side, and the Land of Egypt on the other; so may we find it to be bounded also on the East, with Babylonia or Chaldea: the River Gibon, which is said to compass the whole Land of Ethiopia, (or the Land of Chus, Gen. 2. 13. being no other than a branch of the River Euphrates, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea. So that the Translation of the Septuagint in reading Chusites, or the Land of Chus by Ethiopia, needs no such alteration or emendation as some men suppose. The mistakes (whereof there have been many) which arise from hence, not being to be charged on them, or on their Translation, but on the ignorance of the Reader, or Error of such Expositors, who dreaming of no other Ethiopia than of that in Affrick, have made the Scripture speak of such things as it never means, and carried these Chusites into the African Ethiopia, where they never were. And yet perhaps it may be said, that the posterity of Chus, being straitened in their own possessions, or willing to seek new adventures, might have crossed over the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia (being but seven miles broad where narrowest) and mingling with the Sons of Ludim on the other side, might either give the name of Ethiopians to them, or receive it from them.

Now to go forwards with the story, the first great action attributed to these Chusites, or Arabian Ethiopians, incorporated with the rest of those mingled Nations, is the expedition of Zerah the King hereof, against Asa King of Judah, drawing after him an Army of a Million, and 300 Chariots of War (the greatest Army ever read of in unquestioned story) but for all that, discomfited by the Lord of Hosts, on the prayers of Asa, and all the spoil of that huge Army carried unto Hierusalem. After this Tirhakah, another of these Ethiopian Kings, finding how dangerous the great growth of the Assyrian Kingdom might prove unto him, prepared a puissant Army against Sennacherib, then besieging Libna, threatening the conquest of all Judah, and invading Egypt: upon the news of whose approach, Sennacherib's forces, which were even upon the gaining of Pelusium, the Gate of Egypt, were fain to dilodge and provide for their safety. For though Herodotus call Sennacherib King of Arabia, and Assyria, yet was he Master only of those parts of Arabia, which had been formerly possessed by the Kings of Israel, being no more than some few Cities of Petrea, bordering next unto them: or perhaps called so only in respect of those parts of Syria & Mesopotamia, which were sometimes comprehended under the name of Arabia, as before is said. What part they after took in the great War betwixt Nebuchadnezzar, and Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, is not hard to say. For besides that the same Reasons of State, obliging them to side with the Egyptian, were still in force; their giving Necho leave to pass through their Country with his Army, to invade the Babylonians on the banks of Euphrates, make that plain enough. Now that both Tirhakah and Zerah were Kings of this Assan, and not the African Ethiopia, is most clear and evident; partly in regard the Kings of Egypt would never suffer such huge Armies to pass thorough the whole length of their Dominions: but principally because it is said in the holy Scriptures, that Asa having overthrown that vast Army of Zerah, smote all the Cities about Gerar, which formerly had belonged unto the Philistines, but were then possessed by these Chusites and their Associates. After this, either as Confederates or Subjects, we find them aiding unto Xerxes in his war on Greece: and like enough it was that in Alexander's March from Egypt towards Persia, they submitted to him, as did all the other Countries thorow which he passed. He being dead, Antigonus, one of his great Commanders, sent Athenians with an Army to bring them in, who being trained into an ambush was discomfited by them; Demetrius the son of Antigonus, thinking that he had done enough in revenge of that overthrow, by compelling them to sue for peace. In the time of the Seleucian Race in Syria, we find them governed by Kings of their own, most of them called by the name of Artus; of which one was of special note in the declining fortunes of the Seleucians, for bidding very fair for the Crown of that Country; and being a stickler in the Wars of Jemry, in the time of Hircanus the fourth King of the Race of the Maccabees, to whom at the Request of Antipater, the Father of Herod, he gave hopes of aid; and on those hopes was possessed of Medaba, and other Towns of good importance, which Alexander the Father of Hircanus had regained from the Syrians, and laid unto the Crown of Jemry, to which as parts of Iudaea, and anciently possessed by the Tribes of Issach, he might make some claim. Another there was of the same name, and of no less power, whom we find to have been warred upon by Herod, about the time of the battle of Actium, and for the most part vanquished by him; and finally a third of more power than either, mentioned by St. Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32. as Lord of Damascus. In the flourishing of the Roman fortunes, the King hereof having first added aided Mithridates and Tigranes, in the War against them, submitted themselves unto Lucullus, being then no nearer to them than Armenia Major. The like they did to Pompey also, being then in Judea. First vanquished by Julius Cæsar in the time of Augustus; but the Victory not improved to an absolute Conquest, till the time of Trajan, when partly by his personal presence, and partly by the valour and good fortune of Palma, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquished, and brought in to the form of a Roman Province: but so, that they had Kings of their own (Vassals and Feudatories of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the rise of Mahomet. Of which more hereafter.

3 ARABIA FELIX.

ARABIA FELIX, is bounded on the East, with the Persian; on the West, with the Arabian Gulf; on the North with a long ridge of Mountains, which part it from Deserta and Peetæa; and on the South with the boundless Ocean. Environed on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough, impassable Mountains; in situation and figure much resembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Felix from the fertility and happy condition of it, being esteemed the most fruitful & pleasant Country in all Asia, abounding with Myrrhe, Balsamum, Frankincense, Gold, and Precious Stones: by Curtius called Odorum fertillitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincense, wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a story, that when Alexander in his Adolescence or Boyage, was sacrificing to the gods, and cast into the fire with both hands great store of Frankincense and Myrrhe, Leonidas his Governour, bid him be more sparing of those precious and dear Commodities, till he was Master of the Country in which they grew. Which Alexander remembering, when he had brought almost all the East under his obedience, he sent unto Leonidas a Ship-laden with Frankincense, bidding him from thenceforth to serve the gods more liberally. But as well for the reason of this adjunct, as a more perfect character and description of it, take along this of Ammianus Marcellinus, who describes it thus: "On the East and South hereof (saith he) are the Happy Arabians: so called because so rich in Corn; as well as plenteous in Cattel, Vines, and Odoriferous Spices of all kinds; shut up betwixt the Red Sea, and the Persian Gulf, and so acquainted with all blessings, which either Element can afford: well furnished with Roads, and quiet Harbours for Shipping, the Towns of Trade and Merchandise standing very thick; the retiring Houses of the Kings, passing neat and sumptuous. Besides most wholsome Fountains of medicinal waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers very clear and pure, and a temperature of Air exceeding healthy; so that whosoever considereth all things aright, may well conclude, that there is nothing wanting to the accomplishment of its felicity in the highest degree. So Ammianus Marcellinus. To which we need add nothing more to set forth its happiness, than that Danew in his Comment on St. Augustin's Enchiridion ad Laurentium, is persuaded that it was the local place of Paradise. Dicitur (saith he) Paradisi terrestris Regio pars quedam esse Arabie, quæ nunc dicitur Fœlix. But it hath other names besides this of Felix. By the Arabians themselves called Jemen, and Al-jemen (Ayaman corrupted by the Turks) which in that tongue signifieth the South, or Southern Region. By Virgil it is named Panchaia, quasi tota debescens, because of the many chops and chinks which the ardour of the Sun makes in the Sands thereof, though by him much extolled also for its plenty of Frankincense.

Totaque thuriferis Panchaia pingis arena.
Famed are the whole Panchaia Lands,
For rich and Incense-bearing Sands.

The People anciently, though more civil than the rest of the Arabians, had yet many strange and barbarous customs. Adultery amongst them was punished with death, as in other places; but only he was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own kinswoman, be he his Sister or his Mother; and so they kept themselves in their own Families; Community of wives or women was esteemed no crime. And of this there is a Tale in Strabo, that the King of this Country had fifteen Sons, and but one Daughter, who according to the Customs hereof, was the common wife of all her brethren; every of which had a Staff of like making, which when he went in unto his Sister he did leave at the door; and by so doing did bid entrance unto the rest, till it were removed. The young Lady, wearied with a continual excess of dalliance, secretly procured a Staff like unto the rest, which when she was desirous to prohibit their accesses to her, she left at her Chamber-door; and by that means did many times enjoy her desired privacy. At last it hapned that all the Brothers being together, one of them departed towards his Sisters Lodging, where finding a Staff before the door, and knowing that he had his Brethren in one place together, he accused her of Adultery: but the truth being made known, the Lady was acquitted, and their visits afterwards restrained. Of dead Bodies they took no care, not so much as of their Chiefs or Princes; but left them to the custody of the next dung-hill. They bragged much of their descent from Jupiter; and neglected all Sciences & Arts, as disparagements to so great Nobility. Commendable only in the keeping of their faith and promises, and in that most punctual. Much of the same condition are the present Inhabitants, save that less faithful in their Contracts; and by their Law restrained from meddling with the wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themselves to the grazing of Cattel, and the rest to Merchandize, wherein very cautious and cunning; but hating to this day all Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others, till the coming of the Turks amongst them, of which but few, and those disposed of in Garrisons: boasting of their Nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greatest shame, namely that the false Prophet Mahomet was their Country-man; whose impieties are here generally embraced, and followed.

Amongst the rarities of this Country, some account the Phoenix, which growing old burneth her self in a nest of Spices, and from thence a young one ingendered; one of them only at a time, which after a life of five or six hundred years, thus reneweth her kind. But this tradition, questioned in former times by Pliny & some others, is now proved a Fiction; contrary both unto divinity & natural reason: though some of the Fathers made use of it as an argument to prove the Resurrection against the Gentiles, by whom the tradition was believed. More common, but of no less observation, is the Orych, a Bird which swalloweth all it findeth, be it Stones or Iron. They delight chiefly in the Deserts, in the sands whereof they lay their Eggs, and then forgetting where they left them, sit on those they meet next. In that respect accounted for a simple Fowl, though otherwise of wit enough to preserve themselves; keeping in flocks, and oftentimes with their fearful shrieces affrighting Passengers, to whom they do appear afar off like a Troop of Horsemen. Their wings, too little for their bodies, serve them not for flight, but to run more speedily; and by that means not easily caught, though much laid in wait for, for their Skins, which the People sell unto the Merchant with their Feathers on them. Nor of less note is the Frankincense, though of common use; almost peculiar to this Country, and here but to those parts thereof which were formerly possessed by the Sabei: the Wood out of which the Gum proceedeth, being about 100 miles long and 50 broad; gathered only in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

The Country is much commended by Ammianus for plenty of Rivers, the principal whereof are said by Plutarch to be, 1 Bitius, 2 Prion, 3 Harman, 4 Lar; but the modern names thereof I find not. Many fair Lakes, and store of large capacious Bays on each coast of the Sea, 1 Sinus Elaniticus, 2 Sacabulæ, 3 Leavitæ, 4 Sinus Magorum, 5 Sinus Gebithyphagorum, 6 Messanier, 7 Sacer Sinus, or the Holy Bay; and 8 The road or Naval-Station called Neogilla. Mountains of most note, 1 Those which are called Melanæ, at the entrance of the Persian Gulf, 2 Cabububra, at the entrance of the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia, 3 Hippus, 4 Prionotus, not far from the River Prion, from whence so denominated, 5 Climax, 6 The Mountains called Didymi, &c.

Towns of good note in ancient times it had very many, no Region affording unto Plutarch the names of more; and amongst those many commodious Ports for Traffick, the Sea begirting it for the space of 3000 miles and upwards. Of most importance and observation in those times were, 1 Zebrum, 2 Badeo, 3 Rhabana, 4 Carman, 5 Manambis, 6 Sabe, 7 Are; the Royal Seats of so many several Kingdoms, and therefore honoured by Plutarch with the Title of Regie. Then there are, 1 Masosmus, 2 Meara, 3 Negara, 4 Sabbatha, 5 Mapha, and 6 Saphar, which he called Metropoles; as being the head-Cities of some several Nations. Amongst the Ports he reckoneth, 1 Solippus, 2 Trulla, 3 Tretos, 4 Cryptus, 5 Bamor, and 6 Moscha. Amongst the most noted Empories of Towns of traffick, 1 Musa, 2 Oceanus, 3 Arabia, 4 Cane. Besides which there are some which do preserve the memory of their first Plantations, as 1 Saphra, upon the Persian Gulf, so from Sabia, the first Son of Chus, 2 Rbegama, or Regma (as the Greek Copies of Plutarch have it) so named from Regma or Raama the sixth Son; on the same Gulf also, 3 Sabe, on the Shores of the Red Sea. And 4 Sabe Regia, more within the Land, so named from Sheba the eldest Son of the same Chus, from which the rich and potent Nation of the Sabeans are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him named, we shall take more particular notice of some that follow. 1 Musa, a noted Port on the entrance of the Red Sea, frequented anciently by the Ethiopian and Egyptian Merchants: who there laded their Ships with Frankincense, Myrrhe, Spices, and other Commodities of this Country, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, Corn, Wine, Ointments, Purple Dyes, &c. 2 Sabe, the Regal Seat of the Kings of the Sabeans, particularly of that Queen so memorized in holy Scripture; called in the Old Testament the Queen of Sheba, from her Country and place of dwelling; in the New Testament the Queen of the South, because of the Southern situation of it in respect of Judea: said there to come from the furthest parts of the World, because there was no part of the World which lay South to the Country of the Sabeans, over which she reigned. Situate on a little Mountain, affirmed by Agatharides to be παρα πόλιν Ἰερὴν Ἀγρίαν, the most beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the rich and potent Nation of the Sabeans: rich in all the excellencies of Nature, especially in Frankincense, a Gum peculiar to them only, and growing here in a Wood of about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; not gathered but in the Spring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Country hereabouts from hence called Thurifera, and this sweet Gum appropriated solely to it: Sabei Arabum propter thura clarissimi, as we find in Pliny; Solis est thura virga Sabæis, as it is in Virgil; and finally, --- Thuriferos, fœlicia regna, Sabæos, in the Argonauticks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called also Mariaba, and by that name occurrieth in some ancient Writers. 3 Saphar, more towards the Persian Gulf, on the South-side of the Mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homertæ; adorned in times of Christianity with a beautiful Temple: 4 Sabbitha, or Sabota; as Pliny calleth it, seated about the middle of the Country, on the top of an high and lofty Hill, from whence it had a gallant prospect on the Fields adjoining: anciently large and populous, and strongly fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the Walls; the principal consecrated unto Sabis, the god of their Nation, to whom they offered the Tythe of their Frankincense, ubi decimas Deo quem Sabin vocant, mensura non pondere capunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny.

But these and almost all the rest being grown out of knowledge, there have risen in their rooms, 1 Egra, on the Shores of the Red Sea, near the Bay, called Sinus Elaniticus, by Plutarch called Agra, by the Arabians themselves Algair: the Port-Town to Medina, from which about three days Journey distant, 2 Jathrib, or Jathir, in the way betwixt Algair & Medina, the birth-place of Mahomet; by whom fortified with a mud-wall, as his place of retreat in the first beginning of his Fortunes. 5 Medina, commonly called Medina Talmabi; corruptly for Medina thalabi, that is to say the City of the Prophet, so called from the Sepulchre of Mahomet, that vile Impostor, which is there to be seen; although not in such an Iron Coffin, or drawn up to the roof of the Temple by vertue of an Adamant there placed, as some deliver. The Town situate in a desolate and barren place, bordering on Arabia Petrea; but of great Trade, rich, and well inhabited: the Sepulchre of that false Prophet drawing thither a continual resort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous, having 3000 Lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb enclosed with an Iron Grate, but of no magnificence or beauty: covered with a Carpet of green Velvet, which is sent thither yearly by the Grand Signeurs, the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable shreds or pieces, and sold for Relicks by the Priests (to such as come in Pilgrimage thither) to their great enriching. 4 Cufa, the ordinary Residence of the first Caliphs, till the removing of the Imperial Seat to Damascus in Syria; and after that the usual place of meeting for consultation in Affairs of State, relating to the peace of this Country, and the Common Interest of this People; as memorable for the Sepulchre of Moris Haki, the Progenitor of the Persian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mahomet. 5 Mecba, supposed to be the Mechara of Plutarch, situate in the like barren Soil, not far from Medina; but of far greater resort and traffick: the whole wealth in a manner of this Country, together with the Commodities of Persia and India, being first brought hither; and from hence on Camels backs transported into Egypt, Syria, Palestine, and other parts of the Turkish Empire. Unwalled, and either for that cause, or for concealment of their fopperies from the eyes of Christians, it is made death for any Christian to come within five miles of it. Utterly destitute of water, but what they keep in Cisterns, from one shower of rain to another, or else brought thither with great charge; otherwife pleasantly seated, rich, and containing about 6000 Families: Every year visited with three Caravans, or Troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damascus, and Grand Cairo: who having done their business and devotions there, go afterwards in Pilgrimage to Mecca also, to the great enriching of both places. 6 Ziddah, the Haven-Town to Mecca, from which distant about 40 miles; situate on the Red Sea, in a sandy soil, unwall'd, and much exposed to wind and weather; but wealthy, well-built, and of great resort. 7 Zebib, now the Metropolis of the Country, situate about half a days Journey from the Red Sea, in a large plain, between two Mountains; a Riveret of the same name passing by it: well-traded for Sugars, Spice and Fruits; the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom taken not long after Eden. 8 Elpor, a Port Town of this Country, and the only Town where the Christians are sufficent to inhabit. 9 Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, near the Straights called Bab Mandel; supplied by some to be the Madage of Ptolomy, but more agreeing in situation with the famous Empory by him called Arabia. The fairest Town of the whole Peninsula, of great strength, both by Art and Nature: well-traded, and well-fortified, having a large capacious Haven, seldom without good store of Shipping, and containing to the number of six thousand persons. Once a distinct Kingdom of it self, but treacherously surprized by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewith all the rest of the Country: made afterwards the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebib, are supposed to be no fewer than 3000 Timariots. 10 Oran, the Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 11 Thema, or Theman, the same, I take it, which our later Travellers call Zeman, situate more within the Land: affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, signified Tendeless, to be a Town of 15 miles square, but to have within the Walls thereof great quantity of Ground for Tillage. 12 Zarial, a retiring place of the Galibis, when they lived in this Country. 13 Hor, on the point or Promontory called Chordema, a Garrison not long since of the Kings of Ormus. 14 Muskat, on the Persian Gulf near the point of Land called Cape Rozelgate: opposite to Surra in the East India, and possessed by the Portugals, who have fortified it with a well-built Castle, for defence of their Ships and Frigots which frequent those Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormus by the Persians, many of the Inhabitants, whereof were since settled here. Of the Affairs of this Country we shall speak anon; having first took a brief view of the Islands which belong unto it.

4 The ARABICK ISLANDS.

THE ISLANDS which lie round about the Shores of Arabia Felix, and have been anciently accounted as parts thereof, are dispersed either in the 1 Red Sea, 2 Southern Sea, or, 3 the Gulf of Persia.

I. THE RED-SEA (called also by the Ancients Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean, which interposeth it self betwixt Egypt on the West; Arabia Felix, and some parts of Petra, on the East; the North-East bound of it touching upon Idumea, or the Coast of Edom. Extended in length from the Town of Suez, anciently called Arsinoe, in the bottom of it, to the Straights of Bab Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean, for the space of one thousand and four hundred miles: in breadth, for the most part, but one hundred, but in some places almost two; the Straights themselves not being above a mile and an half, anciently chained by the Kings of Egypt, as is said by Strabo; but now left open by the Turk, who is Lord thereof. A violent and iniquitous Sea, full of Sands and Shelves; inasmuch as they who pass in and out, are fain to make use of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the channel. Sufficiently famous in all times and Stories, for the miraculous passage of the Children of Israel, and the drowning Pharaoh King of Egypt.

It took the name of the Red Sea, as some conceived, from the redness of the Sands; as others have delivered, from the redness of the Waters: but latter observations have discovered the weakness and absurdity of these Etymologies; the Sea and Sands being coloured here as in other places. By the Grecians it was called Erythraean, which in that Tongue signifieth Red also, not from the colour either of the Sands or Waters, but from one Erythra, supposed to be the Son of Perseus and Andromeda, who commanded the Eastern Shores hereof. And these come nearer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, because it took beginning on the Coasts of that Country: which word in the Hebrew signifying Red, as appeareth Gen. 25.30. first given as a nick-name to Esau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the Land of Edom, Gen. 36.31. was by the Greeks rendered Erythraean, and Mare Rubrum by the Latins. Whence the name of the Red Sea became known to all, but the reason of the name to few.

Of the great traffic which was anciently driven up this Sea, we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Egypt, on the other side of it. Look we now on the Islands which belong to Arabia, as they all generally do, known in the times of Ptolomy by the names of 1 Adani, 2 Anis, 3 Ars, 4 Cardamine, 5 Combusta, 6 Damannu, 7 Hieracum, or the Isle of Hawks, 8 Malia, 9 Polybi, 10 Socraia, 11 Timagenis, and 12 Zygena. But by what names now called, and of what note then, is a thing so doubtful, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almost all of them to be small, desolate, or but meanly inhabited, described by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeness, said to be an hundred twenty and five miles long, though but twelve broad, called Dalagua; with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls. 2 Then there is Camaran, most extremely hot, of most note for the many spoils there made by the Portugals. 3 Xamoa, the Earth whereof is said to be Red (perhaps to countenance the vulgar Tradition, of calling this the Red Sea from the colour of the Sands or Shores) and the King a Moor. 4 The Samaritan Island, spoken of by Scalliger, inhabited by a remainder of that people, who as soon as they saw any Stranger land upon their Coasts, would most religiously desire him not to touch them. Such other Islands as lie upon the opposite Shores; and seem to appertain unto Ethiopia shall find their place in our Description of the African Islands.

II. THE SOUTHERN OCEAN, comprehendeth that vast body of Waters, which from the Eastern Banks of both Ethiopia's, coast along on the South of Arabia Felix, and so directly Eastward, to the furthest India: in this regard called by some Writers Oceanus Indicum, by others Mare Australe, from the situation; and by some also Mare Rubrum, or the Red-Sea, from Erythra, a great King (as they suppose) reigning hereabouts, and giving name not only to the Red-Sea (or Gulf of Arabia) strictly and specially so called, but to all the Sea-coasts also, from the opening of the Bay of Arabia, to the Coasts of India, by them called Mare Erythraeanum.

In

In this vast Ocean Ptolomy placeth many Islands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. two Islands by the name of Insula Agathocle. 2 Three more by the name of Cocconati. 3 Diofcoris, by Pliny called Diofcurias, with a City of the same name in it. 4 Seven others in the Bay called Sinus Sacabites, by the name of Zen bii. 5 Organa, by Strabo called Tyrrina, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythras before-mentioned, being a great Hill planted with Trees. 6 Serapias, by Ammianus Marcellinus called Turgana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Egyptian Idol. None of them now of any credit, nor formerly of any great note, the two last excepted.

III. On the East-side of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Persia, lieth another large Arm of the Southern Ocean, anciently called Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia, now Golfo di Elkanisse. A turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end, and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combatting or clashing of which two great waters, make it so unquiet. Ptolomy placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia) 1 Tylus, which Arianus sets at the mouth of Euphrates, Solinus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well stored with Vines and Olives: another of this name being placed by Theophrastus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place mistaken) affording good Materials for Shipping. 2 Apphans, 3 Tharo, 4 Ichara, of which nothing memorable. To these some late Travellers have adjoyned two others, that is to say, 5 Bayren, and 6 Goufiar, where they take the best Pearls in the world, in beds of Oysters. Other Islands of this Bay (if any) belong to Persia; where, if occasion so require, we shall speak more of them.

To return therefore to the main Land of Arabia Felix, the first Inhabitants thereof were the Sons of Chus, and the Families which they brought with them. Their memories preserved in the names of some of the chief Towns and Nations, till the days of Pliny, Ptolomy, and some other of the ancient Writers. Divided afterwards into the several Tribes or Septs of the Cassianite, Cinedolpita, Homerite, Adramite, Elfari, Sacabite, Anarite, Geret, Egei, Sabai, Minei, Leaniite, Catlabani, Abuceni, and divers others: each governed separately and apart by their several Chiefs; whom they honoured, as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which spoken of by Justine, named Hierotimus, is said to be the Father of 500 Children. Easie to have been overcome, because so divided, if any potent Neighbour had attempted the Conquest of them: as it is wondrous strange they did not, considering the richness of the Country, and the many temptations which they had to invite them to it. More worthily deserving the name of Felix, in that never conquered, than in all the other Rarities and Delights thereof. By Alexander once designed for the Seat of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the Conquest of it, having finished his War against the Persians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petra, though once Augustus did attempt it; employing in that Action Largus, his Lieutenant in Egypt: one Sames being then King of those parts which lay nearest to him. The Romans at their first entry found no resistance: but when by the extraordinary heat of the air, and drinking salt waters, they began to grow sickly and diseased, the Arabians fell lustily upon them, and made them return back both with loss and shame. After this nothing done by the Romans, to disturb their quiet; nor much done by the Christians, to advance their glories: the whole divided into almost as many Religions, as Principalities and Estates. Most of them Gentiles, but circumcised, as the Ismaelites, and other Arabians had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and some store of Christians; but those divided also into Sects and Factions. And in this state it stood, when Mahomet first began to broach his blasphemous doctrine. By birth of Yathrib, an obscure Village then not far from Medina: his Father called Abdalla, an Idolatrous Pagan; his Mother named Hemina, as perverse a Jewess. Deprived of both his Parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an Uncle: who not able to give him education, nor willing to be at the charge to keep him longer, fold him at sixteen years of age to the Ismaelites; by whom exposed to sale in the open Markets, he was bought by one Abdalmutalifa, a wealthy Merchant. By him employed at first in Drudgery, and servile Offices, till noting his great wit, and fitness for better Services, he at last used him as his Factor: sending him with his Camels and Loads of Merchandise into Syria, Persia, Egypt, and other places, wherein he did behave himself with such dexterity, that he much encreased his Master's wealth, and his own estimation. Of person he is said to be low, and withal scald-headed; but otherwise comely to the eye, and of good aspect. Much troubled with the Falling Sickness, which infirmity he made good use of afterwards affirming that those Fits were nothing but heavenly Raptures, in which he did converse with the Angel Gabriel. He is said to have been also well skilled in Magick, by which he taught a white Pidgeon to feed at his ear, which he gave out to be the H. Ghost, by whom he was instructed in the Law which he was to publish: but this not till afterwards. By Sorceries, comeliness of person, and the great knowledge which he had in his Master's business, he gained so far on the Affections of his Mistress, that on the death of Abdalmutalifa, she made him her Husband. Possessed of all his Master's Wealth, he affected ease: and being till then of no Religion, or at best a Pagan; he began to hearken unto Sergius, a Nestorian Monk: who flying out of Syria for fear of punishment (the Heresies of Nestorius being newly both revived and censured) came into Arabia; where he found entertainment in the House of Abdalmutalifa, the Master of Mahomet. By his persuasions, who found him a fit Instrument for the Devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of hammering out a New Religion, which might unite all Parties in some common Principles, and bring the Christians, Jews, and Gentiles (into which the World was then divided) under one Profession. Resolved on this, he retired himself unto a Cave not far from Mecca, as if he there attended nothing but Meditations: Sergius in the mean time foundling in the ears of the People, both his Parts and Piety. The People being thus prepared to behold the Pagan, out comes the principal Actor with some parts of his Alcoran (pleasing enough to sensual minds) which he professed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edified to his expectation, he next proclaimed Liberty to all Slaves and Servants, as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the Natural Liberty of Mankind was most dearly tendered: which drew unto him such a rabble of unruly people, that without fear or opposition, he dispersed his Doctrines, reducing them at last to a Book or Method.

The Book of this Religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to say, the Collection of Precepts: the Original whereof they feign to be written on a Table which is kept in Heaven, and the Copy of it brought to Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. A Book so highly revered by the Mahometans, that they write upon the Cover of it, Let none touch this but he that is clean. The body of it (as it now standeth) was composed by Osman the fourth Caliph, who seeing the Saracens daily inclining to divers Heresies by reason of some false Copies of Mahomet's Law, and that the Empire by the same means was likely to fall into civil diffention; by the help of his Wife, who was Mahomet's Daughter, he got a sight of all Mahomet's Papers, which he reduced into four Volumes, and divided into one hundred twenty and four Chapters; commanding expressly upon pain of death, That that Book, and that only, should be received as Canonical through his Dominion. The whole body of it is but an Exposition and Gloſs on the eight Commandments.

1 Every one ought to believe that God is a great God, and one only God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. They hold Abraham to be the Friend of God; Moses the Messenger of God; and Christ, the Breath of God: whom they deny to be conceived by the Holy Ghost, affirming that the Virgin Mary grew with child of him by smelling to a Rose, and was delivered of him at her Breasts. They deny the Mystery of the Trinity; but punish such as speak against Christ, whose Religion was not (say they) taken away, but mended by Mahomet. And he who in his Pilgrimage to Mecca, doth not, coming or going, visit the Sepulchre of Christ, is reputed not to have merited, or bettered himself any thing by his Journey.

2 Every man must marry, to increase the Soldiers of Mahomet. Four Wives he alloweth to every man, and as many Concubines as he will; between whom the Husband setteth no difference, either in affection or Apparel; but that his Wives only can enjoy his Sabbath Benevolence. The Women are not admitted in the time of their lives to come into their Churches; nor after death, to Paradise: And whereas in most or all other Countries, Fathers give some Portions with their Daughters, the Mahometans give money for their Wives, which being once paid, the Contract is registered in the Cadie's Book; and this is all their formality of Marriage. More of this Theme we shall speak hereafter, when we are in TURCOMANIA, and among the Turks.

3 Every one must give of his wealth to the Poor. Hence you shall have some buy Slaves, and then manumit them; buy Birds, and then let them fly. They use commonly to free Prisoners, release Bond-slaves, build Caves or Lodgings in the ways for the relief of Passengers, repair Bridges, and mend High-ways. But their most ordinary Alms consist in Sacrifices of Sheep or Oxen, which, when the Solemnity is performed, they distribute among the poor; to whom also, on the first day of every year, they are bound to give the Tithes or tenth part of their Gettings in the year foregoing: inſomuch that you shall hardly find any Beggars amongst them.

4 Every one must make his Prayers five times a day. When they pray, they turn their bodies towards Mecca, but their faces sometimes one way, sometimes another way, believing that Mahomet shall come behind them, being at their devotions. The first time is an hour before Sun-rising; the second, at noon-day; the third, at three of the clock after-noon; the fourth, at Sun-setting; the fifth and last before they go to sleep. At all these times the Cryers kept a bawling in the Steeples (for the Turks and Saracens have no Bells) for the people to come to Church. And such as cannot come, must when they hear the voice of the Cryers, fall down in the place where they are, do their devotions, and kiss the ground thrice.

5 Every one must keep a Lent one month in a year. This Lent is called Ramazan, in which they suppose the Alcoran was given unto Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. This Fast is only intended in the day time, the Law giving leave to frolick it in the night as they best please, for they abstain from Wine and Swines flesh; prohibited in their Law at all times; but never so punctually abstained from, as in the time of their Lent.

6 Be obedient to thy Parents. Which Law is the most neglected of any in all the Alcoran, never any Children being so unnatural as the Turks.

7 Thou shalt not kill. And this they keep inviolated among themselves; but the poor Christians are sure to feel the smart of their fury. And as if by this Law the actual shedding of blood only were prohibited, they have invented punishments for their Offenders, worse than death it self. As first, the Strappado, which is hanging of them by the Arms drawn backwards: when they are so bound, they are drawn up on high, and let down again with a violent swing, which joinyunteth all their back and Arms. Secondly, They use to hoist up their heels, and with a great Cudgel to give them three or four hundred blows on the soles of their feet. Thirdly, It is ordinary to draw them naked up to the top of a Gibbet or Tower, full of hooks, and cutting the Rope, to let them fall down again; and by the way they are caught by some of the hooks, where they commonly hang till they die for hunger.

8 Do unto others as thou wouldest be done unto thy self. To those that keep these Laws he promiseth Paradise, a place of all Delights, adorned with flowery Fields, watered with Chryſtalline Rivers, beautified with Trees of Gold, under whose cool shade they shall spend their time with amorous Virgins, whose Mansion shall not be far distant. The men shall never exceed the age of thirty, nor the women of fifteen; and those to have their Virginities renewed, as fast as lost.

Friday he ordained to be the Sabbath-day, partly to distinguish his Followers from the Jews and Christians, who solemnize the days ensuing; but principally, because he was on that day proclaimed King or Emperor, and solemnly so created. Wine and Swines-flesh are the principal things forbidden by the Alcoran: from the last whereof they all unanimously refrain; but on the first they are so sorted, that when they come at it, they seldom go home again unled; inſomuch that all the Wines in Constantinople have been thrown about the Streets, and death made the penalty for any that will presume to bring any more into the City. Mahomet taught them, That every one should be saved by his own Religion; him only excepted, that revolted from the Alcoran unto another Law: but so, that under the notion of Religion, he means only such as worship the one and only God, excluding by that means the old Idolaters of the Gentiles from the hopes of Salvation. And he taught too, That at the end of the World, all men that professed any such Religion should go into Paradise; the Jews under the Banner of Moses, the Christians under the Banner of Christ, and the Saracens under the Banner of Mahomet. They compel no men therefore to abjure the Faith in which he was born, but commend and approve secretly such as they find zealous and constant in their own Religion; yet holding it an especial honour to have daily new Proselytes, they incite them by hope of freedom and preferment, which with many are motives too much prevailing. Hence I have heard many say, That it is better for a man that would enjoy Liberty of Conscience, to live in the Countries professing Mahometanism than Papistry: for in the one he shall never be free from the bloody Inquisition; in the other he is never molested, if he middle not with their Law, their women, or their Slaves.

The Opinions which they hold concerning the end of the World, are very ridiculous; as that at the winding of of a Horn, not all flesh only, but the Angels themselves shall die: that the Earth with an Earthquake shall be kneaded together like a lump of dough; that a second blast of the same Horn, shall after forty days restore all again; that Cain shall be the Captain or Ringleader of the damned, who shall have the countenance of dogs and swine; that they shall pass over the bridge of Justice, laden with their sins in fatchels; that the great sinners shall fall into hell, the lesser into Purgatory only; with a thousand like fopperies: which it is needless to add here, considering that the Alcoran it self is now extant in English, and every one that lists may read it. A thing so full of Tautologies, incoherencies, and such gross absurdities, of so impure and carnal mixture, that he must lay aside the use of his natural reason, who is taken by it, if force, ambition, or the want of Christian education do not lead him on. For if we seriously look into the causes of the deplorable increase and long continuance of this Religion, we shall find them to be chiefly these, 1 The greatness of the Victories gotten by the Saracens, who easily compelled the conquered Nations to receive their Law. 2 The great zeal and diligence of the Arabians themselves, who being a numerous people, and much given to Merchandize, have possessed themselves of all the Sea-Coasts of Africa, from the Straights of Babel Mandel, almost as far as to the Cape of Good Hope; of all the Islands in those Seas, and many Faſtories and good Towns on the Coasts of India: in all which they have settled their Religion also, as a thing inseparable from their Nation. 3 A peremptory restraint of all disputation in any point of Religion whatsoever it be. 4 The suppressing of Philosophy, and the study of Humane Sciences; the light whereof might easily detect the grossness of their Superstitions. 5 The sensual liberty allowed of having variety of Wives, and as many Concubines as they are able to keep. 6 The promise of the like sensual pleasures in the other world, with which a sense not illuminated with the Spirit of God, doth for the most part use to be more affected, than with the speculative hope of spiritual happiness. 7 The forbidding of Printing and printed Books, by which the people might come to see the verity and purity of the Christian Faith; the falshood and impurity of the Law of Mahomet. These last not useful, or at least not able to induce belief, if the first had not opened and prepared the way.

For indeed force of Arms was the strongest Argument by which Mahomet himself confirmed, and his Successors in their times have since propagated and dispersed his Doctrine. Strengthened by the report of that rufcal Rabble, which repaired to him, he assaults Medina, pretending a quarrel to the Jews, who had there a Synagogue. Repelled at first with loss of men, and a wound in his face, by which some of his fore-teeth were beaten out; there likely to have made an end of his new Religion, if not recovered by his Soldiers for a further mischief. At the next onset he prevailed, the Battle being fought near a place called Bedez, situate betwixt Mecca and Medina, frequently mentioned in the Alcoran. After which fight he took the City, converting the Synagogue to a Temple for his own impieties: the news whereof so startled the Phylarche, or Nobility of Mecca, that they armed all their Powers against him, and sped so well in the beginning of the War, that they drove him forcibly from their Territories; which not long after he subdued, and set his chief seat at Mecca. From that his sight, the Saracens began their Computation of years (as we from CHRIST'S Nativity) which they call the Hegira; which begioneth about the year of our Redemption 617. Concerning which time I cannot but observe, that Mahomet compelled his devilish Doctrine, beginning his Empire; and Boniface the third assumed his Antichristian title, beginning his unlimited Supremacy nigh about the same year. It was called the Hegira, from the Arabick Hegirabi, which by the Learned in that Tongue, is rendered by Stygus & the Synodus; i. e. the persecution raised about Religion. Joseph Scaliger in the first Edition of his most glorious work De emendatione temporum, casteth off this Etymology with parum putum mendacium. He will not have it called Era fuge or persecutionis, but Era Hagerena; because forthwith the Arabians were by some called Hagerens. I believe it would have puzzled Joseph, with all his reading, to shew unto us any Epoche or Era, which is taken from the name of a Nation. And therefore other reason he giveth us none but this; Nos autem scimus vocem illam primogeniam significationis ab Hagerenis, non a fuga duci. But time and opposition, at the last reclaimed him from this Error; and in the second Edition of his Work, he is content to follow the common opinion of those men, whom in the first he whistled off with the infamous appellation of mendaces.

But to proceed, It hapned much about this time, that the Saracens revolting from Heraclius the Eastern Emperor, joyned themselves unto him. They had long been displeased with their condition, and now hoped to mend it. Exasperated by Julian the Apostate, when they served in his Wars against the Persian, for telling them when they demanded their pay, that he had more store of Steel than Gold: but then they wanted a fit head to resort unto. Now serving Heraclius in the same War, they were used by his Officers in the same ill manner. Asking their pay, the Treasurer of the Army made them this churlish answer, that there was scarce money enough to pay the Roman and Grecian Soldiers; and must those Dogs be so importunate, for their Wages? Provoked herewith, and hearing the same of Mahomet, they betook themselves to him: who strengthened by their Forces, and the coming in of the rest of their Country-men soon brought the three Arabias under his subjection. To which, having defeated the Emperours Forces sent against him, he added some parts of Syria and Egypt; and returning to Mecca, there died frantick and distempered, in the seventieth year of his Age, and three and twentieth of his Impiety: of which he had spent thirteen at Medina, and the rest at Mecca. His dead body being kept four days in expectation of a Resurrection, which he promised to perform at the end of three; grown full of stench and putrefaction, was carried to Medina, and there interred: his Successors out of wicked and worldly policy, keeping up the reputation of that Religion after his decease, which they derided in his life; and calling themselves Caliphs, and Vicars General, to him, their Prophet, to the Catalogue of which we hasten; made intricate, not more by their own confusions, than by the difference of those names by which they are presented to us by several Writers: according to the times and Languages in which they writ.

The Caliphs or Emperours of the Saracens.

A.C. A.H.

- 622 5 1 Mahomet the Impostor, of whom before.
632 15 2 Ebubazer, or Uqubar, Mahomet's Father in-law, and one of his Great Captains, supplanted Ali, to whom the Empire was designed by the will of Mahomet; and took unto himself the name of Caliph. 2
634 17 3 Hammar, the second of Mahomet's Great Captains, having the Command of the Army under Ebubazer, succeeded him in the Empire; and added to it Persia, Egypt, O 2

- Egypt, Palestine*, with great part of Syria and Mesopotamia, 12.
- 947 30 4 Osman, the third of Mahomet's Great Captains, Husband of Zeineb, his second Daughter; succeeded under that pretence, and added all Barbary to his Empire. Distressed by the faction of Hali, and besieged in his own house, he slew himself in the eighty seventh year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign.
- 657 40 5 Hali, the Kinsman and next heir of Mahomet, and the Husband of Fatime his eldest Daughter, succeeded on the death of Osman: murdered by the procurement of Muhavir, near Cusa, in Arabia Felix.
- 660 43 6 Muhavir, having murdered Hali, his Son Hafem, or Osman, and eleven of the Sons of that Hafem, the twelfth only escaping with life (from whom descended the Family of the Alavici, and the Persian Sophies) assumed the Government as rightful Successor to Osman, whose Widow, the daughter of Mahomet, he had took to wife. He conquered Rhodes, Cyprus, and a great part of Asia Minor; and was the Founder of the Family of Aben Humeya.
- 681 64 7 Gizid, the Son of Muhavir, more skilled in Poetry than in Arms.
- 8 Habdalla and Marwan, Competitors for the Supreme Dignity; but carried at last by Marwan.
- 685 68 9 Abimelech, the Son of Marwan, established the begun Conquests of Armenia, and Mesopotamia, 22.
- 707 90 10 Ulidor Uli, under whom the Saracens or Moors first conquered Spain, 9.
- 716 99 11 Zalcimin, Brother to Uli, whose Captain Mulsumus besieged Constantinople, till his Ships were burnt, and his Men consumed with the Plague, 3.
- 719 102 12 Humar, or Humar II. Son of Ulidor Uli, 2.
- 721 104 13 Isid, or Gizid II. the brother of Humar, with whom during his life he was joyned Caliph, and after his decease enjoyed it wholly to himself.
- 725-107 14 Evelid, by some called Ischam, in whose time Charls Martel made such havock of the Moors in France, Anno 734. their General then named Abderamen, 18.
- 743 125 15 Gizid III. the son of Gizid the second.
- 744 126 16 Hyses, by some called Ibrahim, the brother of Gizid the third, slain by Marwan.
- 745 127 17 Marwan II. the last of the house of Ben-humeya, slain by Abdalla, of the house of Fatime and Hali.
- 752 134 18 Abdalla, of the house of Alavici, or Alabeci, descended from Hali and Fatime, the eldest daughter of Mahomet; called also the Family of Abas, because of their descent from Abas the Uncle of Mahomet, and perhaps Father unto Hali.
- 756 138 19 Abdalla II.
- 20 Mahomet II. surnamed Bugiafer, or Abugefer, who built the City of Bagdet, made from that time the constant seat of his Successors till their fatal period.
- 777 156 21 Mabadi, 9.

- 786 168-22 Musa, or Moyfes, 1.
- 787 169 23 Aron, or Arachid, who compelled Irene Empress of Constantinople, to pay him tribute, 23.
- 810 193 24 Mahamad, or Mahomet III.
- 825 198 25 Abdalla III. who took and spoiled Crete, and overthrew the Greeks; he also spoiled Sicilia, Sardinia, and Corfica, 17.
- 832 215 26 Mahomet IV. wasted Italy, burnt the Suburbs of Rome, and harassed the forenamed Islands, 40.

Others reckon these Caliphs to have succeeded Mahomet the second.

- 815 198 25 Mamon, 12.
- 827 210 26 Musezcam, 8.
- 835 218 27 Wack, 4.
- 839 222 28 Methucal, 12.
- 851 234 29 Montacer, 1.
- 852 352 30 Abul Hamet, 6.
- 858 241 31 Almatex, 4.
- 863 245 39 Mosadi Bila, 7. After whose death, the Egyptians withdrew themselves from their obedience due to the Babylonian Caliph, and chose one of their own, to whom all the Arabians and those of the Mahometan Religion, in Africa and Europe, submitted themselves. Of the Egyptian Caliphs, when we come into that Country. Take now with you the names only of the Syrian and Babylonian Caliphs; for story of them I find little or none, the power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the several Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an airy title, the shadow of that mighty Tree, which formerly had spread itself over most part of the World.

- 1218 597 19 Taber.
- 20 Mustetazor.
- 1255 638 21 Mustazem, the last Caliph, or High Priest of the Saracens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the account of a Prince or Emperour; or looked on as the Supreme Lord of the Saracen Empire: starved in his Castle of Bagdet, and his whole posterity rooted out by Allan, or Haallon the Tartar, in the first year of his reign. Yet there is still remaining a carcass of the old body, one whom they call Caliph, at whose hands the neighbour Princes use to receive their Diadems and Regalities; for so we find that Solyman the magnificent, after his conquest of Chaldea, Mesopotamia, and Assyria, to have been by one of these poor titular Caliphs, Crowned King of Babylon, Anno 1513.

This unwieldy body of the Saracen Empire, having thus two heads, began apparently to decline: losing to the Kings of Oviedo and Navarre, a great part of Spain; to the Genoese, Sardinia, and Corfica; to the Norman, Naples, and Sicily; and finally most of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Allan, or Haallon, a Tartarian Captain, starved Mustazem the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his Posterity, (as before was said:) and Sarracon the first Turkish King of Egypt, brained the last Egyptian Caliph with his Horsemen's Mace; leaving not one of Issue or Kindred surviving. The office of the Caliphs (as to matters which concern their irreligion, and the supreme determination of the doubts and controversies which occur therein) being now executed in the Turks Dominion, by the Mufiy, or Chief Priest of the Turkish Mahometans.

As Mars shewed himself a friend unto those Saracens, in their wars and triumphs; so also did Phabus pour down no less Celestial influence, on such as addicted themselves to Scholarship. Bagdet in Chaldea, Cairoan, Fesi, Morocco, in Barbary; and Corduba in Spain, were their Universities: out of which came the Philosophers, Avicene, and Averroes; the Physicians, Rhasis, and Mesue; the Geographers, Leo and Abulfada; and almost all the Textuaries and profound Writers, (as Hali, Algazel, Albumazar, &c.) in Astrology, from whom a great part of our Astronomical and Astrological terms are borrowed.

There is now no Kingdom, Island, or Province which acknowledge the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdom of Fesi and Morocco only: Arabia it self, the very first seat of their power, acknowledging a subjection to the Turkish Empire. For first Petrea, and Deserta, being subdued by the Turks, when they conquered Persia, or otherwise following the fortunes of the present Victor, were afterwards accounted of as subject unto the Mamuliks of Egypt, who out of that Country and all Syria, had by degrees dispossessed the Seljuccian Family. And as the Vassals of that Crown, though but Subjects at will, they more molested Selimus in his march towards Egypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their night-Alarms, than all the Forces of the Mamuliks, in the field against him. But Egypt being subdued, and the Mamuliks utterly destroyed, some of their Chiefs being gained by money, and the rest by promise of preferment; the whole Nation of these wild Arabs swore allegiance to him: continuing in account as subject unto his Successors, but in effect doing what they list; governed as formerly by the Chiefs of their several Clanners, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turk than they do of the Christians. And as for Felix, it continued also in a free condition, in respect of any foreign power; till of late times the Turks and Portugals entrenched upon them. For in the year 1538, Solyman Bassa, Admiral of the Turkish Fleet against the Portugals, who had diverted the trade of the Red Sea, and otherwise given offence to Solyman the magnificent, by aiding the Persians, went with a strong Army to take Diu, a Town and Island of East India, then in their possession. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the best traded Ports of Arabia Felix, invited the King thereof aboard; most treacherously hanged him, and surprized the City. The like he also did to the King of Zibet, the Port Town to Mecca; and by that means got possession of all the Coasts of this Country, bordering on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; of which the Turks still continue Masters. But in the Inland parts, and towards the Persian Gulf, of no power at all; not suffered to travel up and down without a Pas, from some of the Arabian Chiefs; or if they do, in danger to be set upon by the Natives, who brook them not. Some parts hereof which lie next unto the Isle of Ormus, made one Kingdom with it; but the Kings originally of this Country, by whom the City of Ormus was first builded: and so continued till the taking of Ormus by the Portugals, Anno 1622. who since the taking of that Isle by the King of Persia, hold Muskabar, and some other pieces upon this Continent. The residue of the Country cantoned amongst a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before ambition taught them to devour one another.

And so much for ARABIA.

CHALDEA.

6 CHALDEA. 7 ASSYRIA. 8 MESOPOTAMIA.

These Provinces, which properly and originally constituted the Assyrian Empire, I have joyned together in the Title, because united in the Story and Affairs thereof though severally to be considered in the Description and Chorography of them.

6 CHALDEA.

CHALDEA is bounded on the East, with Susiana, a Province of Persia; on the West, with Arabia Deserta; on the North, with Misopotamia; and on the South, with the Persian Bay, and the rest of Deserta. Originally called Chasdim from Chesed the fourth Son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. Chesed quoque quartus est, a quo Chasdim, id est, Chaldei postea vocati sunt, as St. Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans should derive their name from Chesed, being a People long before Chesed's birth, I am not able to determine: unless he taught them the first Principles of the Art of Astronomy; or was the Author of some signal benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia: from Babylon the chief City of it; and at this day by Belonius, Azanian; by the Arabians, Keldan; by the Turks, Curdistan.

But the name of Chaldea sometimes went beyond those bounds, taking in some part also of Mesopotamia, as appeareth by that passage of St. Stephen, saying, Acts 7. 2. 3. 4. That the God of glory appeared to our Father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; and said unto him, Get thee out of this Country, and from thy Kindred, and come into the Land which I shall shew thee. Then he came out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Mesopotamia, which lay next unto Assyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the name of Chaldea, or the Land of the Chaldees. Which I desire the Reader to take notice of, because I must make use of this observation in another place.

The Country by Herodotus said to be so fruitful, that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred fold; the blades of Wheat and Barley being (as he affirmeth) four fingers broad. By Pliny it is said of the Babylonians, that they mowed their Corn twice, and seeded it a third time, or else it would be nothing but blades: and yet so, that the worst of their Land yielded fifty, and their best an hundred-fold increase. Nar is the nature of the soil so altered in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have observed) it would in all likelihood attain to its first fertility, if it were ordered with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be said as to the natural fruitfulness and delights of this Country, than that it pleased God Almighty to make choice of some part hereof for the Terrestrial Paradise or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our Father Adam, at his first Creation. For there that Paradise, by men both skilled in Divinity and Geography, is affirmed to have stood. Yet amongst all sorts of Writers we find different opinions. Some make Paradise to be a place of pleasure, and the four Rivers to be the four Cardinal Vertues; but these Allegories on the Scripture are unwarrantable. Others place it in the air, under the Circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence, and running all under the Ocean, rise up again in those places where they are now found: but this is to vain a foppery, that I will not honour it with a consultation. Such as make Paradise local, are divided also into three ranks (for I omit the rest) whereof some place it under the Equator, but this agreeth not with the bounds prescribed by the Holy Ghost. Some conceive the four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates, Nilus, and Ganges; and that Paradise was the whole world; but this cannot be: for then when Adam was driven out of Paradise, it must all follow that he was driven out of the world, which were most absurd. Those of the soundest judgments place it here, in an Island which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and some branches running from them both: the uppermost of which is called Pison, (falsely rendered Ganges) which watereth the Land of Havilah, or that part of the Land of Havilah, which is now called Chusistan, or Susiana, a Province of Persia; and the lowermost is named Gihon, (improperly by some translated Nilus) which compasseth the East parts of Arabia Petrea, by the Septuagint for the reasons above mentioned, rendered Ethiopia. And this agreeth both with the position of this Country, and the course of those Rivers. For that Tigris and Euphrates (which the Hebrew Text called Hiddekel, and Perath) do here joyn their streams, is confessed on all sides. Then as for Pison, it is no other than that River by Ptolemy, called Basilus, or Regius; by Curtius more nearly Piso-Tigris, or Pasi-Tigris, Pervenit ad fluvium, Pasi-Tigrin incolæ vocant, as his own words are. A little stream, which watereth the Land of Havilah, or the Country of the Chavelei, or Chaulasiei, (for by these several names they are called amongst the Ancients, who place them betwixt the Babylonians, and the Nabatæans an Arabian people) poureth it self into the Tigris, and falls together with it into the Gulf of Persia. And finally for Gihon, by Ptolemy called Maor-Sares, and by others Marfyrus, it is no other than a branch of Euphrates, which watereth the Land of Chus, or Ethiopia Asiatica, take which name you will, loseth it self at last in the Lakes of Chaldea.

But though in general the Country was extremely fruitful, yet in some places was it covered with a slimy matter, which the overflowing of the waters, and the nature of the soil together, did bring forth abundantly. Used by them in their buildings, instead of Mortar, than which more durable and binding; and therefore chosen for the Cement of the Tower of Babel, Gen. 11. 3. Some also tell of a Cliff, which opening sendeth out such a stink, that it killeth Birds as they fly over it; and others, of a like open place near a Town called Ait, which continually throweth out boyling Pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the Moor) filling therewith the adjoining Fields; and that herewith the people use to pitch their Boats. But this in some places only, the Country generally being both healthy and delightful, as before was said.

The People anciently were much addicted unto Sooth-saying and Divinations, and no less noted for being Authors of the first Idolatry that was ever practised in the World. Induced unto the last perhaps by the Power of their Kings, who would needs confer Divine Honours upon some of their Ancestors. But to the first inclined by their own disposition, and the Situation of their Country, yielding a fair sensible Horizon (for the Rational is alike in all places, both in Hills and Vallies) and consequently profitable to the observation of the rising and setting of the Stars, whether Helical, Acronical, Metuine, or Vesperine, as the Artists phrase it. Whereunto may be added the length of Life in those elder times, furnishing them with the greater measure of experience, concerning the distinct Motions of each several Orb, and the full period of the courses of each several Planet. Certain it is that they grew so noted in this Art, that at the last every Astrologer, or Figure-flinger, was called a Chaldean. Gentis nomine ad eos homines translati, qui sese illius sapientie specie venditabant, as Beza hath observed in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the People thus flouted by the Satyrists.

That is to say,

Joies Oracles no greater credit have,

Than Sooth-sayings of a Chaldean cozening Knave.

The Language which was spoken here, had the name of the Chaldee, or Chaldean Tongue; of great antiquity, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost, some Chapters of the Prophecy of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jews did not understand it, as appeareth by the words of the Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings 18. 26. desiring Rabshakeh to speak to them in the Chaldee Tongue, that the common people of the Jews might not hear his Blasphemies. A further proof may be, That a man may have some knowledge in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of the Chaldee; as many are, no doubt, at this present day. But whatsoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards when the Jews came to live amongst them, during the Captivity: out of whose long commerce with them, both Nations lost their proper Languages, and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syriack. Of this we spake before, when we were in Syria and Palestine. And this is now the natural Language of this Country, and its Neighbour Assyria; but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabick: Not vulgarly spoken elsewhere, for ought I can find; but used by many others in their Sacred Offices, by whom not commonly understood. For in this Language, all the Sects of the Eastern Christians do associate their Publick Liturgies; that is to say, the Nestorians, Jacobites, Maronites, (for I reckon not the Melchites, who use the Greek Liturgy, amongst the Sectaries.) The like do also the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas, the Coptics or Christians of Egypt, and the poor remainder of the Chritians in the Isle of Zocastaria, an Island on the Coast of Africk. Used to those Liturgies, when the Language was more understood amongst them; though now worn out of vulgar knowledge, by the overspreading of the Arabick, Tartarian, and Turkish Conquests. In which the Prelates of these Churches have fallen into the great error of the Church of Rome: and without taking notice of the alterations, hapning in the Vulgar Tongues of those several Nations, which are united under them into one opinion, keep up a Language in their Liturgies which they understand not; as if the capacities of the People could be sooner raised to the understanding of an unknown Language, than the publick Liturgies be fitted unto their capacities. The ancient Piety of the Church and the modern Languages of God's People, are not inconsistent; though out of private ends some have taught us otherwise. But I fear this error (as some others) will not be so easily remedied, as apprehended. From the Tongue in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, pass we to the Religion it self, whose Sacred Offices are so celebrated.

The Christian Faith was first preached in this Country by Saint Peter, of whose being in Babylon (the chief City hereof) himself assureth us in the last words almost of his first Epistle: and other business he had none here, but to preach the Gospel. Much persecuted by the Persians (who were then possessed of all these parts) prevailed at last; Christianity growing up the faster for the cutting down. The Patriarchal See, originally planted in Seleucia, successor unto Babylon in repute and greatness, if not also in name; the Bishop whereof, by order of the Nicene Council, had the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of these parts, with the name of Catholicus; and the next place in Session, at all publick Assemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Hiersusalem. And besides this, the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas acknowledge him for their Primate or Metropolitan; as they did afterwards in his right, the Patriarch of Muzal. At this present here are some remainders of Christianity, part of them Jacobites, but the most Nestorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have spoken already; and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our passage forwards: So that without more delay, we may take a view of their principal places. And in the first place we meet with Babel, in the Hebrew signifying Confusion, famous for Confusion of Languages which here happened. For immediately after the Universal Deluge, Nimrod the Son of Chus, the Son of Cham, perwaded the People to secure themselves from the like after-claps, by building some stupendious Edifice, which might resist the fury of a second Deluge. This Council was generally embraced, Hebr only and his Family, as tradition goeth, contradicting such an unlawful attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majesty, 5146 paces from the ground; having its basis and circumference equal to the height. The passage to go up, went winding about the outside, and was of an exceeding great breadth; there being not only room for Horses, Carts, and the like means of Carriage, to meet and turn; but Lodging for Man and Beast, and, as Vestegian reporteth, Grafs and Corn-fields for their nourishment. But God beholding from on high this fond attempt, sent amongst them (who before were of one Language) a confusion of Tongues; which hindered the proceeding of this Building, one being not able to understand what his fellow called for.

2 Babylon, on the Bank of Euphrates, the ancientest City in the World on this side of the Flood; first built by Nimrod, in the place destined to the rising of the Tower

Tower of Babel, and by him made the Seat of his Kingdom: afterwards beautified and enlarged by Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, one of his Successors; and finally, much encreased both in bulk and beauty by Nebuchadnezzar, who therefore arrogated to himself the whole glory of it, saying in his pride, Is not this the great Babel that I have builded? Dan. 4. 30. A City of great fame and state, accounted one of the Worlds nine wonders, and deservedly too.

The compass of the Walls 365 furlongs (or 46 miles) according to the number of the days in the year; in height fifty Cubits, and of so great breadth, that Carts and Carriages might meet on the top of them; finished in one year, by the hands of 200000 Workmen, employed daily in it. Situate on both sides of Euphrates, over which there was a sumptuous Bridge, and at each end of that Bridge a magnificent Palace: beautified also with the Temple of the Idol Bel, and famous for the Paradise Gardens, made with great charge, and born up with most stately Arches. In a word, so great and vast it was, that Aristotle saith, That it ought rather to be called a Country than a City: adding withal, That when the Town was taken, it was three days before the furthest parts of the Town could take notice of it. Which taking of the Town must be understood of the surprise hereof by the Medes and Persians; and not of the taking of it by the Macedonians, as Pet. Ramus (as great a Clerk as he was) in his marginal Notes upon the Politics of that Author, hath most vainly told us. Which, whether it were that there were Gates at the end of every Street, which made it be so long in taking; or that the Babylonians were not wakened from their drunken Feast, in the time whereof it was surprised, I determine not. Revolving in the time of Semiramis, the news came to her as she was ordering her Hair: whereupon leaving her Head half-dressed, she went and besieged it; never ordering the rest of her Hair, till she had recovered it. How it fell into the hands of Cyrus, we learn out of Xenophon's Cyropædia, which was in this manner. The River Euphrates ran quite thorow the Town, round about whose Banks the Politick Prince cut many deep Channels; into which when the Babylonians were securely merry at a general Feast, he suddenly drained and emptied the River, conveyed his own Forces into the Town all along the dry and yielding Chanel, and in a little time made himself Master of it. From the Persians it revolted in the Reign of Darius Hystaspes, and that Sustenance might not be wanting to the Men of War, they thranged in Actions of this quality, not so much as necessary evils. When they had for twenty months so obstinately defended the Town, that the Persians had less hope than ever of prevailing; Zopyrus, one of Darius Captains, mangling his body, and disfiguring his face by cutting of his nose and ears, fled to the Babylonians, complaining of the tyranny of his King. They crediting his words, and knowing his prowess, committed the charge of the whole Army unto him, as a man to whom such barbarous usage had made the King irreconcilable. But he taking the best opportunity, delivered both the Town and Souldiers into the hands of his Sovereign, which made Darius often say, That he had rather have one Zopyrus, than twenty Babylonians. Here died Alexander the Great, after whose death the Grecian Captains, regardless rather of their own ambitions, than the common Loyalty, divided the Empire among themselves; leaving the body of the King eight days unburied. A wonderful change of fortune, that he who living thought the World too small for his Valour, being dead should find no place big enough for his Body. After this taking of it by the Macedonians, the Glories and Magnificence hereof began to decline; lessened unto a fourth part in the time of Qu. Curius the Historian; in Solitudinem redacta, reduced to desolation in the days of Pliny; and being turned into a Park, in which the Kings of Persia did use to hunt, in the time of Saint Hierom. That wondrous change occasioned partly by the injury of the time, partly by the neglect of the Macedonians, who removed the Seat-Royal of their Empire more towards Greece: but principally by Seleucus Nicator, who offended with the Babylonians, built the City of Seleucia.

3 Seleucia, the second City of note in all this Country, situate in a place more commodious and healthy, near the meeting of Tigris and Euphrates, and about forty miles more North than Babylon; out of which he drew 500000 persons for the peopling of it. Nor did this new City rob the old only of its power and greatness, but also of its very Name; being called Babylon in some of the ancient Authors, Βαβυλων παλαιά πόλις, Μα. τρηπόλις Σελευκεία καλιτέρη, as (for one) by Stephanus. In the Primitive times of Christianity, the Bishop of this See was accounted for the Primate of the Chaldeans; with a superintendency over the Christians of India also, as before was said. But this Supplanter was in time brought to ruine also. And

4 Bagdad, a new City raised from the Ruins of it: built near the Foundations of Seleucia by Bagiasfer the 20th Caliph of the Mahometans, at the expence (as some write) of eighteen Millions of Crowns; which, because of the many Gardens contained in it, had the name of Bagdad, the word so signifying in the Arabic Tongue. First built upon the Western Bank of the River Tigris, near to its confluence with Euphrates; but in the year 1095. removed to the other side of the River, by Mustaser, the 45th Caliph of the Saracens, because less subject to the Inundations of that furious River. But it was reckoned still for the same City, as if built by Bagiasfer: by whom being made the Seat of his Royal Residence (whose Successors were from hence called the Caliphs of Babylon) it flourished in great pride and splendor: till taken and sacked by Allan, or Haalon, a Tartarian Captain, who here starved Mustaser, the last Caliph of it, and rooted out his whole Posterity; as if the Caliphate and the City were to end together. But the Town revived again, though the Caliph could not continue to this day a City of great Wealth and Traffick; but nothing comparable unto what it was both for beauty and bigness being not above seven miles in compass, and having nothing in the Buildings to be justly bragged of. Taken by Solyman the Magnificent with the rest of the Country, it became subject to the Turks; from them recovered by Abas the King of Persia, Anno 1625. and again recovered by the Turks about the year 1640. In which changes it can be no marvel, that the hath lost much of her former splendour. Maintained especially at the present by the Trade of Alippo, to which, besides such Goods as go up the Water, there pass yearly many Caravans, or Troops of Merchants, each of them having in it some hundreds (if not thousands) of Camels laden with commodities. For whose safe Lodgings, as they pass (the ways being generally ill provided for Travelers in these Eastern Countries) there are some Houses of Receipt built at the publick charge, or by some special Benefactor, to preserve his memory: most of them strong, and many very fair and lovely, which in the Dominions of the Persians they call Caravane Rawers; in the Turkish, Canes. And for communicating the success of their business unto the place from whence they came, they make use of Pigeons, which is done in this manner. When the Hen-Pigeon sitteth, or hath any young, they take take the Cock, and set him in an open Cage; whom when they travelled a days Journey, they let go at liberty, and he straight flieth home to his Mate. When they have trained them thus from one place to another, and that there be occasion to send any Advertisement, they tie a Letter about one of their necks, which at their return home is taken off by some of the Houle, advertised thereby of the Estate of the Caravan. The like is also used betwixt Ormus and Balsora. But of this enough.

5 Ctesiphon, on the River Tigris, not far from Seleucia, by whose fall it rose; occasioning the decay thereof, as that did of Babylon. So Pliny, speaking of the fall of Babylon, by the building of Seleucia so near unto it; then adding, invicem ad hanc exbauirendam, Ctesiphonem juxta tertium ab ea Lapidem condidere Parthi. First built, saith Marcellinus, by Vardanes; afterwards beautified and walled by Pacorur, a Parthian King; and by him made the Seat-Royal of the Persian Kingdom. Many times besieged and assaulted by the Roman Emperors; but most commonly without success: and amongst others by Julian the Apostate, that bitter enemy of the Gospel, who here breathed out his Soul to Satan in these dying words, Vicisti tandem Galilee. But Vardanes (whoever he was) cannot of right be called the first Founder of it, (who raised it rather from the rubbish of an old Foundation: this City being the same with that which Moses calleth Cadne, and Ezekiel, Cameb, Gen. 11. and Ezek. 27. 23. and therefore rightly said by Pliny, to be built in Chalantide, or the Region of Chalne).

6 Sipparum, remarkable for the great Trench made near it, to receive the overflowings of Euphrates, which otherwise might have annoyed the City of Babylon: in compass 1280 Furlongs, or 160 miles; in depth 20 fathoms. A vast and expenceful work; but that nothing was to be admired, when Babylon it self was up and in full prosperity.

7 Apamia, a City of Seleucus's foundation also, situate at the fall of Pison into the River Tigris.

8 Vologesa, placed by Ptolomy amongst the Cities of Chaldea, but by Marcellinus in Assyria: built or repaired by one of the Vologeses, Kings of Persia, and from him denominated.

9 Borsippa, by Ptolomy called Barfita, memorable for the great Victory which Cyrus the first Persian Monarch, obtained here against Nabonidus the King of Babylon, by Scaliger called Darius Medus, (of which more anon) whom having vanquished, he pardoned him (as he saith) his life, and gave him the Government of Carmania.

10 Balsora, a Port-Town to Babylon, situate at the fall of Euphrates into Sinus Persicus, and consequently of great wealth and trading: the Riches of Arabia, Persia, and some parts of India, being landed here, and so carried to BABYLON, and thence up the Water to Alippo. Supposed to be the City of Theberodon, mentioned by Ptolomy; built or repaired by Nebuchadnezzar, and not long since taken from the Turks by Abas, the Persian.

7 ASSYRIA.

ASSYRIA is bounded on the East with Media, from which parted by the Mountain called Coasabrus; on the West, with Mesopotamia, from which divided by the River Tigris; on the South with Susiana; and on the North, with some part of Turcomania: So called from Assur the Son of Sem, by whom first inhabited. But having long since lost that name, as to vulgar speech, it is by Niger called Adrius; by Mercator, Sark; by the Turks, Arzerum.

The Country very plain and level, exceeding fruitful and abounding in Rivers. For besides Tigris, which washeth one whole side thereof, Ptolomy assigneth to this Country the Rivers of 2 Lycus, 3 Cyprus, and 4 Gorgis; all of good note, and all of them increasing, with their tributary Streams, the greatness of Tigris.

The People were anciently great Warriors, and together with the Babylonians or Chaldeans, commanded a great part of the East; extending their Dominion from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus; inasmuch that not the People of this Province only, but of all the Provinces almost of this spacious Empire, had the name of Assyrians. The men for all this exceeding formal in their Habit, wearing long Robes which trailed on the very ground, their Hair long, their Hats or Caps Pyramidal, like the Persian Miters; not stirring out of doors but perfumed with Musk, Rings on their fingers, and a Scepter in their hands: and very frequent in their washings; especially after copulation. As for their Women, it was an ancient custom with them, to expose the fairest unto Sale in the open Market; and the money given for those, to put off such as were deformed, and not so amiable. And hence perhaps the Fathers of our times have learnt this Lesson, of giving less Portions with such Daughters as will sell themselves; but greasing the fat Sow (as the saying is) with the addition of some hundreds: which made the merry fellow say, That the money were a good march, if the Wench were away.

The Christian's Faith was first here planted by Saint Jude, and took such deep root in that Plantation, that it could never be pulled up; notwithstanding the cruel persecution raised against it, by the Kings of Persia: who when they saw there was no means to destroy it by violence, attempted in the next place to corrupt it with Heresie. And to that end, as also to revenge himself upon the Emperour Heraclius, as Great Champion of the Orthodox Belief against Nestorianism, Chosroes the great King of Persia, enforced all the Christians of his Empire unto those Opinions, which he knew that Emperour condemned; permitting none who were counted Catholics within his Dominions. By means whereof, and afterwards for want of Preachers to instruct them otherwise (the Saracens having conquered the Persian Empire) Nestorianism prevailed so far, that it extended over all the Countries East of Tigris, as far as India; and Northwards too amongst the Tartars, of which more hereafter. Governed by their own Patriarch, who resideth at Mesul, now the chief City of this Country, and honoured by his people with the Title of Jacelich, mistaken or pronounced amiss for Catholic: an attribute given anciently to all Orthodox Prelates.

The Opinions held by them as Nestorians, were, 1 That there were two Persons in our Saviour, as well as two Natures; but yet confessing that CHRIST from the first instant of his Conception, was both God and Man. 2 That the Blessed Virgin ought not to be called Quisus, or the Mother of God; but yet acknowledging her to be the Mother of God the Son. 3 That Nestorius condemned for these Opinions in the third and fourth General Councils, was an holy man; for whose sake they condemned Saint Cyril his professed Antagonist, and all those Councils wherein any Censure was laid upon him. In other points, though differing from the Church of Rome, they are right enough (their rejecting Episcopal Confirmation excepted only. As 1 In celebrating the Sacrament of the Lords Supper with leavened bread. 2 Communicating in both kinds. 3 Enjoying no necessity of Auricular Confession. 4 Contracting Marriages in the second degree of Consanguinity. 5 Permitting second and third Marriages unto men in Orders, after the death of their first Wives. 6 Not praying before the Cross, nor giving religious worship to the Crucifix, or other Images. So much for these Nestorian Sectaries, if so named aught, considering the qualifications added unto their opinions; now (but corruptly) called Nights: the greatest Sect of Christians in the East.

The solemnities which these Christians use in contracting Marriage, because not very usual, I will here relate: Their wives they never see till the day of their marriage, but hearing a good report of the young Woman, negotiate with her Parents for her. Agreed upon the business, they meet in the Chancel of the Church, wherein there is a partition with an hole in it: the Bridegroom and his friends standing on the one side; the Bride and her kindred, on the other. When there the Cassie or Churchman biddeth the Bridegroom to put his hand thorow the hole into the Partition, and take his Bride by the hand, which he doth accordingly: the Mother of the Bride, with a sharp-pointed instrument, made of purpose pricking the Bridegrooms hand all over, with sufficient cagerness. If when he feeleth the smart, he lets go her hand, they take it for a sign that he will not love her; but if he hold her fast, and wring her hand till he cry again, they take it for a very good Omen, and are glad they have so well betrothed her. After the Marriage is consummate, if a Male-child be born unto them, the Father loseth his own name, and is called by the name of his eldest Son: so as if the Fathers name be Moses and his Sons name Joseph, the Father is no more called Moses but Abba Joseph, or the Father of Joseph. So highly did they reverence Marriage, and the fruit thereof, Posterity.

It was anciently divided into these six parts, 1 Arphacititis, bordering on Armenia Major; so called for Arphaxaditis, or the plantation of Arphaxad, the Son of Sem. 2 Adiabete, bordering on Mesopotamia, so called, quasi Adiabete, or inaccessible, because fenced with such unfordable Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, that there was no ease coming to it Διὰ δυσχερῶν ὁδῶν, as it is in Suidas: or rather for Adiavena, from Dia and Adiava, the chief Rivers of it (the same which Ptolemy called Lycus and Caprus) as in Marcellinus. 3 Calacine, and Sittace from Sittace, and Calach, two chief Cities of it; of which more anon. 4 Arbelites, and 5 Apoloniat, from Apolonia and Arbela, two other of the principal Cities.

Here then we have four of the Cities of Assyria brought unto our hand, 1 Calach, one of those four which Nimrod built in the Land of Assur, Gen. 10. 11. and one of them to which the Ten Tribes were transplanted by Salmanassar, 2 Kings 17. 6. and 18. 11. of such esteem in those elder days, that Calacine as Ptolemy, or Calachene as Strabo most rightly calleth it, did take name from hence. 2 Sittace, situate about two miles from the banks of Tigris, in the way from Babylon to Susa. A City when it gave name to the parts adjoining, both great and populous; well seated in a fruitful Soyl, and well shaded with trees of several sorts; supposed by the situation of it to be that Acad, (or rather built in or near the place of it) which was one of the first four Cities of Nimrod's Kingdom. 3 Arbela, on the banks of the River Caprus, built as some say by Belus (or Belochus) Prince, an Assyrian King, whence it had the name. Near unto which there is a place which Strabo calleth Βραχισσοῦς, or Brachissus, conceived by some to be the place where Noah framed the Ark. 4 Apolonia, built after the Macedonian conquest, as appeareth by the name, which is wholly Greek; not otherwife observable, but for giving the name of Apoloniat to the Country adjacent. Add unto these, 5 Gegumela, situate in the middle space betwixt Lycus, and Caprus memorable for the last and greatest battle betwixt Alexander and Darius the King of Persia, who had he made good the Eastern banks of the River Tigris, might easily have hindered the Macedonians from coming over the River being so extremely swift and violent, that the Macedonians were not able to pass it, but by linking their hands and arms together, and making one entire body to oppose the Current; and therewithal of so great depth, that the footmen were fain to hold their Bows & Arrows over their heads, to keep them from being moistened and made unserviceable. But having miserably lost this opportunity by the cowardice of Mazæus, who had the keeping of this Pass, he was enforced to venture all upon a Battle: drawing unto this place an Army of 50000 Horse, 200000 Foot, in their account who speak least of it (for Arrianus makes it above a Million) opposed by Alexander with no more than 40000 foot, and 7000 horse of his Europeans; but those victoriously successful: 40000 of the Persians slain, (but Dionorus Siculus speaks of 90000) with the loss of 300 Macedonians only, as is said by Curcius. In memory of which notable victory, a Mountain near the place of the Battle, was by Alexander called Nicator, known by that name to Strabo, and some other Ancients. 6 Raboboth, another of the four Cities, which Nimrod is said to have built in Assur; by some supposed to be Birba, an ancient City upon Tigris, and bordering so near unto Mesopotamia, that by Ptolemy it is placed in it. Of which more anon. 7 Rhesen, another of the Cities of Nimrod's building, seated by Moses between Calach and Nineve, Gen. 10. 12. and there commended for a great City. Which Character with the title thereof, have induced some learned men to think it to be the same which is by Xenophon called Larissa, seated by him on the River Tigris, much about this place, and said to be a City of such strength and greatness, that it was no less than two Parasangs, or four miles in compass: the Walls in height a hundred feet, twenty five in breadth so strongly cemented, that Cyrus, who besieged it, could have never taken it, if a casual Eclipse of the Sun had not discouraged the defendants. But whether this conjecture be good or not, we have here Larissa for another of the principal Cities. 8 Ninive, by the Greeks and Latines called Ninus; first built by Nimrod, and called Ninive with relation unto Ninus, his Son or Nephew, after the example of Cain whose steps he followed; of whom is said, that he built a City, and called it after the name of his Son, Enoch, Gen. 4. 17. I know the building of this City is by some ascribed to Assur, grounding themselves on that of Moses, Gen. 10. 11. Out of his Land went forth Assur, and built Ninive, &c. But I like better of their judgment, who take Assur in this place for the name of the Country, and not of the man; making the Text to speak of Nimrod, and to say of him, Et egredietur ex eo in Assur, &c. that is to say, And he went forth to Assur or the Land of Assyria, and there built Ninive, Raboboth, and the rest there named. A City so enlarged by some of the succeeding Kings, that it came at last to be bigger than Babylon, in compass 480 furlongs, or 60 miles; and therefore said in the Book of Jonah, to be a City of three days journey, in circuit, as indeed it was: accomplishing 40 miles for a days journey, according to the common estimate of those elder times; as also of the Greeks and Romans, in the times succeeding. Nor was it of less strength than greatness, the walls an hundred feet high, and so broad that three Carts might go abreast on the top thereof: and in those walls 1500 Towers, each of 200 foot in height: So strong, that it was thought to have been impregnable especially because of an ancient Prophecy, which signified that the Town should never be taken, till the River became an enemy to it. A Prophecy which which induced Sardanapalus to make it the seat of his war against Belochus, and Arbaces, then in arms against him; who having besieged it three years without hope of success, at last the River overflowing, carried before it twenty furlongs of the Wall. Which accident so terrified the effeminate King, that he burnt himself in the midst of his treasures, and left the Town to the Besiegers. Threatened destruction by the preaching of the Prophet Jonah, it escaped then upon repentance. But the people going on in their wicked courses, it was destroyed by Ashyager King of the Medes, that it might no longer be an encouragement to the Assyrians to rebel against him, as formerly against some of his Predecessors: and so destroyed, that in the time of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, as himself affirmeth in his Comment on the Prophet Nahum, ὁ ποταμὸς τοῦ ποτὸς ἡγόνων δεσπόζουσαν, that one could scarce discern in what place it stood. 9 Mosul at this time, and for long since, the chief of Assyria; seated on the Tigris, and raised out of the ruins of Ninive: of most note for being the ordinary abiding place of the Nestorian Patriarch, who either in this City itself, or the Monastery of St. Hermes near adjoining to it, hath his constant residence. The Nestorians in this City so considerable, both in power and number, that though it be in the hands of Mahometans, either Turk or Persian; yet there are numbered in it fifteen Christian Churches, and at least 40000 Souls. A Seat so maligne by the Pope, (whom they commonly call the Reprobate Bishop) for the greatness of the jurisdiction which this Patriarch hath: that not contented to withdraw the Indians from him, (whereof more hereafter) Pope Julius the third, set up an Anti-Patriarch against him, to whom he gave the title of the Catholic of Musal also; to whom the Nestorians dwelling in the Northern parts of Mesopotamia, (if some Writers of the Papal Party may be believed) do submit themselves. 10 Arzeri, of greater strength than Mosul, though of less antiquity than repute; from which the whole Province of Assyria, is now called Arzurum. And 11 Scheherwzal, at this time of the greatest note, as being the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg or Bassa; who hath 10000 Timariots, under his command, to defend this Country, and be ready for any service, as occasion is.

8 MESOPOTAMIA.

MESOPOTAMIA, is bounded on the East, with the River Tigris, by whom parted from Assyria; on the West, with Euphrates, which divideth it from Camagena, a Province of Syria; on the North, with Mount Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Major; and on the South, with Chaldea, and Arabia Deserta, from which last it is parted by the bendings of Euphrates also.

In the Scripture it is called most commonly by the name of Padan Aram, that is Syria Cultra; but that name properly belonging to the North-parts of it; Aram or Syria, because inhabited originally by the Aramites, whom the Greeks call Syri; and Padan, or Cultra, from the fruitfulness and riches of it, exceedingly plentifully stored both with corn and wine, and furnished with all necessities for the life of man; in that regard by Strabo called Mesopotamia Felix. The Southern parts hereof being barren and full of Deserts, not having any herbage in them, ὡς καὶ Ἰσχυρὸς, nor any kind of Tree, as we read in Xenophon; amongst some of the ancient Writers, had the name of Arabia, partly because so like in nature to Arabia Deserta, and partly being planted with Arabian Colonies. The name which comprehends both parts is sometimes Syria Transfucialis, or Syria beyond the River (Euphrates), of which see 2 Sam. 10. 16. But generally in the Hebrew it is called Aram-Nabaramim; which the Greeks render properly by Mesopotamia, or the Country in the middle of Rivers: envied by Tigris on the East; and Euphrates on the West and South; the River Chaboras, or Aloras, passing also through it. The Latines generally call it by the same name which the Greeks had given it; Priscian only to show his faculty in Grammar, calling it Medama; By the Turk it is now called Diarbek.

As is the Country, such the People, the most Adjective of any we have met with hitherto; able at no time to stand by themselves, but still requiring the addition of some neighbour Nation to be joined unto them. Nothing that they can call their own, their Name, their Language, nor their Country. Beholding for their Name in the North, to Syria; in the South, to Arabia: the Chaldeans also putting in for a share, and challenging those parts which lie next Assyria, to belong to them. Their Language anciently the Syriack, at this day the Arabick. Their Country successively subjected to the Babylonians, Assyrians, Medes, and Persians. From them first conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Pompey; reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperor Trajan; more fully settled and confirmed by Aurelianus. But being recovered by the Persians, they fell together into the power of the Saracens, and are now commanded by the Turks. Never appearing of themselves on the Stage of action, but when once God shewed his mighty power in their many weaknesses; and raised them up to be a Scourge to the house of Israel, of which see Judges 3. 8. Hired afterwards by Adadzer, King of Syria Zobab, in his war against David; by whom most shamefully defeated, 2 Sam. 10. 16, 18. Yet notwithstanding memorable in the Book of God, for the birth of Abraham and Rebecca; the long abode of Jacob, and the birth of his Children, in that respect affording an Original to the Hebrew Nation.

The Christian faith was first preached here by St. Thaddæus, one of the 70 Disciples; Anno 43. upon this occasion. Abgarus the Tetrarch, or Prince of Edessa, one of the chief Cities of this Country, having been long afflicted with an incurable infirmity, and hearing of the fame of JESUS, beseeched him by a special message to come and help him: whereunto our Saviour made this Answer, That he could not visit him in person, the things he was to do, whilst upon the earth, being to be performed only in the Land of Canaan; but that he would take care of his health in convenient time. Accordingly, not long after his Ascension, St. Thomas the Apostle, by immediate revelation from our Saviour, sent Thaddæus thither; by whom the Prince was cured, and the Gospel preached, and many of the Nation converted to it: the Edes whereof, together with the Copies of the several Letters from Abgarus to CHRIST, and from CHRIST to him, preserved in the Archives of Edessa, were by Eusebius translated out of the Syriack, and inserted into the body of his Ecclesiastical History, lib. 1. cap. 14. Once planted, it found good increase, continuing in the purity of it till about the year 530. at what time one Jacobus Syrus (so called from his birth and abode in Syria) took upon him the defence of the Errors of Eutyches, touching the unity of natures in CHRIST our Saviour. Whole followers finding the Patriarchs of Antioch too vigilant over them, removed for the most part further off, settling themselves in Babylonia, and Mesopotamia, where they continued in great numbers. Governed by their own Patriarch, to whom the Jacobites in Syria are also subject, who takes unto himself the Title of Patriarch of Antioch, and is successively called Ignatius, as if the undoubted Successor

Successor of that Saint and Martyr; superior in that regard, to the Patriarch of Hierusalem, who is also a Jacobite. The Patriarchal See, first in the Monastery of Saphran, near the City of Mardin; but the residence of the Patriarchs for the most part, at Caramis. The number of Christians under his obedience, computed formerly at 160000 Families, reduced since unto 50000. That which they hold as Jacobites, distinct from all other Christians, is, 1. The acknowledgment but of one nature, one will, and one operation (as there is but one person) in Christ our Saviour. 2. In signing their Children before Baptism, in the Face or Arm, with the sign of the Cross imprinted with a burning Iron. 3. Retaining Circumcision, and using it in both Sexes. 4. Affirming the Angels to consist of two substances, Fire and Light. And 5. Honouring the memory of Disgorus (of Alexandria) and Jacobus Syrus, condemned by the ancient Councils. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome.

1 Not enjoying the People the necessity of Confession to a Priest, before they admit them to communion.

2 Not admitting Purgatory, nor Prayers for the Dead.

3 Administering the Sacrament of the Eucharist in both kinds.

4 Allowing the marriage of Priests; and

5 Teaching that the souls of men deceased, are not admitted presently to the Vision of God, but remain somewhere in the Earth, to expect Christ's coming. In which last, (setting aside the determination of the place, as they have many of the Fathers concurring with them; so to the first (touching the unity of natures in our Saviour Christ) they have of late added such qualifications, as possibly may make it capable of an Orthodox sense.

Chief Rivers of this Country (besides Tigris and Euphrates, of which more hereafter.) 1 Chaboras, which rising in Mount Mafius, passing directly South, falleth into Euphrates; as also doth 2 Syngarus, by Pliny, called Mafsa, arising out of the Mountain Syngarus; which is but the more Western part of the said Mount Mafius. Which names of Mafsa, Mafius, and the Mafeni (being the name of a People dwelling thereabouts) shew plainly that they go upon very good grounds who place Mafsch, or Mefsch, one of the Sons of Aram, in these parts of the Country.

It was divided anciently into, 1 Anthemasia. 2 Chalcitis. 3 Caulanitis. 4 Accabene. 5 Ancorabitis. And 6 Inigine: each part containing several Cities or Towns of note. These six when conquered by the Romans, reduced unto two Provinces only, viz. 1 Mesopotamia, lying on the South of Mount Mafius, or the head of Chaboras; and 2 Ofrhoene on the North: this last so named from one Ofrhoes, the Prince or Governour of these parts in the time of the Persians, as Procopius telleth us.

Chief places of the whole, 1 Edessa, the Metropolis of Ofrhoene, situate on the River Scirtas, which runneth thorow the midst of it, not far from the fall thereof into Euphrates. Memorable for the Story of Abgarus, before related, amongst Church-Historians; and in the Roman Histories, for the death of the Emperour Caracalla, slain here by the appointment of Macrinus, Captain of his Guard. The occasion this. The Emperour conscious to himself of his own unworthiness, employed one Martianus to enquire amongst the Magicians in the Empire, who was most likely to succeed him: by whom accordingly advertised that Macrinus was to be the man; The Letters being brought unto Caracalla, as he was in his Chariot, were by him delivered with the rest of the Packets to the hands of Macrinus, (who by his Office was to be attendant on the Emperours person) that he might open them, and signify unto him the contents thereof at his better leisure. Finding by this the danger in which he stood, he resolved to strike the first blow; and to that end intrusted Martialis, one of his Centurions, with the execution; by whom the Emperour was here killed, as he withdrew himself, Levande usque gratia, as my Author hath it. So impossible a thing it is to avoid ones Destiny; so vain a thing for any Prince to think of destroying his Successor: and therefore it was very well said to Nero in the times of his tyranny, Omnes licet occideris, Successorem tuum occidere non poteris; that though he caused all the men of eminence to be forthwith murdered; yet his Successor would sur vive him, and escape the blow. But to return unto Edessa, in following times it was made one of the four Tetrarchies of the Western Christians, when they first conquered Syria, and the Holy Land; the two first Governours or Tetrarches, successively succeeding Godfrey of Bouillon in the Kingdom of Hierusalem. But in the year 1142. it was again recovered by Sanguin the Turk, Father of Noradine Sultan of Damascus; and by the loss thereof, no fewer than three Archbishopricks withdrawn from the obedience of the See of Antioch.

2 Cologenbar, another strong piece adjoining, besieged on the taking of Edessa, by the same Sanguin, who was here stabbed in a drunken quarrel by one of his familiar friends; and the Fort saved for that time.

3 Nisibis, situate somewhat to the East of Mount Mafius, called also Antiochia Mygdonia, from the River Mygdonius, which runneth thorow it; and afterwards Constantia, from Constantine the Son of Constantine. A City of great note in those elder times, a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Mesopotamia, properly and specially so called: which being besieged by Sapor the King of Persia, (Constantine ruling in the East) and in no small danger to be lost, was gallantly defended by James the then Bishop of it, whom Theodoret calls not only, Episcopus Civitatis, sed Principem et Ducem, not the Bishop only of the City, but the Prince and Captain of it, lib. 2. cap. 31. So little inconsistency was there found in those early days, betwixt the Episcopal Function and civil business, that the Bishops were not interdicted from the Acts of war, when the necessities of the State did invite them to it. The City not long after most unworthily delivered to the said Sapor, by the Emperour Jovianus, which drew along with it, in short time, the loss of the Province.

4 Ur, seated on the East of Nisibis, betwixt it and Tigris; and so placed by Ammianus who had travelled this Country. Conceived to be the Birth-place of Abraham, and called Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 11. 28. either because the Chaldees were in those days possessed of the place; or because the name of Chaldea did comprehend also those parts of this Country which lay towards Tigris, as was shewn before. For that the place from which Terah the Father of Abraham did return to Haran in Mesopotamia, was rather situate in this Coast where Ur is placed by Ammianus, then betwixt the Lakes of Chaldea and the Persian Gulf, where most Writers place it, may appear probable for the reasons which are here subjoyned. 1 Because it is said Joshua, Chap. 24. 12. That Terah the Father of Abraham, and the Father of Nachor, dwelt on the other side of the Flood; that is to say, on the further side of the River Euphrates, and that too in Assyria, as the Septuagint; ab initio, as the Vulgar Latine, in the first beginning. Which cannot be understood of any Ur, placed on or near the Lakes of Chaldea, those being on this side of that River. 2 Because all the rest of Abraham's ham's Ancestors from Phaleg downward, were seated in the Northern parts of Assyria, and Mesopotamia; and it were strange that Terah should be planted so far from the rest of his kindred. 3 Because from Ur in Mesopotamia, near the banks of Tigris, the way to Canaan (to which Terah did intend to go) was directly by Haran: whereas if he had dwelt (as some say he did) by the Lakes of Chaldea, his way had been directly West thorow Arabia Deserta, and not to have travelled, with his family, so far North as Haran, and then to have fallen back as much Southward, as he had gone Northward, crossing Euphrates twice with his Herds and Cattel. 5 Haran, the place to which Terah did remove, when he went from Ur; and from which Abraham did remove, when he went towards Canaan, so named in memory of Haran the son of Terah: but called afterwards by the name of Carre, and by that name well known to the Roman Writers for the death of Craffus; that wealthy Roman, whose estate (besides the tenth which he offered to Heracles, and three months corn distributed amongst the poor) amounted to 7100 Talents, which comes in our money, to one Million, 331250 l. But all his wealth could not preserve him from the slaughter, slain near this City with the routing of his Army also, by Herodes King of Parthia: of which briefly Lucan,

— miserando funere Craffus
Assyrias Latio maculavit sanguine Carras.
 Which may be Englished to this purpose,
 By a defeat lamented Craffus stains
 With Roman blood the Assyrian Carras Plains.

Called the Assyrian Carras by Poetical licence, because the Assyrians formerly had been Lords thereof. And no less memorable was it in the times foregoing, for a famous Temple of the Moon, worshipped here (but in no place else) under both Sexes: some honouring it as a Female Deity, then called Dea Luna; and others in the shape and dress of a man, and called Deus Lunus. But with this fortune and success, as Saith Spartianus, qui Lunam summe nomine putabat nuncupandam, is mulieribus semper interviat; that they who worshipped it in the form of a Woman, should be always subject to their Wives (I trow there were but few of that Religion) qui vero Marem deum crederet, is uxori dominaret: but he that worshipped it as a Man, should preserve the Mastery. 6 Amida, near the River Tigris, the Metropolis of Mesopotamia, when one Province only, and before it fell into the hands of the Romans; most beautified by Constantinus the son of Constantine, by whom named Constantia. But that new name dying with him, the old revived: of great strength, as a frontier Town against the Persians, and by them much aimed at. Honoured of late times with the Residence of the Patriarch of the Jacobite Christians, as the chief City of this Province; for this cause also made the dwelling of the Pseudo-Patriarch of the Nestorians (or Nestranes) of the Popes erection; and the chief Seat also of the Bassa or other Officer, governing this Country for the Turks, by whom called Caramis, or Kara Amida, that is to say, Amida the black, because it was walled with black stone. 7 Phalga, or Phaliga, at the meeting of Chaboras with Euphrates not far from Carre, mentioned by Stephanus, and Arianus; and by Ptolemy mistakingly called Pharga: the seat or first plantation of Phaleg, one of Abraham's Ancestors. 8 Serug, another of them giving name to 8 Sarug, about a days journey off from Haran, spoken of by some latter Writers. 9 Syngara, on the River so named, a fortified City in the time of Ammianus, by whom mentioned, lib. 20. 10 Bezabde, mentioned by the same Author, by whom said to have been a very strong Fort, seated on a pretty high hill, and bending towards the banks of Tigris, before whose times it had anciently been called Phalga. 11 Virta, supposed to have been the work of Alexander the Great, circled with Walls, environed with Half-moons and Bulwarks, and made unassailable; in vain besieged by Sapor the Persian King, after the taking of Bezabde. The same perhaps with the Biriba of Ptolemy. 12 Mardin, not far from which in the Monastery of Saphran, is the Patriarchal See of the Jacobite Seckians.

The first Inhabitants of these Countries, though united from the first beginning under the same Princes and form of Government, came from several Families: all the three sons of Noah concurring as it were in this Plantation. From Nimrod, Havilah, and others of the Posterity of Chus the son of Ham, came the Babylonians; with whom Chesed the son of Nachor, of the House of Sem, intermingling families: or being the Author of their Language, or of some other signal benefit, gave to them the name of Casdim, whence came that of Chaldeans. From Assur, Arphaxad, and those of Arphaxad's Posterity, intermingled with the sons of Mafsch, the son of Aram, came the Mesopotamians and Assyrians. And that Japhet also and his children may put in for a part, the neighbourhood of the Medes, and Albanes, descended from him, makes it somewhat probable.

But whatsoever Parents they descended from, Nimrod, the son of Chus, made so bold with them, as to bring them under his command: planting in Chaldea, the Cities of Babylon, and Calne; in Assyria, Nisive, Rhesem, and Calach; and finally Rebobotb, if that were Biriba, as some think it was) in Mesopotamia. By these strong Forts he curbed the Native, and assured his power; being the first that altered the Paternal form of Government, and drew unto himself the Government of several Nations, not having any dependance upon one another. The foundation thus laid by him, his Successors soon raised the building to a wondrous height; advancing the Assyrian Empire, from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus: and that too in a shorter time than could be imagined, but that the world was then divided into petit States, not cemented together with the ligaments of power and policy. For though there be little found of Belus the Son of Nimrod, but that he spent most part of his time in draining the Marshes, and making firm ground of those vast Fens which lay near to Babylon, which were works of peace: yet by those and the like works of peace, he so settled his affairs at home, that he gave his Son Ninus the better opportunity to look abroad: who mightily improved his Empire, and was the greatest and most powerful of all that Line, extending his dominions from the River Indus, to the Mediterranean; and from the Caspian Sea, to the Southern Ocean. His Successors we shall find in the following Catalogue of

The Assyrian Monarchs.

A.M.

1798 1 Nimrod, called by some Saturnus Babylonius, the son of Chus, and Nephew of Cham, was the first who altered the Paternal Government, and usurped dominion over others; making Babylon his Imperial City.

1845 2 Belus, or Jupiter Babylonius, the Son of Nimrod, whose Image was worshipped by the old Idolaters under the name of Bel and Baal. 62.

1907 3 Ninus, the Son of Belus, conquered Armenia, Syria, Media, Bactria, and the Persian Provinces; and removed the Imperial Seat to Nineve, by him much beautified and enlarged. 52.

1959 4 Semi- name, but the surname of Darius, which he proveth out of a fragment of Megasthenes, cited by Eusebius, in his work De Preparatione Evangelica, where he is called Megasthenes & Isis Mithras, &c. an argument of all others the most slight and trivial. For besides that Mithras may there as well be the name of his Nation, as of his Family; and besides that, it is diametrically opposite to another place of the same Daniel, in his ninth Chapter, where he is called, Darius, of the seed of the Medes. Of this Darius more anon when we come into Media. As for Nabonidus, questionless he was the same with Balthassar. For besides that Josephus and Berosus attribute to either of them the reign of 17 years, the same Josephus (who might best know the truth in this case) telleth us that Balthassar was by the Babylonians called Nabonidus, a name not so great a stranger to Nabonidus, as Scaliger's Darius, or Herodotus's Labinitus. But in this we must pardon Joseph. Scorn and contradiction was a part of his effence. For had he not been in some things singular, in all, peremptory, he had neither been a Scaliger, nor the Son of Julius.

But leaving Joseph to the singularity of his own conceits, we find nothing done by the Assyrians or Chaldeans after this subjection, which might denote them to have been once the Lords of so great an Empire. Successively enslaved by the Medes, Persians, and Macedonians, then by the Persians again, afterwards by the Saracens, next by the Turks, a third time by the Persians, once again by the Turks of the Ottoman Family, unto whom now subject: never endeavouring to assert in the way of war, or opposition, either their ancient reputation, or their native liberties; but suffering themselves to be won, lost, fought for, and again recovered by their quarrellous Masters, as if they had not title to their own Country, but were born to follow the fortunes of all Pretenders. The reason of which is principally to be ascribed to the form of Government used amongst the Persians, which was so Despotic and absolute, if not tyrannical, that they held all the people conquered by them in the nature of slaves, not suffering any to grow great in a state of inheritance, or to enjoy any place of power and profit under them in the conquered Provinces, but at the pleasure of the Prince; as it is now used amongst the Turks of the Ottoman Empire. By means whereof, the great men having no alliance amongst themselves, and as few dependants amongst the people, were never able to make head against the Conquerors;

but in the fall of the present Prince fell together with him: it being a good rule of Machiavel, that where the ancient Nobility is in good regard, linked in alliances with themselves, and well respected by the common and inferior people; there it is difficult for the Invader, though a Conqueror, to win a Country, and harder to keep it being conquered. But on the other side, where the Nobility is quite worn out, and the Prince doth hold his Subjects in the nature of slaves, there both the Conquest will be easy, and soon assured. For to what purpose should the Subjects resist the Conqueror, or stand any longer to their King, than he stands to himself, when they are sure the Conqueror can lay upon them no heavier burdens, than they were accustomed to before, and have withal a flattering hope, that their new Masters may be gentler to them, than their former were? It fares no otherwise with them than with Eloph's Ass, which refused to take the opportunity of an escape from the hands of the enemy, by which he was taken, because he knew it was not possible they should lay more load upon his back, than his old Master made him bear. To which condition the Chaldeans and Assyrians being brought by the Persians, and never accustomed to the taste of a better fortune, have followed the same successes as the Persians did, falling together with them from one hand to another: the particular account of whose estate we shall find in Persia, taking this only for the close. That when Solyman the Magnificent had discomfited Tamas King of Persia, and taken the great City of Bagdad, Caramis, Merdim, and the rest both in Assyria, Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, submitted to him without any resistance, and received his Garrisons. And for a confirmation of his Estate, he received at the hand of the Caliph of Babylon (who by an old Prerogative had the nomination, or confirmation, at the least, of the Kings of Assyria, and the Sultans of Egypt) the Royal Ornaments and Ensigns, Anno 1534, incorporating by that means those Regions into his Estates, and making them Provinces of his Empire; in which he left a Beglerbeg at Bagdad to command in Chief, and divers Sanzaks in their several and respective Provinces. And though the Persian Kings have since taken, and are still possessed of some places of importance in them; yet I account them in regard of the said investiture, and the long possession following on it, for Provinces of the Turkish Empire: as I do Media of the Persian, though Tauris, and some other pieces of it be possessed by the Turks.

MOUNT

MOUNT TAURUS.

MOUNT TAURUS is a constant and continual ridge of hills, which extend from the Mediteranean to the Indian Seas; running through the whole length of Asia from West to East, and dividing it, as the Equator doth the Globes into North and South. It was called Taurus from the word Tor or Taur, which in the Syriac and Chaldean signifies a Mountain; the common name of all high Mountains being made peculiar unto this, by reason of its greatness and continued length; yet so, that it had other names also in some parts thereof, according to the Regions and Nations by which it passed, and on which it bordered. The course whereof is thus set down by Sir Walter Raleigh: premising only, that it beginneth in the Province of Lycaia, a Region of Asia Minor, near the Mediteranean. These Mountains (saith he) which funder Cilicia from the rest of Asia the less, on the North thereof are called Taurus; and where they part it from Comagena a Province of Syria, they are called Amanus. On the East side of the River Euphrates (which forceth it self a way thorough it) it sometimes resumeth the name of Taurus, as in Ptolemy's three first Tables of Asia, and sometimes taketh the name of Niphates, as in the fourth: retaining that uncertain appellation, so long as they bound Armenia from Mesopotamia. After the River Tigris hath also cut them asunder, they continue the name of Niphates altogether, until they separate Assyria and Media, but then they call themselves Coatrus: although between the upper and lower Media, they appear not always, but are seen discontinued, and broke in pieces: such parts of it as are found in the middle of that Country, being called Oramus; those which lie more towards the East being named Coronus, out of the Southern parts whereof issueth the River of Bagradus, which divideth the ancient Persia from Caramania. Continuing further Eastward by the name of Coronus, they give unto the Parthians and Hyrcanians, their proper Countries; and afterwards change themselves into the Mountains of Seriphi, out of which riseth the River Maugius. And now beginning to draw towards the end of their course, they first make themselves the South border of Bactria, and are then known by the name of Parapamisus; and after take unto themselves the name of Caucasus, where the famous Rivers Indus, Hydaspis, and Zaradus, have their first beginnings. In this point do they hold their heads exceeding high, to equal the Mountains of Imams; whom they encounter within the 35, 36, and 37 Degrees of Latitude, and the 140 Degree of Longitude: known by no other name than this, till finally they terminate their course in the Indian Seas. So far, and to this purpose, that noble Gentleman. It may be added hereunto, that though the ancient Writers could trace the course of this Mountain no further than the meeting of it, with Imams yet later observations follow it to the wall of China and the Parts beyond. Caucasus being not known by the name of Parapamisus, and Maugius not known by the name of Indus, and Zaradus not known by the name of Hydaspis, the main body of these Mountains, which hold on in an even course from West to East, not of those less and branched off, which shoot either to the North or South, such as are the Anti-Taurus in some parts of the Indus, the Gordian hills, and the Armenian Mountains, with those which Pliny calleth Paropamisus, Parapamisus, in Armenia Major, and that of Caspia, which floweth it self on the North-east of Allyria, with divers others.

In such a continual course of Mountains it must needs be that many fierce Nations did inhabit in former times, not easily subdued, nor so soon reduced unto civility, as such who were possessed of places less defensible, and fitter for commerce and traffic with the rest of mankind. And they continued in these late times, the last which were brought under by the Turks and Persians, the mightiest Monarchs of those parts, though bordering on, or totally environed with their dominions. Two Kingdoms they afforded of long continuance: one towards the West, where it closeth with the Mountains of Anti-Taurus, and divideth Syria from Armenia Major; the other towards the East, separating Media from Hyrcania. For want of other names to describe them by, we will call the first the Kingdom of Aladenier, and the last the Kingdom of Babahan; according to the names of the two last Kings.

The Kingdom of ALADEULES contained that part of this Mountainous tract, which beginning in of about Anti-Taurus, extended it self as far towards the East, as to the banks of the River Tigris, where they part Mesopotamia from Armenia Major. Inhabited by a people naturally very fierce and watlike, more famous for nothing then their want of all things; who as men dwelling in a rough and barren Country, could little profit themselves by husbandry: and therefore gave themselves to grazing, breeding on their pastures some store of horse and Camels, which they sold to others, but especially maintaining themselves and their families by hunting and stealing. Supposed to come originally from the Cappadocians, and Armenians of the lesser Asia, which by long and continual wars in the former Ages, were forced to forsake their dwellings, and for safety of their lives to fly to these unpeopled and desolate Mountains. Where searching every hill and dale, and following the opportunity of Springs and Rivers, but chiefly the mildest Temperature of the Air, and most cheerful aspect of the Sun, they built in many places poor Villages; and afterwards some better Towns. The principal of which is named Marsa, so called as it is conjectured from the River Marsia, which rising out of the Mountain Celen, passeth passeth by the same, and not far off falleth into the River Euphrates.

When it was made a Kingdom first, it is hard to say, the Kings hereof being mean and inconsiderable in the eye of the world, not worth the conquering, and wanting power to conquer others and enlarge their territories: nor indeed worthy any King but one of their own, who could content himself with reigning over Rocks and Mountains. The last was Aladeules, so much spoken of in the Turkish Histories, and by them called the Mountain King. Conceiv'd by some Writers to have been the Author of such a Paradise, as we shall describe when we come to Drangian, a Province of Persia; and by that means grown formidable to his neighbouring Princes. But that which made him most really and truly known, in the stories of the former times, was the stout opposition which he made against the Turks, in their wars with Persia. He had before given no small check to the proceedings of Bayazet the second, in his conquest of the Caramanian Kingdom; and no less troubled Selim the Son of Bayazet. In his Persian Wars, impeaching what he could the greatness of the Ottoman Family. Fought with by Selim, he made good his ground with a great deal of courage, till betrayed by Ali Beg, General of his Horse, and seeing his Army terrified by the shot of the Turks, he was fain to flee. But being at last taken, and put to death by the command of Selim, his Kingdom was converted to a Turkish Province, Anno 1515, and so continueth to this day.

The Kingdom of BAHAMAN was situate more towards the East, amongst the Mountains which divide Media from Hyrcania, as before was said. The Mountains in those parts so high, that Travellers at the end of a two days journey, may discern the middle Region of the Air to be beneath them; exceeding troublesome to ascend, about 30 miles in height when once got to the top; but more dangerous by reason of the Rocks and Precipices, in the going down: full of inhospitable streights, and so cold and barren, that were not Sovereignty a temptation above all resistance, no man would take upon him the command of so poor a Kingdom. And yet in this extremity of height and cold, there is great quantity of Sulphur, which makes it sparkle in the night, like the hill Vesuvius, in Italy, by means whereof here are many Hot-Baths, three of them walled about, two open; to which resort sundry and decrepit people, in very great multitudes. The chief Town of it Lary-Jen, in the ordinary Road or Pass betwixt Omack, the last Town of Hyrcania, and Damoon the first of Media. But the Kings Seat was in a Village called Reyna, where he had a Castle so built upon the best advantages of Art and Nature, that it seem'd invincible; adorned above, with gardens, flowers, and most pleasant fruits; and furnished beneath with a Rivulet of pure water, which pleasantly passing thorough the Castle, fell into the Valley. A Castle of so large a circuit, that besides the Kings Family or Court, it was able to admit a garrison of 10000 men.

The last King hereof was the forefaid Bahaman, deriv'd from a long descent of Royal Ancestors, comparing for antiquity with the Persian Sophies; who though ill-neighbor'd on both sides, by the Tartarian on the one, and the Kings of Persia on the other; yet had they with great fortune, policy, and valour, maintained their Royalties against all pretenders. But about the late Persian Sophy, having either conquered or reduced Hyrcania, pick'd a quarrel with Bahaman; pretending that by the opportunity of his situation he might rob his Caravans, hinder his progress towards the Hyrcanian Sea, and turn into other Channels all the Streams or Rivers, which rising from Mount Taurus, watered and enriched his Persian Territories. And though Bahaman never had attempted any of the things objected; yet it was caus'd enough of quarrel that he might do so: and therefore is besieged in his Castle of Reyna, with an Army of 30000 men. Finding no possibility to prevail by force, the General of the Persians proceeds by treachery, invites the old King into his Camp under colour of Parley, and by this means drew his two Sons out of the Castle to the Parley also. Whom having got into his power, he first caus'd their heads to be cut off; and after making use of their Seals and Signets, obtains a surrender of the place: and with it the possession of this mountainous Kingdom, Anno 1601. or thereabouts, united ever since to the Crown of Persia.

TURCOMANIA.

TURCOMANIA is bounded on the East, with Media, and the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor; on the North, with Tartary; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and Assyria. So called from the Turcomans or Turks; who from hence made their first expedition for the conquest of Persia, and after spread themselves over all those parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, now in their possession. A Country which consisteth of four several Provinces, each Province having to its self its particular story; and therefore we must look upon it, as it is now divided into those four parts, that is to say, 1 Armenia Major, or Turcomania properly and specially so called; 2 Colechia, now called Mengrelia; 3 Iberia, now named Georgia; and 4 Albania, which they now term Zuria.

1 ARMENIA MAJOR.

ARMENIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Media, and some part of the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the River Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Minor, in the Jesser Asia; on the North, with Colechia, or Mengrelia; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and some part of Assyria.

It was called Armenia, as some say, quasi Aram-Mini, or the Mini of Syria; but as others say, quasi Har-mini, that is to say, Mons Mini, or Montana Miniadis: the Mini, or Mini, being a Region of this tract, mentioned by Jeremy the Prophet, Chap. 51. 27. and by him placed betwixt Ararat and Askenaz, which shew the situation of it to be hercabouts. Major which added to it for distinction sake, to difference it from Armenia Minor: and now it is called Turcomania, as the first seat in which the Turcomans or Turks did fix themselves, after their eruption out of Seythia.

The Country in the most part overspread with hills, branches of those huge mountains of Taurus, and Anti-Taurus; but intermixt with fertile and delightful Valleys, liberally furnished with Cattel, and good store of Fruits, though much subject to deep snows, which do much annoy it. The Riches of it not to be better estimated than by the frankness of Tigranes, once King hereof. Who being fined by Pompey at 6000 Talents, not only very readily laid down that sum; but added of his own accord to every Roman Souldier 50 Drachmas of Silver, 1000 Drachmas to each Captain, and to every Colonel a Talent. For though Tigranes had added some part of Media, and the whole Kingdom of Syria, unto his Estate: yet those being new Acquests, and not fully settled, were not much likely, for the present, to enrich his Coffers: new conquered Provinces being for the most part more chargeable than beneficial to the Victor.

The people are generally great bodied, of comely personage, and patient of all kind of labour; good Archers, when put to it, but careless of honour got by wars; merry, idlers to be at ease, and apt to be soothed. The women tall, but homely, of a manly look, most of them skillful at their Bow, or some other weapon. Their Families for the most part great, the Father, and all his Posterity to the third and fourth generation, living under a roof; after whose death the eldest, whether Son or Brother, hath the chiefest Rule. In diet and clothing all alike; and in most places they are said to be very industrious; painful in tillage, and well seen in Manufactures; especially rich Tapestries, Grograms, and watered Chamlets: with which they traffick into most Cities of the Turks and other Mohometans; privileged, as they say, by a Charter under Mahomet's own hand, above other Christians; and upon that occasion more dispersed in the Eastern Countries than any Nation in the world, the Jews excepted.

They have a Language of their own, which they call the Armenian, not only used amongst them in common talk, but in sacred offices: the Scriptures being translated into that language also; and that, as the people do affirm, by the hand of St. Chrysostom, at such time as (on the solicitation of the Emperors Endoxia, his most eager enemy) he was confined to the lesser Armenia, by the Emperour Arcadius: to whom also they ascribe the invention of the Armenian Characters, or Lettets, still in use amongst them.

They received the Christian Faith by the preaching of St. Bartholomew, and were anciently of the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, as a Province of the Pontick Diocese; which together with the Asian Diocese, and that of Ibrace, were by the Council of Chalcedon laid unto that Patriarchat. But falling into the opinion of Eutyches, touching one nature only in CHRIST our Saviour, they withdrew themselves long since, from the communion of the Greeks, whom they hold in greater detestation than all other Christians; and chose two Patriarchs of their own, of whom more anon. Other opinions which they hold besides those of Eutyches, (which yet they labour to make capable of an Orthodox sense;) and those wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, as 1 Denying Purgatory, and prayers for the dead. 2 Admitting none to be made Priests, except those that be married; 3 Denying the body of Christ to be really under the species of bread and wine. And 4 Rebaptizing such as come to their Communion from the Latine Churches; Are these that follow, in which they differ also from most Churches else, viz. 1 In receiving Infants to the Lord's Table; immediately after Baptism. 2 In abstaining from unclean meats. 3 In fasting on Christmas day. And 4 In holding their Children over the fire, as a necessary circumstance in Baptism; because John the Baptist told the people which followed him, that CHRIST would baptize them with the Holy Ghost, and with fire; in which place he meaneth not material fire, but the lively purgation of the Holy Ghost, according to the nature of fire. The Church of this Sect is governed by two Patriarchs; whereof the one hath under his jurisdiction this Turcomania, comprehending 15000 Families, besides very many Monasteries; and the other hath under him the two Provinces of Armenia the Lesser, and Cilicia, comprehending 20000 Families, or thereabouts: The first residing anciently in Sebastia, the Metropolis of the greater Armenia; the second originally at Melitene, the Metropolis of Armenia Minor, but of late at Sir, a small City, not far from Tarsus in Cilicia. Both honoured with the title of Catholiques, and having under them to the number of 30 Bishops.

Chief Rivers of this Country, 1 Araxes, which rising out of Mount Aber, an Armenian Mountain, first runneth Eastward as far as Media, and then bendeth itself towards the North: and after a long course is divided into two Branches; whereof the one falleth into the Caspian Sea, the other into, 2 Cyrus, another great River of this Country. The fountain of this last in Mount Caucasus, in the furthest North of Turcomania; and falling into a Lake, there meeteth with, 3 Cambyses, another great River of these parts; and so together hasten to the Caspian also. 4 Euphrates, by the Turks called Frât, by the Hebrews, Parah, famous in Scripture for its watering the Garden of Eden, hath its fountain in the hills which they call Niphates, as is said by Strabo. A River of great length and swiftness. For having forced it self a passage through the Mountains of Taurus, it runneth in the West of Mesopotamia, with a stream so violent, that they who go by water from Bir to Birrah, a Town on the North-west of Mesopotamia, to the City of Bagdat, are fain to come back again by land; selling those boats for eight Crowns which they bought for 50. At Apamia, a City of Chaldaea, it is joined with Tigris, with which the greatest branch of it passeth thorow the City of Babylon, and so into the Persian Gulf: the rest of it being cut into many Channels, for fear it should overflow and drown the Country, are quite lost in the Lakes of Chaldaea. 5 Tigris, a swifter stream than that, whence it had the name; the word in the Median Tongue signifying an Arrow. A River of so strong a course, that it passeth thorow the Lake Thonilis, without mixture of Waters, and affordeth the Armenians an easy passage to Bagdat: who on a few Rofes borne up with Goat-skins blown full of wind, and boards laid upon them, make their voyage thither. It is called Hiddekel in the Scripture, one of the four Rivers which watered the Garden of Paradise, situate in an Island made by the embracement of this River and Euphrates, with their several Branches. Rising originally out of the Lake of Thelipitis, in Armenia Major, where now we are. It is presently almost swallowed by the gaping Earth; and passing under the huge bulk of Taurus, breaketh forth again; and compassing the East parts of Mesopotamia, which it divides from Assyria, meets with Euphrates, as before. Of which its first and second birth, thus the Poet Lucan,

At Tigrin subito tellus absorbet hiatus,
Occultaque tegis cursum, rursusque renatum
Fonte novo flumen pelagi non abnegat undas.

That is to say,

Tigris, soon swallowed by the thirsty earth,
Finds there a burial where it had its birth:
But breaking out at a new spring, vouchsafes
With the salt Seas to mix its sweeter waves.

Mountains of most note, are. 1 Abor, glorying in the fountains of the great River Araxes. 2 Periarides, or Periariger, as Ptolemy, Pariedri, as Pliny calleth it, a branch or spur of the great Mountain Taurus. 3 Udaesper, another branch of that great Mountain. 4 Some part of Anti-Taurus. 5 The Mountains called Montes Moschici, more towards the North, abutting upon Cappadocia, and the Euxine Sea: which name they took from Mosch; or Mosch, the Son of Japhet, preserving the remembrance of his planting there. 6 Niphates, one of the spurs of Taurus, out of which the famous River Euphrates is said to issue. 7 The Gordian Mountains, conceived by many learned men to be the Mountains of Ararat, on one of the tops whereof called Baris, the Ark of Noah is most generally affirmed to rest. Affirmed by many ancient Writers of the Christian Church, and countenanced not only by Josephus, and some others of the Elder Historians; but by the Septuagint themselves: who in the 37 Chap. of Isa. v. 38. and 2 Kings 19. 37. have rendered Ararat by Armenia. And be it so, let Ararat be Armenia, and consequently the Mountains of Ararat be Armenian Mountains: yet doth it not follow hereupon, that the Ark rested on the Gordian Mountains, or any other of this Country; as they would conclude. We may infer as Logically, for ought I can see, that the Garden of Eden must be looked for in Armenia also; because situate in the circlings of Euphrates, and Tigris; two Armenian Rivers. Those Rivers have indeed their fountains in Armenia Major, but compass not the Garden of Eden, till after a long course they encounter each other in the spacious Plains of Babylon. And so those Mountains, though they have the name of the Mountains of Ararat or Armenia, because there first grown to a discernible and super-eminent height above all the Mountains of those parts, became not the resting place of the Ark, till after a further course towards the East, they were grown to their fullest height; which is in those parts of it betwixt Scythia and Persia, which are called Mount Caucasus: not that Mount Caucasus which lieth on the North of Calchir, and Iberia, out of which the River Cyrus is said to rise; but that which lieth on the East-side of the Caspian Sea, where Mount Taurus and Imasus do cross each other. But of this elsewhere.

It was divided heretofore into many Provinces, the principal whereof had (I grant) its name from the Gordian Mountains, called in some Writers, Cordiei; from whence the Province had the name of Gordiana, but most commonly called Corduene, bordering on Assyria. The Kingdom once of Zarbicus, who siding with Lucullus against Tigranes King of Armenia, was by Tigranes murdered with his Wife and Children; but honoured by Lucullus with a stately and magnificent funeral. 2 The second Province of note is called Cotacene, near the Montes Moschici. 3 Tosarene bordering on the River Cyrus. 4 Colchene on the banks of Araxes. 5 Sophene, near the turnings of the River Euphrates: mistook by some industrious and knowing men, to be the Syria Soba of the Holy Scriptures. 6 Bassine, on the Northwest, near the Springs of that River. But what Cities did belong to each, I find no where specified.

Those of most consequence in the whole, 1 Artaxata, by Florus called Capus Gentis: of most esteem in those times, and the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Armenia from its first foundation. Built by Artaxes, one of the Progenitors of Tigranes, at the persuasion of Annibal, whilst he abode in this Country: who liking the situation of the place, drew on it the model of a strong and gallant City, according to which Plat-form it was presently built. Taken and sacked by the Romans, as a daughter of Carthage, by Corbulo in the time of Nero, it never could revive again to its former splendour. In the middle ages called Esecbia, and at this day Coy, or Coim; if not built rather out of the ruins of it. A City memorable for two great battels near unto it; the first between Lucullus and the one side, against Mithridates and Tigranes on the other; wherein the Romans were Victors: the second between Selimus Emperor of the Turks, and Hyssmael the Persian Sophy; wherein the Turks were Conquerours, Anno 1514: A Victory which he bought with the loss of 30000 of his best men, and such a terror to the whole Army, that the Turks to this day call it the only day of doom. The fields adjoining to the Town wherein this cruel battel was fought, called the Chaldean fields. 2 Sebastia, now Suassia, seated on Euphrates, where it meeteth with the Mountain Taurus; the residence of the Patriarch of the Armenians; at their first separation from the See of Constantinople; the Metropolis at that time of all Armenia: so named in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks call Sebastos. But of late divested of that dignity, the Patriarchal See, by reason of the fierce wars raging in this Country, betwixt the Persians and the Turks, being removed to the Monastery of Eomeazin, near the City of Ervan in Persia; in the dominions of which King these Armenian Christians live in great abundance, by the name of Yelphelins. 3 Tigranocerta, beautified and enlarged, if not first founded, by Tigranes above mentioned; by whom replenished with people of several Nations, whose Countries he had taken from them, and enriched in a manner with the wealth of all his Kingdom: there being no Armenian, either Prince or Peasant, who sent not somewhat towards the adorning of it. But taken by Lucullus without great resistance, those several Nations not agreeing amongst themselves; and therein besides other Treasure, no less than 8000 Talents in ready money. The City situate near a River, which Tacitus calleth Niceforus. 4 Arsamosata, by Pliny called Arsimote, on the banks of Euphrates. 5 Cholna, so called in memory of Hul, or Chul the Son of Aram, one of the first Planters of this Country. 6 Baraza, by the Emperor Leo much enlarged and beautified; dignified with the new name of Leontopolis, and for a while made the Metropolis of the Province. 7 Arsarata, by Strabo called Araxata. 8 Theodosiopolis, built on the foundation of some of the more ancient Cities, by the Emperor Theodosius, and of him thus named. 9 Colonia, the strongest and most defensible City hereof, when possessed by the Romans. 10 Clamassum, a strong Town on the banks of Euphrates, taken by Selimus the first in his way towards Persia, and therewith Livry and seisin of the rest of this Country, since wholly conquered by his Successors. 11 Chars, not far from the same River also, supposed to be the Chorfa of Ptolemy, of which not long since the ruins only; but in three weeks so repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1579. that it is thought to be impregnable. 12 Thepsia, giving name of old to the Lake Thepsius, and to the Region called Thepsites; but now not in being. 13 Armining, now of greatest name, and cleemed the Metropolis of this Country: situate in that part of the Lake of Vassan (the Martiana palus of the ancient Writers) which lieth next to this Country: and by that well fortified: the only City of Armenia possessed by the Persians, who are the Lords of all that Lake, of which more hereafter. 14 Van, both for natural situation, and the works of Art, accomplished by the Turks for their strongest Bulwark in these parts against the Persians; and for that cause well garrisoned, and as well munitioned.

This Country was first planted by Hul or Chul the Son of Aram, and by Mosch one of the Sons of Japhet, who with their Families or Colonies possessed the same: the one leaving the remainder of his name, in the Montes Moschici; the other in the Town called Cholna, and the Region called Colchene by Ptolemy, Cholabatene by Stephani. Advanced to the honour of a Kingdom as soon as any, that of Babel excepted: Nimus the third from Nimrod finding Bazaranes King hereof, whom he forced to acknowledge his superiority, and to aid him in his wars against Zoroaster the King of Bactria. Kings of most note in times succeeding, (for we have no constant Catalogue of them) were. 1 Araxes, who being warred on by the Persians, was promised victory by the Oracle, on the sacrifice of his two fair Daughters. Willing to satisfy the Gods, and yet spare his Children, he sacrificed two of the daughters of Mischalus, a Nobleman of this Country: by whom in revenge hereof his own daughters were slain, and himself so closely followed, that swimming the River then called Helmus, he was therein drowned, and thereby gave unto that River the name of Araxes. 2 Artaxa, the founder of the great City Artaxata; spoken of before. 3 Tigranes, the most mighty King that ever reigned in Armenia, to which he added by his prowess, Galatia, and a great part of Cilicia, in Asia Minor, the whole Countries of Media, Syria, and Phenicia: But siding with Mithridates, whose daughter he had married, against the Romans, he was by Lucullus overthrown in two great battels, and outed of the greatest part of his dominions. Hearing that Pompey had succeeded Lucullus in command of the Army, and trusting more unto his goodness than a wife man would, he put himself into his power: by whom condemned in a great sum of money for the charge of the War, and stripped of all the rest of his Estates, he was suffered to enjoy Armenia Major, Syria being made a Province, Sophene given to Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, Media left unto it self, and the lesser Armenia conferred on one of his Sons, who being found guilty of some practice with the King of Parthia, was carried prisoner unto Rome, and his Country brought into the form of a Province. 4 Artavasdes, circumvented by Marc-Antony, who led him prisoner to Rome, but (as Seneca, ne quid bonori ejus desset, aureis, as the Historian tells us of him) it was in Chains of Gold for his great honour; giving Armenia to one of the Sons of Cleopatra. And though, 5 Artaxias recovered his Fathers Kingdom, yet he and his Successors held it but as Vassals of the Roman Empire: the Senate after that confirming, and sometimes nominating the Armenian Kings. Continuing in this Estate till the time of Trajan, it was by him reduced to the form of a Province (made after that a part of the Pontick Dioecese) who adding Mesopotamia also unto his Dominions, made Tigris the Eastern border of his Empire, which Augustus thought fit to limit with the banks of Euphrates. But long it held not in that form, being governed by its own Kings, as it was before Trajan's time, in the reign of Constantinus, Julian, and the Emperours following; whom they acknowledged and revered as their Lords in chief, till the time of Justinian the second (he began his Empire Anno 687.) when subdued by the Saracens. Recovered by that Emperour, but soon lost again, it continued subject to the Saracens till the breaking in of the Turks, Anno 844. of whom more anon. The greatest part of the Turks emptying themselves into Persia, and other Countries which they took from the Eastern Emperours; the Christians of Armenia began to take heart again, and to have Kings of their own, by whom governed, till again subdued by Occadan, or Heccata the Son of Gingis, the first Cham of the Tartars. Nor did the Tartars make so absolute a conquest of it, as to extinguish either Christianity, or the race of the Kings, Huitbon, firnamed Armenius, reigning after this, and going in person to Mongo, the great Cham of Tartary, 1257. And in our own Chronicles, in the Reign of King Richard the Second, we find mention of one Leon an Armenian King, who came hither to sue for aid against the Turks; by whom then then dispossessed of his Estates. By Uffan-Cassanes, one of the Princes of this Country, (of whom more hereafter) who had the fortune to obtain the Crown of Perfia, Anno 1472. it was made a Province of that Kingdom: and so continued till the year 1515. when conquered by Selimus the first, and by him made a part of the Turkish Empire; more fully settled and assured in the Reign of Amurath the third, who by causing many Forts and Garrisons to be planted in it, made the conquest absolute.

The Arms of this Kingdom, when a Kingdom, governed by Princes of its own of the Christian faith, were Gules, three heads of a Buck Argent, Crowned Or.

2. COLCHIS.

COLCHIS is bounded on the East, with Iberia; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, and part of the Tartars Preconpesis; on the North, with Tartary, from which parted by those vast hills, which the Romans called Caucasi; and on the South, with Armenia Major, from which separated by the Montes Moschici.

The reason of the name I find not. Nor can yield unto Bochartus, who fetcheth the original of the name and Nation, from Casubim, one of the Sons of Mizraim, the Son of Cham; the Etymology of the name being too much wrested, and Aegypt too far off to give a being to Colchis in those early days; though possibly in times succeeding, the Aegyptians hearing by the Greeks, of the wealth of the Country, might send Colonies of their people thither, as to other places. It is now called Mengrelia.

The Country said to be very fruitful, if the care of the husbandman were not wanting. Their Vines they plant at the feet of great trees, which twining about the arms thereof laden them full of Grapes: with which, and other fruits rising from the Earth, they used of late times to furnish the Store-houses of their Kings, for want of ready money to fill his Coffers, their tributes being paid in such commodities. Formerly of great fame for abundance of Gold, found in the sands of their Rivers issuing from the Caucasian Mountains. The thing affirmed by Appianus in his Mithridaticæ χρυσοφόροις ἢ ἐν τῇ Κανδακῇ πόλει μυροί ἢ χρυσὸν ἀφ' αὐτῆς, Many of their Springs, faith he, which come out of Caucasus, carry veins of Gold. The like faith Strabo also, and some other Ancients. With which, and out of their rich Mines both of Gold and Silver, the Kings hereof were so well furnished with those Metals, that the furniture of their Chambers were all of Gold, and the beams of their Lodgings were made of Silver. But now so destitute of both, that the people for want of money to buy and sell with, are enforced to barter their commodities, and change one for another.

The people at the present very rude and barbarous; so inhumane and void of natural affection, that they sell their children to the Turks. The better sort of them much given to belly-cheer, dancing, and singing loose Sonnets of love and dalliance; using much wine in their entertainments, which the more their guests drink, the better welcome; inflamed wherewith they offer them for a cooler their Wives or Sisters, with charge to yield them all content, esteeming it no small credit to them if it be accepted. Nor are the women much averse from the entertainment, whether to please themselves, or obey their husbands, let them tell that can.

The Christian Faith was first here planted in the time of the Emperour Justinus, by whose perswasion Iaurus Prince of the Colchi, then at the Court in Constantinople, became a Christian; and being baptized, was returned back into his Country with the title of King. But Ca- bades, the King of Perfia, much offended at it, proclaimed war against him; which hindered the further progress of the Gospel, till the year 860. About which time Methodius and Cyril, two reverend men, were by the Patriarch of Constantinople employed in this service; which they successfully effected. In that regard they hold to the communion of the Church of Greece, and belong to the jurisdiction of that Patriarch, to whom conform in most dogmatical points of their Religion; and in many practical. And though they have a distinct language of their own, which hath no affinity with the Greek, yet do they celebrate Divine Offices in the Greek Tongue, and follow the Rituals of that Church; which few of them understand any better than the Vulgar Papists of France, Spain, or Germany, do the Latine Service. Whether it be that they have no learned men amongst them, either to translate their old Liturgie, or to compose a new; or that they hold all alterations in Religion to be matters of danger; or that ignorance is the best mother of devotion (as is thought by others) I am not able to determine.

The chief Rivers of this Country are, 1 Hippus, 2 Cyanus, 3 Cheritus, all rising out of the Caucasian Mountains, and falling into the Euxine. 4 Phasis, the principal of all, rising out of the Montes Moschici, or Armenian Mountains, and there called Bas. Navigable with smaller Vessels a great way up into the Country, and with great ships 18 miles from the Sea. Memorable amongst the Ancients for the landing of the Argonauts in the mouth thereof; and those delicate Fowl called from hence Phasides, or Phasian (Phasian) which they brought with them into Europe.

As for this expedition of the Argonauts, being the most remarkable action in those elder ages of the world; when Piracy and depredations were accounted for Heroical virtues; it was no other than the adventure of some noble Grecians, for the Gold of Colchis. The age wherein it hapned, was about the 11 year of Gideon, the Judge of Israel. The chief Adventurers, Jason, Orpheus the famous Poet, Castor and Pollux the sons of Tindarus, Tellamon and Peletus, the sons of Æacus, and Fathers of Ajax and Achilles, Laertes the Father of Ulysses, Amphiarus the South-layer, Hercules, Theseus, Meleager, with many others of like note. These moved with the great noise of the wealth of Colchis, and the riches of King Aëtes, then therein reigning, resolved upon a voyage thither, embarked in a ship called Argo, (whence the name of Argonauts) whereof one Typhis was chief Pilot. Passing the Hellepont, Propontick, and Thracian Bosphorus, they came into the Euxine Sea: and after many difficulties and strange Adventures (which such Knights Errants could not choose but encounter with) they landed in the River Phasis, and came to the Kings Court, and there were kindly entertained. But finding the Kings Treasures to be too well guarded to be took by force (said by the Poets to be kept by a Dragon always waking) they practiced with Medea, the daughter of Aëtes, to assist them in robbing her Father. Who being in love with Jason, on promise of marriage with him, assented to it: By whose Artifices (which the Poets call Magical Charms) the Guardians being circumvented, and the treasure gotten, they all, together with Medea, embarked again, and after a long and dangerous voyage returned into Greece. This is the substance of the Story; which being the greatest and most notable voyage which the Grecians in those early days had undertaken, occasioned the Poets to advance it to the highest pitch, and to disguise it with many Fictions, and ingenious fancies: But not without some ground entitled to the Golden Fleece (which they make the end of the design.) For the Rivers, Rivers as before was said, having Golden sands, which fell down from the Mountains (as in many other parts of the world they are found to have) it was the custom of the people to lay many Fleeces of wool in the descent of those Rivers, in which the grains of Gold remained, though the water passed through; which Strabo witnesseth to be true.

But leaving these Adventurers to pursue their fortunes, let us go forward to survey the Colchian Cities; the principal whereof, 1 Diocaria, a Town of great wealth and trade, founded by Amphius, and Telchius, two Spartans, the Charioters of Castor and Pollux, and so named in honour of their Masters, whom the Greeks call Adenepoi: which two Spartans passing further East, were afterwards the founders of the Nation from them called Hentochi, or the Chariot-drivers. A Town of such resort by Merchants from most parts of the world, that here were spoken 300 different Languages; inasmuch that the Romans (as Pliny faith) were fain to maintain here 130 Interpreters for dispatch of business, and negotiating with those Merchants. 2 Sybaris, the Seat-Royal of the Colchian Kings, about nine miles from which was the Temple of Mars, to which Medea is reported to have brought the Argonauts. 3 Siganemum, near the mouth of the River Cyanus: as is also, 4 Æa, by Psolomy called Æapolis, an Egyptian Colony, planted here by Sesostrius (in the time of Reboam the Son of Solomon) at what time he attempted, but without success, the conquest of Colchis. 5 Neapolis, so called from the newness or foundation of it, when that name was given. 6 Phasis, so called from the River upon which it is situated, retaining both the site and name to this very day: the ordinary residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom called Phajum. 7 Alvati, a well fortified place. More in the Land are placed by Psolomy, 8 Mechelissus. 9 Sirace. 10 Zadris. 11 Swiriam, &c. not much observable in old Story, nor now known at all.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, most probably, came out of the neighbouring Armenia, and therefore the posterity of Hul or Chul, from whence perhaps the name of Colchis; to whom in tract of time, some Colonies out of Egypt, (a Sea-faring people) moved with the great fame of the riches and wealth hereof, did adjoin themselves: the Colchians on that ground, (or from some part of his Army left there by Sesostrius) being said by Amnianus Marcellinus, to be the ancient off-spring of the Egyptians. The most ancient of their Kings was Etes, spoken of before; who entertaining Phryxus flying out of Greece from the fury of his Stepdame Ino, with great store of treasure, occasioned the Argonauts, as well in way of revenge, as in hope of booty, to make that famous expedition for the Gold of Colchis, disguised under the fiction of the Golden Fleece. Of most note after him, Selaneus, and Esobopes, who first discovered the rich Mines of Gold and Silver; of which Metals they made all their Vessels, even the beams of their Chambers. The same whereof drew thither Sesostrius, the great King of Egypt, who being vanquished in the field, was fain to lay aside all those hopes which he brought with him thither, and return back to Egypt in worse state than he came; but that he left behind him an Egyptian Colony in the City of Æa, which after occasioned others of that Country to repair hither also. Living in peace and unmolested from this time forwards, they were unhappily engaged by Tigranes of Armenia, to side with him against the Romans; and in his overthrow gave such advantage to the Victor, that Ordes the King of Colchis was fain to submit himself to Pompey, to dismiss his Forces, leave his faithfulness, and finally to redeem his peace, by sending to him a Bedstead of purest Gold, and many other rich Presents. After this, the Romans had here their Agents, and received hence some annual profits, but never brought it to the form of a Province. Distressed between the Perfians and Constantinopolitans, they had much ado to stand upright; though betwixt both they kept themselves in a kind of liberty: as of late times, betwixt the Perfians, Turks, and Tartars, their too potent Neighbours. But at the last, Anno 1579: Amurath the third, to make the safer passage for his Forces into Georgia, sent Ulucalier his Admiral, with a great Fleet into the Euxine Sea: who coming up the River Phasis, took the City of Fassum, fortified it, and laid so certain a foundation of future conquest; that though the Mengrelians did not long after demolish some of his fortifications: yet they were afterwards repaired, and Fassum made the seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, as it still continueth.

3. IBERIA.

IBERIA is bounded on the East, with Albania; on the West, with Colchis; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; and on the South, with the Montes Moschici; by the first mountains parted from Sarmatia Asiatica, and by the last from Armenia Major.

It was so called from the River Iberus, which running thorthwile, falleth at last into the more noted River Cymus. But is now called Georgia; and that as some say from St. George the Cappadocian Martyr, whom here they have in very great reverence, as their tutelary Saint and Patron; as others say, from George a Cappadocian Bishop, by whose preaching they were brought unto Christianity; and some again will have them called properly Gordians, and corruptly Georgians, from their near neighbourhood to those mountains: But the most probable opinion is, as I conceive, that they took this name from the Georgi, whom Pliny reckoneth amongst other of the Caspian Nations. Though to say truth, the name of Georgia extendeth somewhat further than that of Iberia, as comprehending also that part of Armenia Major which lies next to Media, and the whole Country of Albania, if I guess aright.

The Country, for the greatest part, is covered with Mountains, Woods, and Thickets; and in that regard unconquerable for the difficulty of the mountainous passages: yet notwithstanding it is very fruitful in many places, having many fertile Plains, and wealthy Valleys, well watered, and of greater increase to the Husbandman, if he be not wanting to himself in care and industry.

Of the old Iberians it is written, that they were a very warlike Nation, and used to set as many Pillars about the grave of a dead man, as he had slain Enemies in his life: as also that those of the same Tribe or Family had all things common, he being the Ruler, which was eldest; and that some of them did derive themselves from the Children of David begotten on the wife of Uriah, for that cause never marrying out of their own kindred. The present Georgians very warlike, strong of body, and valourous in fight, for a long time defended themselves and Country from the Turks and Perfians, with great prudence making use of the one against the other; But overpowered by the vast multitude of Turks breaking in upon them, they have lost many of their best Forts, and much of their liberty.

The Christian Faith was first here planted in the time of Constantine the Great, by means of a Christian captive woman (such extraordinary ways doth God find out to promote his Gospel) who being of a most devout life, and exemplary piety, had by her Prayers to CHRIST restored a young child to health, which was thought past cure: and healed the Queen hereof of a desperate malady, when no help of Physick would prevail. Whereupon the the King, sent Embassadors to Constantine, desiring Ministers and Preachers to be sent to Iberia; to instruct the people in the Faith, which was done accordingly. Since that time Christianity hath flourished in this Country without interruption; though by Mahometans, and Pagans, on all sides encompassed: agreeable in doctrinal points to the Church of Greece, whose Rituals also, the People do to this day follow. Not subject for all that to the Patriarch of Constantinople, (though of his Communion) but to their own Metropolis only: who hath under him about 18 Bishops, and resideth for the most part, in St. Katharines Monastery on Mount Sinai. By means of which remote dwelling of their principal Pastor, Mahometanism hath got some footing; and Jesuitism began to creep in amongst them. The occasion of which last was this.

About the year 1614. the Persians making an inroad into this Country, took the City of Cremen, and therein Cetaba, the mother of Prince Teimuraz; whom, leading her captive into Persia, and not able to prevail with her to turn Mahometan, they most cruelly murdered. Some of the Jesuits then travelling in those Countries, and willing out of that sad accident to advance the fame of their Society, together with the Catholic cause, cut off the head of a dead man whom they found in the way, anointed it with oil and odours, brought it into Georgia, and signified unto the Prince, that they had with them the head of the blessed Martyr Cetaba: desiring leave to live in some Monastery, and have the keeping of the holy Relique committed to them. This easily believed, and granted, the head was placed with great honour, in the Church of St. George at Aberdall, much resort to it from all parts by diseased persons: whom if past cure, the Jesuits sent home again, prescribing them in the way of Preparation a long time of repentance; if curable by outward means which they applied, the cure was presently ascribed to the holy Relique. Grown famous by this means, they gained many Professors to themselves; and had no small hope of prevailing on Prince Teimuraz to submit himself to the Pope, as the Vicar of CHR IST. When in the heat of all their glories, a Letter cometh from Mancia, a Lady attendant on the Princess, (but then living in Persia, as a slave or bondmaid): signifying that her Master by her perswasion, had got into his power the body of his mother Cetaba; which he might ransom if he pleased: two Travellers withall, who came out of Persia with the Jesuits, reporting what they see them do with the dead man's head. By which means the Imposture being discovered, the body of the Queen was sent for, the false Relique was cast out of the Church, and the false Jesuits into Prison, and next out of the Country.

Rivers of note I find not any, either in Ptolemy, or any of our modern Writers, but what are touched upon before, except only the River of Iberus spoken of already, from which the Country is thus named. The whole in general is destitute of waters, that Pompey in his march this way against the Albanians, was fain to carry 10000 bladders filled with water, for the use of his Army.

Places of most antiquity and importance in it, 1. Araxissa, 2. Vasada, 3. Lubium, 4. Armatica, all named by Ptolemy; this last by Pliny called Harmastis. 5. Cremen, the chief City now possessed by the Georgians. 6. Cachete, honoured with a fair Church, the most beautiful of all the Country, dedicated by the name of Saint George. 7. Uziela, where are to be seen the ruins of a large City, and many Churches; by what name anciently called, I find not. 8. Alinucala, or the Golden Castle, a strong Fort, and the ordinary residence of the Georgian Princes, since the time of the wars betwixt the Persians and the Turks. 9. Archibelech, a strong Castle taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his wars against Tamas King of Persia, and ever since holden by the Turks. 10. Teflis, a large and capacious Town, forsaken by the Georgians at the coming of Mustapha, General of Amurath the third, against the Persians; who, liking the situation of it, caused it to be repaired and fortified, planted thereon an hundred Pieces of Ordnance, and left therein a Garrison of 6000 Soldiers. 11. Lori, distant from Teflis about two days journey of a Carrier's pace, strengthened with a lofty Castle, environed with deep ditches, and a thick wall, amounting to a mile in compass. Seized on by Ferat Bassa, the Successor of Mustapha, who repaired the Walls, planted thereon 200 small Pieces of Ordnance, and garrisoned it with 7000 Turks for defence thereof. 12. Tomatis, a short days march from Lori, the Country lying betwixt both, full of rich fields and pastures, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel. Nigh unto which the said Ferat raised a new Fortrefs, for the better command of the Staghts and Passages, leading from thence to Lori, and so to Teflis, (the Key of Media or Sirvan) the Wall whereof being 1700 yards in compass, he caused to be planted with 200 Pieces of Artillery, and with incredible diligence cut down a thick Wood which lay before it, which otherwise would have been a receptacle of Thieves, or Enemies. 13. Gilisa, 14. Balcapan, possessed and fortified by the Turks, to make good their footing in this Country. But possibly most of these strong holds now possessed by the Turks may be within the bounds of Armenia Major, and Albania, though within the Country of the Georgians; the name not being limited to Iberia, as was said before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were such who were brought hither by Iabal, the Son of Japhet, from whom this people at the first, as Josephus hath it, had the name of Thobeli. But that name growing out of knowledge, the Nations in it of most note were the Tibareni, Mossynaci, Chalybes, and of less esteem, the Biferes, Sapieres, Macrones, &c. united at the last in the name of Iberi, from the River Iberus, of which Pliny speaketh, the principal of all this Country. Too fruitful of increase for so narrow a dwelling, some of them put themselves to seek their fortunes; when after long wandering they fell upon the Coast of Spain next the Pyrenees, where they staid themselves; giving the name of Iberus to the chief River there; and of Iberia to the Country; Of which more before. Such of them as remained behind continued an unconquered people, under the government of their own Kings, till the time of Tigranes King of Armenia. By whom invited to his aid against the Romans, they came in accordingly; and in his fall discomfited by Lucullus in three several battels, were fain to stand upon their guard as well as they could: first holding fair with Pompey, who succeeded Lucullus in his charge; But breaking out again on a new temptation, they were encountered by him. In which battel 9000 of their men being slain, and 10000 taken, they were constrained to sue for peace; not otherwise to be obtained till Attaces, the King of these Iberians, gave his Sons for Pledges. After this Fendataries to the Roman, and Gracian Emperours, till the fatal inundation of the Saracens had so weakened that Empire, that the Kings hereof acknowledged no more subjection to those of Constantinople, till Constantinople it self became the Imperial seat of the Ottoman Family; in whose quarrels with the Persian Sophies, this Country began to suffer a new invasion; some Towns and Forts of it being taken by Solyman, in his march or passage against Tamas. Afterwards in the time of Amurath the third, who set his mind most eagerly on the war with Persia, a great part of it was subdued by

Mustapha

Mustapha, the Turkish General: who inviting the widow Princess and her two Sons to come to his Tent, sent the young Princes to Constantinople: and by that means had opportunity to assure his purchases. And though the Persians did their best to assist the Georgians, yet proved they but a kind of miserable comforters, as much punishing or plaguing this poor Country with their aids, as the Turks by their Armies. So that now it stands divided betwixt the Grand Seigneur, and its natural Princes: the Georgian Princes holding the greatest part, but the Turks being in possession of the strongest holds; kept by them under colour of securing their way to Persia, for which this Country is indeed but unhappily seated.

4 ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the East, with the Caspian Sea, on the West, with Iberia; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; on the South, with the Moschick. So named from the Albani, who did once inhabit it, and of late called Suiria, but reckoned in these last ages as a part of Georgia.

The Country of so rich a Soil, that without the least labour of the Husbandman, the Earth doth naturally and liberally afford her store; and where it is but once sown, will yield two or three reapings. But being ill husbanded on it in former times, they occasioned Strabo to give them this Note for a remembrance, That they needed not the use of the Sea, who knew no better how to make use of the Land. The people anciently so simple; that they could not reckon above one hundred; ignorant of weights, measures, and the use of money. Old age they had in high esteem, but held it utterly unlawful to snare speech of the dead. And of these Pliny doth report, That they were gray-headed from their very youth, and could see as well by night as by day; the verity of which last may be somewhat questionable. But withall they are affirmed to have been a stout and courageous people, strong bodies, patient of toil and labour, as they are at this day. And well the men may be courageous and stout, when the women are so truly masculine. Of whom it is affirmed by Authors of undoubted credit, that they were exercised in Arms and martial feats, as if descended lineally from the ancient Amazons, whom Plutarch placed in this Tract; reporting some of them to be aiding to these Albanians, in their War with Pompey: which possibly might be no other, than some the more noble Albanian Dames.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1. Soani, giving name to the Soani, one of the Nations of these parts mentioned by Pliny. 2. Casim. 3. Gerrus. 4. Albanus, whence perhaps the name of Albani came unto this people. 5. Cyrus, (by Plutarch called Cyrnus) spoken of in Armenia Major, but more properly belonging to this Country; because here in it hath its spring, and the greatest part of its course also. For rising out of the Mountain Caucasus, which shuts up this Province on the North, it passeth thorow the midst of it, till it come to the borders of Armenia, where it beginneth to bend more towards the East; and having received into its Chanel all the former Rivers, besides many others of less note, falleth with twelve mouths into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Mountains of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with other Nations: the Montes Moschici on the South, and Caucasus upon the North, being rather common boundaries betwixt several Nations, than peculiar unto any one; though from the last the Iberians, and these Albanians, be in some Writers called Caucasice Gentis.

Cities and Towns I find many in it, but little of them more than their very names: 1. Chabata; by Pliny called

Cabalaca, and honoured with the Character of Insignis. Albania urbs, the most noted City of this Country. 2. Albada, so called from the River Albanus, upon which it was seated. 3. Tebea. 4. Namachia. 5. Thelbi. 6. Getara, near unto the Influx of the River Cyrus. How these were called, or whether any thing be remaining of them, I am not able to say. The chief now being, and worthy to be so accounted, is the City of Derbent, situate near the Caspian Sea; from which to Teflis, a City spoken of before, remain the foundations of a high and thick wall; affirmed to have been built by Alexander the Great, to defend these parts, against the irruptions of the Northern unconquered Nations. The Town environed with two walls, and so defended by difficult and narrow passages of the Rocks, that it is not easily accessible: but taken for all that, by Mustapha the Turkish General, Anno 1587. and made the ordinary residence of a Turkish Bassa. Conceived to be the Caucasice Porta of the Ancients, which Pliny honoureth with the title of Igens nature miraculum: by Egeffippus, for the strength of it, called Porta Ferrea; with reference to which by the Turks called Demir-can, the word signifying in their Language, A Gate of Iron. The other places of this Tract are either of no account and estimation, or else are specified before amongst the Cities and good Towns of the Georgians, of whose Country this is now a part: yet we may add, 2. Sabran, upon the borders of Media. 3. Sancta Maria, North of Derbent: both of them on, or near the banks of the Caspian Sea.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, seem to have been of the Plantation of Göcher the Son of Aram, and Nephew of Japhet, whose memory was long preserved in the City of Getara before mentioned: So called by him, or some of his Posterity, in remembrance of him. The People living somewhat out of the common road, were little troubled with Invaders from foreign parts; neither the Persians, nor Macedonians, looking so far North: Nor possibly had the Romans taken notice of them, had they not engaged themselves with Tigranes first, and afterwards with Mithridates, Falling on Pompey with an Army of 4000, and well beaten by him, they were content to sue for peace. But finding that the Iberians also had took up Arms; they engaged again; levying an Army of 12000 Horse, and 90000 Foot, in which Orocles their King, with his Brother Cosir, were in person present. And though they had made good the banks of the River Cyrus, yet being ill armed, and for the most part only with skins of beasts, they made but small resistance against the Romans: notwithstanding the gallant charge of Cosir, who assaulted Pompey, and had the honour to be slain by him in the place; After this overthrow, and their giving pledges unto Pompey for their good behaviour, we find little mention of them in the Stories of the Roman Empire, till the time of Trajan, who having conquered, and reduced Armenia Major to the form of a Province, resolved to shew his power to these neighbouring Nations; and to that end imposed a King on the Albani, of his own appointment; and made the Kings of Colchis, and Iberia, do their homage to him. In times succeeding no news of them; either because remote from the stage of Action, or serving under the command of some greater Nation, where their name occurs not. Conquered by Occadan, or Hoecata the Cham of Tartary, together with Iberia, and Armenia, they were a while subject to that Empire; and passing in succeeding times by the name of Georgians, did partake of the same fortunes with them. Now at the mercy of the Turks, who by reason of the strong footing which he hath gotten amongst them, is become a dreadful neighbour to them; if not acknowledged by them for their Lord in chief.

Thus

Thus having taken a survey of all the Provinces of the Turkish Empire, both in Europe and Asia, and touched upon the means by which they are possessed of Egypt, whereunto all the rest of their hold in Africa, serves but for an accessory, we will now look upon the story of this people, their first original, the great success of their affairs, the Princes under whose command they have made these conquests: Which having done, we will proceed to a Description of the Persons, Manners, and Conditions of the Turks themselves, their power and policy, with other things considerable in so great an Empire.

And first for the original of the Turkish Nation, they were most probably the descendants of those Turcs, whom Pliny and Pomponius Mela place about the Fens of Maotis. Of whom thus Mela, speaking of the Gelani, a Scythian people, juxta Thyrasgeta, Turcæque vastis sylvis occupant, alunturque venando, &c. Next unto them (saith he) live the Thyrasgetæ, and the Turcs, possessed of vast Woods, and maintained by hunting; and then a rough and desert Country with continual rocks, as far as to the Arymæphians. And Pliny multering up the barbarous Nations of those parts, joins the Tussageta (or Thyrasgetæ) with the Turks, and placeth them next the Arymæphians, as Mela doth, usque ad Scythiæ Indus salubris aspectus, spreading themselves unto the rough deserts and woody Valleys. Not known by action (though by name) till the time of Tiberius the second, who began his Empire Anno 577. when pressing hard on the Avares, a neighbouring Nation, they compelled them to forsake their seats, and pass into Europe; where they made themselves Masters of Pannonia, now called Hungary. In the time of Heraclius, we find them, with other barbarous Nations, at the Siege of Constantinople, but under the command of the Persians. After which they began to set up for themselves, and in the year 763. made a road into those Countries which we last described; and loading themselves with prey and booty, returned home again. But liking better of these parts than their own poor dwellings, in the year 844. they brake once more thorow the Caspian Streights; and passing through Iberia, seized on Armenia Major, and there fixed themselves, giving it the name of Turcomania. In which wide and spacious Country they roamed up and down, without any certain habitation, removing their herds and families from one place to another, as they had formerly been used to do in the fens of Maotis; and as the Tartars and wild Arabs do until this day. And so they lived, a poor and contemptible Nation, till Mahomet the Sultan of Persia, rebelling against his Lord and Master, the Caliph of Babylon, called in these Turks unto his aid; and by their help obtained a signal Victory. The Victory obtained, the Turks desire their Wages, and a fair dismissal; but could speed in neither, the Sultan being loth to part with such a necessary mischief, till his Affairs were better settled; and therefore shutting up the passages of the River Araxes, which he before had opened for them. Provoked wherewith, under the conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader, they began to spoil and waste the Country; a multitude of needy people, and some of the discontented Souldiers, coming daily to them. Assaulted by the Persians, in the first battle they not only got a notable Victory, but such store of Armour, Horses, and other necessities, as made them able to encounter with the Sultan himself: whom having overthrown and slain in the second fight, Tangrolipix is by both Armies proclaimed Sultan or King of Persia, in the year 1030. or thereabouts.

There were at this time amongst the Turks two most noted Tribes, the Selzucian, and the Oguzian. Of the Selzucian, Tangrolipix, Cuslu Moser, Malech, and Ducat were the Heads, of which, Tangrolipix as the chief of that Clan or Family, was settled in the Throne of Persia: Cuslu Moser furnished with an Army against the Christians, possessed himself of a great part of Asia Minor: Malech and Ducat, by the like favour of their Cousin the Persian Sultan, were vested into the Cities of Alleppe and Damascus, with their several Territories. But the Line of Tangrolipix and the rest being all worn out, as hath been shewn in our descriptions of Syria, and Anatolia, the man of most Nobility amongst the Turks, was Ottoman the chief of the Oguzian Family; Nephew of Solyman Prince of Machan, a small Territory in the Realm of Persia. Which Solyman, flying the fury of the Tartars when they conquered Persia, was drowned in croiling the River Emphrates, as he passed with his few Subjects towards Asia Minor, the best place of refuge for his Nation; leaving the chief-ship of his Tribe to Eshrogul his Son, who obtained of the last Aladine of the Selzucian Family, the Village of Soguta in Bithynia, for himself and his small handful of people. To him succeeded his Son Ottoman, in the year 1280. who to revenge some injuries done unto his people by the improvident Christians, took from them Caste after Caste; and in the end possessed himself of the City of Nice, not long before the Imperial Seat of the Greecian Emperours. Emboldened with such great successes, and hearing of the death of Aladine the second, whom he acknowledged for his Lord, he took unto himself the Title of Sultan, Anno 1300. from which before he had obtained. To this time, and these small beginnings we must reduce the first foundation of the Ottoman Empire; increased unto its present greatness, by the courage and good fortune of these Princes following.

The Kings of the Turks of the Oguzian, or Ottoman Family.

- 1300 1 Ottoman, or Osman the Son of Eshrogul, the first Turkish Sultan of this Line, added by his small Territory the greatest part of Pbrygia, Bithynia, and some part of Pontus. 28.
- 1328 2 Orchanes, took the City of Prusa, and made it his residence; and was the first that had footing in Europe, where he got Gallipoli, and other pieces.
- 1350 3 Amurath, won the Thracian Chersonese, the strong City of Adrianople, with the Counties of Servia, and Bulgaria; where he was slain by a common Souldier in the fields of Cosova. 23.
- 1373 4 Bajazet, made himself Master of a great part of Thrace, Macedon, and Achaia. He was taken Prisoner by Tamerlane, and brained himself in an Iron Cage, in which the insolent Conquerour used to carry him. 26.
- 1399 5 Solyman, the eldest Son of Bajazet, succeeded in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Provinces in Europe; but passing with an Army into Asia, for the recovery of those parts thereof usurped by Mahomet his youngest Brother, he was forced again into Europe, to make head against Musa Bajazet his third Son (employed by Mahomet in that diversion) who having there vanquished and slain him, Anno 1406. succeeded for a time in the Throne at Adrianople.
- 1404 6 Mahomet, the youngest Son of Bajazet, a vigilant and active Prince, first wrested from his Brother Isa (Bajazet's second Son then living) living) the City of Prusa with the Dominions thereunto belonging, thereupon taking to himself the Title of King or Sultan, by degrees recovered all which his Father had lost unto the Tartars: Afterwards making use of Musa, for the supplanting of Solyman, he followed him presently into Europe, where he fought with him, vanquished and slew him, about the year 1416. Thereby uniting in his own Person the whole Turkish Kingdom, which he enlarged with the more absolute Conquest of Dacia, part of Scalavonia, and the rest of Macedon. 17.

- 1416 7 Amurath II. subdued from the Constantinopolitan Empire, all Achaia, Theffaly, Epirus; he shaked the State of Hungary, and died before the Walls of Croy. 34.

The Ottoman Emperours.

- 1450 8 Mahomet II. surnamed the Great, and first Emperour of the Turks, conquered the Two Empires of Constantinople and Trabezond, Twelve Kingdoms, and Two hundred Cities. 31.
- 1481 9 Bajazet II. subdued the Caramanian Kingdom, and part of Armenia, and drove the Venetians from Morea, and their part of Dalmatia. 31.
- 1512 10 Selimus, having poisoned his Father, subverted the Mamelucks of Egypt; bringing it, together with Palestine, Syria, and Arabia, under the yoke of the Turks. 7.
- 1519 11 Solyman II. surnamed the Magnificent, surprised Rhodes, Belgrade, Buda; with a great part of Hungary, Babylon, Assyria, Mesopotamia. 48.
- 1567 12 Selimus II. an idle and effeminate Emperour, by his Deputies took from the Venetians the Isle of Cyprus; and from the Moor, the Kingdom of Tunis and Algiers. 8.
- 1575 13 Amurath III. took from the disagreeing Persian, Armenia, Media, and the City Taurus; and the Fort Guarino from the Hungarians. 20.
- 1595 14 Mahomet III. took Agria in Hungary; which Kingdom in all likelihood had been lost, if he had pursued his Victory at the Battel of Kerefore. Never but then in any Battel, and then so frightened, that he durst never see the face of an Army afterwards.
- 1603 15 Achmet, who the better to enjoy his pleasures, made peace with the German Emperour, and added nothing to his Empire. 15.
- 1618 16 Mustapha, Brother to Achmet succeeded, which was a novelty, never before heard of in this Kingdom; it being the Grand Seigneurs common policy to strangle all the younger Brothers: howsoever this Mustapha was preserved, either because Achmet being once a younger Brother, took pity on him; or because he had no issue of his own Body, and so was not permitted to kill him.
- 1618 17 Osman, or Ottoman II. succeeded his Uncle Mustapha; and being unsuccessful in his War against Poland, was by the Janizaries slain in an uproar, and Mustapha again restored: yet long enjoyed he not his Throne; for the same hand that raised him, plucked him down again, and seated young Amurath in the place.

- 1623 18 Morat (or Amurath, the IV.) Brother of Osman, of the age of 13 years, succeeded on the second deposition of his Uncle Mustapha; who proved a stout and masculine Prince, and bent himself to the reviving of the ancient Discipline. To the great good of Christendom; he spent his stomach on the Persians, from whom he recovered Babylon.
- 17 Ibrahim, the Brother of Morat, preserved by the Sultans his Mother in his Brothers life; and by her power deposed again for interdicting her the Court. He spent a great part of his Reign in the War of Crete, against the Venetians; but without any great success.

1648 20 Mahomet IV. Son of Ibrahim, now reigning: Lord of all this vast Empire, containing all Dacia and Greece, the greatest part of Scalavonia and Hungary, the Isles of the Aegean Sea, and a great part of the Taurican Chersonese in Europe; of all the Isles, and Provinces which we have hitherto described in Asia; and in Africa of all Egypt, the Kingdoms of Tunis and Algiers, with the Ports of Snachem and Erocco. Nor is their stile inferior to so vast an Empire, Solyman thus styling himself in his Letter to Villerius, Great Master of the Rhodes, at such time as he intended to invade that Island: i. e. Solyman King of Kings, Lord of Lords, most high Emperour of Constantinople and Trabezond, the most mighty King of Persia, Syria, Arabia, and the Holy Land; Lord of Europe, Asia and Africa; Prince of Meccha and Alleppe, Ruler of Jerusalem, and Sovereign Lord of all the Sea and Isles thereof.

As for the persons of the Turks, they are generally well-complexioned, of good stature, proportionably compacted, no idle talkers, nor doers of things superfluous; hot and venerateous, fervile to their Prince, and zealous in their Religion. They nourish no hair upon their Heads, except it be a Tuft on the top of their Crowns, by which they think that Mahomet will snatch them up into Paradise at the day of Judgment. For which reason they keep on of all sides, though never so poor, accounting it an opprobrious thing to see any men uncover their heads; saying, when they dislike of any thing which they see, or hear, I had as lief thou hadst shewn me thy bare Skull. In their familiar salutation they lay their hands on their bosoms, and a little incline their Bodies; but when they accost a Person of Rank, they bow almost to the Ground, and kiss the hem of his Garment. Walking up and down they never use, and much wonder at the often walking of Christians. Biddulph relateth, that being at his ambulatory Exercise with his Companion, a Turk demanded of him whether they were out of their way, or their wits? If your way (quoth the Turk) lay toward the upper end of the Cloister, why come you downwards? If to the nether end, why go you back again? Shooting is their chief Recreation, which they also follow with much laziness, sitting on Carpets in the shadow, and sending some of their Slaves to fetch their Arrows. They prefer, as they pass the streets, the left hand before the right, as being thereby made Master of his Sword with whom they walk. As they shave their heads, so they wear their beards long, as a sign of freedom; but their Slaves keep theirs shaven and close cut.

The Women are of small stature for the most part ruddy, clear, and smooth as the polished Ivory; as neither afflicted with the Weather, and often frequenting the Baths: of a very good Complexion, seldom going abroad, and then masked; lascivious within doors, pleasing in matters of incontinency, and they are accounted most beautiful which have the greatest Eyes, and are of the blackest hue. Every Turk is permitted to have four Wives, and as many Slaves as he is able to keep; yet are they to meddle with none but their own, the offending woman being drowned, and the man dismembered. These Women live in great awe and respect of their Husband, never sitting with him at the Table, but waiting till he hath done, and then withdrawing into some Room. If their Husband hath been abroad, at his coming in they all rise from the stools whereon they sat, kiss his hand, and make an obeisance, and stand as long as he is in presence. The Children which they have, they carry not in their arms, as we do, but altride on their shoulders; they lie immured from the sight of the World: and permit not their Male Children, nor their own Sons, to come among them, after they are twelve years old. From their Husbands they cannot be divorced, but on special occasion: but the Husbands may put away their Wives, or give them to their Slaves, when and as often as they list. Far better is it with the Sisters or the Daughters of the Sultan; to whom when her Father or Brother becometh her on one of the Basses, he giveth her a Dagger saying, I give thee this man to be thy Slave or Bedfellow; if he be not Loving, Obedient, and Dutiful unto thee, I give thee here this Cantharide or Dagger, to cut off his head. When they are married, their Husbands come not to bed unto them, till they are sent for, and then also they creep in at the beds feet. That ever any of their Ladies made use of their Daggers, I could never read. Only I find, that Luzin Bassa, the chief man of the Empire next the Sultan himself, and of him very much beloved, having given his Wife, which was Sister to Solyman the Magnificent, a box on the Ear, was upon complaint by her made, thrust from all his honours, banished into Macedon; and had doubtless been slain, if the Emperours love, and his own merits had not pleaded for him. And this is all the Prerogative of the Sultan's Daughter; her Sons being accounted as meer and ordinary Turks only, and never being preferred above the rank of a common Captain, for fear they should be apt to harbour some aspiring thoughts.

The better sort of the Turks use the Slavonian Tongue, the Vulgar speak the Turkish Language; which being originally the Tartarian, borrowed from the Persians their words of State; from the Arabicks, their words of Religion; from the Grecians, their words or terms of War; and from the Italians, their terms of Navigation.

They were formerly Idolatrous Pagans, and were first initiated in Mahometanism, when they got the Sovereignty of the Persian Scepter. The degrees in their Religion are, 1. The Saffi, or Novices. 2. The Calli, or Readers. 3. The Hogi, or Writers of Books; for Printing they use not. 4. The Napi, or young Doctors. 5. The Caddi, whereof there is at least one in every City to judge of offences. 6. The Mudroffi, who use to oversee the Caddis. 7. The Medit, or principal Church-Governour under the Musli. 8. The Cadelescair, whereof there are only three; one of Greece, the other for Anatolia, the third for Egypt and Syria; and these sit with the Basses in the Divano, to determine of temporal suits. 9. The Musli, whose Sentence in Law and Religion is uncontrollable. He abaseth not himself to sit in the Divano, nor affordeth more Reverence to the Emperour, than he doth to him.

His forces are either for the Sea, or the Land. His Sea-forces are great in regard of his spacious Sea-coasts, vast Woods, and number of Subjects. He never suffered but one memorable defeat, which was that at Lepanto; yet the next year he shewed his Navy whole and entire. Gallies are his only Vessels, which being unable to cope with Ships of any bigness, were not only the occasion of that overthrow, but also have heartened the Florentine, with six great Ships of War only, to swagger in the Seas, so that for more safety, the tribute of Egypt is of late sent to Constantinople by Land. The Captain Bassa, or Admiral, notwithstanding, with a Navy of 60 Sail, makes a yearly progress about the Seas and Sea-Towns, to annoy the enemy, suppress Pirates, collect his tributes, and to redress the abuses committed in the maritime Towns, belonging to the Admiralty. Which annual circuit is begun in May, and ended in October.

Their Land-forces are either Horse or Foot. They which serve on Horse-back, are either the Spahi, or Asapi; these latter serving to weary the Enemies, and dull their Swords with their multitudes; of whose Bodies the Janizaries use to make Mounts, whereon to assault the Wall of a besieged Town; and are by them so contemned, that a Janizary once fold two of them for a sheeps-head. As for the Spahi, they, till they are inrolled into pay, are of the same Original and Education with the Janizaries; and called by the same name, Azamoglans. Their pay is ten Aspers a day. The Turk is able and doth maintain 150000 Horse at little or no cost, which no other Prince can do with 14 Millions of Gold. For whereforever any parcel of Land is conquered, it is divided into divers parts, and committed to the manuring of divers men; whom they call Timariots. These are to pay unto the Emperour certain Rents; and at their own charges, to send to his Wars so many Horse, excellently appointed for the field: and which is the chief point of their service, to keep in awe the subjects, in all parts of his Empire. For being, as they are, dispersed in all quarters of his Dominions, the people can no sooner stir, but these will be assembled, and fall upon them. These Timariots are in all accounted 719000 fighting men, whereof 257000 have their abode in Europe, and 402000 in Asia and Africa. Were it not for these Timariots, as the Turks saying is, no Grays would grow where the Grand Seigneurs Horse hath once set his hoof; for if the care of manuring the ground were committed to the Peasants, and not to Military men, the greatest part of this Empire would grow waste and desolate. These Timariots were instituted by Ottoman, the first Turkish King of this Family; and a curse by him laid on them that should annihilate the Institution. The name is derived from the Turkish word Timay, signifying a stipend.

But the Nerves and Sinews of this warlike Body, are the Janizaries; who by Original being Christians, are chosen by the Turkish Officers, every five years, out of his European Dominions: and so distributed abroad to learn the Language, Customs, and Religion of the Turks; afterward according to their strength, will, or disposition, placed in divers Chambers. They of the first Chamber are preferred, some to be Chiausies, such as go on Embassies, and execute Judgments; others to Sanzisacks, or Governours of Cities; some to be Basses, or Commanders of Horsemen; and others to be Beglerbegs, (id est, Lord of Lords) to command the rest in general. They of the other Chambers, are the Janizaries, or Pretorian Soldiers of the Guard; to whose Faith and Trust the care of the Emperours Person is committed. The tithing of these young Springals is, as we have said, every fifth year; and oftner sometimes, as occasions serve. By which means he not only disarmeth his own Subjects, and keepeth them from attempting any stir or innovation in his Empire: but spoileth all the Provinces he most feareth, of the Flower, Sinews, and Strength of their People; choice being made of the strongest Youths only, and fittest for War. These, before they are inrolled in pay, are called Azamoglans, and behave themselves with much submissiveness towards their Seniors and Governours: but when once they are honoured with the title of Janizaries, they grow by degrees into an intollerable pride and haughtiness. Till of late they were not permitted to marry, neither now can any of their Sons be accounted any other than a natural Turk, (whom of all the rest they account the basest) the eldest only excepted: to whom this privilege was granted by Amurath the third, when he came to the Crown. They are in number 40000, of which 16000 are always resident in Constantinople. In this City they are diversly employed, being as Constables to see the peace kept; as Clerks of the Market, to see to the weights and measures; as Officers, to arrest common Offenders; as Warders, to look to the Gates, to guard the Houses of Embassadors, and to travel with Strangers for their more safety; in which charge they are very faithful. Their pay is but five Aspers a day, and two Gowns yearly; neither are their hopes great, the command of 10, 20, or 100 men being their greatest preferment: yet are they very obsequious to their Captain or Aga, who is in place inferior to the meanest Bassa, though in power perhaps above the chiefest. For the crafty Turks joyn not Power and Authority; and if they observe the Janizaries to love and respect their Aga, they quickly deprive him of Life and Office. The Founder of this Order was Amurath the first, Anno 1365. their greatest Establisher, Amurath the second: the name signifyeth young Souldiers.

Now concerning these Janizaries, we will farther consider, 1. The sway they bear in deligning the Successor. 2. Their Infidelity towards the Emperour and his Officers. 3. Their behaviour in the vacancy of the Throne. And 4. Their Punishments.

1. Concerning the first, I never find any particular sway the Janizaries carried, in the designation of their Emperour, till the death of Mahomet the Great: when the Basses having chosen Corcut the Son of Bajazet, were over-ruled by the Aga and his Janizaries, who more inclined to Bajazet his Father, and Son to Mahomet. Though I am not ignorant that when this Mahomet succeeded in the Throne, the joyful acclamations made by the Souldiers, was accounted the chiefest sign of his secure and perpetuated Establishment. But the chief Instance of their power herein, was the inthronizing of Selimus the first, who being but the seventh Son of this Bajazet, was not only preferred by them before his Brethren in his Fathers life-time; but by their aids also he severally mastered them, and in the end poisoned his Father. To omit other Examples, even of late, Anno 1622, they slew the young Emperour Osman, drew his Uncle Mustapha out of Prison, and established him in the Royalty.

2. As for the next, the first Example in which I find them peccant toward their Prince, was at the beginning of the Reign of the above-mentioned Bajazet; when hearing of the intended death of Achmet Bassa whom they loved, they broke open the Court Gates, and told the Emperour, They would teach him, like a Drunkard, a Beast, and a Rascal as he was, to use his Great Place and Calling with more Sobriety and Discretion. Not long after, conceiving further displeasure against the said Bajazet, they shook their Weapons against him, and refused to take him into the midst amongst them; and were not, without great and vile submission on his part, appeased. Against Selimus the first they also mutined, when being resolved to winter in Armenia, for the better pursuit of his Victories against the Persian, he was by them forced to turn home unto Constantinople. Against Solyman they mutined so violently, that they compelled him to displace Rufan, his chief Bassa or Favourite. Against Amurath the third, for placing over them a new Aga, they so strongly opposed themselves; that first they set fire on Constantinople, and burnt therein, besides Shops and Ware-houses, twenty five great Inns, seven Temples, and 15000 Houses; and in the end constrained him to give them money; and to yield also into their hands two of his chief Coyas, fellows, by them supposed to be their Adversaries, whom they drew about the streets. Finally, (to omit the tumult 1622, above-named) in the year 1600, they grew so discontented with Mahomet the third, that they not only threatened to destroy the principal Officers of the Court, and the banishment of the Sultan's his Mother, but the depoling of himself also.

3. Now for the third, I find it to have been the custom of these Janizaries, between the Death of an Old Emperour, and the Beginning of a New, to commit divers Insolencies; as the rifling of the Houses of the Jews and Christians, among whom they dwell; the murdering of the Basses, and principal men about the Court, whom they suspected not to have favoured them; and a number of the like outrageous mischiefs. Of these we find frequent mention, as after the death of Amurath the second, and Mahomet the Great: at which last time the Merchants of Constantinople, being natural Turks, clasped not their ravenous hands; neither could Mahomet-Bassa avoid the fury of their Swords. This spoil they took for so certain a due, that if they were disappointed of it, they would presently raise Commotions both in Court, Field and City; unless some perfect satisfaction were made them. To this end, Achmet distributed among them two millions and a half of Ducats, Selimus the first, two millions; others made an increase of their daily pay. But Selimus the second, distributing among them 100000 Sultanies only, was by them prohibited to enter into his Seraglio, till he had enlarged his bounty; and the Great Basses were rapped about the Pate with their Calivers, for perswading them to quietness. Now to prevent the dangerous and factious Liberty, which in the vacancy of the Empire was usually committed, the Death of the old Emperour was with all secrecy concealed, till the arrival of the New. To omit others, I will instance in the deaths of Mahomet the first, and Solyman only. This Solyman died at the Siege of Siget in Hungary, which was so cunningly concealed by Mahomet-Bassa the space of twenty days; that before the Janizaries knew of it, his Son Selimus had possessed himself of Constantinople, and came also to their Army then in retreat homewards. For this Mahomet privately frangled the Physicians and Apothecaries, which knew of his death; commanded the Souldiers to go on in their siege; and divers times shewed them the Emperour sitting in his Horse-litter, as (being troubled with the Gout) he used to do: and when the City was taken, marched home with his dead Body, sitting still in the same manner. So after the death of Mahomet the first, the Basses of the Court called their Divanos as formerly they used; gave order for the levying of an Army, as if some War were intended; and the Kings Physicians went up and down with their Potions, as if they had him still in cure. But the Penitonsers and Janizaries misdoubting the matter, with all eagerness desired to see him; which when the Basses durst not deny, they appointed the next day for their visit. The next day, the body was apparelled in Royal large Robes; placed in a Chair at the end of a long Gallery, and a little Boy cunningly set behind him, to move the kings hand to his head, as if he should stroke his beard, as his manner was; which signs of life and strength the Souldiers seeing, held themselves contented, and so was his death concealed the space of 41 days.

4. As for the last, These insolent and unsufferable pranks pranks, committed so commonly by these masterful slaves, so exceedingly romanced Bajazet the second, that he secretly purposed with himself, for curing to dangerous a disease, to use a desperate remedy; which was to kill and destroy suddenly all the Janizaries. It is like that this Bajazet, being a Scholar, had read how Constantine the Great had called the Praetorian Souldiers, and destroyed their Camp, as men that were the causes of all the ills in his Empire, and whose pride was come to an intolerable height; and having the same cause to destroy his Janizaries, hoped to have done it with as much ease and safety as the other did. But they having notice of the Plot, for the time continued so united and linked together, that he durst not then attempt it; and afterward siding with his Son Selimus, cast him out of his Throne into his grave. Since which time the Emperours never durst punish them openly; but when any of them proveth delinquent, he is sent privately in the night-time to Pera over against Constantinople: where, by the way he is drowned, and a Piece of Ordinance shot off, to signify the performing of the Sultans command.

Now for the Emperours themselves, we will consider them in matters of pleasure, in matters of Ceremony, and in matters of State; the last being considerable in three main points, which are, the murdering of their Brethren, the removing of their Sons, their Revenue; and therein a touch of their Government. To these we will add, what apparent symptoms may be observed to prognosticate the standing, decreasing, and increasing of this puissant Monarchy.

1. For the first, he hath not so few as 500 (sometimes 1000) choice Virgins kept in a Seraglio by themselves, all Slaves born of Christian Parents, and indeed the Rarest Beauties of his Empire. When he is disposed to take his pleasure with any of them, they are all ranked in a Gallery; and she is by the Age of the Women prepared for his Bed, to whom he giveth his Handkercher. She that beareth him the first Son, is honoured with the title of Sultanesse, (Queen-Mother we may call her) neither can he make any of them free, unless he marry them. When the Sultan dieth, all his Women are carried into another Seraglio, where they are strictly looked to, and liberally provided for, and not seldom times are bestowed by the succeeding Sultan, on his Great Basses, and such as he chiefly favoureth, which is a principal honour. They are attended on by Women and Eunuchs; these being not gelded only, but deprived of all their Genitals, and supplying the uses of Nature with a Silver Quill; which inhumane custom was brought in among them by Selimus the second, because he had seen a Gelding cover a Mare.

2. These Ceremonies are either performed by them, which is for the most part the building of a Mosque only to help to the Salvation of their Souls; or towards them by others, which are most apparent in the entertainment of Embassadors. For when such come to his presence, they are led between two of his Courtiers, and coming before the Throne (on both sides whereof the Basses sit with admirable silence, resembling rather Statues than men) they bow themselves to the ground with all humility: laying their hands on their breast, but never uncovering their heads, which (as we noted before) is counted an undecency. When they are to depart, they go all backwards; it being accounted very irreverent to turn their back-parts towards a Prince so glorious. The reason why they are thus brought in between two, is said to be for their greater honour: but is indeed a fear they have, lest the Grand Seigneur, under the pretence of a Salutation, or the delivery of an Embassie, should be stabbed. Which wariness they have used, ever since the time that Miles Cobeliza, a Servian, scrambling from among the slain at the battel of Cassova, and being admitted to the speech of Amurath the first, the Author of that overthrow, stabbed him into the belly with his Dagger.

3. Amongst all the Jars and Discontents that be, none have been with more Unkindness begun, or more Eagerness prosecuted, than those of Brothers; and that not only in private Families, but in the Rems of Princes: the multitude of Pretenders, being the Original of most Civil Wars. To prevent these publick Emotions, the Emperours of Habassia use to immure up all their younger Children in the Hill Amara; the Persians do put out the Eyes of their younger Brothers; and the Turks do murder them. Strange and horrid courses, whereby to avoid the fear of a War in the State, they stir up a War in their own Bowels. The first amongst the Turks that began this barbarous cruelty, was Bajazet the first, on his Brother Jacup; whom immediately after his Fathers death, he strangled with a Bow-string: this being the only instrument of their Fratricide, because thereby none of the bloud-royal of Ottomans is spilt on the ground. After him, Mahomet the Great cauled his young brother, then at purse, to die the death; and was not without much ado persuaded from being the Executioner himself. Amurath the third, cauled his five brethren to be at once strangled before his face; and Mahomet, his Son, no fewer than nineteen in one day. By this course they imagine their own Estate to be infinitely secured, as knowing that Mustapha a younger Son, stirred a Rebellion against Amurath; and Zemer, against Bajazet; both the second of those names: that Solyman, Musfa, and Issa, severally afflicted Mahomet the first; and Corcut, Selimus, the first of these names also. But yet they will not know, that nothing sooner putteth their younger Brothers into these acts of Hostility, than an inevitable Certainty of a violent and unnatural Death: Whereas were they but sure of Life, and a Liberal and Princely Maintenance, it is more than probable, they would rest content, as in other Kingdoms the younger Princes do. And notwithstanding their barbarous Policy, they are not quite free from fear, as knowing the Countersuits have heretofore much disturbed the quiet of their Predecessors: for thus we find Amurath the second to have been vexed by one, that took upon him the name of Mustapha, elder brother to Mahomet, then late deceased; who was much furthered and aided by the Greek Princes. This hath been one of the vulgar policies of Princes to kindle flames of sedition in their neighbours Countreys. In the infancy of the Roman Empire, we find a counterfeit Agrippa; after that a counterfeit Nero; and before them, two counterfeit Alexanders in Syria. But never was Realm so often troubled with these Mock-Kings, as England: a counterfeit Richard the Second, being made in the time of Henry the Fourth; a counterfeit Mortimer, in the time of Henry the Sixth; a counterfeit Duke of York, a counterfeit Earl of Warwick, under Henry the Seventh; and a counterfeit Edward the Sixth, under Queen Mary. To prevent these walking Spirits, Mahomet the Third laid out the dead Bodies of his Father and nineteen Brethren, as a common Spectacle for all that passed by, or would come to behold them. Of late indeed the Grand Seigneur Mustapha miraculously escaped the Bow-string twice; 1. When his Brother Achmet, and 2. When Osman his young Nephew were made Sultans; and was the first in this Empire that ever did succeed in the collateral Line, as Ibrahim the late Sultan was the second, on the death of Morat or Amurath the Fourth, his elder Brother.

4. The removing of the young Princes is done for three Reasons: 1. To wean them from the pleasures of the Court. 2. To train them up in Arms, and inure them to hardhardness. 3. And principally to avoid the danger of a Competitor, whereof old Princes are especially jealous. The common places destinated to this Princely exile, are Amasia, in Cappadocia; Magnesia, in Lydia; and such like Towns of Natolia. Neither do the old Sultans by such a great distance think themselves secure altogether; but carry a vigilant eye over their Sons actions, and have intelligence of almost every particular thought, the least suspicion being cause sufficient to destroy them. So we find Mustapha, Son to Solyman, the hopefulllest branch that ever sprang from the Ottoman tree, to have been shamefully strangled by the command of his Father; upon a rumour only of a Marriage, which he was said to have negotiated with the Persian King's Daughter. When these Princes are once settled in their Government, it is a crime meriting no less punishment then death, to depart thence and come unto Constantinople, before their Fathers Death; or unless they are by their Fathers sent for. Of this we have a Tragical example in Mahomet, a Prince of great hope, Son to Bajazet the second: who desiring to see the fashion of his Fathers Court, left Magnesia, to which he was by his Father confined; and attended by two or three Gentlemen, came in the habit of a Sea-faring man to Constantinople, and having obtained his desire, he returned to his charge. This strange action being quickly divulged abroad, and by divers variously interpreted, stirred such jealousies in the suspicious head of his old Father, that he took order not long after to have him secretly poisoned.

5. As for the ordinary revenue, it consisteth either in money received, or in money saved. The money saved, is first by the Tartars, of whom he commands continually 60000 to attend him in his Wars, without any pay but the Spoil of the Enemy. And secondly by the Timariots, who nourish and bring into the Field more Horse, than any Prince in Christendom can keep (as we have already said) for 14 millions of Gold. The money received (according to Boterius) is only 15 millions of Sultanes, which is nothing in respect of so great an Empire. The chief reason whereof is the tyrannical government of the Turk, which deters men from tillage, merchandize, and other improvements of their estates; as knowing all their gettings to lie at the Grand Seigneur's mercy. His extraordinary revenue is incredible. For besides that no Embassadors cometh before him empty-handed; no man is Master of his own wealth, further then it stands with the Emperours liking: so that his great Basses are but as sponges, to suck up riches till their Coffers swell; and then to be squeezed into his Treasury. These men, as he advanceth without envy, so can he destroy without danger: no man here hoping for partakers, if he should resist, as not being ignorant that one mans fortune is built on the desired overthrow of another. Such riches as they gain, if they hap to die naturally, return to the Emperours Coffers; who giveth only what he pleaseth to the Children of the deceased. These Basses have in their particular Provinces, their Divaners, or Law-Courts, where justice hath been administered formerly with great integrity, but now not a little corrupted; yet the comfort is, that such as miscarry in their right, shall without delay know what to trust to: and the Basses upon complaint to the Emperour, are sure to die for it. Over these Basses (the chief of whom is the Vizier Bassa, or President of the Council) preside two Beglerbegs, one for Greece, the other for Natolia.

6. Concerning the present state of the Empire, many judge it to be rather in the wane, then the increase; which judgment they ground upon good reasons, whereof these are the chief.

1. The body is grown too monstrous for the head, the Sultans since the death of Solyman never accompanying their Armies in person (except Morat, or Amurath the fourth) but rioting and wasting their bodies and treasures at home.

2. The Janizaries, who have been accounted the principal strength of this Empire, are grown more fictions in the Court, than valiant in the Camp: corrupted with ease and liberty, drowned in prohibited wines, enfeebled with the continual converse of women, and fallen from their former austerity of discipline.

3. They have of late given no increase unto their Dominions; and as in the paths of virtue, Non progredi est regredi, so in Empires, by violence gotten, when they cease to be augmented, they begin to be diminished.

4. Rebellions have in these later times been in this Empire strangely raised, and mightily supported; which commotions the former Sultans were never acquainted with.

5. The greatness of this Empire is such, that it labourerth with nothing more then the weightiness of it self; so that it must in a manner needs decline, Pondera pressa suo, overburdened with its own mightiness. For as in a natural body, a surfeit killeth more then fasting; so in the body Politick also, too much extent of Empire doth sooner draw to a ruine, than either too little or a mediocrity.

6. The Sons of the Grand Seigneur, whose bravery of mind is ever suspected by their Fathers, are nursed up (contrary sometimes to their natural inclinations) in all effeminacy; which once rooted in them in their youth, doth always after subject them to the softness and baseness of libidinous pleasures.

7. They have lost much of that fear and terrour, which formerly their very name did carry with it: inso much that not the Venetians only have by Sea often mated, and once overthrown them; the Hungarians withstood their greatest forces; for the space of 200 years, by land; the Polesians forced them to dishonourable retreat and composition: but the poor Prince of Transylvania did divers times discomfite them, with the death of many of their Basses: the Florentines with six ships only, intercepted their trade; and the poor Emir of Sidon held it out against them many years together.

8. By the avarice and corruption reigning in the Court, all Peace and War, all Counsels and Informations, all Injuries and Favours, being now made saleable. And

9. It is visible and apparent, that their Empire was long since at the highest: Et natura iter quod procedere non potest, recedit, as Vellius hath it, when an Empire can ascend no higher, by the ordinary course of nature it must have a fall. All these are more than probable Prognosticks of a sinking Monarchy: and yet there is a greater then any of these, that is to say, the present state of Affairs. The young Emperour Mahomet the fourth, now reigning; is but a weak staff to support so vast an Empire; considering not only the infinite casualties, to which children are naturally subject: but the dangers which he may justly fear from a Rebellious Souldiery, and a Factious Court. Who by the murder of one Emperour, and the depolition of two, have made themselves so formidable, but withall so odious in the sight of the Imperial House, that there is no way left to save them from a merited vengeance, but to translate the Empire to some other Family; though by the rooting out of this. Which whensoever it shall happen, either by the natural death or unnatural destruction of the present Sultan, it will draw with it an extermination of the Ottoman Race; which I look on as a matter not to be avoided, except by miracle. Supposing, then the Line of Ottoman to fail (as it is most probable that it will) what will become of this vast Empire? Three there will be to offer at it, viz. the Crim-Tartars, the Janizaries, and the Bassas. And first the Crim-Tartar may plead a composition, made by his Ancestors, with the Princes of the Ottoman Family; which is, that he supplying them with 60000 men at his own charges, when their occasions so require, should on the failure of the heirs-males succeed in this Empire. Besides which, he may hope for no small succours, not only from the rest of the Tartarian Princes, but even from the Great Cham himself, to recover his Estate herein, if withheld from him: thereby to add to the present greatness and renown of the Tartars, the access of such a spacious Empire. 2. The Bassas may conceive no small possibilities, of dividing this great Empire among themselves, partly by the example of Alexander's Captains, who after their Masters death (there being yet some of the Blood-Royal remaining) parted amongst themselves not only the new-gotten Provinces, which they had conquered from the Persians; but even the Kingdom of Macedon, his old Inheritance: partly by an example in their own Histories, by which it appeareth, that after the death of Aladine the second, Caranian, Saracban, Chidin, Carasus, and the rest of the more-powerful Commanders, divided among them the whole Turkish Kingdom in the Lesser Asia: and partly by the opportunity which they have as Governours in their several Provinces, and having so many bands of Soldiers under their command; which may easily invest them as Proprietaries in those Estates, of which they have already such a fair possession. And so we find the Sultans, or Provincial Governours, or the Caliphs of Babylon, to have done before them. 3. The Janizaries may also build their hopes on as fair foundations, as being the Sword and Buckler of the Ottoman Empire; got, and maintained by their valour chiefly. Who to excite them to the enterprise, have the example of the Prætorian Guards of the Roman Empire (a body far more Politick and better compacted than this is;) who out of their own company created the far greater part of the Roman Emperours, neither the Provinces or Senate daring to oppose them in it. But above all examples, that of the Mamaluks of Egypt doth make fairest for them; who were born of Christian Parents, as these are; appointed for the Guard of the Sultans, as these are; purposely entertained and inured to the Wars, to take from the natural Subjects, the use of Arms, as these are; men of approved Valour, and the chief Bulwark of that Kingdom against the Christians; as these are; and then why may they not be like them in this last attempt, for sitting in their Masters Throne, as these Mamaluks did? Adde hereunto, that they are already (in a manner) possessed of Constantinople, the head Town and heart of the Empire; and their hopes are not vain. For my part I hold them to be the men most like to carry it, unless the Princes of Christendom laying aside private malice, joyn all in Arms to strip this proud Peacock of his feathers: and (upon so blessed an advantage) to break in pieces with a rod of Iron, this insolent and burdensome Monarchy. A thing rather to be desired than expected. But this by way of supposition, and as in a dream, I awake again.

The Ensign of this Empire (or Arms of it) is the Croissant, or half Moon; but how blazoned I cannot tell you: nor are the Learned yet resolved on the beginnings of that bearing. Some derive it to them, from the Eastern Gentiles, who worshipped the Moon under both Sexes, as we learn in Spartianus. Some make it common to them with the other Mahometans; and they derive it from a pretended miracle of Mahomet; who to shew his power, is said to have made the Moon fall into his lap in two pieces, and to have restored her whole again to the heavens. Others are of opinion, that it was taken by the Grand Seigneur at the winning of Constantinople; Ut signum villa gentis penes quæm Orientis imperium esset. And of this mind is Justus Lypsius, induced thereto as it seemeth, by the figure of the Croissant, born in some old Byzantine Coins. A pretty plausible conceit; and therefore till we have a better, may pass as current as the money.

And thus much I thought convenient to insert in this place, concerning the original, proceeding, and continuance; the natural dispositions, policies, and forces of the Turks: this being as the only Province which retaineth their name; so both the first they were possessed of, and the last which they have fully conquered, of all their Dominions. Which said, we must here take our leave of the Turkish Empire, and once again of the Roman also, of which the River Tigris and the Caspian Sea were the utmost bounds; not meeting again with either of them, unless by accident (or some unprofitable expeditions) till we come to Egypt, and there we shall hear farther of them.

MEDIA and PERSIA.

Here I have joyned together also, because the affairs thereof have been so united, in making up the second of the four great Monarchies, and running the same fortunes ever since; that they are hardly to be parted in course of story, though each must have unto it self a distinct Chorography. First then, we begin with MEDIA.

MEDIA is bounded on the East, with Parthia, and some part of Hyrcania, Provinces of the Persian Empire; on the West, with Armenia Major, and some part of Assyria; on the North, with the Caspian Sea, and those parts of Armenia Major, which now pass in the account of Georgia; and on the South, with Persia. So called from Medas the Son of Japhet, by whom first planted and possessed, after that general dispersion made at Babel. Known by this name amongst the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans; but at this time Sheirvan by the Turks and Persians: the word signifying in the language of this Country, a Milkie-Plain.

The Country of a large extent, and of so different nature, as one would think it not the same. The North parts lying betwixt Mount Taurus and the Hyrcanian Sea, very cold and comfortless: so barren, that for the most part they make their bread of dried Almonds, and their drink of the juice of certain herbs. Fruit-trees they have but few, and those but of Apples; nor any droves of tame Cattel, as in other places, their food being generally on Venison, or the flesh of wild beasts took in hunting. But on the South-side of the Taurus, the soil is very rich, and the Country pleasant, plentiful both of Corn and Wine, and all things necessary; full of fat Pastures, some of them so large in compass, that 50000 Horses do graze upon them.

The people anciently great Warriours, as those who ruined the great Empire of the Babylonians; and laid upon themselves and their own virtue, the foundation of the second Monarchy. But being not long after incorporated into the same Empire with the Persians, have not only ever since followed the same fortunes with them, but participate of their nature also: and therefore we shall hear more of their Character, when we come to Persia. Polygamy anciently amongst them, so far from being esteemed a sin or an inconvenience, that it was a punishment for the common Villager to have less than seven Wives; or the Woman, if of noble birth, fewer than five Husbands. In their Wars they use commonly to envelop their Arrows with an oyl or liquor, made of a bituminous water called Naphtha, whereof there is great plenty both here, in Persia, and Assyria. The oyl called Oleum Medicinum, from this people only, because their invention; and by them most mischievously used. The Arrow which was anointed with it, being shot from a slacker Bow, (for a swift and strong motion took away its virtue) did burn the flesh wherein it fastned, with so great a violence, that nothing but dust could mitigate the fury of it; water increasing rather than diminishing that malignant flame.

The Christian Religion was first here planted by St. Thomas, but never had the happiness to be so universally embraced, as in other places; always opposed and suppressed, either by Paganism, since the first conquest of this Country by the power of the Saracens. Some Christians yet there be amongst them either of the Armenian, or Nestorian Sects, (as in all other parts of the Persian Empire) the specialties of whose Religion have been elsewhere spoke of. Here live also very many Jews, indulged the free exercise of their Religion: many of which are Descendants of those Tribes, which were transplanted hither by Salmanasser. But the Religion generally embraced and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, according to the Sophian or Persian Sects; the Language of which Nation they do also speak, though they had a Language of their own, different from that of the Parthian, Elamite, or Persian, as appeareth Aët. 2. 9. where they are reckoned as distinct.

Mountains of chief note, 1 Orontes, 2 Coronus, 3 Chaboras, the boundary betwixt Media and Assyria, 4 Jafsonium, 5 Lagour; all of them (except Chaboras only) the disjoyned branches of Mount Taurus: which is here more broken and divided, than in any part of his course besides.

Out of these flow their principal Rivers, 1 Amandus, 2 Sirate, and 3 Carindus; of greatest eminence in this Country, in the time of Prology, but otherwise of no great account or observation. 4 Canac, the Divider of this Province from Armenia Major, but whether any of the former under this new name, I am not able to affirm: Add hereunto the great Lake, now called Argis, (by the Persians Vashtlan) but by Strabo named Mariana Palus, situate in the Confines of Assyria, Media, and Armenia; of the Fifth whereof dried by the Sun and wind; and sold into divers other Countries, the people of these parts raise a great commodity.

In former times it was divided into many Provinces, the principal of which 1 Tropatene, 2 Charomithrene, 3 Darites, 4 Marciane, 5 Amariace, and 6 Syro-Media: these and the rest reduced to two in the later reckonings, viz. Atropatia, and 2 Media Major.

1. ATROPATIA is that part hereof, which lieth betwixt Mount Taurus and the Caspian Sea. So called from that Atropatus, Governour of these parts in the time of Darius, the last Persian Monarch; who so valiantly held out against the Macedonians. The Tropatene, (as I take it) of the ancient Writers. A barren, cold, and unhopitable Country, as before described; and for that cause allotted for the dwelling of many of the Captive Israelites, brought hither by Salmanasser when he conquered that Kingdom: their numbers being found so great in this Northern Region, that Benjamin the Jew, reckoned no fewer than 50000 of them in one City only, which he calleth by the name of Madaï. And that great numbers of them were transplanted hither, appeareth by that passage, 2 Kings 17. 6. where it is said, that they were placed in Halab and Habor by the River of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes. Now Halab or Chalab seems most probably to be that Region of Affrya which Ptolomy calleth Chalathene, in the North of that Country, towards Media, Habor, or Chabor, to be that Mount Chabernus, which parteth this Country from Affrya, in which Mountainous tract there was in those times a City of the same name also. Betwixt which City and the banks of the Caspian Sea, I find in Ptolomy the City of Gauzanis, in the 40th and 40 minutes of the Northern Latitude: in which there are apparent footsteps of the name of the River Gozan, upon whose banks it was most likely to be seated.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Hamadum, by Benjamin the Jew called Madaï, replenished in his time with families of the captive Israelites. 2 Gauzanis, another dwelling of those Tribes, spoken of before. 3 Mandagarsis, of which nothing extant but the name. 4 Gelan, inhabited by Gela of the Ancients, whom the Greeks call Cadusii. 5 Bochu, more towards the Caspian Sea, hence called Mare de Bochu. 6 Eres, a place of great strength, but possessed by the Turks, and made the residence of some of their principal Officers: taken by Musapha General of the Turkish Forces, in the time of Amurath the third, and by him fortified as the Gate and entrance of this Country. 7 Summachia, or Shamaki, betwixt Eres and Derbent, taken by Osman Bassa, at the same, Anno 1578 and made the residence of a Beglerbeg, Anno 1583. Conceived to be the Cyropolis of Ptolomy, by the Persians called Cyrekata; bearing the name of Cyrus the great Persian Monarch, by whom built or beautified. Remarkable at the present for a Pillar of Flintstones, inter-woven with the heads of many of the Persian Nobility, most barbarously slain by one of the late Sultans, and this Pillar here erected for a terror to others.

2. MAJOR MEDIA, or MEDIA specially so called, is that part hereof, which lieth on the South of the Mountain Taurus. Commended by the Ancients, for one of the goodliest Countries in all Asia: the fields (saith Ammianus) yielding abundance of Corn and Wine, for their fatness and fertility very rich, and no less pleasant for fresh Springs and clear veins of water: where one may see plenty of green Meadows; and in them a breed of generous Horses, which they call Nisei, mounted by as valiant and generous Riders, who with great jollity use to go unto the Wars, and charge furiously upon the Enemy. The men commended by Polybius (ἡ τὰς ἀγέρους ὁδοὶ, &c.) as well as the Country.

Cities of most note in it, 1 Ecbatana, of as great antiquity as Babylon; for we find that Semiramis the wife of Ninus, in a War made against the Medes, who had then rebelled, taking an affection to the place, caused water-courses to be made to it from the further side of the Mountain Orontes, digging a passage through the hills, with great charge and labour. Destroyed by the injury of time, it was re-edified by Deiaces the sixth, King of the Medes; and afterwards much beautified and enlarged by Selenus Nicator, successor unto Alexander in his Asian Conquests. For beauty and magnificence little inferior to Babylon, or Ninive, before described. In compass 180 or 200 Furlongs, which make about 24 Italian miles. The walls thereof affirmed in the Book of Judith, to be 70 Cubits high, 50 Cubits broad, and the Towers upon the Gates 100 Cubits higher; all built of hewn and polished stone, each stone being six Cubits in length, and three in breadth. But this is to be understood only of the innermost wall, there being seven in all about it; each of them higher than the other, and each distinguished by the colour of their several Pinnacles, which gave unto the eye a most gallant Prospect. From which variety of colours, it is thought to have the name of Aghatha, or Aghathana. In former times, the ordinary residence of the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians, in the heats of the Summer; as Susa (the chief City of Susiana) in the cold of Winter. The Royal Palace being about a mile in compass, was built with all the cost and cunning that a stately Mansion did require: some of the beams thereof of Silver, and the rest of Cedar; but those of Cedar strengthened with Plates of Gold. Said by Josephus to be built by the Prophet Daniel. Which must be understood no otherwise in the truth of Story, than that he oversaw the Workmen, or contrived the Model; appointed to that office by Darius Medus, to whom the building of the same is ascribed by others. Neglected by the Kings of the Parthian Race, it became a ruine. 2 Tauris, situate in or near the place of Ecbatana, out of whose rubbish it was built. Distant 150 miles from the Caspian Sea, under the shadow of Orontes, now called Barontis; but opening Southwards, towards a large and spacious Camp-ground, in compass about six miles, and beautified on the South-west within a large and pleasant Garden, the work of Sultan Tamas, who resided here often: the buildings for the most part of Brick, with flat Roofs, (as generally in all the East) well peopled, as containing 200000 persons of all forts and Sexes. Of great trading, till subdued by the Turks, by whom it was thrice taken within very few years; viz. by Selimus the first, Anno 1514. by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1530. and by Osman Bassa, General of Amurath the third, Anno 1585. But this last finding it too chargeable always to be garrisoned, and not otherwise tenable but by force, pulled down the Walls, and built a large and capacious Citadel: both Town and Citadel recovered by Emir-Hamze Mirza, Prince of Persia, and Father of Sultan Sophy, Anno 1614. after it had been for an hundred years a continual prey unto the Turks. 3 Arstata, so named by Ptolomy, and by the name conjectured to be built by some of the Parthian Race. Ruined long since, but more beautifully revived than ever in the present 4 Casbin, raised from the ruins of that Town. Situate in a fair and open place on the banks of a little River, which serveth it for household uses, but not for traffick. Exceedingly enriched by the removal of the Court from Tauris hither, in the time of Tamas; partly invited thereunto by the richness of the soil, and the commodiousness of the place; but chiefly that he might without danger attend the Turks, who began to encroach on his Dominions. In compass about seven miles, beautified with a large Market-place, many stately Mosques, and the Sultans Palace: this last adjoining to the first, convenient enough, but neither of great state nor beauty. 5 Rager, or Raga, mentioned in the Book of Tobit, so called from Reu or Ragan the son of Phaleg, the founder of it: situate near the spacious Plain, so memorable for the great breed of Horses spoken of before; and therefore in that Book called the Plain of Rager. Repaired afterwards by the Greeks, it was named Europus, and so stands in Ptolomy. 6 Nassivan, supposed by some to be the Ariastata, more probably the Nasmana, of the Ancient Writers: a place much aimed at by the Turks in their Persian Wars. 7 Ardeville, on or near the banks of the great Lake Argis, spoken of before: the birth-place and chief Seat of Guine, and Aider, the first Authors of the Sophian Sect; and the burial place of Sultan Hysmael, the first Persian Sultan of that Line. 8 Sul- tania,

tania, about six days journey from Tauris, environed with high Mountains; the tops of which continually covered with Snow; may be seen far off; founded by Alypsus, the eighth King of the Sixth or Tartarian Dynasty, and by him made the Royal Seat of the Persian Sultans; whence it had the name. But ruined by the Tartars, it retaineth nothing now of its former splendour, but the Mosques, or Temples. (Some of them, the fairest in the East) which the Tartars spared. 9 Troyan, in the Territory of Susania, situate in a large Plain, but not far from the Mountains, beautified with a fair Market-place, many pleasant Gardens of private men; and one belonging to the King, environed with a Wall of greater circuit than the City. 10 Turcoman, in the middle way betwixt Tauris and Casbin. 11 Damagan, at the foot of Taurus, a Town of 200 houses, not here considerable but for the signification of the name; which is said to signify a Second Plantation; and being situate at the foot of so high a Mountain, occasioned some of the Jews to think that the Ark rested not far off; as perhaps it did. 12 Mamant, in the Extremity of the Country, but of lesser note.

The first Inhabitants hereof, were the Posterity of Madaï, as before was said; Ragan the son of Phaleg taking up those parts, which lay next Affrya. Divided in long tract of time into several Tribes, as the Cadusii, Amarieli, Margesi, Sagarii, Delryees, Tapyri, and some others. Governed by Kings immediately from the first Plantation; for we find that Pharnus King hereof, was overthrown and slain by Ninus the Grand-son of Nimrod. After this made subject to the Affryans, their Kings were only Tiular, at the best but Homagers, perhaps no better than Provincial Governours, under that great Monarchy: Of most esteem amongst them was that Arseus, who with an Army of 800000 men (if the number be not mistaken) encountered the Cadusii, by whom discomfited and slain. But the Cadusii so broken, that they were fain to put themselves under the power of the Persians; and so continued till the time of Arbaces, the last of these Provincials, and the first Monarch of the Medes. He living in the time of Sardanapalus, had the chance to see his Lord and Master in a womans drefs, spinning among his Concubines, and otherwise behaving himself in a brutish manner; which so moved him, that he resolved to be no longer subject to so vile a Monster. Communicating his thoughts unto Belochus, Governour of Babylon, and well seen in Astrology, he was encouraged to proceed; and sped so well, that having made themselves Masters of Ninive, the Imperial City, (though Sardanapalus for a time put them shrewdly to it) they divided betwixt them his Estates. To Belochus fell Affrya, and Babylon, with the Provinces on the West of Tigris: To Arbaces, Media, and the rest, which now make up the Kingdom of Persia. But being a mild Prince, and desirous by fair and gentle means to assure his Empire, he confirmed the Persian Satrapas in their former Governments; reserving nothing to himself but a tiular Sovereignty. Of whom and his Successors more, when we have taken in the rest of the Provinces.

PERSIA.

PERSIA is bounded on the East, with India; on the West, with Media, Affrya, and Chaldea; on the North, with Tartary; on the South, with the main Ocean. So called from Persis, the predominant Province of it, that which gave Law to all the rest: as that is said to do from Persum, the son of Jupiter and Danae; affirmed by the Grecians to have conquered these Eastern Countries, and to have left his name to this. Of which thus Isidore, Persis populus Persice Regis sunt vocati, quia Orontis in Adian transiens illa herbosam agerem habet, unde Persis bello perdomita, et illius nomen habuit. Graeci imperiosum. In the Scripture it is constantly called Elam, at the time of Daniel, the Prophet, from Elam, the son of Jethi, who was planted there. But after that the Medes and Persians had subdued Babylon, and transferred the Assyrian Monarchy to themselves, we find, that these people called by the name of Peras, (whence the name of Persian seems to come) the word Peras (or Phars) signifying as much as Modernum. Given therefore to this Nation, as is supposed; from an Edict of Cyrus, who not only taught them the art of *Harfman*ship, but set forth a Law, that it should be a reproach to any man to go on foot; Sive mulierum sive patrum iuniorum esset conficiendum, whether the journey that he had to go were long, or little. Called sometimes also Achemenides, from Achemenides, the son of Persis, one of the first known Kings hereof; and by that name, (Non ita Achemenis Armenum Suis Sagittis) they occur in the second of Propertius. Where by Achemenis Sagittae, he means Persian Arrows.

It is of very great extent, stretched out in length from the 82 degree of Longitude, to the 120, being 38 degrees in all; and in breadth from the 23 degree of Northern Latitude, to the 43, being 20 more. According unto which position, with reference to the heavenly bodies, we shall find it seated under the third, fourth, fifth; and sixth Climates: the longest Summers, day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours, almost three quarters; and fifteen hours one quarter in the parts most Northwards.

The Country not alike in all places, as it is impossible it should in so great a compass. But generally it is of a pure and wholesome air, the high hills shading it off the one side from the heat of the Climate, under which it lieth; and the warmth of the Sun, wherever, encompassed, cherishing a great part thereof. And so it is affirmed to be by Quintus Curtius, Regio non alia in tota Asia salubrior habetur; temperatum caelum; hinc perpetuum jugum opacum & umbrifera, quod estus levat; illinc mare adjungitur, quod modico tempore terras fovit. Then for the Earth, it is, by reason of the great heat of the Sun, very dry and sandy, in many places destitute of water; in the South parts thereof few Rivers, and not many Lakes; by consequence neither well peopled, nor manured, for the greatness of it: men loving to inhabit (and I cannot blame them) where they may have the use of water. Which notwithstanding, it is furnished with all necessaries both for life and pleasure; one part affording that which the other wanteth, as shall be shewed in the description of the several Provinces.

The people anciently were trained up to the Wars, but chiefly unto Archery, from their very childhood. Indulged the liberty of having as many Wives as they pleased; they never saw the children begotten of them, until five years old. At that age sent unto their Fathers, they were taught presently to handle the Bow and Arrow. Upon this ground we find the Bow of Elam mentioned by the Prophet Jeremy, Chap. 4. and the Quiver of Elam by the Prophet Isaiah, Chap. 22. 6. as the Arms peculiar to that Nation, or most used amongst them. They were good horsemen also, and well skilled at their Dart and Slings, till wealth and ease, and the pride of so great an Empire, made them wholly feminine: depriving them of those abilities both of mind and body, wherein they did excel most Nations in their harder times. In all their fortunes very obsequious; if not servile, to their Kings and Princes; in whose presence it was a crime to spit; but to deny obedience unto his Commands an offence so heinous, as was not to be punished with less than their Ruines. The Towns of most note now remaining, being 7 Tascone, inhabited for the most part by Jews, of which here are no fewer than a thousand Families; supposed to be the descendants of those whom Salmanasser transplanted out of the Kingdom of Israel. 8 Saum. 9 Cafa, of which little memorable.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Chusites of the house of Havilah, the Son of Chus; an evident footstep of whose name we have in the Chavilah, whom Pliny placeth in this Tract, by other Writers called the Chaulotai & Chaulasii, as before was noted, with whom were joyned in the first plantings of this Country, the Cossii and the Susiani, descended from Sala the Son of Arphaxad; and the Elymaei, the posterity of Elam the Son of Sem. Betwixt the two last Nations long and frequent Wars, till the Kings of Babylon or Assyria composed the differences, by making both subject to their Empire. After this, nothing memorable in the story of it, till the transplanting of the ten Tribes into the Regions of Assyria, and the Cities of Media. At which time, as many of the Israelites were removed thither; so many of this Nation were sent out (with others) to possess themselves of the void places of those Tribes. Called Cuthians by the Jews, because the most considerable number of them came from this Province, called in the Scriptures Cush, by Josephus Cuthas, and by him reckoned for a Region of Persia, as indeed it was, the time when he lived considered; different only in the Dialect or form of speech: that Country which the Hebrews called Chus, being named Cuth by the Chaldeans; by the Persians, Chuzestan; that name continuing to this day.

2. PERSIS.

PERSIS hath on the East, Carmania; on the West, Sisiana; on the North, Mediana; and on the South, some part of the Persian Bay, or Sinus Persicus, which took name from hence. The reason of the name we have had before; this being the predominant Province which in fine gave both Name and Law to the rest of this Empire. It had anciently been called Cephene, but now most commonly by the name of Fars, or Pharsistan; more near to Phars, the old name of it, both in the Arabic and Hebrew.

Such parts hereof as lie towards the North are cold and hilly, not apt to bear either Fruit or Corn, in any plenty. Some Emeralds they find there, but not very clear. Those parts which lie towards the Persian Gulf, of as bad a nature, though of different quality; sandy, and hot, and beareth little fruit but Dates, and few trees but Palm. But betwixt both there lyeth a rich and pleasant Country, abounding with Corn, Fruit, and Cattel; great store of Roses, of Rose-water consequently; wherewith, and with those skins which we call commonly by the name of Cordovans from another occasion, they use to furnish all the adjoining Provinces. And to make up the Character of a happy Country, to which nothing wanteth, it is well stored with Lakes and Rivers; the chief whereof are, 1 Bagradas, which divideth this Province from Carmania, 2 Rhogomanes, by some called Araxes, now Bindimir, on whose banks stood the renowned Persepolis. 3 Orontes, dividing Persis from Sisiana, where it falls into the Bay. 4 Brisfana, ending its course in the same Sea also.

Mountains of note I find not any, but those which part this Region from Sisiana. Not known by any special name (for ought I can find;) but of sufficient note for the difficult passages out of one Country into the other, called Pyle Perside, defended by Ariobarzanes, a Noble Persian, against Alexander the Great, who was here very handsomly beaten, and forced to save himself by a close retreat. And though Alexander was shewed a By-path afterwards, whereby he fell on Ariobarzanes; ere he was aware: yet he was taught by this hard Lesson; that if those who kept the Straits of Cilicia; and the banks of Tigris and Euphrates, had made like resistance; he had not bought the Persian Monarchy in so cheap a Market.

It was divided anciently into 2 Parthiane, bordering on Media. 2 Mardiene, joyning on the Gulf or Bay of Persia. 3 Misidia, lying betwixt both. Each of which, with the several Nations intermingled here as in other places, had their several Cities. The chief whereof 1 Ausina, seated on the Bay betwixt the mouths of Bagradas, and Brisfana. 2 Jonacopolis, on the same Bay also, near the influx of Rhogomanes, or Araxes. 3 Asima, more within the Land, now called Lanfila. 4 Marrasium, 5 Obroatis, or Orebatii, as some Copies have it. 6 Pasirachia, in the Greek Text of Ptolemy called Pasagada, and Pasagada by Qu. Curtius. Memorable for the Sepulchre of Cyrus the first Persian Monarch. Which violated by a Souldier of Alexander, in hope of finding some rich booty, he met with nothing but this modest Inscription, Cyrus ego sum qui Persicum regnum constitui: quicunque ades mortalium, ne mihi sanilium teluris invidet, qua corpus meum obsecratur. The Sacrilegious Souldier, though a Macedonian, put to death by Alexander. 7 Persepolis, the chief City of this Province, and of all the East, called therefore Regia Orientis by Qu. Curtius; situate near the banks of the River Araxes, and built for the most part of Cypres wood, the walls of the houses being made of Marble, digged out of an adjoining Mountain. Affirmed by Diodorus Siculus, who at large describes it, to be the richest and goodliest City in all the world. And well we may believe him for the richness of it, Alexander finding here 120000 Talents in ready money for his own share; after the Souldiers had made what spoil they listed of Coin, Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and Jewels of unpeakable value. But the chief beauty of it was the Royal Palace, built on an Hill, environed with a treble Wall, the first of 16 Cubits height, the second of 30, and third of 60, all of them of black polished Marble, with stately Battlements, and in the Circuit of the whole Palace an hundred Turrets; which gave to the beholders far and near a most goodly Prospect. Nor was the inside of less beauty, than the outside of Majesty: the Roof thereof shining with Ivory, Silver, Gold, and Amber; and the Kings Throne being wholly composed of Gold, and the richest Pearls. But rich and stately though it were, and one of the greatest Ornaments of the Eastern world, it was by Alexander in a drunken fit consumed with fire, at the instigation of Lais that infamous strumpet; as in revenge for so many Cities of the Greeks, which the Persians formerly had burnt in the Grecians Wars. And though Alexander in his sober sense did repent him of it, and gave order that it should be re-edified; yet did it never rise to its former height, the Conquerour dying shortly after, and that purpose with him. So ruined in the Age of Qu. Curtius, (who lived in the time of Claudius Caesar) that he professeth, vestigium ejus non inveniri nisi Araxes amnis ostenderet, that no footsteps of it had been found, if not shewn and pointed out by the River Araxes, on whose banks it stood. But by the fall thereof rose 8 Shiraz, now the chief City of this Province, situate in a fair large Plain hemmed about with Mountains, under one of which it is pleasantly seated; in compass about nine miles, well built and beautified with fair Gardens and magnificent Mosques: two of which larger than the rest, are made more eminent by the addition of two Spires or

Steeple

Steeple covered with a painting of Gold and Azure; the Fabrics for the most part of Mosaic work, as light also by night as day, by reason of a thousand Lamps burning nightly in them. A City (as is said by a modern Traveller) which for good Wine, pretty Women, pleasant Fruits, and a gallant People, may hold comparison with the best in Persia. 9 Moyoun, on the North-east of Shiraz, delightfully situate amongst the Woods and fruitful Pastures, and blessed not only with good Wine, but wholesome Waters; of which last, few parts of Persia have much cause to brag. 10 Bannaraw, on the South-west of Shiraz towards Carmania, chiefly remarkable for the ruines of an ancient Castle, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain. 11 Goyaam, a Town of a thousand houses. 12 Berry, of no great bigness, but of most esteem, by reason of a fair Mosque, a School for the Arabic Tongue, and the Sepulchre of one of their false Prophets; of which the Persians, besides Mahomet, and Mortu-Ali, do acknowledge many.

The first Inhabitants here were of the posterity of Elam the Son Sem, and such who under his conduct were settled here; called from hence Elamites, in the usual stile of holy Scriptures by the Greeks and Latines, Elymaei: who spreading themselves into Susiana, and by degrees also into other Provinces, became so considerable, that the name of Elamite and Elam were of great renown: having a language to themselves distinct from that of the Medes and Parthians, as is apparent Acts 2. and comprehending under that appellation, the adjoining Regions, as appears plainly in the eighth of the Prophet Daniel, where Susa is said to be in the Province of Elam. How the name was changed into that of Persia, hath been shewn before. Such as continued in this Province, divided into the Tribes of the Mesabate, Rapsii, Hippophagi, Suzai, Megores, and Stabei, were at first under the command of their own Princes only: amongst which Cherdorlamir is of greatest fame, who having the conduct of some Adventurers of this Nation, associated himself with Amiraphel the Leader of some Assyrian Troops: and by the name of the Kings of Elam and Assyria invaded Palestine, subdued the City of Sodom, took Lot prisoner, and in the end were overthrown by the Forces of Abraham. Of no Note after this Expedition, till the time of Perfes the Father of Achemenes, who being Provincial Governour of these Countries under Sardanapalus, joyned with Arbaces and Belochus in the War against him: and by the victory, got for himself the dominion over those Estates, which he had formerly ruled for the Assyrians; with reference to the Kings of Media as the Supreme Lords. Whose Successors, till the time of Cyrus, take in order thus:

The KINGS of PERSIS.

- 1 Perfes, from whom perhaps the name of Persis may be more properly derived, than either from Persus the Son of Danae; or the Son of Perseus by Andromeda.
- 2 Achemenes, from whom the Persians had the name of Achemenidi, and the succeeding Kings were called Achemenides.
- 3 Cambyser, in some places of Herodotus called also Darius.
- 4 Cyrus, from whose second son named Teispes, descended that Darius, the son of Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, who got the Kingdom on the expiration of the present Line, and the extirpation of the Magi; of which more hereafter.
- 5 Cambyser II. the Son of Cyrus.

6 Cyrus II. surnamed the Great, son of Cambyser, and of Mandane the daughter of Ahyages King of Media: who joyning with Cyaxares, or Darius Medus, overthrew the Babylonian Empire; and translated thereby the Supreme power to the Medes and Persians. Of which more hereafter.

3. CARMANIA.

CARMANIA is bounded on the East, with Ge-drosia, and some part of Asia; on the West, with part of Persis, and the Gulf of Persia, from hence called also by the name of Sinus Carmanicus; on the North, with Parthia; and on the South, with the main Indian Ocean. So called from the Carmani, a chief people of it; but the reason of that name I find not: It is now generally called Chyrmian; those parts of it which lie next to Parthia, which Ptolemy calleth Carmania Deserta, being now named Mingia, and by some Dulcinde.

The Country for the most part barren, and but ill inhabited. That part which Ptolemy calleth Carmania Deserta, being truly such; a Wilderness or very Desert, having in it neither Town nor Village, but some scattered houses, and those but ill provided of food and necessities, full of unprofitable Sands, destitute of Water, and of a very hot and unhealthy Air. And though the other part hereof which lieth towards the Ocean, hath a Sea-coast of above 200 Leagues in length, and many Rivers emptying themselves into it, yet are they not the richer by it, the shores being full of Rocks, and the Rivers small; so that they neither have good Port, nor safe coming to it. The best Commodities hereof (besides their Manufactures) are Dates, Myrrhe, Arsenic, some few Mines of Silver, more of Brass and Iron, and good store of Alabaster. The Inhabitants hereof were anciently called Ichthyophagi, because they lived wholly upon Fish, the Country yielding little else for the life of man. Carmani sine veste ac fruge, sine pecore ac sedibus, piscium cute se velant, carne vescuntur, præter capita toto corpore hisui. The Carmani (saith Pomponius Mela) have neither fruits, nor raiment, nor house, nor cattle; but cloath themselves with the skins, and feed themselves with the flesh of Fishes; hairy, not only on their heads, but over all their bodies also. Where by the way, Ammianus Marcellinus must be out in his informations, who telleth us of these very Carmani, that their Country, though far less than that of Arabia Felix, and far more obscure, was as well replenished with Rivers; and for fertility of soil not inferior to it. But we must understand the one of the best parts of Carmania; the other of Deserta only.

Amongst the Rivers which he reckoneth of greater name than the rest, he mentioneth, 1 Sagani, 2 Sagareus, and 3 Hydracrus. Of which Sagani only is named by Ptolemy, the other Rivers, or the same under divers names, being 1 Dara, 2 Andanius, 3 Cabraris, 4 Achindana, 5 Salarus, (the Sagareus, as I take it, of Ammianus) 6 Candriaces, 7 Zoramba, and 8 Samidace, most of them falling into the Gulf of Persia, few Navigable, or of any use in the way of Trading.

Mountains of most note, 1 that called Semiramis, from some exploit of that great Lady; 2 Strangilus, so named from the roundness of it; and 3 a continued ridge of Hills, dividing this Country from Ge-drosia.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Canbaris, 2 Agri, 3 Tisa, honoured by Ptolemy with the names of Cities; 4 Cyræa, and 5 Gocharta, two Port-Towns; 6 Alexandria, bearing the name of that great Conquerour, who here or herabouts kept his Bacchanalia, whereof more anon.

anon. 7 Portospana, by Ammianus called Orosospana, and by him reckoned amongst the fairest and richest of all the Country. 8 Armuz, (or Armuzium, as Pliny calleth it,) on the shore of the Gulf, giving name to a Promontory near adjoining, and to the noble Isle of Ormuz, of which more anon. 9 Gumbrone, not long since a poor Village; but since the fall of Ormuz (from which not above nine miles distant) grown a populous Town, consisting at the least of a thousand houses. 10 Jasquer, at the opening of the Persian Gulf, into which it looketh, whence the Promontory of it, called Carpella, is of late named Capo di Jasquer. 11 Carmania, the Metropolis or mother City of the Province, in former times of good esteem; and now of palling good repute both for Cloth of Gold, and the making of the best Scymitars. A weapon (wherefore made) of such value amongst the Mahometans, and so esteemed of by the Turks, that at the overthrow of the Navy at the battel of Corfu, Anno 1574, most of them who were taken Prisoners threw their Scymitars into the Sea, for fear the Christians should be masters of such excellent weapons. It is now called Chyrgan, by the name of the Province, as in former times; with very little difference from the ancient name. 12 Lar, more within the Land towards Persia, seated in a barren and inhospitable Country, full of huge heaps of Sand, both loose and dangerous, moved and removed as the wind fitteth, into Plains and Mountains: without Grasse, Water, Herbs, or any other necessary for the use of Travelers; the City being served with rain-water only, entertained with great joy when it falleth, and kept in Cisterns. The City notwithstanding large, and of good capacity, containing not long since to the number of 5000 houses: of which the greatest part, in the year 1590, were thrown down by an Earthquake: now most remarkable for a fair Market-place of about 180 paces square; a goodly Mosque, adorned with Musick work, and a strong Castle seated on the top of an hill, furnished with great plenty of Ordnance brought hither from Ormuz. This once a Kingdom of it self, or the head City of a Kingdom, acknowledging no subjection to the Persian Sophy: till conquered to that Crown by Emangoli Chawn Duke of Shiraz, who sent hence as much treasure as was said to load 700 Camels; and put to death the poor King with his whole Posterity, Anno 1604, or thereabouts. 13 Teco, or Dea-chow, a Town of the jurisdiction of Lar, not far from which is a huge Wall cut out of the solid Rock by incredible labour, which served formerly both for the boundary and defence of that sandy Kingdom against the Persians.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, were the Posterity of Saba, the Son of Chus, who wanting room on the Coast of Arabia Felix, where they were first planted, passed over into Sophia (from them so named) an Island of the Persian Gulf, and afterwards into the main Land of Carmania, where they built and gave name unto the City of Sabis, which we find in Ptolemy. Divided in some tract of time into the several Nations of the Saxae, Ara, Charadre, Chelomphagi, Cabadine, and Pasagarde.

Neither the People nor the Country memorable in the way of story; but by Accident only: it being here that Alexander being returned out of India, kept his Bacchanalia, an imitation of Bacchus, who first conquered that Nation. Night and day he was continually feasting with his friends, on a Scaffold drawn with eight horses; his Companions following in their Chariots: some adorned with Purple and Silk; others with Flowers and green Boughs; themselves wearing Garlands on their heads, and carrying their carousing Cups in their hands. In this Army there was neither Helmet, Sword, Arrow, or Buckler seen: all their Armour was Cups, Barrels, and Flagons; their Skirmishing, Eating, Drinking, Laughing, and Singing. Attended they were by Mintrels, playing on their Flutes; by Women dancing, Boys flourishing, all playing the drunken fools most naturally. Thus march they through the Country of Carmania, in as great dissoluteness as if BACCHUS himself had indeed been there, and led the Mummery; and for seven whole days this foolishness continued. So that Curtius well observeth, Si quid vitii saltem adversus comestantes animi fuisset, mille hercule viri, modo & sobrii, septem dierum crapula graves in suo triumpho capere potuerunt: a thousand Persians, sober and well provided, had their hearts been answerable to so good an opportunity, might have destroyed this drunken Army, and redeemed at once the honour of their Country, and their own liberty.

4. ORMUZ.

ORMUZ, not so much memorable for the greatness, as the wealth, and the convenience of the situation of it, is an Island situate in the entrance of the Persian Gulf: commanding not long since, over some part of the Continent of Carmania, and some few Towns of Arabia Felix, and most of the Islands of the Bay. And therefore before we come to speak of the Isle it self, we must take a brief survey of the Sea or Bay called Sinus Persicus, according to our method in other places.

SINUS PERSICUS, the Gulf or Bay of Persia, so famous, so full of Islands, and so much frequented, (I use the words of Ammianus Marcellinus) beginneth at Harmozonta, (the same which Ptolemy calls Armuzia) a Cape or Promontory of Carmania: from which unto a Cape or Foreland of Arabia Felix, which the Inhabitants call Maces, the passage is so strait and narrow, that one may very easily see to the opposite shore. The Strait once passed, the Bay beginneth to open and enlarge it self, as far as the City of Teredon (now called Balsora) where Euphrates after many downfalls is lost in the Sea. The whole Gulf measured by the shores, of Orbicular form, in compass 20000 Furlongs, (or 2500 Italian miles) in all the Coasts and fides whereof the Villages and Towns stand exceeding thick, affording frequent passage to and fro for shipping. So far, and to this purpose he. To which description of his, so exact and punctual, our late Navigations have not added much but the change of names: the whole Bay being now called Mare Elkeriffe, and the entrances thereunto the Straits of Balsora; these last so called, because they opened the way to the Town of Balsora, the most noted Empory of those parts in the times foregoing.

Chief Isles hereof, besides those on the Arabian shore, of which we have already spoken, are 1 Taxiana, on the Coast of Susiana. 2 Tahiana. 3 Sophiba, and 4 Alexandria, or the Isle of Alexander, on the shores of Persia. Of which that which is called Sophiba, seems to take name from Saba the Son of Chus, planted upon the opposite shore of Arabia Felix; and therein giving name to the City of Saphia, which we find in Ptolemy: And finally joining to Carmania, there are the Islands called, 5 Sagdana, the chief Town whereof was anciently named Milus; and 6 Prochiba, situate at the very mouth of the Straits, now called ORMUZ, by the name of the Town and Promontory of Armuzia; in Carmania, near adjoining to it, and unto which it did in former times belong.

This Island situate as is said at the mouth of the Gulf or Bay of Persia, is in compass about 20 miles, stony, and full of Rocks, in a manner barren of all necessities except except salt, wherewith their very rocks are covered, and of salt-stones many houses built. So destitute of all things fitting for the life of man, that the Inhabitants had all their victuals, even the very water which they drank, from some of the adjoining Countries. The air so hot in time of Summer, that the people rest themselves in Caves covered over with wood, where they stand or sit in water up to the chin; and have loop-holes in the tops of their houses to let in the wind. Which notwithstanding, in regard of the situation, it was of late one of the richest Empories in all the world; the wealth of Persia and East-India being brought hither, and conveyed hence up by water to the River Euphrates, and so by Boats, or on Camels backs to Aleppo, Alexandretta, Tripoli; from whence dispersed into all the Countries on the Mediterranean, and to some beyond.

The people hereof in their persons, habit, and Religion, participate somewhat of the Arabians, but most of the Persians. Mahometans for the most part, of the Sophian Sect: the rest, but few in number, of the Christian; to which converted by the preaching of Father Gasper, a Portugul Jesuit, since the settling of that Nation there.

The chief and only City was of the same name with the Island, founded some seven hundred years ago by one Mahomet Dranki, defended from the Kings of Saba in Arabia Felix: who with many Families of the Sabeans, passed over the Straits into Carmania, and the Isles adjoining, and liking the situation of this Island, built this City in it; which he called Ormuz, or Armuzium, according to the name of the Town and Promontory, upon which it lieth. The City seated at one end of the Isle, about two miles in compass, well built, and adorned with a fair Market-place, some Churches, and a well fortified Castle furnished with all necessaries to maintain a Siege. By reason of its wealth and resort of Merchants, grown to such esteem, that it gave occasion to this Distich;

*Si terrarum Orbis quaque patet annulus esset,

That is to say,

Were all the World a Ring, this Isle alone
Might of that Ring be thought to be the Stone.

It was first under its own King, whose Dominion extended also into some part of the Continent on either side, and over all the rest of the Islands within the Gulf. His Revenue of no great yearly value till the coming of the Portugals hither, by whom it was discovered under the conduct of Albuquerque, Anno 1506. Who having fortified some part of it for their own defence, and made it the Staple of their Trade for the Indies Merchandise, so enriched the same, that the Revenue of those Kings (though Vassals and Tributaries to the Portugals) amounted to 1400000 Scriffs yearly. In this flourishing state it stood till the year 1622, when Abu the Sultan of Persia having received some affront at the hands of the Portuguese; or desirous to remove the trade of Ormuz, to some Port of his own, gave order to Emangoli Chawn, the Duke of Shiraz, to lay siege unto it, with an Army of 15000 men. Who seeing no hopes of mastering it by his Land-forces only, furnished himself with the Ships and Cannon of some English Merchants, to whom he promised many things which he never performed. For being once Master of the City, he destroyed it utterly, removing the Ordnance to Lar, the wealth thereof to his own Treasury of Shiraz, the materials of the houses to Gombroon, spoken of before: the Portuguese and Christian Natives passing over unto Muskabat, in Arabia Felix. Since which time though the English Captains that ventured in it, were disappointed of the Spoil which they did expect; yet so much honour hath been given by the King of Persia to the English Nation, that their Agent who resideth at Gombroon, takes Custom of all strangers which do traffick thither.

5. GEDROSIA.

GEDROSIA is bounded on the West, with Carmania; on the East, with Cambaja or Guzarat, a Province of India; on the South, with the main Indian Ocean; on the North, with Drangiana, and Arachosia. The reason of the name I find not. Now by Mercator, called Gest; by Cassaldus, Circan.

The Country desolate and barren; like the worst part of Carmania, much destitute of fresh water, and covered over with loose sands, dangerous to the native and stranger both. Some rain they have, but not sufficient to allay the heat and drought which they suffer under; and yet by reason of that heat it affordeth in some places Nard and Myrrhe, with some other Spices. Some Brooks here are, or rather Torrents, which falling from the hills do somewhat qualifie the indisposition of the Soil, and make it habitable; The chief of which was called Arbis anciently; the chief Mountain, Betius.

Towns of most name in it, 1 Rhagiana, honoured by Ptolemy with the name of a City; and, 2 a Port or Harbour called Mulierum Portus, or the Haven of Women. 3 Arbis, upon the banks of the River Arbis, presented to us also by the name of a City: 4 Misarna, the chief of the Masarne, a chief Tribe of this Country. 5 Parfis, or rather Eafis, as the Greek Text hath it, the Metropolis of the whole Province in the time of Ptolemy. 6 Gest, the chief City at the present; but for nothing memorable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Masarne, bordering on Arachosia, the Pasife towards Carmania, the Rhamne on the borders of India, and the Orbite, or Arbituri, on the shores of the Ocean, The Country of no note in preceding times, till made famous by the follies of Alexander: Who finding by the hard bout which he had with Porus, that there was little hopes of the Conquest of India, would needs make a fruitless voyage to see the Ocean. And having fatished himself with the sight of that furious Element (as if his very seeing it had sufficiently subdued it to him) landed his Army on this Coast. Where in his march, for want of Victuals, water, and other necessities, he lost more men in the vast and uncomfortable Desarts of this Country, than in all the military services he had put them to; the Army which he carried with him into India, amounting unto 15000 Horses, and 120000 Foot; whereof hardly the fourth part came back to Babylon. So dearly did he pay for his indiscretion;

6. DRANGIANA.

DRANGIANA hath on the South, Gedrosia; on the North and West, bounded with Aria; on the East, with Arachosia. So called from Drangius, now Imenr, the chief River of it; the modern name thereof being Sigistan, from Sige, the now principal City.

The Country very hilly, and so closed with Mountains, that the River above named is scarce able to force its passage thorow them. Of no great beauty to invite, or reward a Conqueror, yet with the rest, brought under the great Persian Monarchs; the fortunes of which Crown they have always followed. So meanly planted, that Ptolemy findeth in it but ten Towns of name; the chief whereof, 1 Arisape, mistook perhaps for Agrisape; and if so, then the Mother-City of the Agrisape, whom Curtius placeth in this Tract. 2 Proptasia, by some of the Ancients called Phradag, the Metropolis of this poor Province: much boasted of by the old Inhabitants hereof, who had seen no better, (as Country-Villagers use to brag of the next Market-Town) and said by Ammianus to be rich, and of high renown, the quality of the place considered. Still of some note amongst the Natives, by whom called Sistan. 3. Atrivada. 4. Pharaza, of which nothing memorable. 5. Sige, now of most credit in this Country, from hence called Sigistan. 6. Timocani. 7. Muleber, the chief seat of the Kingdom of Aladine, or Alexidine, who had here a Fools-Paradise of his own, of which more anon.

Ancients

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Batrii, and the Darande, from which last, the greatest of the two, the Country might better be called originally Darandiana; abbreviated to Drandiana, and at last corrupted easily into Drangiana. But I offer this only as a conjectural. They were called also by some Writers by the name of Arabians; and that as Ammianus thinks, because they descended from that people: but I think rather from a branch of the River Aravius, which parteth this Country from Gedrosia. For I conceive the Arabians were too wise to forsake their own Country, and go so far, to get so little by the bargain. Together with the rest of the Persian Provinces, subdued by Alexander; who being in this Country, hapned on the discovery of the treason intended against him by Philotas the son of Parmenio, the most renowned of all his Captains. After this little memorable till these latter days, when it grew famous by means of Aladine a seditious Persian, Lord of the valley of Muleber, spoken of before; who there made a terrestrial Paradise, which he promised to all his Parizians; but the Company growing too great for the safety of the Kingdom, they were quickly dispersed; and Aladine, with his Fools-Paradise, both taken away together, Anno 1262. Some attribute this fiction of Paradise to Aladenus, the Mountain King of Taurus, vanquished by Selim the first. The whole story is this, out of Paulus Venetus. Aladine inhabited a Valley in this Country, the entrance into which he fortified with a strong Castle, called Tigado. Hither he brought all the lusty Youths, and beautiful Maidens of the adjoining Provinces. The women were confined to their Chambers, the men to Prisons; where having endured much sorrow, they were severally cast into dead sleeps, and conveyed to the women: by whom they were entertained with all the pleasures youth and lust could desire, or a sensual mind affect. Having enjoyed this happiness a whole day, they were in a like sleep conveyed to their Irons. Then would Aladine inform them how they had been in Paradise, and that he could seat them there eternally, if they durst hazard themselves in his quarrels. This when they had sworn to do, they were destinated to the massacre of such Princes as were like to prove his bad neighbours; and they accordingly did execution. But neither he, nor Aladenus, were the first who trained up their followers in the Arts of murder. One there was before either of them, whom the Writers of those times call the Old Man of the Mountains, inhabiting the Mountainous parts of Tyre and Sidon; and from thence sending his Disciples on the like Temptations, to make away the Western Princes whom he stood in fear of, during the course of the Holy Wars. For out of his School came those wretches who murdered the Count of Tripolis, being in the Church at his Devotions; and desperately slew Comrade Marquess of Montserrat, walking openly in the Market-place at Tyre; and with like carelessness of their own lives, dangerously wounded Prince Edward (after King of England) sitting in his Tent. These the Italians call Affassines (whence the word to Affassinate) intimating thereby a desperate Cut-throat, but the reason of that name is not yet agreed on: mistakingly by some Latine Writers of the darker times, called Assacide, and their commander Rex Assacidarum, as if descended from Assaces, the founder of the Assacidan Race of the Kings of Persia.

7. ARACHOSIA.

ARACHOSIA hath on the West, Drangiana; on the East, a branch of the great River Indus; on the South, Gedrosia; and Paropamisus, on the North. So called from Arachosia, the chief City of it; but now best known by the name of Cabul, the name of the chief City at this present.

Of the Country I find little spoken, but that it is watered with a branch of the River Indus, or rather with some nameless River which falleth into it. By the overflowings whereof is made a Lake, which Ammianus calleth Arachotosirene, by Protony called Arachotos; after the name of Arachotos the chief Town of it, near to which it is.

Towns here were once thirteen, whose names and situation we find in Protony; but little or nothing of them in other Writers. The principal 1. Arachotos, on the Lake so named, said to be built by Semiramis in her march towards India, and by her to have been named Cephene. 2. Alexandria, or (for distinctions sake) Alexandria Arachotica, the work of Alexander the Great, in his like march against the Indians: built at the foot of one of the branches of Mount Taurus, shooting towards the South, and peopled with a Colony of 7000 old Macedonian Souldiers, forefpent with age, and with the travel of the Wars, whom he left there to inhabit it; his Army being here recruited with the Forces which had served under Parmenio, consisting of 12000 Grecians and Macedonians. It is now called Cabul, accounted the chief City of it, and in that capacity gives the name of Cabul unto all the Province. 3. Arbaces, seeming by the name, to be the work of one Arbaces; but whether of Arbaces the great King of the Medes, I am not able to say. 4. Chobassia, near some River of that name, as I conjecture; there being besides Chobassia the chief River of Media, another of that name also in India: and probably another herabouts to give name to this Town. 5. Phoclis. 6. Sigara. 7. Dammiana, of which I find nothing but the names. 8. Sin, now a Town of name amongst them, but not much observable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Pargyete, called also Arimaspe, and Enegete, a powerful Nation of themselves, brought under the command of Alexander by means of Ammeides, sometimes the Secretary of Darius, whom he made their Governour. And besides them the Syeri, Rophite, and the Eorite; which three made up the main body of the Arachosians, committed by Alexander to the Government and command of Menon. Following after this the fortunes of the Persian Empire, they changed their Masters as that did, till the coming of the Tartars. Since that time governed for the most part, by a King of their own, especially since that dividing of the Kingdom of Persia amongst Tamerlane's Children. Some of which held it as a distinct Estate, by the names of the Kings of Cabul; till growing great by the Conquest of some parts of India, they took unto themselves the name of the Great Mongul: Now Lords not only of this Country, but of the greatest part of India on this side of Ganges; of whom we shall speak more when we are in India, that being the chief Seat of their Power and Empire.

8. PARO-

8. PAROPAMISUS.

PAROPAMISUS is bounded on the South with Arachosia; on the North, with Bactria, from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus, which is here called Paropamisus, by the name of the Country: on the East, with some part of India; on the West, with Aria. So called quasi Paropamisus, from the resemblance which it hath to an Island, begirt on all sides almost with Rivers: in which respect by Protony called Paropamisus, and not Paropamisus; by which last name the Latines for the most part call it; some of them Paropamisus, with a double ff. But that name being lost long since, it is now by some called Dache, by others Candahor, but most commonly Subletan.

The Country Mountainous and hilly, here and there intermixt with Valleys: the Mountains of great height, and exceeding barren: the Valleys indifferent fruitful, but so over-shadowed with those hills, that the clearest day in some places seems but like a twilight. The people as obscure as their Country, scarce known to any of their Neighbours in the time of Alexander; the barbarous Nations nearest to them esteeming them unworthy of their acquaintance. Agræste hominum genus, & inter Barbaros maxime inconditum, as it is in Curtius.

Rivers of most Note herein, 1. Oxus, (of which before) which rising out of Mount Caucasus, passeth Northwards, and afterwards divideth Bactria from Sogdiana. 2. Dargamanis. 3. Coacur, both owing their original to some of the branches of Mount Taurus. Which chain of hills beginning herabouts to draw towards their height, are towards the West called Parotes, where they give being to the River Dargamanis, before named: more Eastward they have the name of Paropamisus; and Caucasus they are properly called where they are thwarted by Imanus, in the very point, as it were, where Seythia, India, and the Persian Territories do encounter each other. The hills in that place mounted to so great an height, that from the tops thereof, the Stars appear much greater than in other places; the rising and setting of which are from hence easily discerned. Made memorable by the Fable of Prometheus, who is said to have been bound here by command of Jupiter; on which, Vindictum Prometheus fuisse antiquitus tradit, faith the Historian. Prometheus is indeed by the Poets feigned to have stolen fire from Heaven, and to have made a man of clay: for which presumptuous fact, Jupiter bound him on the hill Caucasus, where a Vulture continually fed on his Liver. But according either to the truth of Story, or their guess at least, who make some Story the ground of every Fable, Prometheus being a very wise man, instructed the dead and clayey carcasses of others in wisdom; and that being very desirous to learn the nature of the Stars, (which is the fire he stole from Heaven) he made the highest part of Mount Caucasus his study: where the inward care he had to accomplish his desire, might justly have been compared to a Vulture gnawing on his entrails; and of this opinion is St. Augustine. But far more memorable is it made for being the resting place of the Ark of Noah, whereof we have already spoken in our General Preface.

Places of most consideration in it, 1. Naulibia, and 2. Oristpana, both named by Protony, and reckoned by Ammianus for the most famous of this Country. But in what their fame consisted I cannot find. 3. Parsiana, 4. Gazaca, 5. Doracana, 6. Bagarda, all named by Protony, but not else observable. 7. Candahor, now the Metropolis of the Country, a Town of great Trade, by reason of the situation of it on the borders of India; in that respect giving to the whole Country the name of Candahor. By which name reckoned for a Kingdom, and used amongst the many titles in the Style Imperial. Nothing considerable of it in the course of Story, but that being once brought under by the Persian Monarchs, it followed the fortune of the rest till these latter times: when the Persians being over-laid by the Tartars, it became subject to some Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, reigning in this Province, till brought under by the Kings of Cabul, of the same extraction. Finding those Kings intent on the Conquest of India, they freed themselves from all subjection to that Crown, and had Kings of their own, till the year 1600. or thereabouts; when the last King, unable to defend himself against Abdulla, King of the Uzbegues (a Tartarian People, but subject in some sort to the Crown of Persia) surrendered his Kingdom to Eshabar the Great Mongul (descended from the old Kings of Cabul) whose Dominions border close upon it. Recovered to the Persian Crown by Mirza the Son of Abas, and the Father of Sophy the now Sultan; a Prince of much gallantry, but of more misfortunes: the Persian Sophies, since that Conquest, using the title of Kings of Candahor in the Regal style.

9. ARIA.

ARIA is bounded on the East, with Paropamisus; on the West, with Parthia; on the North, with Margiana; and on the South, with Drangiana, from which last parted by the Mountain Bagos. A name in old times given to the Province of Media, especially by the Grecians; till changed (as they say) into Media, on the coming thither of Medea. For so Pansanias, amongst others, Παλαίφατος ὁ ἐκ τῆς Λαοφύλας τῆς Ἀγλαῆς, τῆς ἀνδραγαθίας ἵδου τοῦ βροχίου καὶ ἀνδραγαθίας μέδωντος αὐτῆς, ἰ. e. coming into the Country then called Aria, she caused it after her own name to be called Media. But the name of Aria was not lost, though it were removed; remaining proper to this Country till these later Ages, now changed with little alteration, into that of Eri.

The Country much subject unto heats, environed with Deserts, Heaths, and Forests; yet near the Mountains which defend them from the heat of the Sun, they have some fruitful Champagnes, bearing very good fruits; and amongst others, a strong wine, and of long continuance; keeping both taste and colour above 80 years. They have also here a Drug somewhat like to Myrrhe, and a kind of Sapphyr, but not right.

Rivers of note I meet with none but that which Protony calleth Arias, by the name of the Province, making a Lake of the same name. The Fountain of which River he maketh to be in Paropamisus, and the fall thereof in the said Lake: the waters of it first increased by a nameless Stream, falling from the Mountains called Scriphi, bearing that part of Taurus which divideth this Country from Margiana.

Anciently it was populous and well inhabited, containing above 30 Towns of name and note. Those of most consequence, 1. Aria, on the banks of the River Arias, the seat of the Aris, whom Pliny speaketh of in this Tract: but whether they received this name from the Province, or bestowed their own name upon it, I determine not. 2. Bataxa, 3. Sotera, 4. Oristpana; 5. Sarmagana, 6. Aracanda, by Strabo called Artacana. 7. Nisbis, mentioned both by Protony and Ammianus. 8. Alexandria, bearing the name of the Great Conquerour, by whom planted and made a Colony of his Macedonians, for the better awing of the Country, which by some former rebellions had been troublesome to him. But these, and most of those remembered by Protony, being grown out of knowledge, there remain now of special note, 9. Eri, or Eri, seated hot far from the place of the ancient Aria, but much superior to it in strength and greatness. Said by Magi was to be in compass 13 miles, and so plentifully stored with Rofes, that the Inhabitants of the Country call it the City of Rofes. Naturally of a strong situation, compassed about with a very good Wall, and watered with deep Channels, conveyed unto it by Tamerlane, that most puissant Tartar, by whom either founded or repaired: so Safar, a place of good importance, and the second in effect next to Heri it self.

The old Inhabitants were the Masdarami, Nisai, Aberenti, the Cassirota, Obares, Drachame, Borgi, Paranti, &c. united altogether in the name of Ariani, by that name subject to the Persians, and subdued by Alexander. Against whom when they had rebelled and were worsted by him, they were compelled to betake themselves to the strength of a Cave, seated upon the top of an inaccessible Rock, and with small force easily defended. But to Alexander nothing was impossible. For piling up a great mass of Timber equal unto the mouth of the Cave, when the wind served opportunely, he put fire unto it; and by that means so filled the Cave with fire and smoke, that some of them were stifled, some half-burnt, and the rest forced to yield to the Victor's mercy. Nor was this the only action of Note during that Rebellion, though it was the greatest. The Common Souldiers also had this honour in it: Sarlibarzaner, a Persian, whom Alexander had trusted with the Command of this Province, had drawn them unto this Revolt, and became their Head. Who to express his courage in the sight of the Arians, challenged the proudest He of the Macedonians, to a single combat. The challenge cheerfully accepted by one Erignis, one of the most aged in the Army: and saying aloud, Ostendam quales milites Alexander habet, he valiantly charged upon the Rebel, and at the second venus slew him. The Arians after this trial of their disabilities, remained in quiet, taking the same fortunes as the rest of the Persians did, in their change of Masters. Of late, by Mahomet Coudubanda, it was aliened for a time from the Crown of Persia, and given to Sultan Abas, his second Son; who took unto himself in his Fathers life-time the Title of the King of Heri. But coming to the Crown by the murder of his elder Brother, and the death of his Father, he united Heri once again to the Regal Diadem; but kept it as a distinct Title in the Royal Style.

10. PARTHIA.

PARTHIA is bounded on the East, with Aria; on the West, with Media; on the North, with Hyrcania; and on the South, with that part of Carmania, which by Ptolemy and others of the Ancients, was called Deserta. The reason of the name we shall see anon. But that name being laid aside, it is now called Arach.

The Country walled as it were round with Mountains, and in most parts overgrown with Woods: by which defended from those heats to which otherwise it would be subject, it produceth many things of necessary use for the life of the people; but nothing for riot and excess. In other places where the shade of the Wood is wanting, the whole Country is in a manner but a Sandy Desert, dangerous to Travellers, and impassable even with the help of Guides, the sands continually driven from one place to another, taking away all tracks of a beaten way. For which cause there be certain Castles at each three miles end, built at the Kings charge, as well for the direction as the reception of Passengers; and Caravans of many miles in length, in some other places, for their better travelling; the Sands of each side of them so loose and light, that if a man should fall aside, he were lost remediless.

The people anciently were very courageous and stout, as commonly they are in all barren Countries, and were withal of a Scythian extract and original. Exceeding spare of diet, and good reason for it, the Country not affording any superfluities; but otherwise much given to pleasures, allowing themselves plurality of Wives and Concubines. Good Horsemen, and to that end used; that they consulted of all business, both private and publick, when they were on horse-back. Such lovers of the Wars, that they accounted no man happy after his decease, but who died in Battel; esteeming of all others but as fools or cowards. Their Souldiers for the most part Slaves, whom they trained up unto their weapons, and to manage horses: inasmuch as of 50000 Horse which the Parthian King had in the field against Marcellus Antonius, there were not above 800 Free-men. But their greatest fame consisted in the handling of their Bow and Arrow, esteemed the best Archers in the world, and not undervalued; having the art of shooting backwards, and making their Retreat or Flight more terrible than their charge or onset. Whence that of Seneca:

The Parthians fight

Doth most affright.

Which, with the manner of their fight, more copiously described by Lucan thus:

*Pugna levis, bellumque fugax, turmeque fugaces,
Et melior cessasse loco quam pelleret miles.
Illa terra dolens, nec Martem cominus unquam
Ausu pati virum, sed longe tendere nervos.*

Which I find thus Englished to my hand:

Light skirmish, fleeing war, and scattered bands,
And better Souldiers when they run away,
Than to cut off an Enemy that stands.

Their crafty Gall-shraps on the ground they lay,
Nor dares their courage come to down-right blows,
But fight best farthest off, most trusting to their bows.

From hence it was that M. Crassus, in his expedition against them, being told by an Astrologer, that his enterprise would prove unprosperous, by reason of some ill effect which he had found in Scorpio; Tycho man (said he) I fear not Scorpio, but Sagittarius. And to these warlike exercises of Horse and Archery, the temper of the air and soil gave no small advantages; the dry air seasonally their Bow-firings, and their large fields affording them sufficient room to train their horses. Calvus enim quod siccum est, nervos intentos facit; Regiones plana est, ob eam rem equis accommodata, as it is in Dion. But this is to be understood not of Parthia only, but the whole Country of Persia; subject at that time to the power of the Parthian Kings. Next to these Parthians, the Englishs have been looked on formerly, as the ablest Bow-men; having gotten by their Bow and Arrows as many notable Victories over the French, as the Parthians ever did obtain upon the Romans. But at this time Archery both here, and elsewhere, is quite laid aside, the Gun silencing all offensive weapons; how justly I determine not. The point hath been long since debated betwixt Sir John Smith, and Sir Roger Williams; many great Wits appearing upon either side; and the sum of their several Arguments drawn up together by Sir Clement Edmunds, to his judicious observations upon Cesar's Commentaries; so that the Reader may repair for his satisfaction. All I shall say is only this, that Victories as great as any in bloodshed days, have been obtained with far less bloodshed, since the Gun came up, than in any of the times before it.

The Religion of this People hath suffered under the same changes with the rest of Persia, but they have a Language of their own, mixt of Mede and Scythian. For which besides the testimony of humane Authors, we have the authority of Scriptures; where the Parthians, Elamites, and Medes, are named as Nations of a several Language, or a different Dialect at the least, Abas.

Rivers of Note I find not any, nor any Mountains proper and peculiar to them: Coronus, part of the great Mountain Taurus, lying in common betwixt them and Hyrcania; as Masdamarus doth betwixt them and Aria, and the hills called Parchoatras, betwixt them and the Deserts of Carmania. So that for want of such known Land-marks, the finding out of their ancient Cities would be very difficult, if any learned Antiquary should undertake it.

The Country anciently more populous, the Towns and Villages thicker set, than they be at the present, many Cities, and 2000 Villages having been overthrowen with Earth-quakes. In Ptolemy we find the names of 25 of the Cities, distributed unto the four Provinces or Tetrarchies of Camifene towards Hyrcania; Parthiene, bordering on Media; Paracanticene, confining on Aria; Tabiene, neighbouring Carmania. The principal of which, and of those that are now in being, 1. Genonia. 2. Charax. 3. Artacana. 4. Apamia, which by the name seems to have been of the foundation of Seleucus. 5. Dardamana. 6. Syndaga. 7. Pasgaarta. 8. Hecatompyle, the Royal City, so called from the number of an hundred Gates in the walls thereof, by which we may conjecture at the ancient greatness of the Parthians, which had been no greater, calling it by the glorious name of Half the World. 9. Spaham, commonly called Sapban, or Spanhawn, raised out of the ruins of Hecatompyle; and as that was, the Regal City for these parts. In compass about nine miles, of figure round, and seated in the midst of a large and capacious Plain; beautified with many pleasant Gardens, goodly Bathes, and handsome Mosques. But the greatest glory of it lyeth in the Market-place or Median, quadrangular in form, but the sides unequal; cloistered about, and well stored with Merchandize of all sorts, but drugs especially: the Court or Quadrangle, serving for Horse-races, and other warlike exercises which are done on horse-back. On the West side a magnificent Mosque, built of white Marble five yards high, and the rest above that of Brick; curiously interwoven with Arabick Fossies. In the midst a fair Conduit, wherewith they purifie themselves when they go to their prayers. On another side the Royal Palace, wrought in the Front with Antique works; the Floors on the inside covered with rich Persian Carpets, and the Roofs chargeably embossed with Gold and Azure. 10. Jelphes, on the other side of the River on which Spanhawn is seated, as the Burgh of Southwark is to London; wholly inhabited (at this time) by Armenian Christians, from hence called Jelphelines; who live here in great freedom, both for person, and conscience, but that their Poll-money is taxed at an higher rate. 11. Croom, a right pleasant and healthy City, well built, of large streets, and seated on the banks of a small but delightful River, issuing out of the Coronian Mountains, near to which it standeth. Consisting at the present of 2000 Families, but anciently, as may be gathered from some ruins, of far greater compass. Much honoured by the Persians for the Sepulchre of Fatima, the daughter of Mahomet, from whom the Sophian Sect and Princes do derive their Pedegree. 12. Casban, a rich and pleasant City, about 60 miles from Spanhawn, well-built, and peopled by a number of Artizans; who for the making of Silks, Sattins, and Cloth of Gold, are in great esteem. Beautified amongst other things with a stately and magnificent Caravanserai, built by Sultan Abas, for the reception of strangers, whether Merchants or other Travelers, but fit to entertain any Prince of Asia. The City of no great age, the work either of Ussan-Cassanes, the Armenian, who got the Crown of Persia, in the year 1470, or at the highest of Cassan, the Son of Akan, and grandson of Tangrolippe, the first Turk here reigning; from one of which it had this name. 13. Tamgeban, where the Persian Kings have a house of pleasure, of no great receipt; but for the cost and ornaments of it, and the delectableness of the Gardens adjoining to it, and the yielding to any in this large Empire; and for Grotts, Escaliers, Labyrinths, and the other excellencies of Art, perhaps not followed in the World; especially considering that it standeth in the middle of a sandy Desert.

The Parthians were originally a Scythian Nation; banished their own Country, and glad to plant themselves in this barren Region; calling themselves by the name of Parthians, which in their Language signifieth as much as Exiles. A people to obscure and poor, either not knowing or not caring for the use of Money, that none of Alexander's great Captains would vouchsafe to be their Governour; but let it lie as an Appendix of Media, to the Kings whereof it had originally been subject: till one Philip, a man of small regard, took the place upon him. Falling at last, with the rest of Alexander's Asian purchases, into the hands of Seleucus; it was governed by the Lieutenants of the Syrian Kings, till the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of that House. During whose reign, Artaban, a noble Parthian, provoked by some indignities, slew the Governour, and took the Estate upon himself; persuading all the rest of the Provinces to do the like: and thrived so well in his design, that he not only gained the Kingdom of Parthia, but united to it all the Provinces lying on the East of Euphrates. Of whom and his Successors more in the story of Persia. After this nothing singular which concerns this Province, but that as this Artaban did recover the Persian liberty from the power of the Greeks; so Gempfan, one of the Sultans of this Province also, redeemed (though but for a little time) this Parthia and the parts adjoining, from the yoke of the Tartars; as shall be shewn in prosecution of the Persian History.

11. HYRCANIA.

HYRCANIA is bounded on the South, with Parthia; on the North, with the Hyrcanian, or Caspian Seas; on the East, with Margiana; and on the West, with Atropatia, or Atropatene (as Ammianus calleth it) the North part of Media. Divided from Parthia by the interposition of Coronus, part of the main body of Mount Taurus. The way thorow which, laid by the Persians to be cut out at one blow, by the Seymitar of Moriss Hali, their second Mahomet, is not above forty yards in breadth, in the broadest parts of it; the hills on both sides towering to the very clouds: With small strength easily defended against mighty Armies, and possibly may be the same which the Ancients called Porta Caspia, before described.

It took the name of Hyrcania, from Hyrcania, a large and spacious Forest betwixt it and Scythia; sometimes called Caspia also, from the Cassii, a chief People of it; of whom it is reported, that when their Parents came to the age of 70 years, they used to shut them up, and starve them; as being then no longer useful to the Commonwealth. But both those names growing out of use; it is by Meroator called Diargoneis; by some late Travellers Mazandrum; by some others, Coracani.

Those parts hereof which lie towards the South, are said to yield abundance of Wheat, Wines, Figs, and Fruit; those toward the Caspian Sea, as plentiful of Grasse and Pasture, but betwixt both, nothing in a manner but continual thinal Forests; and those so intricate and thick, that it is a matter of no small difficulty to find passage thorow them. Full, as most other Forests are in those Eastern parts, of Panthers, Leopards, Lions, Tigers: these last of such an horrible fierceness, that it grew into a Common Proverb used of cruel men, that they had sucked an Hyrcanian Tiger, Hyrcaneque admodum ubera Tigres, as it is in Virgil.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1 Ziuberis, spoken of before. 2 Maxera, or Mazera, mentioned by Pliny, Ptolemy, and Ammianus. And 3 Secandas all falling into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. A Sea which had the names of Caspian and Hyrcanian, from the Caspian and Hyrcani bordering next unto it; now from the Town of Begbu in Atropatia, called Mare di Begbu. Fashioned in an Oval form, the length thereof from North to South 700 miles, and 600 miles from East to West. Stormy and troublesome, by reason of those many great Rivers which fall into it from all the Provinces adjoining: which notwithstanding it hath no visible commerce with the Ocean, nor doth it at any time overflow its banks, finding some passage under ground to discharge it self of those vast streams of water which are poured into it. Well traded by the Muscovite Merchants, who having the command of the River Volga (which with 70 mouths doth open into this Sea) sail over it, and land at Farabans, or some other of the Port-Towns, where they trade for Silks. Some Islands here are in it, but not many, or of any great Fame; but only that they served the Nations which lay near it for a place of retreat, in time of the Tartarian tempest under Tamerlane; as the Isles of Venice did to the Italians, at the coming of Attila.

Places of most consideration, 1 Hyrcania, once the Metropolis of the Province, and so called by Ptolemy; still extant, but of less esteem, and still called Hyrcan. 2 Tambraxe, in old times of the greatest strength, and most defensible; but taken by Antiochus Magnus in the War against Asiaces, the Parthian, for the recovery of those Countries then revolted from him. 3 Adrapfa. 4 Masaca. 5 Anarofa. Of which we find the names, amongst others, in the ancient Writers. 6 Asharaffe, two miles from the Sea, in a spacious Plain, containing about 2000 Houses; and now of most reputation of all this Province, by the long Residence therein of Abu, the late Persian Sultan, who built there a magnificent Palace, and another two miles off at a place called Abassibant. The furniture whereof, besides costly Carpets, in Place and Jewels; at such time as Sir Dadmore Cottau was there Embassadour, is said to have been valued by a knowing Merchant, at 20 millions of pounds. But I fear the Merchant had more skill in Silks than Jewels: such a vast sum to be expended on the furniture of one Palace only, being beyond the possibility of the Revenue of the Persian Sophies; hardly amounting towards all charges to five millions of Crowns. 7 Farabant, on a navigable Arm of the Caspian Sea; for beauty, wealth, and greatness; of most note in this Country. Well traded from all parts of this Inland Sea, especially by the Russian Merchants, as before is said, whose ships come hither in March, and return in July; it being from hence to Ahrashan but ten days sail. Beautified with goodly Gardens, a Royal Mansion of the Kings, and a spacious Market-place. 8 Chizacopore, near the Sea also; but on the banks of a River; the water whereof is said for eleven months to be fresh and sweet, and for the twelfth month very salt. 9 Barfushader, twelve miles from the Sea, well furnished with wood and water. 10 Omoal, a Town of about 3000 houses, seated on the North side of the Tanrus, in a pleasant and fruitful soil; resorted to by the people of so many Nations, that seven Languages are there commonly spoken. Once larger; as appeareth by some ruins, than it is at the present; by some conceived to be the Nabarea of the Ancients, honoured in those times with an Oracle. 11 Strava, a Town of great Traffick, for raw Silks especially. 12 Mesandra, whence the whole Province (or rather the parts adjoining to it) hath the name of Mesendrum.

The old Inhabitants hereof, besides the Caspian, were the Maxerae, Astabi, Chirindi, and the Astenses, united in the name of Hyrcani, in the time of the Persians; and by that name well known at the coming of Alexander. Against whom they so defended themselves, by tying the boughs and twigs of their trees together, that it was impossible for him to come at them; till with incredible pains and labour he had caused their Woods to be cut down: at sight whereof the people, who supposed the King had too much other business, and of more importance, than to put himself unto that trouble, did submit unto him. Falling to the share of Seleucus, they were the first people that were gained by Asiaces, and joynt with him in recovering their former liberty; though they got nothing by the bargain but the change of their Master. In all times since, they have been looked upon as Members of the Persian Empire, till the conquest of it by the Tartars; in the distractions of whose great Empire after Tamerlane's death, it fell to some Princes of his House, who governed here under the vassalage and protection of the Tartars of Zagathay. Recovered not long since to their old obedience by Sultan Abu; who for the better settling the affairs hereof, removed the Seat Royal from Spamban, to which before he had transferred it from the City of Cashin to Asharaffe, then a small Town, now the chief of this Country.

12. MARGIANA.

MARGIANA is bounded on the West, with Hyrcania; on the East, with Bactria; on the North, with part of Tartary, from which severed by the River Oxus; on the South, with Aria, divided from it by the Mountains. So called from the River Margus, which runs thorow the Country: but is now named Tremigen.

The Country environed with Mountains, and in most places of it full of sandy Deserts. But where it is watered with the Rivers Aria and Margus, it is very fruitful, stretching it self into a large and spacious Plain, containing in the circuit near 200 miles. The Plain once compassed with a Wall by Antiochus Soter, King of Syria; more memorable for the huge flocks of Vines which are said to be in it, as big in bulk as two men can fathom, and sometimes bearing branches of Grapes two Cubits long. The more to be admitted, in regard there is no other place near unto it, where the Vine will grow. And if the Ark rested on the top of Mount Caucasus, as it is most probable it did; why may not this be some of the remainder of that first Vineyard which was planted by Noah, when he descended from these Mountains, as is affirmed by the constant tradition of the people which inhabit here?

The People mixt of Scythian and Persian breed, partaking of the fierceness of the one, and the behaviour of the other, conform unto the Persians in Religion; Language, and Apparel; distinguished from them in the colour of their Turbants only, which are commonly Green: and therefore by the Persians called Jesibab, or Green-caps; the Turbants of the Persians being always red.

Chief Rivers of this Country are, 1 Margus, the peculiar River of it, which rising out of the foot of the Mountains, and passing thorow the middle of the Province, receiveth receiveth into its Channel the River. 2 Aria, hastning out of Aria; and so together lose themselves in 3 Oxus, dividing the Margians from the Tartars. Out of the joynt streams of which several Rivers, is made a large Lake now called Sabacamber, but anciently Palus Oxiana, from the principal River.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Alexandria, or Alexandria Margiana, for distinction sake; one of the six Towns built by Alexander for defence of this Country: called afterwards Seleucia from Seleucus; next Antiochia from Antiochus Soter, King of Syria, by whom fortified with a very strong Wall. It is now called Indion, and esteemed for the chief of the Country. 2 Jafonium, seated on the confluence of Margus, with a nameless River issuing from the Seriphan Mountains. 3 Nigra, as the Printed Books of Ptolemy call it, but mistook for Nissa, or Nysa, 4 Argadina. 5 Rhea, of which nothing memorable. 6 Maran, near to which Ismael the first of the Sabian Race, discomfited the Forces of Saba the Cham of Zagathay.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Massageter, and the Parni, taking up the mid-lands; the Derbicce bordering upon Oxus; and the Tapyri, dwelling towards the East. United by the name of Margians, they were subdued by the Kings of Persia, from whom won by Alexander to his Empire: who to assure himself hereof built six Cities in it, two towards the South, and four towards the East; all situate on the tops of hills, and built at such convenient nearness that they might afford succour to each other, as occasion served. After this nothing singular in the story of them; involved in the same fortunes with the rest of Persia, till Persia was conquered by the Tartars. Since which time, though the rest of the Persian Provinces were freed from the Tartarian yoke by Gempsis, the Soldan of Parthia, and King of Persia for a time; yet part of this Province, and of Bactria, are still subject to them.

13. BACTRIA.

BACTRIA or BACTRIANA is bounded on the West, with Margiana; on the East and North, with the River Oxus, dividing it from Sogdiana; on the South, with Paropamisus, from which parted by the hills so named, and the Mountain Caucasus. It took this name from Bactria, the chief City of it; and is now called Chorasmi, but by some named Bactria.

The Country towards the River Oxus, is for the most part well manured, and affordeth plenty of Wheat, and all sorts of Fruits, excepting Olives; rich Metals, and some precious Stones, as Emeralds, Chrysolites, and Jacinths. Plenty of Pastures there also, well stored with Cattel, and those of bigger bulk than in other places. But the greatest part hereof to the South and West, is nothing but a sandy Desert; and by reason that the sands are driven up and down by contrary winds, no track or beaten way is to be discerned: in such a Travellers rest all day, and take their journey in the night, that they may guide themselves by the course of the Stars, as upon the Sea; not without great danger of being lost or buried, whilst alive, in that sandy Ocean.

The people heretofore a puissant and warlike Nation, not without great difficulty conquered by the Assyrians, nor with less by the Persians; always in Arms, cruel, and resembling the Scythians, whose near neighbours they were: and (which may very well pass for their greatest virtue) Militem a Perarum luxu abhorrentes, abhorring naturally from the Persian Luxuries. But withal unnatural to their Parents, whom when old they cast unto their dogs, kept for that purpose, and called Canes Sepulchrales, or burial dogs. The women gorgeous in Apparel, and proud of Gesture, but prodigal of their bodies to their meanest slaves. The men to this day do retain their ancient stoutness; but hard betwixt the Persians and the Tartars, who severally pretend a dominion over them.

No Province of the Persian Empire hath so many Rivers. The principal of which are 1 Artamis, and 2 Zari-asser, mingling streams together, as do also 3 Ochus, and 4 Orgamenes; all four contributing their waters to the River Oxus. Of Oxus, being rather a boundary betwixt the Persian and the Tartar, than rightly proper unto either, we have spoken already.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Bactria, the Metropolis, or the chief City of it, situate at the foot of the Mountain Sogdii, giving the name of Bactria unto all the Province. It is now called Bachor, and still keeps the dignity of the Metropolis: the seat of the Chief Priest or Bishop of the Mahometans of Zagathay (to which this City, and great part of the Country also doth now belong) having here his residence, in power and reputation equal to the King himself. Well fortified, and stored with all military Provisions: the birth-place (as Maginus saith) in these latter Ages of Avicenna, that learned Philosopher and Physician; and in the first Ages, of Zoroaster the more learned Astrologer. 2 Eubusmi, once the Regal seat, and therefore honoured by Ptolemy with the title of Regia. 3 Zarisse, or Charisse, the chief City of the Charisse, a great Tribe of this Country. 4 Charracharta, mentioned by Ptolemy and Ammianus: these two, upon the River Oxus. 5 Eucraidia, built or repaired by the Macedonians; as the name, being merely Greek, doth seem to imitate. 6 Allicodra, as ancient as the rest, but of no great note in the course of business. 7 Istigia, of a later date, but of greater beauty than any of those before spoken of: superluous to Bachor in Elegancy, State, and Greatness, though not in Dignity; and held by some to be the pleasantest of the East.

This Country was as soon peopled as any since the general Deluge. It had not else been possible that Zoroaster, King hereof in the time of Ninus, and by him assaulted, should bring into the field an Army of 400000 men of this, and perhaps some other of the neighbouring Provinces, as most credible Writers say he did. Encountering Ninus, with this Army he prevailed at first, and slew of the Assyrians near an hundred thousand. But Ninus having better opportunities of recruiting his Forces, invaded him a second time with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 20000 Horse (the greatest on record in all Ages since that time, except that of Semiramis;) with which he overcame Zoroaster, slew him in the field, and united Bactria to his Empire. Unto this Zoroaster is ascribed the invention of Astrology, but on no good ground; that Art or Science being studied before the flood, (if Seshi's Pillars, mentioned by Josephus, be of any credit;) and therefore probably no otherwise to be ascribed to Zoroaster, than as to the Reviver of it; or because he first committed that unto writing, which he had received by tradition; or because he brought those confused notions which he had received from others, into rule and method. He being slain, and Bactria his chief City taken by the wit of Semiramis, then the wife of Meneas, (but on the merit of that service made the wife of Ninus;) the Bactrians became subject unto the Assyrian Kings, after to the Monarchs of the Medes and Persians. In the expiring of which great Monarchy, Bessus a false and cruel Traytor, did command this Province; and having villainously slain Darius, his Lord and Master, assumed unto himself the title of King of Persia, under the name of Artaxerxes. But being betrayed by Spitamenes, one of his Confederates, by him delivered unto Alexander, and by Alexander put to a cruel death: the Bactrians became subject to the Macedonians, and in that right unto Selenus and the Kings of Syria. But long it held not in that State; one Theodatus, who formerly had the government of it for the Syrian Kings, taking unto himself the title of King, and the possession of the Country, about the same time that Aryaces and the Parthians made the like revolt. Wrefted from his posterity by one Euthydemus, the recovery of it was attempted by Antiochus Magnus: and the whole cause put to the trial of a battel. In which, though Antiochus had the better, and shewed more personal valour in it than any time after: yet he was glad to come to a composition, and left to Euthydemus, both the Crown and the Country. Made not long after an accession to the Parthian Kingdom, it continued part thereof whilst that Kingdom stood; and in the time of Ptolemy (as long time before) had for the chief Tribes or Nations of it, the Salatara, and Zariaspae towards the North; the Comani, or Coamani (as Pliny calleth them) dwelling in the South, the middle parts being taken up by the Ibocari, said to be gens magna; the Scorde, Savadii, Marice, Tambyzi, Amarijspe, and others of as little note. In the often changes and alterations of the Persian State, one of the last Nations which submitted to the new Prætorians: and at this time so neutral betwixt the Persians, and the Cham of Tartary, that it is not wholly under the power of either. More averse from the Persian Government, since the alteration of Religion made there by Hysmael, and the rest of the Sect of Mortu Hali: these Bactrians being of the old Race of Mahometians, which adhered to Haumar, Osman, and Abubecber, as the true Successors of their false Prophet; and therefore ill-affected to the Sophian Faction, whom they call commonly Caphers, or Hereticks, for the innovations by them made in the Law of Mahomet.

Thus having taken a survey of those several Provinces, which constitute the Persian Empire, and shewn by what means they were first united into one Estate, we must next look upon the names and actions of those mighty Monarchs, who have successively, and from time to time enjoyed the Sovereignty. By what good chance Arbaces from a Deputy or Lieutenant of Media, obtained the Diadem for himself, we have shewn before: and we have shewn how liberally he enfeoffed the *Vice-Roy*s of the several Provinces (which in the division made betwixt him and Belochus, fell unto his share) in the propriety and command of those Countries, which before they held, Nothing reserved unto himself, and his Posterity, but the title only; and perhaps some acknowledgments made to them, as the Lords in chief. Nor left he left liberty to his own Medians, than to the rest of the Provinces; which turning to licentiousness was so hurtful to them, that they were glad at last of that wholesome severity, which Deioces, a more Lordly King, began to exercise: who taking to himself a guard, building the Royal City of Ecbatana, and fortifying some other places of importance, first brought the people under the command of Law; in that regard not unfitly called by Herodotus, the first King of the Medes.

KINGS of the MEDES.

- A. M.
3146 1 Arbaces, at first Governour of the Medes, under Sardanapalmus the Assyrian; but joining with Belochus, overcame his Master, and was the first Founder of the Median Monarchy.
3174 2 Mandanes, the son of Arbaces. 50.
3224 3 Sisamrus. 30.

- 3254 4 Medidus, by some called Artyrus. 25.
3279 5 Cadiseus, whom some call Arbaces. 13.
3292 6 Deioces, the Founder of Ecbatana, and the Legislator of the Medes, whom he first brought under the command of Law and a Regal Government; the former Kings having left the reins so loose on the necks of the people, that they seemed to reign by curfew only; and had no more authority amongst their Subjects, than any of the mean Lords had upon their Vassals.

- 3303 7 Phraortes, a man of great prowess and fortune: He made all Asia stand in fear, and compelled the Persians to be his Tributaries; but was after overtopped by the Scythians. 22.

- 3331 8 Cyaxares, united to his Empire the Saraceni, and the Parthians. The King was so overlaid by the Scythians, who in the reign of Phraortes, had broke into Media, that he was little better than their Rent-gatherer. But having endured them for above two years, he plotted their final extirpation, and committed his design to the Nobles, who willingly gave ear to it. One night they invited the chief of the Scythians to a banquet; where having well liquored them, and put them all to the sword, the baser sort willingly returned homewards. 40.

- 3371 9 Astyages, the son of Cyaxares, who having married his daughter Mandane, to Cambyses the Tributary King of Persia, dreamed that he had made as much water as drowned all Asia: hereupon he commanded Harpagus, one of his Noble-men, to see the Child killed; but he loathing so cruel a fact, committed the charge of executing the Kings Commandment, to Mithridates the Kings Herds-man. He preserved the life of the young Infant, to whom he gave the name of Cyrus, whose fortune at last lifted him up to the Kingdom of Persia: when abhorring his Grandfather for that intended cruelty, he both bereft him of his Kingdom, and confined him to Hircania; when he had reigned thirty five years, A. M. 3406.

- 3406 10 Cyaxares II. in the Scripture called Darius Medus, son to Astyages, at the age of 52 years succeeded his Father. For Cyrus, pretending no quarrel to his Uncle who had never wronged him, left him the Kingdom of Media, and took unto himself the Sovereignty of Persia, which before was Tributary to the Medes; not making any other alteration in the State of Media.

At this division of the Median Empire, as Tornielus in his Annals (and that not improbably) is of opinion, it was also agreed on, that Cyrus should take the daughter and only child of Cyaxares to wife; that they should both joyn together, in subduing of their neighbours; that whatsoever they won, should belong to Cyaxares, (who was even then an old Prince) during his life; and that Cyrus should be his heir. In the twentieth year of their several reigns, they took Babylon, slew Baltazar, and destroyed the Empire of the Chaldeans. This action the Scriptures attribute wholly to Cyaxares, who is by them called Darius Medus; whereof S. Hierom allegeth three reasons: 1 Ordo etatis. 2 Regni. 3 Propinquitas. 1 Darius was the elder. 2 The Empire of the Medes was more more famous than that of the Persians; and 3 the Uncle ought to be preferred before the Nephew. We may add to these three, the composition above mentioned, made between these Princes, at the beginning of their Reigns on the death of Astyages. The Greek Writers attribute the Victory only to Cyrus, and that on three reasons also. The Persians desirous to magnifie Cyrus their own Country-man, gave him all the glory of the action; and from the Persians the Greeks had it. Secondly, Cyrus was only employed in the Siege, (Darius then being absent) and by his valour and conduct was the Empire of the Chaldeans ruined. And thirdly, Darius lived not fully two years after this great Victory; so that before remote Nations had taken notice of the conquest, Cyrus was actually in the Throne. Josephus only in the 11 Chapter of his Book, cutteth the thread even between these two Princes; and telleth us that Darius, with Cyrus his Ally, destroyed the Estate of the Babylonians. That this Darius Medus of Daniel, is the Cyaxares of the Greeks, is more than manifest. For Josephus in the place above cited, telleth us, *ὅτι ὡς Ἀστυάγης ἦν ὁ ἄρχων τῆς Μιδίας ἐκείνην ὥραν. That he was Astyages Son and is otherwise called by the Greeks: now ask the Greeks what was the name of the Son of Astyages, and Xenophon will tell you, that it was Cyaxares. As for the name of Nabonidus, which Joseph Scaliger in spite of reason, and the whole world of Chronologers, would thrust upon this Darius Medus, we have already refuted it: though we are not ignorant that Helviens and Calvisius, two most worthy Writers, have followed him, as in all his Canon, so also in this particular Error. But to proceed unto the course of the Persian History; after the death of this Cyaxares, Cyrus succeeded in his Throne, and the Empire of the Medes was incorporated into that of the Persians, (as it hath ever since continued) if not subject to it.*

The first Dynasty, or Race of the Persian Monarchs, of the House of Achemenes.

- 3406 1 Cyrus, who having vanquished Astyages, united to the Empire of Persia the whole Kingdom of Media; the Countries of Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia, some part of Arabia, and all the Provinces possessed by the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs. After which Victory he was slain by Tomyris a Queen of the Scythians, as some Writers say; others affirming, that he escaped alive (but wounded) out of the Battel, died in his own Kingdom, and was buried at Pasagarda, a Town of Persia. This Cyrus is magnified by Xenophon, as Aeneas by Virgil, and Ulysses by Hommer. 39.
- 3434 2 Cambyses, the Son of Cyrus, subdued Psammithicus King of Aegypt, which Country he united to his Empire. Having a mind to marry his own Sister, he was told by his Lawyers that they knew no Law which admitted such Marriages; but that there was a Law, that the Persian Kings might do what they listed. This King was a very bloody Tyrant.

The Inter-regnum of the Magi.

Cambyses, at his Expedition into Aegypt, constituted Psamtichus, one of the Magi, Vice-Roy in his absence. He hearing of the Kings death, conferred the Kingdom on his own Son Smerdis, making the people believe, that he was the Brother of Cambyses: A matter of no difficult.

ty, considering, how retirement from the publick view, was a chief point of the Persian Majesty. But the Nobles either knowing the true Smerdis to be slain, or suspecting the overmuch retiredness of the new King, began to search out the matter. Otanes had a Daughter, which was one of the Kings Concubines: Her he commanded when the King took next his pleasure with her, to feel whether he had any Ears; for Cambyses (in I know not what humour) had cut off the Ears of this Magus. This commandment the obeying, found out the falsehood. The seven Princes informed of this imposture, joyn'd together, and slew this Pseudo-Smerdis, in the eighth month of his Reign. This done, to avoid contention, they agreed among themselves, that the seven Princes, meeting on the Palace-green, should acknowledge him for King, whose Horse before the rising of the Sun first neighed. The evening before the day appointed, the Horse-keeper of Darius the Son of Hystaspis, brought his Masters Horse into the Green, together with a Mare, which the Horse then covered. In the morning the Princes met; and Darius his Horse knowing the place, and longing for his Mate, neighed lustily: on which the Princes presently acknowledged Darius for their King.

The restoring of the Kingdom.

- 3443 3 Darius Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, descended from Cyrus the fourth King of the Persians, thus elected King, took Babylon (which had revolted) by the ingenious fetches of Zopyrus, and over-ran all Asia, and some part of Greece, where he was overthrown at the Battel of Marathon. 36.
- 3479 4 Xerxes, to revenge the overthrow of Marathon, attempted to subdue the Greeks: by whom he was overthrown in the Naval Battel of Salamis; and that famous and honourable exploit of the Grecians, at Thermopylae. 21.
- 3500 5 Artaxerxes Longimanus, was he who sent Ezdras to re-build the Temple of the Lord; and received Themistocles, being banished from Athens. This also was he, as some would have it, whom the Scriptures call Ahasuerus, the Husband of Hester, though others choose rather to place that story in the time of Xerxes. 44.
- 3544 6 Darius II. surnamed Nothus, in whose time the Egyptians revolted, and chose a King of their own. 19.
- 3563 7 Artaxerxes II. from the greatness of his memory surnamed Mnemom; under whom hapned that famous retreat of Xenophon, with an handful of his Grecians, through most of the Provinces of this Empire; by which they shewed the way to the Macedonians, how easie a Conquest they might make of that mighty Empire. 6.
- 3599 8 Ochus, a great Tyrant, but a valiant Prince, recovered Aegypt, subdued Syria, Cyprus, and some part of India, and was at last slain by Bagoas, one of the Eunuchs of his Chamber. 1.
- 3625 9 Artes, the Son of Ochus, most villainously murdered by the same Eunuch, for fear he should revenge the death of his Father.
- 3629 10 Darius III. Governour of Armenia, and Cousin-German of Ochus, before his coming to the Crown named Codomanus; by the means of the said Bagas made sole Monarch of Persia. But being vanquished by Alexander the Great, in the three Battels of Granicus, Cilicia, and Arbela, the Empire of the Persians was transferred to the Grecians, A. M. 3635.

The certain Revenues of this great Monarchy, seem to have been 14560 Talents; for so much the last Darius received yearly. But what the casual and extraordinary Imrado was, is not easy to say; though manifest it is, and demonstrable by many strong and evident reasons, that they far exceeded the certain. For first, the Persian Monarchs were Kings of 127 Provinces. Secondly, Darius offered to Alexander for the Ransom of his Mother and two Daughters, 30000 Talents of Gold. Thirdly, Alexander found in the Treasury of Damascus, 2600 Talents; in that of Susa, 50000 Talents of Gold uncounted; in that of Pasagardis, 60000 Talents; in that of Ecbatana, 26000 Talents; in that of Persepolis, 120000 Talents; in all 204600 Talents; besides the infinite riches of the Treasury of Babylon, yielded into his hands by Bagobanes, and other places of note, not particularly specified: An huge and most unspeakable sum! Fourthly, in that the Gold and Riches which Alexander, now a Conquerour, sent from Persia to Macedon and Greece, (besides which every Captain and common Souldier had provided and laid up for his own maintenance) loaded ten thousand Mules; and five thousand Camels.

After this overthrow of the Persian Monarchy, the Persian Nation lay obscure 535 years, viz. from the 3635 year of the World, to the 228 year of CHRIST: of which time they were 83 years under the Syrian Successors of Alexander; and 452 years under the Arasidan Kings of Parthia. Mela & Dioscor, &c. as Herodian. "For after Darius had lost his Kingdom to Alexander the Macedonian, and after the Victor himself was dead also, the more potent Captains divided Asia among them. But discords often arising, and the Macedonians puiſſance, by these often broils, not finally broken, Arſaces, one of the Parthian Nobility, perſwaded the barbarous people of the East, and among them the Persians, to cast off the Greek yoke, and stand for their Liberty: he himself taking upon him the Title of King, and investing himself with a Diadem, A. M. 3718. The Persians by this revolt got little or nothing, having indeed not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrant only: these Parthian Princes Lording it with as high an infolency, as ever the old Persian Monarchs, or the Kings of Syria did before. From this Arſaces, all the rest of his Successors, and those too of the Family of Artabanus, or second Race of Parthian Kings, took that name upon them: as the Roman Emperours that of Cesar, or the old Egyptian Kings the name of Pharaoh. Their usual Style was Rex Regum, or King of Kings: and by that Style with arrogance and infolence enough, Vologeser thus inscribed his Letters to Vespasian the Roman Emperour, viz. Arſaces, Rex Regum, Flavio Vespasiano: giving himself the Title of King of Kings, but the other nothing but his bare names only. To which, Vespasian without taking notice of the Parthian's pride, returned his answer to him with this Superſcription, Fl. Vespasianus Regi Regum Arſacidi: whether with more scorn or modesty, it is hard to say. They also called themselves the Brethren of the Sun and Moon, which were the chiefest Gods they worshipped. Great Princes questioning they were, and kept the Romans harder to it, than all the Kings and States in the world besides: whose names and acts occur in these following Catalogues of

2. The Arſacidan or Parthian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- A. M.*
 3718 1 Arſaces, the Founder of the Parthian Family.
 3741 2 Mithridates, or Arſaces the second, assaulted by Antiochus Magnus with an Army of 120000 men, but without success.
 3761 3 Pamphilius.
 3773 4 Pbraartes, the Son of Pamphilius.
 3783 5 Mithridates II. Brother of Pbraartes, subdued the Medes, and extended his Empire to Euphrates.
 6 Pbraartes II. slain in a War against the Scythians.
 3857 7 Artabanus, Uncle to Pbraartes the second.
 8 Pacorus, the Son of Artabanus.
 9 Mithridates III. Brother of Pacorus.
 3903 10 Horodes, Brother of Mithridates, whom he overcame, and caused to be slain in his own fight. He also vanquished M. Crassus, and slew 20000 Romans; and because Crassus was reported to be wondrous covetous, he caused Molten Gold to be poured down his Throat. A miserable death, but in respect of the Divine Providence, a most just Revenge upon him for his Sacrilege, in Robbing the Temple of Hierusalem, as he marched towards the Parthians. The overthrow, and the disgrace which thereby hapned to the Romans, was not long afterwards recompensed by Ventidius, one of the Lieutenants of Mark Antony the Triumvir, who slew great numbers of them in a pitched Field, and amongst others, Pacorus the Kings Son: the day of the Battel being the same, in which Crassus had before been vanquished. After this Victory, for which Ventidius had the honour of a Triumph (and the first Triumph that ever the Romans had held for a Parthian Victory) he was in a fair way to have ruined this Kingdom, to have shrewdly shaken it at the least, had not Antony in an envious humour called him from that service. Finally, Horodes was slain by his Son Pbraartes.
 11 Pbraartes III. a valiant Prince, but wicked and cruel, as the Murder of his own Father and many of his Brethren doth clearly evidence. Against him marched Marcus Antonius with a populous Army, which wanted little of an absolute overthrow; of 16 Legions, scarce six returning home in safety. This King submitted himself and Kingdom unto Augustus, restoring the Roman Ensigns, and freeing the Captives taken at the defeat of Crassus. The only mark of the Parthians Subjection, was their receiving Kings at the appointment of the Senate and Emperours of Rome; which also was of no long continuance.
 12 Pbraartes IV. Son of Pbraartes the third, whom he slew and succeeded.
 13 Horodes II. Son of Pbraartes the fourth, slain in a conspiracy.
 14 Vonon, substituted in the place of Horodes, but ousted by 15 Tiridates, who was also dispossessed of his life and and Kingdom of Artabanus, the people flocking to him as a man of courage, and being offended with the two last Kings, because they either had received the Kingdom, or at least the Confirmation in it, from the Roman Emperours. Which Artabanus, though descended either from a Female, or some of the Collateral line of the former Family; yet being not direct Heir thereof, he is looked on as a stranger to the Blood of the Arſacide the Family of Arſaces, giving place to that of this Artabanus, of which Family we have the names of twelve Kings successively Reining: the most considerable of them being Chosroes, the eighth King of this Line, from whom the Emperour Trajan gained Armenia, and Mesopotamia, adding them to the Roman Empire. Members whereof they did continue till regained to the Persian Crown, by Sapor the ninth King of the next Persian Dynasty. But for those twelve Kings of this house, they are these.

The third Dynasty of the Kings of Persia, and the second of the Parthian Race.

- 1 Artabanus.
- 2 Bardanes.
- 3 Goteres.
- 4 Vonones.
- 5 Vologeser.
- 6 Artabanus II.
- 7 Pacorus.
- 8 Chosroes.
- 9 Parthaspates.
- 10 Vologeser II.
- 11 Vologeser III.
- 12 Artabanus III. the last King of this new Race of the Parthians, whose overthrow by the valour of Artaxerxes the first Persian King of the fourth Dynasty, occasioned the Translation of the Diadem to the natural Persians; after it had continued in two Parthian Families for the space of 470 years. Which Translation, as it was wrought by the unresistible power of God, who only hath the disposing of Crowns and Scepters; so in the way of second causes it may be principally referred to the Barbarous Massacre of this people, by Antonius Caracalla the Roman Emperour; Who having negotiated a Marriage with the Daughter of this Artabanus, and going (as he gave it out) to solemnize the Nuptials, was met by the old King accompanied with the flower of his Nobility, and the choicest of his Souldiers, and other Subjects, in Triumphal Ornaments. Which honourable Train was no sooner come near his Army, but he commanded his Souldiers (on a Watch-word given) to put them all to the Sword, the King himself hardly escaping with his life. Caracalla being dead, and Macrinus succeeding in the Throne, the Parthians set upon him to Revenge that slaughter. But understanding after a long fight of three days continuance, that Macrinus had slain Caracalla, they made Peace with him; but were so weakened and unable to hold their own, that it made the Persians once more think of recovering to their own Nation, the Regal power. For Artaxerxes, a noble and generous Persian, (his name perhaps suggesting some high thoughts unto him) did so well husband the opportunity, that he slew Artabanus the last King of the Parthians, and once more brought the Royal Seat into Persia. Yet was not this so easily effected, the Parthians notwithstanding their former losses, maintaining another cruel fight for three days together; so difficult was it to vanquish that Nation, when their Forces were broken; impossible when they were entire. Artaxerxes, proud of this success, sent a peremptory Embassy to Alexander Severus, the then Roman Emperour, to have all the Provinces of Asia, which had formerly belonged to the Persian Monarchy, re-delivered to him; a matter not so easily granted as demanded. For Severus to suppress so insolent an Enemy, marched towards Persia with an Army Romanly appointed; which, to find his Enemy more weak, he divided into three parts: whereof the first was to march into Media, the second into Persia, the third himself Led in the mid-way between both, to succour both, or be succoured by both, as occasion required. But his device succeeded not happily; for his two Armies being by the Persians broken, he with much danger and haste retired back with the third. This was a good beginning for the Persian Kingdom; the establishment followed not long after: Valerianus the Emperour being vanquished, and taken Prisoner by Sapor, the second King of this Race. So that now the name of the Persian grew so terrible to the Romans, that Constantine the Great transplanted many of the Colonies and Garrisons of the North-west parts of the Empire, into the East, to keep the Persian from growing too far upon the Roman Provinces; and removed also the Seat of the Empire nigher unto them, from Rome to Constantinople. And thus having shewn the beginning and Establishment, the Foundation and Building of the new Kingdom of the Persians, take along with you the Catalogue of their Kings, until they once more lost the Sovereignty of their own Nation, and became Slaves again to more barbarous Masters.

The fourth Dynasty, or Race of the Persian Kings.

- 628 24 Siroes 1.
- 629 25 Adhesir.
- 26 Sarbatus.
- 27 Barnarius.
- 630 28 Ormisdas II. the 28 and last King of the Race of Artaxerxes, or the fourth Dynasty: of whom besides the two first Kings, whose Acts are spoken of before, the most remarkable were, 1 Vararanes the second, in whose time Carus the Emperour passing over Euphrates, and laying Siege to Ctesiphon, was there slain by a Thunderbolt. 2 Narſes, the Son of Vararanes, who first discomfited Galerius, one of the Cesars, in the Empire of Dioclesian, and totally ruined his Army: for which Galerius being forced to Lacquey it by the Emperour's Chariot in his Purple Robes, was so highly shamed, that to recover his credit he set upon Narſes, once again, routed him, and took Prisoners his Wives and Children.

3 Sapores the second, the Son of Misdates, who began his Reign before his Birth. For his Father dying without Issue, left his Wife with Child: which Child the Magi having signified by their Art to be a Male, the Persian Princes caused the Crown and Royal Ornaments to be set upon his Mothers belly, acknowledging him thereby for their future King. A great and puissant Prince he proved; holding continual War with Constantine, and his Successors, till the Death of Valens; and gaining from them the best parts of Mesopotamia: but withal a great Persecutor of the Christians, of whom no fewer than 20000 are said to have suffered in his time. 4 Isidoretis, a Prince so esteemed of by Arcadius, the Eastern Emperour, that he made him Protector of his Empire, during the minority of his Son Theodosius: which trust he Royally performed, and was a great friend unto the Christians in his own Dominions. 5 Cabades, first outed of his Kingdom by Zanaster, and restored again, was the first Persian King who permitted the free exercise of the Christian Religion. He slew Zelobes, a King of the Huns, coming to his Aid against the Romans, because he had before promised to assist the Emperour; and rooted the Manichean Sect out of his Estate. 6 Cosroes the Son of Cabades, surnamed the Great, a constant Enemy to the Romans; from whom he Conquered a great part of Syria, and took and sacked the City of Antioch. But finding the War brought home to his own door, by Mauritius, who was afterwards Emperour, and his own Countries in a flame, he took such thought of it, that he died of a Fever. 7 Cosroes the second, as great an Enemy to the Emperour Heraclius, from whom he took all that was left of Mesopotamia, Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem it self; most of it recover'd by Heraclius: in despite of whom he caused all the Christians in his Kingdom to turn Nestorians. 8 Hormisdas the second, the last of the Dynasty, who being first weakened by Civil and Domestick dissensions, was vanquished by Hannar and his Saracens, Anno 634, burying to the glory of this renowned Nation in the grave of oblivion, or at least subjection.

The Saracenic Caliphs, having added this Kingdom to their large Empire, appointed here their Deputies, whom they honoured with the name of Sultans; not one Supreme for the whole Kingdom, but several Governours or Sultans for each several Province: called by new names, and moulded into many Toparchies, as Chorazan, Mouzenabar, Uzbek, and I wot not what; the Sultans acting of themselves, and warring upon one another, as their humours led them, without relation to the Caliph, or Lord in chief. During which bustles it so hapned, that Mahomet, the Sultan of Persia (so called because he was the chief in Command and Power) picking a quarrel with his Neighbour the Sultan of Babylon, (Pisafiris he is called in some Christian Writers, by whom taken or mistaken for the Caliph himself) made War upon him. But finding him countenanced and supported by the Power of the Caliph, invited the Turks, then possessed of some part of Armenia Major, to come to his Aid: by whose means he overthrew the Caliph's Forces, and might have got the Sovereignty of Persia unto himself, if he had used his Victory and his Friends, with any tolerable discretion. But denying to pay these Turks their Wages, and send them home, he occasioned them to make head against him, under the Conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader; to whom being once in Arms, several discontented persons of the natural Persians, did unite themselves. Encouraged with which addition, and being furnished with Horse and Armour, and other necessities, by the Spoil of the Country, they gave Battel to the Sultan himself: whom having vanquished and slain, Tangrolipix by the joyn't consent of both Armies is made King of Persia, the Founder of

The fifth Dynasty, or the Turkish Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1030 1 Tangrolipix, of whom sufficiently before.
2 Axan, the Son of Tangrolipix; by whom Cutlu Moser, his near Kinsman, was sent with great Forces against the Christians; whom he dispossessed of a great part of Asia Minor.
3 Balak, Sultan of Persia, in the beginning of the Wars in the Holy Land, undertaken by the Western Christians; against whom he is reported to have sent his Forces. Of whose Successors I find nothing till the time of 1198 4 Cassanes, the last King or Sultan of the Turks, vanquished in the year 1202. by the Cham of Tartary. Which makes me very apt to think, that after the death of Axan, or his next Successor, the Turks lost the Sovereignty of Persia, though they kept the possession of some parts of it; the Sovereignty thereof being recovered by the Caliphs of Babylon: and that it was so held by both, till the Tartars dispossessed the one, and destroyed the whole Progeny of the other, as before was noted. And this I find to be the opinion of Benjamin Tudelensis, a Learned Jew, which had Travelled most part of the East, to whose judgment hereina I subscribe, as most sound and rational.

The sixth Dynasty, or the Tartarian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1260 1 Haalon, or Ulab-Kubkan, by Occata the great Cham, made King of Persia; exterminated the whole Race of the Caliphs of Bagder.
1266 2 Habkakaibon, the Son of Haalon.
1282 3 Nicador Oglan, by Haison call'd Tangador, who made himself a Mahometan, and was named Hamed, the Brother of Habkakaibon.
1284 4 Argon-Khon, the eldest Son of Habkakaibon.
1292 5 Gemiutukhon, Brother of Argon-Khon.
1295 6 Badukhon, the Uncle of the last, of which three there is little memorable.
1296 7 Gazun, the Son of Argon-Khon, who made Casbin his Imperial Sea.
1305 8 Alyapsu, who transferred the Court to Taurin, and is said to have been the Founder of Sultania, a chief City of Media; the Brother of Gazun.
1317 9 Abusaid, Son of Alyapsu, the last of the Race of Haalon, that reigned in Persia. After whose death, Anno 1337. (being the 736 of the Mahometan Hegira) the more potent Princes of the Tartars seized on the several parts and Provinces of it; every one calling himself King of that part or Province, which he was possessed of. And amongst them Gempas the Sultan or Soldan of Parthia, (though a Persian born) put in for a share, and made himself Master of his own Province, and some parts adjoining: made on that ground by some of our Christian Writers (who very imperfectly have transmitted to us the affairs of this Country) the sole King of Persia. In this confusion it continued till the coming of Tamerlane, who like a furious Whirlwind, driving driving all before him, composed the differences, by getting all unto himself. But as Philosophy doth teach us, that no violent motion is of long continuance; so the course of business and the success of actions may instruct us also, that a Kingdom forced to bow under the command of a prosperous Army, is not so well assured to the Victor, but that fury of the War once past, it may return again to its former liberty, or open a more easy passage to some new Invader. And so it fared with the Conquests and Successes of Tamerlane, whose Issue quickly lost this Kingdom, and almost all the rest of his other Purchases: leaving but little memory of their names and actions. For partly by his own imprudence, in cantoning his Estates amongst his Children; and partly by the weakness of his Successors in the Realm of Persia, this Kingdom did relapse immediately to the same confusions in which he found it; having almost as many Sovereign Kings as Provinces. Most of them Homagers perhaps to the Kings of the House of Tamerlane, and those who afterwards succeeded in the Title of Kings of Persia, of the Turcoman or Armenian Dynasty: not yet reduced unto this Crown, notwithstanding the great and prosperous successes of the Sophian Family. But for the Kings of the Race of Tamerlane, who only in their times had the honour to be called Kings of Persia, (and well enough content with that;) such as they were, we find them in this order following:

- 1405 10 Mirza Charock, the fourth Son of Tamerlane, succeeded in his appointment in the Realm of Persia.
1447 11 Oleghebegh, Son of Mirza Charock, vanquished and slain by his own Son.
1450 12 Abdalatif, slain not long after by his own Souldiers.
1451 13 Abdulla, the Son of Oleghebegh, and Brother of Abdalatif, vanquished by 1453 14 Abusaid II. descended from Maroncha, the third Son of Tamerlane, succeeded on the death of Abdulla.
1461 15 Zenzes, whom some call Jooncha, others Malanchres, discomfited and slain in battel by Ussan-Cassanes, Anno 1472. which was about 70 years from the death of Tamerlane.

The seventh Dynasty of the Turcoman, or the Armenian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1472 1 Ussan-Cassanes, by some called Asymbeim, by others more truly Ozem-Azambec, was the Son of Tracheton, one of those poor Armenian or Turcoman Princes, dispossessed by Bajazet the first, and restored by Tamerlane. Encroaching on his Neighbours, he was warned to desist by Zenzes last Persian King; with whom encountering in a pitched Field, he overcame him, and got that Kingdom by the Victory.
1478 2 Jacob, the second Son of Ussan-Cassanes, having put by his elder Brother, attained the Throne, and repulsed the Mamelucks out of Mesopotamia and Assyria, which they had invaded. He was after Poysoned by his Wife.
1490 3 Julaver, a Kinsman of Jacob's, succeeded him in the Estate, which he held only three years, and then left it to 1493 4 Baisinger, a Prince of the same Blood; who living in Adultery with the Wife of Jacob, had conspired his death. 2.

- 1494 5 Rustan, assaulted by Aider, or Secander, of the Sophian Faction, who then began to be of power.

Mahomet the Impostor and first Emperour of the Saracens, by his last Will and Testament, bequeathed the succession unto that Estate, to Hali his near Kinsman, and Husband of Fatime his eldest Daughter. But Abudezer, Haimar, and Osman, three powerful men, and the chief Commanders of the Army in the time of Mahomet, successively followed one another in the Supreme Dignity. After their death, Hali enjoyed that honour for a little while, supplanted first, and afterwards vanquished and slain by Mubavias, a great man of War, who succeeded in it: and to secure himself therein, slew Hafim or Osman, the Son of Hali, and eleven of the Sons of that Osman; the twelfth, called Musa Cerdine, escaping with life. From him descended lineally one Guine, the Lord of Ardoville in Media; who considering that there had been no Caliph in long time before, began to plot the establishing of that high honour in his own Family, as the right Heirs to it. A man of so great reputation among the people, that Tamerlane having made a Conquest of Persia, thought it no dishonour to his Greatness to bestow a friendly visit on him. Dying, he left his hopes and projects to his Son, called Aider, who afterward for the Purity of Religion pretended by him, had the adjunct of Isopby; the word so signifying in that Language: who also proved of such esteem and power with all sorts of men, that Ussan-Cassanes, the first King of the Armenian or Turcoman Race, thought fit to make him Husband unto one of his Daughters. But on the contrary, Jacob the Son of Ussan, and some of his Successors, seeing him grow unto such power and estimation with the common people; and fearing what he could do, and not what he would do, endeavoured to depress him by all means that might be. Which he not able to remedy, as the case then stood, practised to add unto his Party under the popular pretence of reforming things that were amiss in their Religion; and grew so powerful in the end, that he gave Battel unto Rustan and Alamat, the two last Kings of the former Race. But Alamat having got the Victory, caused him to be slain; and delivered Hyssmael and Solyman his two Sons, into the hands of Amazar, a chief Commander of his own, by him to be kept in perpetual Prison. But Amazar, a man of a more ingenious disposition, afforded them not only liberty, but also good Education: insomuch that Hyssmael Sopbi, a towardly young Gentleman, undertook Revenge for the death of his Father, which work he fulfilled, having overcome and slain King Alamat, and his Son Elvan. After this Victory, he being Crowned King, or Shangh of Persia, altered the form of Religion: making Hali, and himself the true Successors of Mahomet, but condemning Abudezer, Hannar, and Osman, with the Turks, as Rebels and Schismatics.

Hence proceeded the bloody Wars, which to the Persians loss, have hapned between them and the Turks: the Persians burning whatsoever Book or Monument they find concerning those three; and the Turks holding it more Meritorious to kill one Persian, than seventy Christians. Strius in his Commentaries, writing purposely of the acts of Hyssmael, saith, that the Jews on some fond conceit, were persuaded that he was the Messiah they had had so long looked for : But it proved quite contrary, there never being Prince that more vexed and grieved them,

The eighth Dynasty, or Sappian Race of the Kings of Persia.

- 1505 1 Hyfmael Sophi, the Founder of this Family, overthrown by Selimur the first, in the Caldean Fields. 20.
- 1515 2 Tamas, the Son of Hyfmael, vanquished by Solyman the Magnificent, who took from him the Countries of Chaldea, Assyria, and Mesopotamia, with some part of Media. 53.
- 1578 3 Aider, the second Son of Tamas, obtained the Kingdom, imprisoning his elder Brother ; but his cruelty being much feared, he was made away by the practice of Periancona, his own Sister, having only reigned 15 days.
- 4 Hyfmael II. eldest Son of Tamas, restored unto his Father's Throne; but murdered with the privacy of his Sister also, who found him of too rough a nature for her to Govern; having reigned near two years.
- 1579 5 Mahomet Cadabanda, advanced unto the Throne by his Sisters Faction, (as being of a milder and more tractable nature) at his first entrance caused her to be Beheaded for the former Murders. During his time, not fully settled in the State, Amurath the third, by his Lieutenants won from him almost all Armenia, Media, and great part of Georgia. 7.
- 1585 6 Abas, the second Son of Mahomet, having treacherously practiced the death of Mirza, his elder Brother, succeeded his Father, recovered almost all which the Turks had gained, and added the Kingdoms of Ormus, Heri, Candabor, and Hyrcania, to the Crown of Persia.
- 7 Sophy, the Nephew of Abas by his Son Mirza, (whose Eyes he caused to be put out on a false suspicion) at the Age of fifteen years succeeded : committed by his Grandfather during his Minority to the Protection of Emaugoli, Chawn, or Duke of Shiraz. A Prince, who since he came to Age, hath had a good hand against the Turks, attempting the recovery of Bagdat and other places, which had been taken from them in time of Abas.

The Government of these Persian Kings, though it be despotical and severe, hath a great deal less of the Tyrant in it, than any other of the Mahometan Kings or Princes : these cherishing their Brethren, maintaining Nobility amongst them, and encouraging industry ; which makes them to be better served than the Turk, or Tartar ;

to both, whom they are far inferior both in power and Treasure. Their Officers of State, and men of principal Employment, for the most part Eunuchs (as generally in all the Empires of the East) such persons being thought most trusty, because, abstracted from the obligations of Wife and Children, they study more the Princes Service than their own Advantages. Their Forces consist most of Horse, to which they are inclined more generally, than to serve on Foot ; and yet the greatest Body of Horse which they have brought at any time into the Field, came not to above 30000 ; but those well furnished and appointed, maintained on Lordships and Estates after the manner of the Turkish Timariots. The Foot-Soldiers of his own Countries, but poor and raw, and very seldom stand their ground ; that defect being for the most part supplied by Mercenaries. The inconvenience of which being found by Sultan Abas, he served himself of Children bought of Christian Parents near the Euxine Sea (from whence the Egyptian Sultans had their Mamelucks) whom they call by the name Cozal-Bassis, or Red-Caps, so named from the colour of their Turbans ; trained up by them in their Religion and Warlike Discipline, as the Turks their Janizaries ; yet far inferior to the Turks, against whom if they have prevailed since the time of Abas, they may ascribe the greatest part of their good fortune to those Divisions and Rebellions, which in these late times have been frequent in the Turkish Empire. And as for their Sea-Forces, they are inconsiderable. For though they have large Sea-coast both on the Persian Bay, the Caspian Sea, and the Southern Ocean ; yet are they very poor in Shipping : suffering the Muscovite to ingross the Trade of the Caspian Sea ; the Portugals, to manage that of the Southern Ocean ; as formerly that also of the Persian Bay, till the taking of Ormuz.

The Revenues of this Kingdom in the time of Hyfmael the first Sophy, were exceeding great : inasmuch that Tamas his Successor, to ingratiate himself with all sorts of people, released them of all kinds of Customs imposed on Merchandise, either imported or exported. And this they say amounted to the sum of 90000 Tomans yearly : which, reckoning every Toman at 20 Crowns, made up a Million and 800000 Crowns of annual income. Which notwithstanding, his Revenue was computed at four or five Millions of Crowns yearly ; raised out of Demain Lands, the tenth of Fruits, the profit of Mines, and the Fine paid by every Subject when he sets up Shop. But Tamas finding this not to be sufficient to maintain his Royalty, doubled the value of his money, and thereby for the present his Revenue also. Since that they have been much impaired by the Conquest made upon them by the Turks, who had got from them so much Land as maintained 40000 Timariots ; and yielded to the Grand Seigneur one Million of yearly income : whether improved again or not to their former height, I am not able to determine.

And so much for Persia.

OF TARTARY.

TARTARIA is bounded on the East, with China, the Oriental Ocean, and the Straights of Anian, (if such Straights there be) by which parted from America ; on the West, with Russia, and Podolia, a Province of the Realm of Poland ; on the North, with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean ; and on the South, with part of China, from which separated by a mighty Wall, some part of India, the River Oxus, parting it from Bactria, and Margiana, two Persian Provinces ; the Caspian Sea, which separates it from Media, and Hyrcania ; the Caucasian Mountains interposing betwixt it and Tarcomania ; and the Euxine, which divideth it from Anatolia, and Thrace. So called from the Tartars, a puffed and mighty people now possessed hereof ; the reason of whose name we shall shew hereafter.

It containeth all those great and spacious Provinces, which the Ancients called Seres, Scythia extra Imaum, Scythia intra Imaum, Sace, Sogdiana, the greatest part of Sarmatia Asiatice, and part of Sarmatia Europea : extending it self the whole length of Asia, from the River Tanais, to the Eastern Ocean ; taking in Taurica Cherfonefus, and some other parts of Europe also. So that if we measure it by miles, it is said to contain 5400 from East to West, and 3600 from North to South : a greater quantity of ground than the Turkish Empire, but of less fertility and accompt.

In measuring by the way of Degrees, it reacheth from the 50 Degree of Longitude, to the 195, which is 145 Degrees from West to East : and from the 40th Degree of Northern Latitude, unto the 8th, which is within 10 Degrees of the Pole it self. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the sixth Climate, where the longest day in Summer is 15 hours, till they cease measuring by Climates ; the longest day in the most Northern parts hereof, being full six months ; and in the Winter half of the year, the night as long.

The Country lying under such different Meridians, and such distant Climates, must needs be such, as no general Character can be given of it ; and therefore we shall defer that, with the names of the Rivers, and chief Mountains, to the description of the several and particular Provinces. But for the People, being much of the same nature in every part, we may take the measure of them here. Affirmed to be of square Stature, broad faces, hollow eyes, thin beards, thick lips, flat noses, ugly countenances, swart of complexion, not so much by the heat of the Sun, (which keeps far enough off) as their natural sturdiness. Barbarous every where in behaviour, especially in those parts which they call Asiatica, and Antiqua : but withal very strong of body, swift of footmanship, vigilant in time of service, and patient of all extremities both of cold and hunger. The women suitable to the men, scorning or wanting Ornaments to set themselves out ; or when they do, they seldom go beyond Copper, Feathers, or such precious Gem-stones.

In behaviour they are rude and barbarous, as before was said ; eating their Eneumes when they take them, as in way of Revenge ; first letting out their blood, which they receive into Cups, and use it as Wine unto the feast. Though swift of foot, yet generally they love to ride, though it be but on Oxen ; about whose necks, as about Horses, when they Travel, they use little Bells, with which Musick they are much delighted. Their speech, even in their common talk, is a kind of whining, and their singing little better than the howling of Wolves. They eat commonly with unwashed hands, the dirt and grease about their fingers serving as a sauce for their meat, which they devour greedily, and with little chewing ; and for their ordinary drink use Mares milk. Homely of habit, made of the coarsest stuff, and reaching no lower than the knee : and if they go to the charge of Furs, contrary to the custom of other people, they wear the hairy side outwards, and the skin next their own bodies ; only to shew the richness of their Apparel. And yet so proud in this beggery, that they account the Christians but as Dogs, contemn all the rest of the world, and think their Cham the only considerable Prince ; by whose name they swear, as by their Gods.

In matter of Religion it is hard to say, whether Mahometanism or Paganism, be of most extent : some parts hereof being wholly Pagan, some wholly Mahometan, and some mixt of both. But of the two the Pagan is the better Gentleman, as being of the elder house, and of more Antiquity : the Sect of Mahomet not being entertained amongst them, till the year 1246.

And yet these have not so prevailed, as to extinguish the remainders of Christianity, of which there are amongst them many several Churches. The Christian Faith first planted amongst the Scythians, by the preaching of S. Andrew, and S. Philip, two of the Apostles. Overgrown in these latter Ages by the Sect of Nestorians, either by the diligence of their Preachers, or for want of others to instruct them in more Orthodox Tenets. Before the prevailing of the Tartars, besides the Christian Christians, of whom more anon, there are in the most remote parts of Tartary, whole Kingdoms of that Religion ; as namely that of Tenduc, then the chief of all : besides some numbers of them in Languth, Cambinteler, Cassar, Samerchan, Kartbin, Suehair, Ergimul, and Caraiani ; where in the time of Paulus Venetus, who surveyed these parts about the year 1270. they lived intermingled with the Pagans. Not so diminished since the Conquest of those Countries by the Tartars, but that they are of a considerable number, especially in Cathay it self : where they are said to have a Metropolitan in the City of Cambalse, (the principal City of that Empire) and he so honoured by the Great Cham, that for a time they receive their Crowns from no hands but his.

Great

As for the Tartars, they are by the Chronologer Genebrard, said to be the off-spring of the Ten Tribes, whom Salmanassar led away Captive; and that especially for three reasons. The first is, that the word Tartari, by which name (saith he) they ought rather to be called, than by that of Tartari, signifieth in the Syriack and Hebrew Tongues, a Remnant. But unto this it is answered, that the name of this people is derived from the River Tartar, as some; or from the Region called Tartar, where they first dwelt, as most think: and again, that though the Hebrew word תרת signifie a Remnant, yet can it not properly be applied to the Tartars; who infinitely exceed the Jews, that they cannot be thought to be a remainder of them. Secondly, he allegeth for proof hereof, that this people use Circumcision, the Character of the Jewish Nation. And hereunto it is replied, that Circumcision was common to many people, besides the Jews, as to the Aegyptians, Aethiopians, &c. and that rather as a National Custom, than a Religious Ordinance; and again, that the Tartars cannot be proved to have received Circumcision, before they received Mahometanism. Thirdly, there is brought to confirm this Opinion, a place of Esdrae, cap. 13. lib. 2. where it is said, that the Ten Tribes (that they might the better keep God's Statutes) passed over the River Euphrates; and after a journey of one year and a half, came into a Country called Assareth. To refell which, those of the contrary Opinion find no better course, than by shewing the impossibilities of it. For the Tartars (when their name was first known) were meer Idolaters, had no remembrance of the Law, observed not the Sabbath, nor any other point of Jewish Religion: and so the Ten Tribes retired not hither to keep God's Statutes. Secondly, Euphrates lyeth quite West from Assyria; and those places to which Salmanassar transplanted the Israelites; and so it could not be passed over in a journey towards the North. And thirdly, it is very improbable, that the Ten Tribes should either be so simple, as to leave Assyria, where they were peaceably settled, or so Valiant, as to force a passage through those Countries of Scythia, which neither Persians, Greeks, or Romans were able to withstand in the best of their Fortunes.

To let pass therefore all imaginations of a Foreign Degree, the truth is, that they were no other than a Ruder and more Northern brood of Scythians; who pressed by want, or otherwise oppressed by the King of Tendac, unto whom they were subject, Armed themselves against him, obtained a memorable Victory, and settled Cingis their chief Captain in the Royal Throne, Anno 1162. After which, growing of more power, and enlarging their Dominions further, they united in the name of Tartars all the Scythian Nations; as Mahomet did those of the three Arabias, in the name of Saracens; or as in former times, the many several Tribes of the German Nations, were united in the names of Franks, or Alemanni. Not known in Europe by this name, till their many great and signal Victories had made them formidable; which was about the year 1212. within very little of which time they had made themselves Masters of a larger Empire, than that of Macedon, or Rome, in their greatest glories. But being of a hasty growth, it decayed as suddenly; the greatest part of their European purchases, being conquered from them by the Dukes of Moscovy; and the Kings of Poland, as their acquels in Asia and Africa, by the Turks and Persians. Yet still are they possessed of so large a Territory, that were they not distracted into several States; or did those several States depend upon one Supreme, that one Supreme might very easily give Law unto all his Neighbours, and make the Turks and Persians Tributaries, as in former times. But laying aside these speculations of what they might do if united under one command, let us now look upon them as they are divided into these five parts; that is to say, 1. Tartaria Precopensis, 2. Asiatica, 3. Antiqua, 4. Zagabay, and 5. Cathay.

1. TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS.

TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS is bounded on the East, with the River Tanais; now Don; on the West, with the River Borysbene, now called Nieper, by which last parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland; on the North, with part of Russia; and on the South, with some part of the Euxine Sea: by this account lying totally within Europe.

It had the name of Precopensis from Precopia, a chief Town thereof. By some called Tartaria Minox, to distinguish it from the greater body of that People; the Inhabitants hereof most commonly passing by the name of Crim-Tartars, from the Town of Crim, in which their Cham or Emperour doth reside most usually. The Country by them now possessed, part anciently of Sarmatia Europea, was Inhabited by a Warlike Nation, called the Tauri: from whom those parts hereof which lyeth betwixt the Empire of Russia, and the two Rivers Tanais, and Borysbene, were called Taur-Scythia; that which shooteth out into the Sea, encompassed with the Euxine on the one side, and Palm Moxis on the other, being called Taurica Cherfoneus. In the Description whereof at this place and time, as formerly I made bold with some part of Asia, to lay together the Estate of the Russian Empire: so now to satisfy for that trespass, I shall make bold with part of Europe, to lay together the discourse and affairs of Tartary.

The whole Country plentiful of Fruits, and the Soil indifferently disposed to Tillage and Grazing, though more accustomed unto the last: the people more delighting in their Herds of Cattel, than in the fulness of their Garners. Camels, Horses, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats they have plenty of; great store of delicate Fowl, and abundance of Fish, bred in the large Fens of Moxis: and in their Forests plenty of all sorts of Venison. Which Character as it belongeth generally to all the Country, so most especially to the Cherfoneus, or Demy-Island. United to the main Land with so narrow an Isthmus, that the Tartars once went about to dig it thorow; from whence some say they had the name of Precopensis, Precop in the Scythian Tongue, signifying a deep Trench, or digging through. In length not above 24 German, or 96 Italian miles; in breadth but 60 of the one, or 15 of the other. Blest with a very temperate Air, and a gentle Winter: which beginning with the last of December, ends the first of March. Never extreme; and when the frosts are at the sharpest, but of short continuance. Divided in the midst with a Chain of Hills, extended from the East to the West; the boundary of the Dominions of the Turk and Tartar.

The people of the same complexion and composition as the rest of the Tartars; and not much different in manners. Their Diet, Roots, Cheese, Garlick; and of the poorer sort, for the most part Horse-flesh; (none but the better sort presuming upon Beef or Venison, though of both abundance) which they eat without Bread, or any thing else: and therefore when they go to the Wars, every Soldier takes two Horses with him, the one to serve upon, and the other to kill. And yet for all this havoc which they make of Horse-flesh, there are few years in which they sell not 40 or 50 thousand in the Fairs of Mosco.

Mosco. Towns they built none, scarce willing to maintain those which were built to their hands. Nor have they (except men of Trades and Manufactures) any standing houses; removing up and down with their Drovers of Cattel, moving their houses with them (which they build on Wheels) from one place to another. Of Money they make no esteem, preferring Brags and Steel before other Metals; because more useful to them for Swords and Knives. Good Souldiers for the most part, especially at the Bow and Arrows; to which so accustomed from their childhood, that they can shoot as readily backward as forward. Trained also of late times to the Harquebuse, well skilled in handling the Turkish Scytometers, and their Horsemen Staves. Not to be vanquished but by death, as men that are resolved rather to die than be taken Prisoners: and if victorious, more intent upon taking Captives (especially young Boys and Girls, whom they sell to the Turks) than upon any other booty or spoils of war.

The Religion most embraced and countenanced is that of Mahomet, mingled with some of their old Principles of Christianity: for they confess that CHRIST shall be the Judge both of the quick and dead in the day of Judgment; and punish those that speak irreverently of him. In that regard more favourable to the Christians than other Mahometans; which makes great store of Greecian and Armenian Christians to dwell amongst them. The Language which they speak is their own Tartarian, but intermix with much of the Arabick and Turkish Tongues, and when they write, they use either Chaldean, or Arabian Characters.

Rivers of most note in it, are 1. Borysbene, and 2. Tanais, which though they have their spring-heads in the Empire of Russia (as was there declared) have their falls in this: the first in the Euxine, in the 57th, the other into Palm Moxis in the 67th degree of Longitude; by which we may conjecture somewhat of the length of the Country. 3. Hipanes, 4. Caremitis, falling into the Euxine. 5. Agaris, and 6. Byers, which lose themselves in the Fens of Moxis; as do also 7. Pasafus, 8. Gerus, 9. Lycus, from the main Land; and 10. Isfrianus from the Taurica Cherfoneus. By the confluence of which waters, and many others falling into the Asian side, the Lake or Fens of Moxis are of great extent, in compass at least a thousand miles; well stored with Fish, and still retaining somewhat of sweetness of those many Rivers which are emptied into it. So called from the Meute, who formerly inhabited on the banks hereof; and giving name to all excellent kind of Fish which were called Meotides by the Ancients. At this day generally called Mar delle Zababe, by the Italians commonly Mar della Tana, the Sea of Tanais, and sometimes also Mar Bianco, or the White Sea, to difference it from the Euxine, which they call the Black, for the reasons formerly delivered. Passing directly towards the South, it is streightened by a narrow Channel, not above four miles in breadth, though about 24 in length, called anciently by the name of Bosphorus Cimmerius; Bosphorus, because Oxen did use to swim over; Cimmerius from the Cimmerii who possessed the adjoining Country, on the Asian side: but known at this day by the name of Stretto di Caffa, from the City Capha near unto it; and by the Inhabitants, Vospero, more near the Original. Out of this Streight that confluence of waters which do meet in the Meotick Fens, do make their way into the Euxine, according to that of Lucan.

Quaque fretum currens Moxitidas egerit undas.

Where the Meotick Pool at last

Thorow a narrow Streight make haste.

Chief Cities of it at the present, 1. Capha, or Cassa, in the Cherfoneus, not far from the Streight called hence Stretto di Caffa; a flourishing Empery, and furnished with a large and capacious Haven. Heretofore possessed by the Geneje, who by the benefit of this Port, and the Plantation which they had in Perab on the North side of Constantinople, engrossed into their own hands the whole Trade of the Euxine. Taken by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1475, it became subject to the Turks, and drew into that thralldom all the Southern parts of the Cherfoneus, which depended on it: deprived thereby of the greatest part of its former lustre, the Christian Churches being destroyed, the Towers and publick buildings razed; the houses of Genoa Merchants which were fair and beautiful, destroyed and ruined: yet still the principal of this Biland, or Demy-Island; and anciently better known by the name of Theodusa, and by that name remembered in Ammianus, 2. Precopis, in Latine called Precopia; a Town and Castle situate in or near the place, where stood the Eupateria of the Ancients, called also Pompeopolis, Heraclia, and Achillis Curfus. 3. Corsum, the Cherfoneus of Ptolemy, anciently a Greek Colony; and then accounted for the chief of the whole Peninsula: rich, populous, and well-traded, by reason of the Haven which was safe and large; and of great beauty and magnificence, as the ruins testify. By the Turks at this day called Sari-Germainum, or the Yellow Tower, the foyl about it being of a Saffron colour. 4. German or Crim, the ancient Seat of the Chams, or Princes of these Tartars; and at that time the fairest and greatest of this Biland: Situate in the midst thereof, and fortified with a strong Castle, for the height of the Walls, and depth of the ditch deemed impregnable: supposed to be the Taphia of Pliny, or the Taphros of Ptolemy: Mentioned by Florus, as then lately taken by some Roman Emperour, and so most likely to be Trajan, the first that ever extended the Roman Empire beyond Danubius, and the Euxine: Situate in the very Isthmus, and so commanding both the Euxine, and the Lakes of Moxis; as Corinth betwixt the Aegean and Ionian Seas. 5. Panticapeum, situate on the very Bosphorus, and now called Vospero by the Natives: the ancientest City of this Peninsula, and said by Ammianus to be the mother of all the Greek Colonies, which were planted in it. 6. Tanais, the Tanais of Ptolemy and other Ancients, because situate on the mouth of that River; or rather betwixt the two mouths of it, distant from one another a degree of Longitude. A Town of great Trade, and well frequented by the Merchants of all those Countries, which border on the Euxine Sea: but subject to the Turks, who have there a Garrison, and by them called Azac. 7. Ingermenum, situate on a large and lofty Mountain, and fortified with a Tower or Castle of stone; under which there is a Church, with great Charge and Art cut out of the Rock: formerly of great wealth and fame, now decayed and ruinous. 8. Tamboli, by some called Belachium. 9. Mancopia, by the Turks called Mangunum. 10. Circum; all boasting of their several Castles. 11. Oczakow, or Oczacovia, situate near the influx of the great River Borysbene, into the Bay of Caremitis, and so most like to be built in the place of that, which Ptolemy calleth Olbia; Pliny, Olbiopolis: Honoured of late times (since the taking of Taurica by the Turks) with the residence of the Great Cham: from whence these Tartars are by some called Osanenfer. 12. Metropolis, as Ptolemy, or rather Melitopolis, as Pliny calleth it; a Colony in old times of the Milesiens, nor far from Olbia. Besides all which, and many others mentioned by the ancient Writers, of which there is nothing now remaining; the Court of the Great Cham in Summer time makes a movable City, built upon Wheel-houses, and transported from one place to another, as occasion serveth; which houses at every station station are orderly disposed of into Streets, and Lanes, and by the Tartars are called Agara, or a Town of Carts.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were of Scythian Races; for by that name so elder Writers call not only the true and proper Scythians, lying on both sides of Imax: but even the Sarmatians or Sarmatians also; and those not only of Sarmatia Asiatica, bordering next unto them: but even such European Nations, as lived on the Northern banks of Ister, and the Euxine Sea. And so they are affirmed to be by Ptolemy himself; though otherwise more exact than any, in distinguishing Sarmatia Europæa, from Asiatica, and Asiatica from the Scythians. For speaking of the Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, inhabiting on the Palus Meotis, he ranks them thus, Kai παρ' ἑλάνω τῶν παλαιῶν τῆς Μαιώτιδος, &c. i. e. And all along the Coasts of Meotis, dwell the Jazyges (distinct from those called Meandriæ) and the Rhoxolani; and more within the Land, the Hamaxobii and Alani, Scythians. More towards the banks of the Euxine, and in the Chersonese it self, dwell the ancient Tauri, subdivided in to the several Nations of the Sinchi, Napai, and Arinchi. by the said Ptolemy included in the general name of Tauvo Scythæ. To none but these, of all the European Sarmatians doth he give this name. And therefore I conceive them to have been those Scythians, against whom Darius King of Persia made his fruitless war. Picking a quarrel with this People, because their King had denied to give him one of his Daughters to Wife; or to revenge, as others more probably say, the invade which the Scythians formerly had made into Asia, he drew together an Army of 700 thousand. Passing over the Thracian Bosphorus, he came at last to the banks of Ister, where it parteth Moldavia and Belgaria; and there for the passage of his men caused a Bridge to be Built, to the keepers whereof he left a Cord of 60 knots commanding them every day to untie one knot; and if he came not back before all were untied, to return to their houses. This done, he marched towards his Enemies, who still fled before him; leading him into the most desert and uninhabitable parts of their Country, and when they had brought him into a streight, set Embassadors to him with a Bird, a Mouſe, a Frog, and a handful of Arrows; willing the Persians, if they could, to expound that Riddle. Darius, willing to hope the best of his design, conjectured that the Scythians did submit unto him, by delivering into his hands their Air, Earth, Water, and Arms, Hieroglyphically signified in their Present: But Gobrias, one of their seven Princes, made this Exposition, That if the Persians could not fly like a Bird thorow the Air; or like a Mouſe creep under the Earth, or like a Frog swim over the Water, they could by no means escape the Scythian Arrows. And to say truth, this Commentary best agreed with the Text. For these Scythians following close upon him, or rather driving him before, and vexing him with continual skirmishes; forced him to make such hast to get over the River, that he lost 80000 of his men in fight and flight. This was the only memorable Action of these European Scythians in those elder ages: more memorable in the times succeeding for their horrid cruelty; than any argument of their valour. For it is said of these Tauri; or Tauvo-Scythæ, that for the pleasing of their Gods, especially of Diana, whom they called Orsloche, they used to sacrifice all such strangers as they could lay hands on; and with their heads most barbarously adorned the Walls of her Temples. An inhumanity with which the Christian Advocates of the Primitive times did much use to upbraid the Gemiles; taunting them with the Sacrifices of Diana Iunicea (so named from hence) as inconsistent with the nature of a God or Goodness; most rightly giving them this brand or censure, that they were not Sacra, but Sacrilegia. Et præstat profanus esse quam sit religiosus. Better it was to be of no Religion, than of one so cruel.

But to go forwards with the story, In the actions of the Greeks and Romans we hear nothing of them, unless it were that the Emperor Trajan (as Florus seems to intimate) took the City of Taphre: Which if he did, he added by that action somewhat to his own honour, but nothing to the Roman Empire: this people being never reckoned amongst the Provinces. Nor hear we any thing by name of their infesting the Roman Territories (as the other barbarous Nations did:) except they passed in the account of the Goths, Alani, Huns, Avars, or other of the Scythian, or Sarmatian People; by which the Majesty of that Empire was trod under foot. But what the Persians, Greeks, and Romans were not able to do, was with ease effected by the Tartars: who in the time of Jocchata, or Hocata, the next to Cingis, under the conduct of Batu, or Koydo, one of their most renowned Commanders, subdued all these parts; together with Russia on the North, Bulgaria, and Hungaria on the East. Subject at first to the Command of the Great Cham of Cathia, as the rest of the Tartarians were, they came at last to have a Prince of their own; one Lochban Cham, descended from the aforesaid Batu, and (as it was pretended) of the blood of Cingis. They grew at last of so great power, by conquering the Asiatick Tartars which lay nearest to them, that Makomet the Great thought fit to keep them down before grown too strong for him: and therefore under colour of taking in the City of Captha then possessed by the Genosse, made himself Master of the greatest part of the Taurian Chersonese, and the Port of Tanais; thereby commanding both Meotis and the Euxine Sea. In the time of Selimus the first, who had married a Daughter of this Crim-Tartar, (for so they call him) and was aided by him with an Army of 15000 men against his Father, the Turks and these Tartarians grew into a League. The chief conditions of it were, that the Tartar should aid the Turks upon all occasions, with 60000 horse, if it were required; that they shall not make war with any of their neighbours, (except the Moscovite) without leave of the Turks; that they shall pay yearly to the Grand Seigneur in the way of Tribute 300 Christians; that the new Cham, upon the death or deposition of his Predecessor, shall receive from the Great Turk a Royal Banner, in token of his Confirmation in that estate; that in reward of these services, the Crim-Tartar shall have yearly from the Grand Seigneur 5500 Ducats, in the way of Pension; and succeed finally in the Turkish Empire, if ever the male Issue of the House of Ottoman should chance to fail. According unto this agreement, the Tartars have been aiding to the Turks from time to time, against the Persians, Polanders, Hungarians, Moldavians, and indeed whom not? and that with great and puissant Armies; the great Cham sometimes arming 150000 of his own Subjects; leaving but one man in an house to attend their Cattel; and sometimes adding 50000 Circassians, and others of the Asian Tartars. And for the Moscovites, whom he is left at liberty to assault by this Capitulation, he hath had so hard an hand upon him, that in the year 1571. they pierced as far as to the City of Mosco, and set fire on the Suburbs: which flaming into the City built most of wood, and then reckoned to be 30 miles in compass, within the space of four hours burnt the greatest part of it; and therein no fewer than 800000 of all sorts of people. A quarrel not to be composed; the Tartar not only laying claim to the Kingdoms of Casan, and Astrachan, which the Russ possess; but even to Moscovite it self, as hath there been shewn.

shewn. Nothing so punctual is the Turk on his part, to perform the Contract; who not content to have the Tartar for his friend, or at the worst his Homager, hath of late times attempted to make him his Slave or Vassal. For Amurath the third, quarrelling Mahomet the Crim-Tartar for a design to intercept Osman-Bassa, in his way from Persia to Constantinople, authorized the said Osman to war upon him: by whom the poor Crim and his two Sons, betrayed by some of his own Counsellors (corrupted with Turkish Gold) were strangled with a Bow-string; Istan a Brother of the Crim, first sworn a Vassal to the Turk, put into the place; and over him a Turkish Beglerbeg or Bassa, to command in chief. What hopes he hath of succeeding in the Turkish Empire, if the house of Ottoman should fail, hath been already taken into consideration, in our discourse upon that subject.

What the Revenue of this Prince is, it is hard to say; his Subjects having little Money, and living most upon the bartery of their Cattel. But besides what he hath in Lands or Customs, and the 5500 Ducats yearly which he receiveth yearly from the Turks, he hath the tenth of all the spoils which are got in the wars, and a Checkine for every Captive, for some two or three (whosoever taketh them) according unto their estates.

As for his power, what he can do in Horse, we have seen already; and as for Foot, and Ammunition, and other necessities, he is supplied with them by the Turks, (who doth sometimes espouse his quarrels;) by whose assistance they have brought the Moscovites to some extremities. And upon confidence of the favour and protection of the Grand Seigneur, the Cham then being, upon the death of Stephen Bathori, (whom Amurath the third, commended to the Crown of Poland) sent Embassadors to negotiate his Election to that Kingdom; and to induce them thereunto, promised them in his Letters amongst other things, that their Pope should be his Pope, their Luther his Luther: and that rather than put them unto any charge to find his Table, he could live with Horse-flesh. His Embassie entertained with Laughter, as it well deserved.

2. TARTARIA DESERTA.

TARTARIA DESERTA is bounded on the West, with Precoensis, and the Empire of Russia; on the East, with Antiqua, and Zagathay; from which last parted by the River Spang, which falleth into the Caspian Sea about the middle of it, and with the great Lake of Kitay, from East to West; on the North, with the Scythic or frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of the Euxine Sea, the Caucasian Mountains, and some part of the Caspian.

It took this name from the many Deserts which are in it; and is called also Asiatica, to difference it from Precoensis, which is wholly in Europe: or because it taketh up the whole continent of Sarmatia Asiatica, according to the bounds thereof laid down by Ptolemy, except some part hereof incorporated to the Russian Empire.

The Country of it self sufficiently fruitful, if well manured; and were it in the hands of a laborious and industrious people, would yield large increase: as appears by the ill-husbandry of the Tartars, who sow nothing on it but Mil and Panicum (grains unknown to us) and yet without giving it any tillage, receiving very plentiful returns of both. But the Tartar being a nation that hateth Agriculture, and laugheth at Christians for living on the tops of Reeds, (so they call our bread) neglect all that which is not of a rank Pasture for their Herds and Cattel: moving from one place to another, as the Grass falleth them; which maketh it so full of Deserts, and so empty of Towns as to deserve the name of Tartaria Deserta.

The People or Inhabitants of it are of several sorts, derived from three several Originals, and disposed of in three several parts. 1. The Samyedæ, dwelling towards the Northern Ocean, who are wholly Idolaters, now reckoned as a part of Zagathay, and there we shall hear further of them. 2. The Circassians, bordering on the Euxine, for the most part Christians; and 3. the Tartars, planted betwixt both, being all Mahometans. These again subdivided into several Tribes, which they call their Hordes: of which the most considerable are, 1. the Nagaitan Tartars, 2. the Zavolhenſes, 3. the Thumenenſes, 4. the Kirgeſſi; besides the Hordes or Kingdoms of Casan, and Astrachan, added unto the Empire of Russia, where described already; and others of inferior note, not here considerable.

But before we come to speak with these people in their several places, we must first look upon the whole Country, as presented to us under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: bounded by Ptolemy as before, save that it did extend more Westwards; and was unknown to him in the Northern parts of it: now possessed by the Moscovite. So populous in the time of that Author, that he giveth us the names of forty several Nations which did then inhabit it, and of about as many Towns of good estimation. Of which there are but few or none remainings and for the names of some of the principal of them, we shall have them presently.

Rivers of most note in it, 1. Mirabius, 2. Rhombitus, the Greater, and 3. the Lets; 4. Anticu, 5. Theophanitus, 6. Psalbis, 7. Theſyris, 8. Corax, and 9. Vardanes; all of them falling into the Euxine, and Mæotie Fens. 10. Vidonis, 11. Alnata, and 12. Rba, paying their Tributes to the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Of these the principal is Rba, by the modern Latines called Volgo; by the Tartars, Edi; rising in Russia, not far from the City of Mosco, (where we have described it.) Most memorable, besides the seventy Mouths or Channels, wherein it openeth into the Caspian, for a Medicinable and wholesome root growing on both sides thereof; which the Physicians call Rba, by the name of the River; and for Distinction sake, Rba Pontick, to difference it from Rhobarb, or Rba Barbarum, as of a different nature from it; this last being purgative, and the other more apt to bind. 13. Ob, a River unknown to Ptolemy, rising out of the Lake of Kitay, a Lake in bigness like the Sea, and full of many little Islands (most of them inhabited.) Which River at its first parting from this Lake, is said to be of 8 miles breadth; and growing still bigger and bigger, emptieth it self at last in the Northern Ocean: the present boundary betwixt the Russian, and the People in the North of this Country.

Principal Mountains of this part, 1. Corax, giving name unto the River issuing out of it, 2. Montes Hippici, extended towards the Caspian Sea, 3. Montes Cerannii, lying in the furthest parts hereof (then known to my Author) to the North and East. 4. Caucasus, or Caucasii Montes, extended from the Euxine to the Caspian Seas; and parting Sarmatia Asiatica from Colchis, Iberia, and Albania; A chain of Hills of which Aristotle saith, Acumine & latitudine omnium maximis, &c. that for height and breadth they are the greatest of the East; the tops whereof are lightened by the Sun beams in midnight till almost day-break, when it is dark night in the valleys beneath. Not passable for horse or foot (except they creep along by the Euxine shore) but at one place only, called Sarmatia Pylee, or the Gates of Sarmatia; by others named Caucasie Porte, from the Hills adjoining. Situate in the 31 degree of Latitude, and not far from the Caspian Sea: but that so intricate and narrow, that very small force may keep it against strong Armies. So carefully did Almighty God in his Heavenly Providence, shut up this fierce and barbarous People, from the rest of Mankind, by such unfordable Waters, and unpassable Mountains: not to be freed out of this Prison, till he thought good to use them, as the Executioners of his wrath and vengeance, for the punishment of sinful and impenitent Nations. This said, we will consider those particular Nations, which before we named, and are now possessed of it in their several places.

1. Opposite to the Precoepenses lie the CIRCASSIANS, extended from the Cimmerian Bosphorus and the Fens of Mæotis, towards the Eastern shores of the Euxine Sea for the space of 500 miles; and reaching 200 miles towards the North. The name imposed on them by the Tartars, whereas before they were called by Pliny, Zigei; by some Writers, Zychi, conceived to be the Zinchi of Plolomy.

The Country very fitly seated for Trade and Merchandise, as having a fair and large Sea-coast, with many Rivers opening into it (nine of those spoken of before, passing thorow these Tracts: ) and not a few capacious Bays, and commodious Havens. Of which the principal were Sinus Cerceicus, or the Bay of Cercesia, Synda, and Bata, two known Havens, and specified by my Author with the adjunct of Portus. But these conveniences not much looked after by the present Inhabitants, who are more inclined to the Wars, than to Trades, or Merchandise. A Stout and Military People, trained to their Weapons from their Childhood, and sold as soon as trained to it by unnatural Parents. For from these parts did the Mamelucks of Egypt fetch their first Original; and from hence supply themselves with a perpetual Seminary of Slaves and Souldiers, raised by degrees unto the highest dignities of that slavish Empire; And from these parts the Persian Sophies are supplied with their Cozzel-Bassas, disciplined and instructed by them like the Turkish Janizaries.

The Christian Faith was here planted in the year 860. or thereabouts, by the Ministry of Cyrill (or Chiuril) and Methodius; employed in that Service by the Patriarch of Constantinople. In which respect their Churches are of the Greek Communion, conforming thereto in Rites and Doctrine, and of the jurisdiction of that Patriarch: but differing from them very much in matters prædical. For it is ordinary with these half Christians, not to baptize their Children till eight years old; to hear Divine Service standing without their Churches, into which they very seldom enter (especially the Gentlemen) till the fortieth, or (as some say) the sixtieth year of their age: dividing the whole course of their life betwixt God and the Devil, in dedicating their youth unto Theft and Robbery, their old age (when they can no longer commit those villanies) to the difficult business of repentance.

Places of most observation amongst the Ancients, 1. Cimmerium, a Town and Promontory, so called from the Cimmerii, once the chief People of these parts, of whom more anon; situate on the very shore of the Bosphorus, from hence denominated. 2. Phanagoria, in old times, a well-traded Empory; situate on a little Island raised out of the Sea, by the care and industry of the Greeks, who had here a Factory. 3. Apathurgus, by Pliny called Apaturnum, memorable for a Temple of Venus surnamed Apaturia (which name she gave unto this place,) because (saith Strabo) when the Giants assaulted her, she craved help of Hercules, who slew them all one after another. 4. Gersa, by Plolomy honoured with the title of Civitas, the Gargasa of Diodorus, now called S. George's. 5. Oenuntia, near the mouth of the River Thesytis. 6. Aræza, more within the Land, which with 7 Ampfacin hath the name of a City also. The names of their chief Havens we have seen before. But few of these, or any other mentioned by the Ancient Authors, being now visible in their ruins: the chief of those which are now extant, are 1. Locoppa, 2. Conicee; but of no great note.

The People anciently though divided into the several Tribes of the Thirifagete, Zige, Turce, the Huns, Avares, and Mæste, all noted Nations; besides the Coaxtre, Zinchi, Tyrambe, Pselii, and others as obscure as they, were better known by the name of Cimmerians, in which those several Tribes concentrated. Defended in the right of that common original, from Gomer the Son of Japhet, first planted in the Mountainous places of Albania: his Posterity known by the name of Gomerii, afterwards the Cimmerii, left there a memorial of themselves in the Mountains called Cimmerini. But that Country proving both too barren, and too narrow for them, some of them passed into Phrygia Major, where they built the City Cimmeris, not unknown to Pliny, in whose time it was extant: and others in some Tract of time, keeping the Euxine on their left hand, fixed themselves in these parts; here giving name to the Town and Promontory Cimmerion, to the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and generally to all the people defended of them. From these particularly, as the stout and valiant Nation of the Cimbri, do derive their Pedigree; so from these and the Children of Mesoch, Magog and Tubal, the Sarmatians both of Europe and Asia, the Moscovites, and perhaps the Sythians, are to fetch their Original: all of them great and puissant Nations, and all involved promiscuously in the name of Sythians. Renowned for no other action more than the memorable Expedition, which they made into Media in the Greater, and Lydia in the Lesser Asia: the Cimmerians by themselves alone, or by them as principal; the rest of these Sarmatians in a body together as a Scythian People. Distressed with want, or to disburden their small Country of superfluous multitudes, these Cimmerii in the time of Nabulassar, or Salmanassar, King of Assyria, communicating their design with the rest of the Scythians, to enlarge their quarters; holding along the course of the Euxine Sea, and passing thorow the Country of Colechis, first seized on some parts of Pontus and Paphlagonia. Where having fortified the Promontory on which Sinope was after built; and leaving there their Carriages, and the weakest of their Train with sufficient guards, they marched into Lydia, reputed (as it was indeed) for a wealthy Region. There they possessed themselves of Sardis, the Royal City; and after of the rest of the Country, or the most part of it, Ardes the Son of Giger, who then reigned in Lydia, not being able to withstand them. Both sides being wearied with long War, and grown more pliant by degrees unto one another (as in like case betwixt the Saxons and the Danes) it proved no difficult matter for Halyattes, the Grand-child of Ardis, to compound the business: assigning to the Cimmerians all those parts of his Dominions, which lay beyond the River Haly; and settling his Lydians in the rest. By this transaction there were so good correspondences betwixt the Nations, that when Cyaxares, King of the Medes, invaded the Country of these Cimmerians, under colour of the invasion which the Scythians had made in Media, Halyattes did espouse the quarrel, and appeared in their aid. In following times, growing into confidence of one another, and mixt in Marriages and Blood, they became one People; or at least passed not under the account of strangers, or the name of Aliens. Such end had this most notable notable expedition of these Cimmerians; not much remembered after this, for the like undertakings. Yet here they held their own, though in other names, governed by many petty Princes, but all associated with Mithridates against the Romans: that King being so great amongst them, that his Son Macchares having married into some of their Families, was made King of Bosphorus. But Macchares having made his peace with Lucullus, the Romans never looked this way. Nor hear we much of them in succeeding times, till the invasion of the Tartars; by whom subdued, they acknowledge at first the Great Cham for their Sovereign Lord: whose power declining, they have successively been subject to the Crim-Tartar, the Turk, and Moscovite; but most commonly to the Crim-Tartar, as their nearest neighbour, and most able to hurt them. And him they furnished on command with 50000 horse for the Grand Seigneur's Service: yet so that they supply the Persian with his Cozzel-Bassas, and sometimes serve under him for pay, as they do under any which will entertain them. Governed like the Swissers, by their several Communalities: yet so, that every Commonality hath some principal man (which the Swissers have not) whom they call Morfeys, (that is Dukes) to direct and order them.

2. Betwixt these and the River Volga dwell the ZAVOLHENSES, one of the greatest Hords or Tribes of all the Tartars; and therefore called Horda Magna. Of these the Crim, or Precoepenses were a Castling only, proceeding out of this great Swarm or Nest of Hornets, though afterwards they became their Masters. Of the Country or the People we say nothing here, having sufficiently spoken of both already. Their chief Town hath the name of Bolgar, situate on the River Volga, and from thence so named: Volgar and Bolgar differing but little in Orthography, and not much in sound.

This Country, as I take it by the situation, should be that which Plolomy calleth Mithridatin Regio: whether so called in honour of him by the Princes of the neighbouring Cimmerians, with whom he had contracted alliance: or that he had made any Conquests there; or from some other Prince of the same name, I determine not. And in this Tract were those two Pillars, advanced unto the honour of Alexander, in Plolomy called Calumne Alexandri, in whose time they stood without defacement: there being also Altars erected to him, or in memory of him, near the Banks of Tanais, occurring in the same Author by the name of Ara Alexandri. Which probably occasioned the error of Qu. Curtius, who brings Alexander in pursuit of the Scythian War, as far as Tanais: whereas it is apparent by the course of his Actions, that he never got beyond the River Jaxartes; distant from Tanais no less than 2000 miles.

This Tribe first governed by its own King, whom they called Ulu-Cham, or the Great Cham, was in the year 1506. subdued by the Crim-Tartar, and made subject to him. Afterwards conquered by Basilus the Great Duke of Moscovy, who thereupon assumed the Title of King of Bolgar: which his Successors still preserve, with the Town itself: well garrisoned to keep open the whole course of the River Volga, by which they manage the great Trade of the Caspian Sea. But for the main body of this people, they returned again to their obedience to the Crim, as being a Lamb of the same body with him; and are subject unto his Commands: though by reason of their neighbourhood to the Moscovite, and commerce with that Nation, they frame themselves both to their language, habit, and behaviour.

3. East of the Zavolhenses, on the other side of the Volga, dwell the NOIHACENSES, or NAGAIANS, spreading as far as the borders of Zagathay, and declining Southward towards the Caspian Sea, and the Montes Hippici: Accompted the best men of war of all the Tartars, but more fierce and cruel than the rest; void of all Arts, not having, or contemning Money, or the use of Corn. Horse-flesh and Mares milk their best diet: the flesh either roasted by the Sun, or heated by continual hanging at the Saddle-bow. And with such cheer (nor worse nor better) did Azim Can, one of the Princes of this Tribe, entertain Jenkinson and other English men in their travels to the Caspian, from the River Volga. Their chief Town, if possibly it deserve that name, is called Scharayirzik, the Residence of one of their Princes; and the next, Selsture, where the said Jenkinson found the Cham, as in the prime place of his abode.

The Government is by several Morfeys, the Heads or Chiefs, no doubt, of their several Clans: agreeing well enough together against the Moscovite: whom they infect with frequent inroads, and put him to the charge of continual Garrisons, at Casan, Astrachan, and Viatska. Their Wars for the most part only Predatory, rather to get some present booty, than out of any hope to enlarge their Dominion; and therefore commonly pacified, and sent home with Presents. The Great Duke is so good a Statesman, as to think the expence of Money cheaper than that of Blood; especially when he hath to deal with such an Enemy, who hath neither any Town of consequence, or fixt place of dwelling, and consequently nothing to be got but blows. Their Morfeys, formerly more in number, were of late times reduced unto three; of which he of Scharayirzik was the chief: to whose direction, and appointment (especially in matters which concerned the publick) the other two do commonly submit themselves.

4. Betwixt the Nagaians, and the Circassians, lie those Tribes which they call the KIRGESSI; spreading as far as to the mouths or influx of the River Volga: but intermixt with the Hefelites, and Baschourides, two other of the Tartarian Tribes, but of less power. Their life, for the most part in continual motion, removing with their Wives and Families from one place to another; and governing themselves in their removes, by the light of the Pole-star. Partly Mahometans, partly Gentile; but the Gentiles make the greater number; not burying their dead bodies, as in other places, but hanging them upon a Tree, though they stink again: certain enough that they will be devoured or sweetned, before they return back to the same Station. Much reverence yet they give their Priests, by whom sanctified and besprinkled in their publick meeting, with a certain mixture, compounded of Blood, Milk, Earth, and Cow-dung, a most sweet Confession, but good enough for them that desire no better. And yet with these the Moscovite is fain to hold fair compliance, and to send them every year some Presents for fear they should joyn with the Nagaians: or otherwise disturb him in his Caspian Trade down the River Volga.

5. The THUMENSES or THUMEN TARTARS lie more North than any of these Tartarians; having on the South, the Zavolhenses, and the Territory of Viatska in the Empire of Russia. A warlike People, and living near a dangerous neighbour; for which cause they do not straggle so abroad in petty companies, as the others do, but keep together in great bodies: For the most part much delighted in Negromancy, and Conjuratory. In which the Devil so befalls them, that he suffereth them to raise Tempests; and sometimes, by Diabolical illusions, to defeat their Enemies. The only Hord of all Deserta, which still continue in obedience to their natural Lord, the Great Cham of Carbay (if such Cham there be.) And unto these we may adjoin the Molgoms.

Molgomozan, all Gentiles, and the most barbarous of all: living in Caves, and feeding upon Worms, and Mice, and Serpents, and such other vermin as would be poyson unto any but such Molgomozan, who are more poysonous than those Creatures.

These Hords, together with the Kingdoms of Casan, and Atrachan and such of the Russian Provinces as lie on the East of Tanais, and the River of Duina, make up that Country which anciently passed under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: inhabited originally by the Descendants of Gomer, Mesech, Tubal, Magog, the Sons of Japhet, spreading themselves more Northwards as they grew in numbers, out of Albania, Iberia, Colebis, and the Pontick, or Cimerian Nations. Divided into the Tribes or Families of the Olande, Gerri, Samocolibi, Seani, Seci, Scimuite, Agarite, Mardi, Canapfeni, Chenides, Bastlic, Hyperborei, Hippobugi, and others of as little note: these last so called from their eating of Morfes, which diet they have left unto their Successors. So like in manners and conditions, to the neighbouring Scythians, that they passed commonly by that name; and by that name are memorable for the great expedition by them made into Asia the Greater, at such time as the Cimmerians fell into Asia Minor. For passing without opposition thorow the Sarmatian Strightri, where they might have been easily kept out; and leaving behind them the more barren Country of Albania, they fell into Media: where they were encountered (but victorious) by Phtartes, then King of the Medes: Who finding that he was not able to remove them by force, assayed it by cunning; and first persuaded them to look towards the South, as into richer Countries, and more like to yield them full content. Hereupon, full of Prey and Presents, they marched towards Egypt, but were met in Syria by Psammiticus the Egyptian King, who heard of their coming; and thought it best to entertain them on the way, and not to bid them welcome at home to his great cost. Out-vying the Median (as of the two the richer Prince) he loaded them with gifts and treasures, and so sent them back again into Media, from whence they came: where for many years they afflicted that People, and the neighbouring Provinces, doubling their Tributes, and using all kind of Insolencies: till in the end, Cyaxares, the Son and Successor of Phtartes, acquainting some of his most faithful Subjects with his design, caused the better part of them to be plentifully feasted, made them drunk, and slew them; recovering thereby the possession of his whole Estate. Afterwards imitated by the English in their Hock-side slaughter. Such of them as escaped this blow, and were not willing to be subject to the Kings of Media (as many of them were) were suffered to return home by the same way they came; where at their coming, they found foul work made by their Wives and their Slaves; the story whereof we had when we were in Russia. After this we hear nothing of them in the stories of the Greeks, and Romans; unless those Amazons, who attended their Queen Thalestris, when she bestowed a visit on Alexander, were rather of these Sarmatian Amazons, than of those of Pontus and Thermodon, as I think they were: the nearness of their dwelling to Hyrcania, in which place they found him, inducing me to this opinion. But possible enough it is, (though it be not certain) that some of these Sarmatian Tribes, though by other names, hearing of the successes of the Huns, Avars, and other barbarous Nations, which made havock of the Roman Empire, might join themselves unto them, and make up their numbers: those Nations being else too small to compound such Armies, as by them were brought into the field against the Romans, without such like helps. What their Estate hath been since subdued by the Tartars, hath been shewn already.

3. ZAGATHAT.

ZAGATHAT is bounded on the East, with the Mountain Imaus, by which it is parted from Cathay; on the North, with the main Scythie, or Frozen Ocean; on the West, with Tartaria Deserta, from which separated by the River Soane, and the Lake of Kitay; and on the South, with the Caspian Sea, and the River Oxus, by which divided from the Empire of Persia. So called from Zagathay, a brother of one of the Great Chams, on whom it was conferred for his better maintenance; the Scythia intra montem Imaum of the ancient Writers.

The Country spreading out so far, on all sides, as before appeareth, comprehendeth all those Provinces and tracts of ground, which anciently were called, 1. The Country of the Sace, 2. Sogdiana, with 3. Zagathay, specially so called, and 4. Turckistan, included anciently in the name of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and 5. the Terra Incognita, which Ptolemy makes to be the Northern boundary of that part of Scythia. By taking a survey of all which Particulars, we shall find the temper of the whole.

1. SACÆ, or the Country of the Sacans, is bounded on the East, with the Mountain Imaus; on the West, with Sogdiana; on the North with Zagathay, properly and specially so called; on the South, with the River Oxus, by which parted from Bactria. So called from the Sace, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not.

The Country anciently either barren, or ill manured; full of vast Forests, wide Desarts, and the like uninhabitable places, few or no Cities in it, and not many Villages (Civitates autem non habent, as my Author hath it) the People living most part in Caves, or otherwise wandering up and down with their droves of Cattel; Called for that reason Nomades by some ancient Writers. The name not proper to these only, but common to all those who followed the like roving life, as the Sarmatians, wild Arabians, Saracens, and the Inhabitants of Lydia and Numidia in Africa. Only one fortified place they had, which from the materials of it had the name of Turris Lapidea, (Ἰνδὸς πέτρῃ, in the Greek) or the Castle of Stones; Part hereof being peopled for the most part by Camels; or travelling only with those Creatures, had the name of Camelorum Regio.

Divided it was anciently into many Tribes, the Carate, and Comari, near the River Jaxartes; the Massagete, and Gomede, near the hills called Ascatanus; the Eylee, and Grynei, more within the Country. All joined in one by the name of Sace; and by that name made a very fortunate Progress into Armenia (to which they had an easie passage by the Northern Banks of the Caspian Sea) and therein gave name unto the Province called Sacensia. But proceeding into Cappadocia, and there slain by the Persians in the midst of their Feastings, they left there also some resemblance of their name, in an annual Festival called Sace; celebrated by the Persians, in memorial of their good success in the war against them. Such as laid here, being overcome by Cyrus the first Persian Monarch, did so good service to that Prince, that Amorges the King of these Sace, is said to have rescued him from the hands of the Scythians, by whom otherwise he had been slain, or taken Prisoner. In the declining of that Kingdom, they were subdued by Alexander at the end of his Scythian, and Sogdian wars; who hereabouts, by Cobortanes a noble Persian, was presented with a Bevy of Beautiful Ladies; one of the which was that Bastine, whom he made his Wife, and had by her that Hercules,

Hercules, whom Polyperchon and his Faction proclaimed King of Macedon. Not memorable in the following times for any thing which they did or suffered; as they have been made by the opinion or mistake of others; who building Castles in the Air, will needs derive the Saxons (our famous Ancestors) from this Original: as if they were called Saxons, quasi Sace sonis, or the Sons of the Sace. A fancy in my poor conceit, of no ground at all. For either the number of these Sace, when they left these parts, must be great, or little. If little, how can we conceive it possible, they should force their way through those valliant Nations of both Sarmatia's, who to the last maintained their Liberties and Estate against the Romans? If great enough to force their passage (for stout and provident Nations use not to give passage to great Armies, but they pay dear for it) how can we think it possible they should be shut up in a corner of Germany, betwixt the River Albis and the Cimbrick Chersonese? The Saxons then, whatsoever they were, were no Sons of the Sace; and what in likelihood they were, hath been elsewhere shewn.

2. SOGDIANA hath on the East, the Sace; on the North and West, Zagathay specially so called; on the South, the River Oxus, parting it from Margiana. So called from a chain of Mountains named Montes Sogdii, being the chief of all this Country, though of themselves a spur or branch of the Mountain Camofus.

The Country indifferently fruitful, and very rich in Pasturage, because very well watered. For besides Oxus, and Jaxartes, which are common unto them and others; they have many Rivers of their own. The principal of which, 1. Dymus, and 2. Araxartes, both navigable, and capable of very good Ships; both also running down the hills with a headlong course, and passing through the Champion Country, empty themselves at last in the Lake called Oxiana; as is affirmed by Ammianus, but as Ptolemy saith, into Jaxartes.

Places of most consideration are, 1. Drepfa, the Metropolis or Mother-City of this People. By Pliny called Panda, by Solinus Darapfa, situate on the River Oxus. 2. Oxiana, on the same River, and from thence denominated. 3. Maruca, on the same River also. 4. Alexandria, called for distinction sake, Alexandria Oxiane, which name declareth both the founder and the situation. 5. Alexandria, for the same cause of distinction, named Alexandria ultima: either because the last City which he built in these parts; or because it lay furthest off on the borders of the Scythians, against whose invasions or irruption it was said to be built. 6. Tribarra, one of the chief hereof in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Cyresebata, more memorable, and not less ancient, than any of those named before, by Qu. Curtius called Cyropolis, built by Cyrus, to fortifie his borders against the Scythians. It held out against the great Macedonian, a long time; and he himself coming nigher to the Walls than discretion would permit an ordinary General, had such a blow on the neck with a Stone, that he fell to the ground, his Eyes swimming in his head, and his whole Army giving him for slain: but reviving, he took the Town by a mine, and level'd it with the ground, in revenge of so great a danger.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Oxydrace, and Candari, dwelling at the foot of the Sogdian Mountains; the Oxiani, and Cherosmii, near the banks of Oxus; the Jasii, and Tachori, near the River Jaxartes; the Drepfiani in the East parts bordering on the Sace; whose chief City was Drepfa: descended from their several roots but all called Sogdians. Conquered by Alexander, not without danger to his own person, as before was said; at the solicitation of Spitamenes a noble Persian, it rebelled again. Who being suppressed, and the Country in some measure quieted, Arimazes, a Native of the Province, renewed the war. Who followed with 30000 men, encamped upon the top of an hill, in a place of such notable advantage, that Alexander, neither by force nor fair words, could get him out of it. He therefore dealt with 3000 of his youngest and most active men, on the promise of great reward, to climb the hill; and without any noise to throw themselves at the back of the Enemy: Which having performed with the loss of 30 of their company, Alexander sent one Copbis to Arimazes, to let him know that the whole Army of Macedon was at his back; who terrified with what he saw, more with what he feared, gave up the place, and was scourged and crucified for his labour. So necessary in the Art of warfare is a piece of wit. After this time, it ran the same alterations and change of fortunes, as the Persians did, till they were conquered by the Tartars, unto whom still subject.

3. ZAGATHAT specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Cathay; on the West, with Turckistan, and part of the Caspian Sea; on the North, with the Country of the Samoyeds, the Terra Incognita of the Ancients; on the South, with the Sace, and Sogdiana. Anciently part of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and took this new name from Zagathay, the first Prince hereof, since the time of the Tartars.

The Country reasonably fruitful, but not so rich in the natural temper of the soyl, as the industriousness of the people, more civil far than any other of the Tartars, studious of good Letters, lovers of Arts, as well ingenious as Mechanick; well skill'd in Manufactures, and very seldom without the confluence of foreign Merchants. Populous, and well-flored with Towns and Villages; both for their own more handsome dwelling and the entertainment of others.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Jaxartes, now called Chesle, the principal of all this Country: great of it self, but made much greater by the waters of 2. Daix, another River of good note, rising out of the Mountain called Norofus, and falling with many others into Jaxartes; mixt with those streams they are ditched in the Caspian Sea. 3. Jartus, 4. Polyimetus, falling into Oxus. Others there are whose names I find not in my Authors, descending from the Mountains in this Northern Region, which are great and many: As viz. 1. Norofus, spoken of before. 2. Aspsii, on the North of that. 3. Toporus, more unto the North. 4. The Mountains called Sychi, more Northward still. 5. Those called Anarei, besides 6. Imaus, of most name, but common unto Cathay as well as to Zagathay, and there we shall hear further of it.

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Aspabois, the only Town ascribed by Ptolemy to this Country, and by him honoured with the title of Civitas. 2. Zabaspiz, of less antiquity, but of greater estimation at the present time. Situate on the mouth of the River Oxus (now called Abis) on the brink of the Caspian; and much frequented by the Merchants of foreign Countries, chiefly from India, and Cathay. 3. Marachanda, ancient, and of fame, but placed by Ptolemy (why I know not) amongst the Cities of Bactria: differing herein from the common and received opinion of other Authors, by whom this City is affirmed to be on the North side of Oxus, and consequently not within that Province. Made good by Spitamenes, (who having delivered the Traitor Bessus into the hands of Alexander, revolted from him) against the Macedonian Army; by which besieged under the command of Menemenus. But Menemenus being slain, with some of his Soldiers, Spitamenes escaped hence to Bactria, where he was slain by his own Wife, and his head presented sent to the Conquerour. Here was it also that Alexander, being then Master of the Town, in a drunken fit slew his dear friend Clytus: who at the battle of Granicus had saved his life, by receiving a blow which was aimed at him. It was afterwards called Samarcand, the Seat-Royal of Tamerlane, by whom enriched with all the spoils and treasures he got in the Wars; there being brought hither from Damascus only (and by that one instance we may guess at the rest) 8000 Camels laden with the choicest movables. Still the chief Residence of the Chams of Zagathay, but far short of that magnificence which once it held. 4. Bichend, of no Antiquity, nor of such great name as the Regal Samarcand, but at this time of greater wealth: situate somewhat in the mid-land, but populous, and a well-traded Town. 5. Azara, memorable for being made the Rendezvous of that mighty Army, which Tamerlane raised against the Turks, consisting in the total of 1200000 fighting men when it was at the biggest. 6. Maranis, from which place the said Tamerlane, having received his aids from China, began his march.

These Tartars, called Zagathayans, by the name of their Country, are of a different government from that of the Great Cham of Cathay, though subject to him at the first, and have so been ever since the time of Zaicham or Buthi, the third great Cham; who gave it unto Zagathay, a younger Son, whence it had the name. To Zagathay succeeded Og, by some called Zain Cham; (the Father of Tamerlane) a peaceable and quiet Prince, who rather studied to preserve than enlarge his Empire. But Tamerlane being of a fierce and more warlike nature, made the first proof of his valour and good fortune against the Moscovite (for spoiling a City which had put it self under his protection) whom he overthrew with the slaughter of 25000 Foot, and 15000 of his Horse. Moved with this notable exploit, and the hopes of greater, Gino Cham, the Great Emperour of the Tartars gave him to Wife his only Daughter, and therewithall declared him his Heir apparent. Encouraged and enabled with this advancement, he first brake down the Wall of China, encountered with the King thereof, overcame him in battle, and imposed on him the sum of 300000 Crowns of yearly Tribute. Having left things quiet at his back, and taking with him a great part of the Forces of China, he advanced forwards against Bajazet, the fourth King of the Turks; of the greatness of whose growing Empire he began to be jealous. Passing along the left hand shores of the Caspian Sea, and so through Albania, and the rest of the Provinces which lay in his way (which he took and conquered as he went) he came at last into Asia Minor: where near the City of Sebastia, he encountered with Bajazet: vanquished him, slew 200000 of his men, and carried him away captive in an Iron Cage. Restoring those Princes dispossessed by Bajazet unto their Estates, and taking to himself all the Turkish Provinces in Anatolia; he bestowed a private visit on Constantinople: which seen, he marched towards Syria, subdued both that Province and the Kingdom of Egypt, then possessed by the Mamalukes; visited Hierusalem, and did honour to the Holy Sepulchre; returned by Babylon, and won it, and with it the whole Countries of Babylonia and Assyria. And taking Persia in his way impatronized himself that Kingdom also; and such parts of India, as either lay near Persia, or his own Dominions; now made the Sovereign Lord of all the Regions and Kingdoms in both Asia, excepting India; for which the rich Kingdom of Egypt, may be put in balance. Come home at last to Samarcand, he there died in peace. A Prince of strong body, but lovely lineaments, his eyes bearing in them such rays of Majesty, that ordinary men could scarce endure to look upon them. His hair long, contrary to the custom of the Mahometans, (for the most part shaved on their heads) for which he pretended a descent from Sampson. Perfect in the Arabian Learning, and a lover of all learned men, a hater of Idols, and Polytheism, and a great friend to the Christians. More fortunate in the conquering of so many Kingdoms, than in laying any sure foundation to maintain his conquest. For by holding his Seat-Royal in Samarcand, Cambaln, and others the chief Cities of Cathay, he gave the remote Provinces the opportunity of returning to their former Governours; and by parceling his Estates amongst his Children, and Kindred, this mighty foud which had so quickly overflowed both Asia's, returned in very little time within its own proper and original banks. Even Zagathay it self divided from the Empire of Cathay, had its King apart (hardly acknowledging the great Cham for the Lord in Chief) the most considerable of whom was that Saba, who in the new beginnings and unsettledness of the Sophian Empire, invaded Persia; but instead of recovering that Kingdom into the power of the Tartars, he lost some Provinces of his own: Hyrcania, Margiana, and some part of Bactria, being since subdued by Abbas the late Sultan. Nothing since memorable, that I meet with, in the affairs of this part of the Empire of Tartary.

4. TURCHESTAN is bounded on the East, with Zagathay specially so called; on the West, with the River Zoane, parting it from Deserta; on the North, with those deserts which Ptolemy blindeth under the name of Terra Incognita; and on the South, with the Caspian Sea. So called from the Turks; some of which people when they left their first Seats near the Fens of Meoths, settled in this Country, and here still continue.

The Country as desert and ill planted, as the rest of Tartary, not so much out of any defect in the soil it self, as in the humour of the people: who though originally Turks, yet do compose themselves unto the lives of the Scythian or Tartarian Nomades, neglecting tillage, and abiding in no place longer than in that place affords them pasturage for their Cattel: huge herds of which they keep as their greatest treasure, but more to cloath their backs with the skins, than to fill their bellies with the flesh.

Amongst the Rivers of most note we may reckon, 1. Rhyminus, mentioned by Ptolemy, which by the position of it in the 91 degree of Longitude, seems to be of this Tract. It riseth out of the Mountains called Monter Rhyminii, giving name to the River, or taking name from it. 2. Ardoek, not known by that name amongst the ancients, and whether known at all or not, I am not able to say. Shaping its course towards the North, and weary of so cold a Clime, and such barbarous people; after a long and swift course of a thousand miles, it hideth it self under the ground for five hundred more; but breaking out again, and finding little or no hope of a better fortune, loseth it self for ever in the great Lake of Kitay.

To look for Towns amongst a people which delight not in settled houses, were a labour lost: yet some I find ascribed unto them, the principal, but of no great note, 1. Calba, and 2. Ocerra. Then there is 3. Crustina, situate on or near the Lake of Kitay, never without the company of Russian and Tartarian Merchants: the Russians sayling to it by Land. By these two Nations more people, to maintain their Traffick, than by the Turcomans themselves, in whose Land it standeth.

These Turcomans are of the Posterity of some of those Turcs, who wanting Room, or otherwise oppressed with want, forsook their ancient dwelling near the Fens of Meoths, Meoths, and the Coasts of the Euxine Sea, to seek new flats, Anno 844. That their whole body settled here, and from hence made their conquest of Persia, as some very industrious men are of opinion, I by no means grant. For when the Sultan of Persia, having by the means of Tamerlane, and those Mercenary Turks whom he invited to his aid, obtained the Victory; and thought it fit for his affairs to detain them longer in his Service: it is said he shut up the River Araxes, to hinder them from returning to their habitations. The shutting up of which River, and fortifying against them all the passages and bridges of it, had not served his turn, if the Turks had come from this place, for then he must have manned against them the River Oxus, and such as lay betwixt them and him in the common road. Not is it probable, that the Turcomans dwelling in this Province, on the East side of the River Volga, would undertake the foarding of that dangerous and violent Water, and force themselves a way thorow Albania and Armenia, with no greater numbers, than 3000 men, which was the whole strength that they carried with them. So that it is not to be doubted, but that they came first into Persia out of Turcomania, and not out of Turchestan: and probable enough, that when they first left their own abode, and came into the Northwest shores of the Caspian Sea, they might there divide themselves. Some of which leaving that Sea on the left hand, and passing thorow the Sarmatia or Albanian Strights, made their way into Armenia, and those parts of Iberia, which from them are now called Turcomania. The residue keeping that Sea on the right hand, and crossing the Volga, where they found the passage most easie for them, settled themselves in these parts of Scythia which they found less peopled, now from them named Turchestan. Some of which hearing of the good success of their Country-men in the Conquest of Persia, might afterward joyn with them to assure that purchase. Governed since their first coming hither, by the Chiefs of their several Clans, whom they honour with the title of Chams; but all of them Tributaries and Vassals of the Cham of Zagathay.

5. That part of the Kingdom of Zagathay, which anciently passed under the name of TERRA INCOGNITA, and was accounted the Northern limit of Scythia intra Tmaum, hath on the South, Turchestan, and part of Zagathay, strictly and specially so called: extending Northwards to the Scythick or Frozen Ocean, and bounded on the West, with the River Ob.

The Inhabitants of this Northern Tract are now called by the name of Samoyeds; neither the people nor the Country known to the ancient Romans: and indeed neither of them worth the knowing. The men black-haired, naturally Beardless, and not to be discerned from women; but that the women wear a long Lock down to their ears. Clad from the head to the feet in Deer-skins, or Seal-skins, with the hairy side outwards; (nothing more wise in that than the other Tartars.) Their kind of life more rude than theirs, if more rude may be, ranging from place to place, without any propriety of house or dwellings; the leader of each Company their Priest, whom they call their Papa, who at every one of their Removes is to offer Sacrifice. Idolaters they are all, and most of them Witches; especially such as live most towards the East, and furthest off from the Moscovite, who many times destroy their Idols, and rob them of the skins of Bevers, black Foxes, and Sables, wherewith those Idols are set forth to the publick view: but bestow on them greater heats in a good Fire, into which they commonly use to cast them.

These Zagathayan Provinces, with those of Margiana, and Bactria, before described, made that part of Scythia, which anciently was called Scythia intra montem Imaum; though in the time of Ptolemy, when Margiana, Bactria, Sace, and Sogdiana, were reckoned of as Provinces of the Kingdom of Persia, this Scythia was restrained within narrower bounds, and comprehended only Turchestan and the Special Zagathay. Inhabited, besides the several Nations dwelling in the four Persian Provinces, by many fierce and savage Tribes, as the Alani, Alanssi, Sab-bent, and Massai, towards Terra Incognita; the Tedjages, and Astote, near the Mountain Imaus; the Jakarte on the banks of the River so called; and the Mologene, not far off the Zarate, and Sasohe, near the Mountains Alani; the Galatophagi, or Milk-eaters, more towards the East; the Taperai, and the Syebi, by the hills so named: and many others not material to be here remembered. All now united under the general name of Tartars, by whom first subdued.

And now we are at last come to Scythia, truly so named; Sarmatia Europea and Asiatia being called so only by way of participation and resemblance; because the Inhabitants thereof had so much in them of the manners and conditions of these natural Scythians. Here therefore we intend to speak something of them, their Name, Antiquity, Dispositions, Customs, and the most memorable Actions relating to them, as far as we can go by the light of story.

First, for the name, the Grecian Fables have derived it from one Scythos, the Son of Hercules, begotten by him on a Monster, half Woman, half Viper. The Grammarians are  $\epsilon\kappa\upsilon\sigma\iota\delta\varsigma$ , signifying to be fierce and angry; whence it is said of the Jewish Puritans, who fasted to be seen of men,  $\epsilon\kappa\upsilon\sigma\iota\delta\omega\iota\ \alpha\pi\alpha\iota\sigma\iota\varsigma$ , that they looked with a frow, severe, and a disfigured Countenance. Gerosius Becanus doth derive it rather from the Dutch word Schieten, signifying to shoot: agreeable enough to the custom and exercise of the Scythians, who are observed by Herodotus, Pliny, Lucian, and other of the ancient Writers, to be very good Archers. But that the word Schieten signifieth the same in the ancient Scythick; or that the High-Dutch was originally the Tongue of the Scythians, will not so easily appear.

Letting that pass therefore as a matter not to be defined, let us look on the Antiquity of these Scythian Nations: and we shall find it to be great, if not greatest of all. Scytharum gens semper antiquissima. That the Scythians were of all others, the most ancient people, was received for an Oracle, in the elder ages of the world: and so resolved by way of Verdict, when the great Controversie touching the Antiquity of those Nations, was to be determined, betwixt the Egyptian and the Scythian, who contended for it. And this hath passed with such a general approbation, that it is not now to be disputed. In which regard I am so far of the judgment of Becanus in that particular, as to conceive that the Countries lying on the North of the Mount Caucasus (on which the Ark is thought most probably to have rested) were peopled by the Sons of Noah before they travelled towards the West, or set themselves on building the Tower of Babel. We had else no doubt heard somewhat amongst the Antiquaries, of the settling of some of those Adventurers in these Northern Regions; when giving off that enterprise, and falling upon new Plantations, they either went themselves, or sent forth their Colonies into all places of the world. But of any such Plantations, ne gry quidem, not one word say they. Nor can it probably be supposed; that Zoroaster, the King of Bactria, could have raised 400000 fighting men out of that one Province (though some of the adjoining Provinces were took into the reckoning in those early days, in which he did encounter Nimrod the great Affyrian; had the Babrians, and the rest of these Scythian Nations, been but a Casting as it were of some second swarm, and not coeval with the rest. But besides these presumptions we have other proofs: viz. An old and constant tradition on this side the Mountains, that the greatest Vineyard of Margiana was of Noah's plantings; and 2 the affirmation of Porcius Cato, (though one of the Writers of Frier Amnius) in Scythia Saga renatum mortale genus, that mankind was repaired in these parts of Scythia, so called from Sabatinus Saga, an Armenian King, whose Dominions did extend thus far. So that I look upon it as a matter of strong presumption, if not demonstrably concludent, that these people were of the first Plantation which was made after the Flood; before the rest of the world was peopled by the Confusion of Languages: Scythiarum gens semper antiquissima, could not else hold good.

As for their dispositions, and natural inclinations, they are said by Trogus, or his Epitomator Justine, to be Gens laboribus & bellis aspera, "A Nation patient of labours and fierce in War; of bodily strength immense and valiant; yet so much Masters of their affections, that they made no further use of their greatest victories than the augmentation of their fame. Theft they esteemed the greatest crime, and that they punished so severely, that their flocks and herds might and did safely wander from one place to another, without fear of stealing. In them they placed their greatest wealth, feeding themselves with the Milk thereof, and making their Rayment of the Skin. Silver and Gold they contemned as much as it was coveted by others; there being no desire of Riches where there was no use. Menus, and Tum, those common Barretours, and authors of debate amongst other men, were not known amongst them; and therefore did not care for tillage, or made any inclosures, nor troubled themselves with the care of building. But putting their Wives and Children upon Wains, or Waggon, covered with Hides against the weather, they removed from one place to another, no longer staying upon one than they found grass and herbage to sustain their Cattel. So just in all their actions that they needed not the restraint of Laws; and had attained to such an eminent degree of humane perfection, as not to covet. In a word, that moderation which the Greeks endeavoured to attain unto by the help of Learning and Philosophy, was to these so natural, that the ignorance of Vice did as much contribute to their Welfare, as the knowledge of Vertue. Such are the ancient Scythians affirmed to be. And being such, it was a wonder that the great Monarchs of the world, who had wealth at will, should make war upon them; amongst whom there was nothing to invite an Army, or reward a Conquerour. Yet either on desire of glory, or to add unto the former multitudes over whom he reigned, they were first invaded by Cyrus the great Persian Monarch: who quarrelling with Tomyris Queen of the Masagetes, a warlike Nation, inhabiting on both sides of the River Oxus, discomfited her Army, and slew her Son Spargapises, who commanded it. In revenge whereof, the Queen having in a second battle obtained the Victory, and took Cyrus prisoner, is said to have cut off his head, and cast it into a bowl of blood, with this scornful taunt, Satis se sanguine quem sitiisti. Now drink thy fill of blood which thou hast so thirsted. But others tell us otherwise of the success of this fight. By whom it is reported that the Horse of Cyrus was disordered on the sight of some Elephants, which came from India to her aid; and himself dangerously wounded, the Scythians had won the victory but for the coming in of Amorges King of the Sacans, (who of a conquered enemy was become his Confederate;) by whom he was rescued, and by the 20000 fresh men which he brought with him, obtained the honour of the day, though long he lived not to enjoy it, dying not long after of the wounds he had received. With Alexander they are said to begin the war, as loath to be behind hand with him; arming themselves upon the building of Alexandria ultima, so near their borders, which they conceived rather intended for a curb to hold them down, than for a bridge to keep them in. But being repulsed, and wise enough to suffer what they could not hinder, they sued for peace, and had it granted; Alexander being called away by the revolt of the Babrians, a matter of more consequence than these Scythian brabbles. With Alexander's Successors they had nothing to do, nor with the Persian Kings of the Parthian Race, the Parthians being their Allies, and of Scythian breed. And for the Romans, it is well observed by the Historian, Romanorum arma audire magis quam sentire, that they had heard much of their valour, but never felt it. Remaining undisturbed in their honest poverty, till the Tartars, an obscure and beggerly people brake out of their Prispen, and carried out the whole World before them.

As for their Kings, I find some of their names laid down, but without any note of time in which their reigns might be supposed to begin or end. Nor can I think that the Kings occurring in that Catalogue, did either reign in the same place, or over the same Nations; or that they succeeded one another. Howsoever we will take their names as they come before us, in this list of

The Kings of Scythia.

- 1 Scythes.
- 2 Napis.
- 3 Pbitra.
- 4 Sagillus.
- 5 Targitana.
- 6 Plinius.
- 7 Scholypesthus.
- 8 Panaxagora.
- 9 Tanais.
- 10 Indathysfus.
- 11 Saulius.
- 12 Spargapises.
- 13 Tomyris.
- 14 Aripethes.
- 15 Seles.
- 16 Olimasdes.
- 17 Lanthinus, the last of all those Scythian Kings who are conceived to have the Government of these warlike Nations. But for my part I dare not say, that ever any one King did command the whole people generally; each Tribu or Nation having their particular Kings, as in other places not reduced into form and order. And therefore for those Kings, if such Kings there were (as for some of them I durst venture to swear the contrary) they must be such as in their several Countries were of greatest fame, most taken notice of in the world, or employed in the conduct of their joyned and united forces; and so conceived to be the Kings of the whole Scythian Nation: as Cassibelane, King of the Trimbantes, and perhaps not that, is by some Writers said to be the King of the Britains; because he had the conduct of their forces against Julius Caesar.

4. CATHAY.

CATHAY is bounded on the West, with Zagathay, from which parted by the Mountain Imau; on the East, with the Oriental Sea, and some part of China;

China; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; and on the South, with part of India. So called from the proper or Special Cathay, the principal Province of the whole, the other parts into which it is commonly divided being 2 Altay, the Countries of the Eastern Tartars.

1. CATHAY, more properly and specially so called, is bounded on the East, with China; on the West, with the Mountain Imau, by which parted from Zagathay; on the North, with Altay; and on the South, with India extra Gangem: So called from the Chata, an old Scythian people, who having conquered the Seres, and the rest of the neighbouring Nations, gave their own name unto the whole, according to the Custom of victorious people.

This Country is exceeding long, if it be measured by the Scale, and Rules laid down by Polony, who placeth Auxacia, the most Western Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the Longitude of 144 degrees, and Sera the Metropolis and most Eastern City of Serica in the Longitude of 177 degrees and 15 Minutes; as on the other side he placeth Sera the most Southern Town of Scythia extra montem Imaum, in the Latitude of 35 degrees, and 20 minutes, and Danna the most Northern Town of Serica in the Latitude of 51 degrees, and 40 minutes. By which account, supposing these four Towns to be placed in the very extremities and out-parts of this Country, it must extend from North to South 960 miles and somewhat upwards, and about 1500 miles from East to West in the length thereof, which as it sheweth the dimensions and extent of it to be very great, so it may probably infer that the Country is not in all places of the like fertility; the West parts of it being very mountainous and barren, and consequently not very fruitful, as being overgrown in most places with the spurs and branches of Imau. But in those parts thereof which lie towards the East, it is said to be abounding in Wheat, Rice, Wooll, Hemp, Silk, and Musk; Great store of that medicinal Root called Rhubarb, or Rha-Barbarum, to difference it from the Rha-Pontick, growing on the banks of Volga. They have also very great Herds of Camelets, of whose hair they make those stuffs which are hence called Camelets, or Chamlets; and such an infinite breed of Horses, as besides those which they preserve for their own use, they furnish the whole Realm of China with such multitudes of them, that at one time there were sent no fewer than 80000 for a Present to the King of that Realm by the Princes of these Western Tartars, as the Chinois call them; of which he that writ the Book called Bellum Tartaricum, affirmeth himself to have been an eye-witness, and to his credit I refer it, that the great Cham feedeth yearly 10000 white Mares, which he keeps for their Milk. Some of their Rivers are reported also yield Golden Sands; But whether it be so or not, certain it is, that it is so well provided of all things both for necessary use, and the pleasures of life, that it is thought to be inferior to few Countries of Europe. The Air indeed not so temperate, as in many places, the Summer-times extremely hot, and in Winter miserably cold: the thunders and lightnings being here so terrible, that in Summer many men die for fear, when they hear it. The winds no less violent than the thunder, do sometimes tear up trees by the roots, and beat men from their horses; but seldom bring with them any storm of rain: the greatest showers which they have, hardly wetting the ground.

The people are generally very warlike, strong of body, quick of action, fearless of the greatest dangers, patient both of want and labour: of mean stature, little eyes, sharp sight, and thin beards. Industrious they are in several Manufactures; of a good wit for dispatch of business: more honourable than the rest of the Tartars, as loving to dress themselves gorgeously, to fare sumptuously (if there be occasion) to live in handsome houses, and to frequent the most populous and best-traded Cities: All which civilities or effeminacies, call them which you will, together with the greatest part of their Arts and Manufactures, they first learned of the Chinese, during the time that the Chinois lived as Subjects under the great Cham, and the Nations had continual intercourse with one another. They account not any for a Wife till she bear them Children, nor till then do meddle with their Dowries; but repudiate them at a certain time, if they find them barren. They reverence their Cham, or Emperour, even to Adoration; not suffering any Stranger to come in his presence, except he be first purged: if any otherwise presume, it is present death.

The Religion publicly allowed and countenanced, is that of Mahomet; but so that they retain the Pentateuch of Moses, and observe many things therein commanded. It was much laboured by Pope Innocent, and King Lewis of France, that they should receive the Christian Faith; and they found some inclinations in the People, and chief Princes to it. But finding by the Mahometan Agents, who then laboured to bring them to their Superstition, that Mahomet allowed of many Wives, and other things more agreeable to their fleshly lusts, they conformed to that; Yet so, that there are many Idolaters in Cathay it self (I mean Cathay strictly so called) and some Christians also; the state of whose affairs we have shewn before.

Chief Rivers of the whole. 1 Polyanga, which falling into the Eastern Ocean is navigable up to the City of Cambalu, to which it is a means of conveying great store of Merchandise. 2 Caramoram, so broad and deep that no Bridge can be made over it. 3 Quiam, one of the greatest in the world; in length about an hundred days journey; for breadth, in most places six miles, in many eight, and in some ten. 4 Quianun, about half a mile over, and well stored with fish: of all which we shall speak more fully when we come to China. Here are also very many Lakes, both large, and useful, as 1 the Lake of Caniels, in which are said to be so many Pearls as would make them of no value, if every man might have leave to fish for them; which is therefore interdicted (without special licence) upon pain of death. 2 The Lake of Carami, about an hundred miles in circuit, and so full of fish, as might suffice for all the Country, did they love to eat of it. The Mountains we shall climb over in their several places.

Principal Cities of the whole at this present time, under the notion of Cathay, are 1 Cambalu, supposed to be the Issodon Serica of the Ancients, and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made the notable resistance unto Gingis the first King of the Tartars, in his first attempts upon this Country, of which more anon. Made afterwards, in regard of the pleasantness of the situation, and extreme fertility of the soil, the chief Seat of his Empire; and being exceedingly enlarged and beautified had the name of Cambalu, that is to say, the Seat or City of the Sham, in the same sense as the chief City of China had the name of Pekin, signifying in that Language the Court or City of the King. Built of Freestone, and situate in the midst of the Country as the heart and center to the rest. It is seated on the River Polyanga, honoured with the Great Cham's residences, and enriched with a mighty confluence of Merchants of all sorts. Besides other Merchandises there are every year 10000 Carts loaded with Silk sent thither from China. Affirmed to be in compass 28 miles besides the Suburbs, in which, besides other Inhabitants of all sorts, are said to be 5000 Astrologers or rather Fortune-tellers. 2 Xaindu the Royal Palace of the Emperour, of a foursquare figure, every side extending eight miles in length: within this Quadrant is another, whose sides are six miles long, and within that another of four miles square, which is the Palace itself; between those several Walls are Walks, Gardens, Orchards, Fish-ponds, places for all manner of exercise, and Parks, Forests, and Chafes for all manner of Game. 3 Carain, where the women are said to guild their Teeth. 4 Gonza, a fair City and a great, adorned with many Idol Monasteries. 5 Carainfu, near which there groweth an herb called Chiny-Cathay, of admirable effect against many Diseases; and so esteemed of by the Natives, that they value an ounce of this at a sack of Rhubarb. 6 Segni, the residence of a Nestorian Bishop.

Having thus took as good a view of the present face of this Country, as the time affords us, we will next look upon it in those integral parts, of which it specially consisteth comprehending (as before was intimated) those two long and ample Provinces, which the Ancients called, 1 Serica, and 2 Scythia extra montem Imaum, according to those Bounds and Characters which are given us of them.

1. SERICA, hath on the East, some part of China, on the South, India extra Gangem, and some part of the Country then inhabited by the ancient Sina; on the North, Altay, on the West, Scythia beyond the Mountains of Imaum. In which I follow not the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, who for want of that knowledge in these remote Countries which these latter Ages have afforded, is fain to shut it up on the North and East with a Terra Incognita. At the present it is called CATHAY, and that most probably from the Chate, a Scythian People, who subduing the old Inhabitants, became Masters of it.

But for the name of Serica, it was derived originally from Sera the chief City of it; whence the people had the name of Seres, very industrious in their times, and amongst other things in the making of Silky (made of a fine wooll growing on their leaves of Trees) from hence named Serica. Of great esteem amongst the Romans, as is said by Pliny, Tam multiplici opere, tam longinquo orbe petitur, ut in publico matrona transluceat; being far fetched and dear bought, they were good for Ladies. Nor were they industrious only, but chaste and temperate. The names of Thieves and Whores were not known amongst them. They eat not any unclean flesh, nor used the company of their Wives either after Conception, or during their Menstrual Purgations. So moderate of diet, that they lived commonly to the age of 200 years; the quietness and mildness of their disposition helping much thereto. Of yellow hair, watcher or Sea-green eyes, and good composure. Men of few words, but very just in all which they said or did. Governed by a Common Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the use of the State.

If you will take the Characters both of the Country and People from Ammianus Marcellinus, he will give it thus. "First of the Country, that it is plentiful and large, circled about with a chain of Mountains, the two famous Rivers Oechardes, and Bambis with a still and slow stream running thorow the middle of the inclosed Plain, spaciouly stretched out to the sides of the precipices: In one place large and open, in another lying flat and low with an easie descent, in which regard they have abundance of Corn, store of Cattel, and plenty of Orchards. The temperature of the Air pleasant and wholesome, the constitution of the weather clear and pure, the blowing of gentle winds most commodious, and the Woods with a pritty glimmering of light, both within and under them: from whence the people with much sprinkling of water, softening that which the Trees bring forth like a kind of Fleece, kemb a most fine and tender matter, which they spin into Silky, serving in former times for the Nobility and Gentry, now become common to those also of inferior rank. Then for the People, he saith, that they are a frugal Nation, lovers of quiet, not troublesome unto their Neighbours, without the use of Arms, and the knowledge of battels, declining the company of Strangers, and so far from covetousness, or curiosities, that when any Merchants come unto them to buy their Silky, without much beating of the price, they let them have such things as are bred amongst them, without looking after the Commodities of other Countries. So he. And if he did over act the Panegyrist (as I see no reason why he should) never were people happier in the place of their dwelling, nor Country happier in its people.

Chief Mountains of it (and Mountains they had very many) were 1 the Montes Casii, and 2 Auzacii towards the East. 3 The Annihe, environing a great part of the Country. 4 The Asmarai, 5 and those called Serici, near the City Sera. 6 Tagurus. 7 Ennodorus, and 8 Ostorocorus: but all of them probably the spurs and branches of the great Mountain Imaum; But by what names now called it is hard to say; and no less hard to say how to accommodate the names of the Rivers spoken of before, to those which we find mentioned in the ancient Writers; the principal of which (all flowing out of these great Mountains) are, 1 Oechardes, by Pliny called Cambis, rising out of the Montes Auzacii; 2 Pitaras, issuing out of the Asmiri. 3 Bambisus, whose Fountain is in the Montes Casii. And 4 Lanor.

Towns of chief note amongst them, 1 Sera, which gave the name of Serica, and Seres, to the Province and People. 2 Ostorocora, near the Hills so called; whence it had the name. 3 Issodon, for distinction sake called Issodon Serica, to difference it from another of that name in Scythia, called Issodon Scythica; the chief City of the Issedones, gens magna, one of the greatest Nations in all the Country, as is said by Ptolomy; and like enough to be that City of the Cathayans, which made that notable resistance unto Cingis (which before I spake of) in his first attempts upon this Country. 4 Orosana, 5 Drosache, 6 Daxata, of which little memorable. Some other Cities there were in it (about Nine more being named by Ptolomy) of which we find nothing but the names, and therefore I shall pass them over without further mention.

But here it is observed, 1 That Ptolomy gives unto this Country, and to some of the Towns or Cities of it, such a Northernly Latitude (ranging the furthest parts thereof in the same Parallel with the Isle of Thyle) as cannot possibly agree with that fertility of soyl, and delightful temper of the Air, which is given to Serica. 2 That he tells us of a Promontory called Taby, situate in extrema Terra, in the extremities of the Country between North and East, which I cannot but extremely wonder at, considering that he shuts up this Country on the East and North with a Terra Incognita, and extends not any part thereof towards the Sea, rendering it thereby incapable of any such Promontory. 3 That some of our late Writers, both in their Table and their Maps, have placed the Regal City of Cambalu so far towards the North, as very ill agreeth with that pleasantness and sweetness of situation, which induced the great Chams to make choice thereof for the Seat Royal of their Empire. But as we may easily pardon these mistakes of Ptolomy in places so far distant from him, and then but little known to the Greeks and Romans; so we may as easily pardon these of the later times, who grounding on the authority of so eminent an Author, have in some things been misguided by him: it hapning very many times (which I find somewhere mentioned on the like occasion) Magnus error, magnorum virorum auctoritate, transmissos; that great errors are often entertained upon the credit of their Authors.

The old Inhabitants hereof, in those parts which lay next the Scythians, are said to have been Anthropophagi, or Man-eaters, most probably a Scythian Nation, that Custom being so abhorrent from the mildness of the Serican temper. Or else, we must correct the Copies of Ptolomy, by the History of Ammianus Marcellinus, who instead of Anthropophagi, placeth the Alitrophagi in the self same Tract. The other Nations not distained with the like reproaches, are the Sizyges, and Anabi, not far off the Auzacian Mountains; the Piale near the River Oechardes; the Gerani, and Rhabbanai, their nearest neighbours; the Throani dwelling towards the East, the Bate and Ostorocora more towards the South. These with the residue, governed by a Common-Council of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the service of the Common-wealth, as was said before. And more than this we hear not of them in the way of Story; the Natives never going abroad with their wares, and having little speech with Strangers, when they come amongst them. Being vanquished by the Chate, a Scythian Nation, from whom it is like that it took they name of CATHAY (for in this we go but by conjecture) they continued under Kings of their own, till subdued by the Tartars, against whom they made such stout resistance, being besieged by Cingis in their principal City, that when they wanted stones to cast out of their Engines, they supplied that want with molten Silver; and held it out so long, that Cingis finding Victuals to grow short in his Camp, commanded that every tenth man should be eaten. But at the last being undermined, the Town was taken, the Citizens massacred, and their King or Emperour (as some call him) slain: after whose death, and not before, Cingis assumed the Title of the Cham, or Emperour. The residue of their Story we shall have hereafter.

SCYTHIA EXTRA IMAUM was bounded on the East, with Serica; on the West, with Imaum; on the South, with India extra Gangem; and on the North, with the Countries comprehended in the name of Altay, which Ptolomy hath given us in the notion of the Terra Incognita. Called Scythia, because planted by a brood of the Scythians. Extra Imaum was put to it, to difference it from that part of Scythia which lay on the West side of that Mountain, nearest unto the Greeks and Romans. But now the Mountain, and the Country, have the name of Altay.

To look upon it as it standeth by the name of Scythia extra Imaum, we find not any thing delivered of the Rivers or Mountains of it, but what is common unto them with the neighbouring Nations; the Mountains called Auzacii, and Casii, and Ennodorus, being common unto this with Serica; as Imaum jointly to both the Scythians, which it divided anciently the one from the other: though now this last be reckoned to belong to Cathay alone, because the Tartars on both sides of it profess themselves subject to that Cham. This the most famous Mountain in the East of Asia, beginning at the shores of the Seybick or Frozen Ocean, and extending thence directly Southwards unto Cape Comari, a Promontory of the Southern or Indian Seas. By which account it divideth the Greater Asia into East and West, as Taurus doth into

North and South, which Mountain it crosseth in right Angles, about the Longitude of 140. as before was said. That part hereof which lyeth on the South of Imaum, was by the Ancients called Buigo; and by the moderns is named Gates: of which we shall speak more when we come to India. That on the North of Taurus, called Imaum properly, was anciently most memorable for dividing the vast Countries of the Scythians, into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum; a division much observed by the old Geographers: now chiefly memorable for being the Sepulchre of some of the Chams of Tartary; most generally known by the name of Altay, but by some called Belgian.

Chief Towns hereof were 1 Auzacia, at the foot of the hills so named. 2 Chaurana, the Chief City of the Chauranei. 3 Sata. 4 Issodon Scythica, so called to difference it from the other of that name in Serica. These with the rest, and all the Country, as far as it was known in the days of Ptolomy, inhabited by the Abii, Hippophagi, or horse-eaters, a diet still used by the Tartars or modern Scythians. 2 The Issedones, who are said by Pomponius Mela to make carousing cups of their Fathers heads, first trimmed and gilded. 3 The Caurandi, and 4 the Chate, who being (as it seemeth) the most potent Nation, caused all the rest to be called by the name of Cathay, communicating that name also to be conquered Seres. Besides the possessions of which Tribes, there was also the Regions of Abassai, Cnfai, and Anzuat; these last so called from the Mountains upon which they stand. More than this we have not to say of this Country by the name of Scythia, there being nothing memorable of it in the course of Story, or worth the observation in the way of Chorography.

ALTAY is bounded on the South, with Cathay, specially so called, and part of China; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; on the West, with the great Mountain Imaum; and on the East, with the Nations or Countries of the Eastern Tartars. So called from its neighbourhood to that mighty Mountain, which the Tartars in their Language call by the name of Altay.

The Country utterly unknown to the ancient Writers, and not much canvassed or travelled by our modern Pens. In which respect I shall now trouble my self no further, than by giving a brief touch on the several parts of it. Of which the most that can be said, will be but little for the information of the judicious Readers; who are not to be bettered by the names of places, if there be not something in them of further use. Now for these Provinces the principal of them are, 1 Cascar, 2 Chefmut, 3 Lop, 4 Camul, 5 Tainfu, 6 Caindu, 7 Carazan, 8 Caradandan, 9 Erginul, 10 Tanguth.

1. CASCAR, bordering on the North-West of China, a Mahometan Country, but admitting of some Christians also; the largest Kingdom in all Altay, except Tanguth only, and furnished with many Towns or Cities both of Trade and Note, the principal whereof are 1 Eliachan, the Royal City of this Country, and Mart famous for concourse of Merchants; and variety of Merchandises. 2 Cialie, the chief Town of a Province or Kingdom so named, but subject to the King of Cascar, who in the year 1603, was called Mahomet Cham, a Prince of credit in those parts, but neither equal in Port or Power to the King of Tanguth. The people generally rude and barbarous, in so much that some parts here of both Sexes do indulge themselves this mutual privilege, that if the Husband or the Wife be absent above twenty days, the other party is at liberty to marry again.

2. CHESEMUR, the Inhabitants whereof are generally both Idolaters and Inchanters, causing the dumb Idols to speak, the winds to rise, and the Sun to be dark.

darkened. For studying which Black Arts (if they come to them by study) they have many Monasteries, in which their Hermites or Monesticks live a strict kind of life, and are very abtemperous.

3. LOP, memorable for a great Desert of thirty days journey; so true a Desart, that whosoever doth not mean to be starved, must carry all his victuals with him. Dangerous to Travellers, if not before-hand made acquainted with their danger: the evil Spirits using to call men by their names, and make them go astray from their company, where they perish with famine, or are devoured with wild beasts. The chief Town hereof called Lop, giving name to both.

4. CAMUL, an Idolatrous Country, the people whereof account it a great honour to them to have their Wives and Sisters at the pleasure of such as they entertain. From which brutish custom when restrained by Mango Cham, they petitioned him at three years end to be restored again to their former liberty; protesting they could never thrive, since they left that custom. Which desire of theirs was at last granted, and is still in use.

5. TAINFU, more civil than the rest, the people being very industrious, and good Artificers; making the most part of the Arms which are used by the Cham; and some also which they sell to Merchants.

6. CANDU, with a Town in it of the same name, of great resort by Merchants (such as we commonly call petit Chapmen) for Womens Veils here made, with very great Art, of the Barks of Trees. And it is well that they have Veils to hide their shamefulness, the Women of this Tract being prostituted unto every Traveller.

7. CARAZAN, inhabited by a barbarous and savage people, who in the day time live in Dens for fear of Serpents, with which (and some of them so paces long, and ten spans in thickness) they are much infested, and in the night go forth to prey upon Wolves and Lions. They have an use that when any stranger cometh into their houses, of an handsome shape, to kill him in the night: not out of desire of spoil, or to eat his body; but that the soul of such a comely body might remain amongst them.

8. CARDANDAN, near Carazan, and as savage as that. The people whereof draw black lines on their bodies, which they count for the greatest Ornament. In case of sickness they send not to the Physician but the next Incubators, who taking Counsel of the Devil, apply some remedy; or if they think the man past cure they tell him that his offences are grown too great to admit of help, and so put him off.

9. ERGIMUL, possessed by an Idolatrous people, but mixed with some Mahometans, and Nestorian Christians. In which Country they have certain Bulls as big as Elephants, with Mains of fine white hair, like silk, some of which they tame; and betwixt them and their Kine engender a Race of strong and laborious beasts, not inferior in that kind to Oxen. Here is also found a beast of an exquisite shape, but not bigger than a Goat, which at every Full Moon hath a swelling under the belly; which being cut off by the Hunters, and dried in the Sun, proveth to be the best Musk in the World.

10. TANGUTH, the greatest and most potent of all the rest, bordering on the North of Cathay, specially so called, and (like to that) inhabited by an industrious and laborious people, amongst whom the Art of Printing is said to have been extant a thousand years. Blessed heretofore with a great increase of Christianity; but now the Gentiles or Idolaters make the greatest part, with some

Mahometans amongst them. And for the serving of those Idols, they have not only many large and beautiful Temples, built in the manner of Christian Churches, and capable of 4 or 5000 persons: but also many fair Monasteries for the use of their Monks and Recluses. They are possessed of many Towns, most of them well fortified, and planted with good store of Artillery. The chief of which, 1. Sachian, bordering on the Desert of Lop, inhabited by some of all three Religions; in which it is affirmed that they first used the Art of Printing. 2. Campion, the Metropolis, or Mother City of this Country; where the Christians in the time of Paulus Venetus, had three fair Churches: now over-numbered by the Gentiles, who have here many Monasteries for the use of their Idols, and many Religious persons dedicated to their service only. Who though they live more honestly than the rest of their Order, and hold it an impiety to tempt a woman to the act of Lust; yet if the woman make the offer, they hold it no small sin to refuse her curtesie. 3. Sainta, a Town in the middle way betwixt Campion and Succur, as being five days journey from the one, and six days journey from the other; by which we may conjecture at the long extent of this Kings Dominions. 4. Succur, situate amongst Mountains clothed with Rhubarb, from whence conveyed by Merchants over all the world; but so neglected by the Natives, that did not the foreign Merchant bring it into request, they would scorn to gather it. This once a Kingdom of it self, made subject afterwards with Tanguth, to the Cham of Cathay, or the great Cham of Tartary. But the fury of this Tartarian tempest, being overblown, the Kings of Tanguth did not only recover their ancient Royalty; but by degrees possessed themselves of the most part of the rest of Altay, and perhaps part of Cathay also, being looked on at the present as the greatest and most puissant Prince betwixt the Mountains of Imam and the Eastern Tartars, to the description of whose Countries we do next proceed.

The Countries of the Eastern Tartars are bounded on the West, with Altay; on the East, with the Oriental Ocean; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; and on the South, with China; so called from their Eastern situation, in regard of those of Cathay and Altay, which by the Chinese are called commonly the Western Tartars.

The Country not very fruitful, because ill cultivated, so that the chief Commodities which they send abroad, are, the Root called Ginseng, so much esteemed amongst the Chinese, and all sorts of precious skins, as those of Castor, Marten, and Zibellins; and also Horse-hair, of which the Chinese make their Nets, and the men (though madly) use it in tying up their hair, as the handiwork drest they can appear in. With these Commodities they traffique into Leatong, a Province of the Northeast of China (from which they are parted only by an Arm of the Sea) where commonly they make good Markets, their Merchandise being thence dispersed into all parts of that Kingdom. The people are generally of broad Faces, their colour White, but their Nose is not so flat, nor their Eyes so little as the Chinese are, sparing of speech, and somewhat pensive, but neither so unfociable as their neighbours of China, or so barbarous and rude as the Tartars of Europe. They shave both the head and the beard, reserving only the Mustachoes, which they extend to a great length, and in the hinder part of their head they leave a Tuft, which being curiously woven and plated, they let hang down carelessly below their shoulders; they have a round and low Cap, which is always garnished round with some precious skin three fingers broad, of Castor or Zibellins, and serveth to defend their Temples, Ears, and Fore-heads from Colds, and other Tempests. That which appears appears above the skin being covered over either with cuffs of red Silk, or else with black and purple Horse-hair, which they dye and drest most curiously, so as their apparences being handfomly joyned together makes the Cap both commodious and handfome. Their Garments are long Robes falling down to the very foot, but their Sleeves are not so long and large as the Chinese use, but rather such as are used in Poland and Hungary, only with this difference, that they fashion the extremity of the sleeve ever like a Horse's Hoof. At their girdle there hangs on either side two Handkerchiefs to wipe their face and hands, besides there hangs a Knife for all necessary uses; with two Purses, in which they carry Tobacco, or such like commodities. On their left side they hang their Scymiters, but so as the Point goeth before, and the Handle behind; and therefore when they fight they draw it out with the right hand behind them without holding the Scabbard with the other. They seldom wear shoes, and use no Spurs to their boots, which they make either of Silk or of Horse-skin very neatly drest; but they often use fair Pattens, which they make three fingers high. In riding they use Stirrups, but their Saddles are both lower and broader than ours. In matters of war they are very nimble, never carrying any baggage with them, nor taking care for provision, but filling themselves with what they find; yet commonly they eat flesh, though half washed or half boyled: and if they find none, they fall upon their Horses and Camels. The earth covered with their Horse-cloth is their bed, for they care not for houses and chambers; but if they be forced to dwell in houses, their horses must lodge with them, and they must have many holes beaten in the walls to let in the air; but yet their Tents are most beautiful, which they fix and remove with such Art and dexterity, as they never retard the speedy march of an Army.

They inhabit amongst many other Provinces, those of Sumabania, Tanin, Gupi, Ninlan, and Niuiche; of which I am able to say nothing in the way of Chorography, or of the four first in way of History; only I find that those of Ninlan were aiding to the King of Niuiche, in the Conquest of China: and of the Gupi it is written, that they are so called, by reason they make their Coats of defence or Breast-plates of Fishes skins, which grow (as is affirmed) in a manner impregnable. None of which Nations count themselves originally of Tartarian Race. Yet either terrified by the noise of their great successes, or willing to partake of some part of their fortunes, they not only aided them in their Wars on that side of Imam, but were content to take their very name upon them. Never invaded nor subdued till the time of Hombu King of China, who having driven the Western Tartars, then Lording it over that Kingdom, from one part of it to another, compelled them finally to betake themselves unto those parts and Provinces of the Eastern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom or Province of Niuiche, where the War followed after them also, till by little and little they became more quiet; compelled to beg their Peace of the Conquering Enemy; divided into seven Hords or Tribes, and governed for a long time by their several Chiefs, they became at last united into one Kingdom called the Kindom of Niuiche, Anno 1550. or thereabout. Oppressed by the Presidis of Leatong, in the way of their Trade, and suffering amongst many other indignities the death of their King, whom those Presidis had entrapped and murdered, they make complaint of these outrages to the King of China; and finding no remedy at his hands, put themselves into Arms, invade the Province of Leatong, take the City of Leatong: and having besieged the King himself in the Royal or Imperial City of Peking, they returned home (finding no hope of taking it at that time) with the spoil and plunder of all those parts through which they marched. The War thus first begun was managed for many years with great loss on both sides, the Tartars having got nothing by it, but the Eastern parts of the Province of Leatong, and the honour of having shewed themselves twice more at the Walls of Peking, till in the year 1624, being invited into China by Usanguins to support the then falling fortune of the Royal Family, they husbanded the opportunity so well, as to make themselves the absolute Masters of that mighty Kingdom. The whole story and success of this notable action, we shall sum up in brief when we come to China. In the meantime take here the Catalogue of

THE KINGS OF NIUCHE.

- 1550 1. N. N. advanced unto this Kingdom after the reducing of the several Hordes into one main body, and Father of the King succeeding, who was slain at last by the treachery of the Presidis of Leatong, as before was said.
- 1616 2. Theienmingu, who to revenge his Fathers death, invaded China, took the City of Leatong, braved the great Emperour at the Walls of the Regal City, and having enriched himself with the spoils of the Country returned home again.
- 1627 3. Theienzungu, the Son of Theienmingu, followed the War with the same fortune as his Father did, both of them growing greater in Renown and Riches than in Power and Patrimony.
- 1636 4. Zungu, the Son of Theienzungu, secretly brought up amongst the Chinese, by means whereof he grew not only acquainted with the conditions of that people but their weaknesses also; and consequently was the better prepared to lay the foundation of that greatness to which the Tartars have attained by the Conquest of it. Called into China by Usanguins, as before is said, he possessed himself of the City of Peking; and though he died as soon as he was Master of that City only: yet left he such instructions to his Brothers, and the rest of his Council, that very easily and speedily they possessed themselves of all the Kingdom.
- 1644 5. Xanbini, the Son of the former, of the age of nine years only at the death of his Father, the management of his affairs both for War and Peace being committed to his Uncles, but chiefly unto Amavangus the eldest of them, by whom so prudently conducted, that within the space of four years he was quietly settled in that Throne, all opposition and pretenders to the Royal succession, being beaten down, of which more hereafter.

5. TARTARIA ANTIQUA.

TARTARIA ANTIQUA hath on the South, Altay, and the Countries of the Eastern Tartars; on the West and North, the main Scythick Ocean; on the East, the Straights of Amian, (if such Straights there be) by which parted from America. So called, because the first habitation of the Tartars; who from this Den or Goal, Goal, made their first eruptions, and have since overgrown so much of Asia.

The Country cold and comfortless, as lying under the Polar Circle, and in part beyond it; not fit for any but such as can live no where else: yet heretofore a receptacle of many Christians (though those of the Nestorian Sect) who here enjoyed that liberty of their Religion, which the Persian and Saracens denied them in more pleasing Countries. It containeth many Regions, some not considerable. Those of most note are 1 Tebet, 2 Tabor, 3 Tenduc, 4 Barbu, 5 Anian, and 6 Tartar.

1. THE BET a fenny Region, and full of Woods, rich in Coral, which they find on the Sea-shore, and use it instead of Money. So named from the chief City of it, the ordinary seat of the Abassie, or Pope of this Idolatrous People; much revered, and having in his power the disposing of all Offices, which concern the service of their Idols. They have also some good store of Musk, and abundance of wild beasts which are bred in their Forests: But no beasts wilder than the People, who in times past (if not at the present also) used to bury their Parents in their own bowels, and to make drinking cups of their skulls; for fear lest in the midst of their filly they should forget their Progenitors. Yet not more barbarous than immodest; it being contrary to their custom to take a Wife that is a Virgin. And therefore the Mothers use to prostitute their Daughters to the Merchant-Strangers, who having had their pleasures of them, gratify them with a Jewel, or some other Present, which they wear on their Wedding-day, the being the most acceptable bride to her Husband, who bringeth the greatest Dowry with her of those bare rewards. It contained once several petty Kingdoms, (Homagers to the Kings of Tenduc) with many Cities; but now laid desolate by the Tartar.

2. TABOR, once a distinct Kingdom also. One of the Kings whereof in the year 1540. came to the Courts of Charles the Fifth, and Francis the First; where he found Princely entertainment. But upon proof that he was a Factor for the Jews, and secretly solicited many unto that Religion, by the command of Charles he was burnt at Mantua.

3. TENDUC a populous Kingdom of it self, but greater in name and power; the Kings hereof commanding all these Northeast parts, as far as the borders of Cathay. Christians in Religion, till the Conquest of it by the Tartars, though according to the Nestorian tendries: but now Mahometan for the most part, with some remainders, and but few of Christianity. Divided into many large and spacious Provinces, as Chincintales, Cerguth, Egrigais, Cerebau, others of less note; so called according to the names of their principal Towns, or having some Towns in them of the name of the Provinces.

Those of most note in Tenduc it self, 1 Coras, the ordinary sepulture of the Kings of Tenduc, before it was subdued by the Tartars, and since that also. 2 Caracoras, where Cingis was first honoured with the title of King, the Kings hereof bearing the Port of Kings, and the Office of Priests, were anciently called by the name of Presbyter, Jubannes, or Presbyter John: a title now erroneously conferred by some on the Emperour of the Abassines, or Atbiopians in Africk. Concerning which it is a wonder, that Joseph Scaliger, a man of such infinite reading, should be so deceived: and by the authority of his judgment deceive so many. For finding that there was a Presbyter Johannes in the North of Asia, and hearing vulgarly that title given to him in Africk, he fell upon a fancy that this Abassine Emperour was formerly of so great power, as to extend his Empire over India, and the North of Asia; and in this last, for the assurance of his Conquests, to hold his residence. A monstrous, and un-defensible fancy. For besides that, all Histories, even those of the Abassines themselves, are silent in it: how improbable is it, that a King, reigning in the Heart of Africk, should subdue the most remote parts of Asia; and there keep his Court, for many great States and most puissant Nations being interposed; or that so memorable an exploit should be buried in silence, and found in no record but in Scaliger's head! Besides it is well known, and generally granted, that the Presbyter John of Asia, was by Sect a Nestorian; but he that is so called in Africk, of the Sect of the Jacobites: and further, that the Christians of Atbiopia are circumcised, which never was reported of those of Asia.

Letting this pass therefore as an unwarrantable, and ill grounded fancy, we are to know that formerly this Province of Tenduc, was under the old Kings of Cathay, till the time of Cin Cham, the King thereof. After whose death a certain Nestorian Shepherd (that is to say, the Master of great Flocks of Sheep) being Governour of the Taymans, a People of Tenduc, took to himself the Title of King of Tenduc, whom they called by the name of Priest John, or Prince John (the same word in their Language, as in the Hebrew, signifieth both Priest and Prince.) Dying he bequeathed his Estate and Flocks to his Brother Uin Cham, (commonly called in one word Uincham) a greater Sheep-Master than he; whose Flocks ranged over all the Pastures of the Moles, or Mongul Tartars, though dwelling fourteen days journey off, whom he had in subjection: the Title of Priest John, or Presbyter Johannes, going along with the dignity and Royal estate. And though afterwards this Uincham was subdued by the Tartars, yet his Posterity for long time were suffered to enjoy the Title of Kings and Presbyters; (but Vassals and Homagers to the Great Cham) the Great Chams, in regard of their Nobility and Royal Parentage, bestowing their Daughters on them in Marriage; as is said by William de Rubraquis, who travelled in these Countries, Anno 1253. the King hereof being then named George (the fourth from Uincham) but commonly called Presbyter Johannes, as his Fathers were.

4. BARGU, on the extreme Northwest, bordering on both those sides the cold Scythick Ocean, situate under the North-star; of the same nature, both for the Soil and People, as that of the Tartars. And

5. ANIAN, on the Northeast, opposite unto it, giving name unto the Streights of Anian, lying betwixt Tartary and America; which Streights (if any such Streights there be) the Tartars, and some other of these Northern Nations, are thought to have passed over, and to plant that Country.

6. TARTAR, so called of the great River Tartar, the principal of this Northern Trade, and giving name unto the Tartars: this being their Original Country, where they lived like beasts, having neither Faith, nor Letters, nor Habitation, nor the use of Arms, nor any Reputation amongst their Neighbours. In matters of Religion, the worst sort of Gentiles, worshipping the Sun, Moon, Fire, and the very Earth: to which they offered in the morning fasting, the first of their meats and drinks.

Their Idols made of Felt, and placed on both sides of the doors of their Tents or Booths, as the preservers of their Cattel, and the Authors of Milk. Divided into five Clans or Tribes, denominating so many Towns and Territories in which they dwelt, that is to say, 1 Mongui, 2 Teka Mongul (or the Great Mongul), 3 Sommongul, or the Water-Mongul, 4 Mercat, 5 Metrit: each of them governed by its Chief, as commonly it is amongst barbarous Nations; though all those Chiefs subordinate to

to some higher power. Oppressed by Uincham, or Uincham, the King of Tenduc, who invaded their Pastures, and compelled them to pay unto him the tenth of their Cattel; with joyn consent they removed somewhat further off, and denied their Tribute. This opportunity was taken by Cingis, one of the Tribe of the Teka-Monguls; and so well husbanded, that they admitted him for their King. For publishing abroad amongst the credulous people, that an armed man appeared to him in his sleep, with a white Horse, and said; O Cingis, or Cingis, it is the will of immortal God, that thou be Governour of the Tartars, and free them from bondage and paying Tribute, he found a general belief, especially amongst those of his own Clan, who joining themselves to him, followed him, as their Ring-leader, in all his actions. Thus backed and strengthened, he made War against the Sommonguls, slew their Commander, and subdued them: and by their help successively assaulted the Mercats, and Metrits, whom he also vanquished. And having thus subdued all the Clans of the Tartars, and added the Estates of Tebet and Tanguth, unto his Dominions, he was by the consent of the seven Princes, or Chiefs of their Clans, (Tebet and Tanguth being added to the former number) placed on a Seat on a piece of Felt, (the best Throne they had or could afford) and saluted King; with as great reverence and solemnity as their State could yield. And first to make tryal of his power, and their obedience, he commanded the seven Chiefs, or Princes, to surrender their places, and each of them to cut off the head of his eldest Son: which was done accordingly. Had John de Leyden been a Scholar, as he was but a Butcher, I should think he had studied the acts of Cingis, and proceeded by them. Assured by this of their fidelity and obedience, he set upon the Naymans, a People of the Kingdom of Tenduc, whom he overcame. And now conceiving himself fit for some great alliance, he sent to Uincham, and demanded one of his Daughters for his Wife; which Uincham with some threats, but more scorn, denying, he marched against him, slew him in the field, and possessed his Daughter, and with her also his Estate. Proud with this good success, and encouraged by so great an increase of power, he invaded the Kingdom of Cathay; pretending for that also the authority of an Heavenly Vision, in the name of the Immortal God: in which attempt, discomfited at first with a very great overthrow, but at last victorious; conquering the several Nations of it one by one, till in the end he brought the War to the chief City of that Kingdom, which at last he took, and therewithal the Title of Cham or Emperour. Continuing in this Dignity for the space of six years, and every year adding somewhat to his Dominions, he was at last wounded in the Knee at the Castle of Thaygin; of which wound he died, and was honourably buried in Mount Alay.

This is the best account I am able to give of the beginning of this great Empire, the original of this spreading Nation, and the description of the Country of their first habitation. They that have Christened some of the most Northern parts of it, by the means of the Tribes of Dan and Naphthalim, and accordingly placed them in their Maps, might with more credit have supplied those vacant places, which they knew not otherwise how to fill, with the Pictures of wild beasts, or monstrous fishes; which might well enough have pleased the eye, without betraying the judgment of the looker on. Of his Successors I am able to make no certain Catalogue; their names being doubtfully delivered, and the Succession much confounded amongst our Writers: the names of the Provincial Sultans being many times imposed upon us, instead of those of the Chams themselves. But we will wade through those difficulties as well as we can, and exhibit as perfect a Catalogue of them, as the light of Story will direct me: first adding (what should have been before remembered) that it is recorded, that Cingis before he joyned battle with Uincham consulted with his Diviners and Astrologers of the success: They taking a green Reed, cleaved it asunder; wrote on the one the name of Cingis, and Uincham on the other; and placed them not far asunder. Then fell they to casting their Urbans and Conjurations; and the Reed fell a lighting in the sight of the whole Army, Cingis's Reed overcoming the other: whereby they foretold the joyful news of Victory to the Tartars, which accordingly happened. And this was the first step, by which this bare and beggarly Nation began to mount unto the Chair of Empire and Sovereignty, whereas before they lived like beasts, having neither Letters, nor Faith, nor dwelling, nor reputation, nor valour, nor indeed any thing befitting a man, as before was said.

The Great CHAMS of the TARTARS.

A. C.

- 1162 1 Cingis, Cinchin, Zingis, or Changins, was made King or Cham of the Tartars; he subdued Tenduc, and Cathay, changing the name of Scythians and Scythia, to Tartarians and Tartaria.
- 1168 2 Joishan Cham, or Hoccat, succeeded. In his time the name of Tartar was first known in Europe, Anno 1212: in which year they drove the Poleskie from the banks of the Eufrate Sea. By his Captain Bathu, or Raido; he subdued Moscovia, or Russia; planted his Tartars in Taurica Cherfoneus; wasted Hungaria, Bosnia, Servia, Bulgaria; and by his other Captains took Perlis from the Turks.
- 3 Zaincham, Bathu, or Barcham, ruined the Turky Kingdom of Damascus, and Asia the less.
- 4 Gino Cham, whose Daughter conveyed the Empire unto her Husband Tamerlane, or Tamberlane.
- 1370 5 Tamir-Cutlu, Tamir Cham, or Tamerlane, a great Tyrant, but withal an excellent Soldier. It is thought, that he subdued more Provinces in his life time, than the Romans had done in 800 years. Of whose acts we have spoke at large. Dying, he divided his great Empire amongst his Children, as Persia to Mirza Chabarok his fourth Son, Zagathay to another, (perhaps unto Santochus his eldest Son) and so to others.
- 1405 6 Lutrochin, the second Son of Tamerlane, succeeded in Cathay, though the eldest was at first proclaimed, which his Father had before prognosticated: who when his Sons came to him before his death, laid his hand on the head of Santochus, who was the eldest, but lifting up the Chin of Lutrochin, who was the second. He lived not long, succeeded to by
- 7 Alan, who added little to his Estate.
- 8 Mango Cham, to whom Haitan an Armenian Prince (and the chief Compiler of the Tartarian History) went for aid against the Caliph of Bagdat. By whose persuasion the said Mango Cham is said to have been christened, with all his Household, and many Nobles of both Sexes.

9 Cublay

9 Cublay Cham, the Son of Mango.

10 Tamot Cham, the Nephew of Cublay by his Son Cingis.

11 Demyr Cham, the Great Cham of Cathay in the year 1540: or thereabouts. What the names of the Chams are who have since reigned, we cannot learn; nor what memorable acts have been done among them. The great distance of Countreys; and difficulty of the journey, have hindered further discoveries. For the Great Cham, and his next neighbour the King of China, will neither suffer any of their Subjects to travel abroad, nor permit any Foreigners to view their Dominions, or enter into them: unless their Embassadors or Merchants, and those but sparingly, and under very great restraints, to avoid all giving of intelligence touching their affairs; saving that in these later times the Jesuits have found some footing in China, by whom notwithstanding, we have received little or no intelligence in matters which concern this Countrey.

The Government is tyrannical, the Great Cham being Lord of all; and in his tongue (besides which they have almost no Laws) consisteth the power of life or death. He is called by the simple Vulgar, The shadow of spirits, and Son of the Immortal God: and by himself is reputed to be the Monarch of the whole World. For this cause every day as soon as he hath dined, he causeth his Trumpets to be sounded; by that sign giving leave to the other Kings and Princes of the earth to go to dinner. A fine dream of Universal Monarchy. At the death of the Cham, the seven chief Princes assemble to crown his Son; whom they place on a black course cloth: telling him, if he live well, Heaven shall be his reward; if ill, he shall not have so much as a corner of that black cloth to rest his body on: then they put the Crown on his head, and killing his feet, swear unto him fealty and homage. And at the Funeral of these great Monarchs, they use to kill some of his Guard Soldiers, whereof he hath 12000 in continual pay, saying unto them, Ite et Dominus vestro servite in alia vita. Paulus Venetus reporteth, that at the obsequies of Mango Cham, no fewer then 10000 were slain on this occasion.

These Chams are for the most part severe Justicers, and punish almost every small fact with sudden death; but these especially: Inasmuch that a man in Cambalu taking a pail of milk from a womans head, and beginning to drink thereof, upon the womans out-cry was apprehended, and cut asunder with a sword; so that the blood and the milk came out together. Nor are Adultery or Lying punished with less than death, and so ordained to be by the Laws of Cingis, their first Emperor. A wiser man, than possibly could be expected from so rude a Countrey, and of so little breeding in the knowledge of Books or Business; the Tartars being utterly without the use of Letters, till the conquest of the Huyri, a Cathayan Nation but of Christian Faith.

What Forces the Great Chams, in the height of their power, were able to draw into the field, may be conjectured at by the Army of Tamerlane, consisting of 1200000 Horse and Foot, as was said before. And looking on them as confined within Cathay, we shall find them not inferior to the greatest Princes. For Cublay Cham, long after the division of this great Estate, which was made by Tamerlane, had in the field against Naian his Uncle, and one Caidan, who had then rebelled, an Army of 100000 Foot, and 360000 Horse: there being 500000 Horse on the other side, which made almost a million of men in both Armies. And this is probable enough, if report be true touching the Chams of Zagathay, and those of Turkistan, (before reduced under the obedience of the other) of which the first is said to have been able to raise 300000 Horse, and the last an hundred thousand more. For standing Forces, he maintains 12000 Horse, distributed amongst four Captains, for the guard of his Person; besides which he hath great Forces in every Province; and within four miles of every City, ready to come upon a call, if occasion be: so that he need not fear any outward invasion, and much less any homebred Rebellions. But on the other side, admitting this for truth which before is said, we find him of no power at Sea, without which great Princes are exposed most commonly to the invasions and affronts of such as are strong in Shipping: For either the Eastern Tartars interposed betwixt him and the main Ocean, whereby he is Landlocked (as it were) from all Trade at Sea; or if he have any Port in the North-east parts of this long Countrey, where it joyneth on Tartares Antiqua, it is so far off, and so much out of the way, that it adds nothing to his power, and not much to his purse.

Of the Revenues of the Cham, I can make no estimate, but may conclude them to be what he list himself: he being the absolute Lord of all, the Subject without any thing he can call his own. But that which ordinarily doth accrew unto him, is the tenth of Wool, Silk, Hemp, Corn, and Cattel. Then doth he draw into his own hands all the Gold and Silver which is brought into the Countrey; which he causeth to be melted, and preserved in his Treasury: imposing on his people instead of money, in some places Cockle-shells; in others, a black coin, made of the bark of trees, with his stamp upon it. And besides this he hath to himself the whole trade of Pearl-fishing, which no body upon pain of death dare fish for, but by leave from him. So that his Treasury is conceived to be very rich, though his Annual in-come be uncertain, or not certainly known.

Hitherto I have profecuted the affairs of this mighty Monarch upon the common credit of approved Authors, yet must confess I am not very well satisfied in the truth and reality of the thing it self; it being rather my opinion, that there is no such man at this present time as a great Cham of Tartary, with Sovereign Power and Jurisdiction over all the other Members of that vast body; but that this Empire being broken in pieces by the Sons of Tamerlane, the conquered Countreys did by little and little return again to their former Governments, or else were seized on by the Visi Chams or Governors of the several Provinces. For first I consider it as impossible that there should be such a mighty Monarch, of such absolute authority, such an infinite power, and such unlimited Revenue; and yet that for the space of an hundred years and more, we should hear neither tale nor tidings of them, no not so much as of their names, especially in an active age, and when this great building of the world hath such Calaments in it. For it must needs seem strange to a rational man, that neither Jenkinson who passed into Persia by the Caspian Sea, nor Sir Robert Sharley who spent much time in the Persian Court, nor Sir Thomas Roe, or Sir Dodmore Catton (the first Embassadors to the Great Mogul, the other to the Persian Sophy) should tell us any thing of this Prince, if such Prince there be; or that the Travellers of our Nation who have rambled over all parts of India, the next neighbouring Countrey, should bring us home no tidings of him; or the Jesuits with all their diligence should not find him out. Secondly, I consider it is a thing improbable, that if there were any such mighty Prince, keeping his Royal Court in the City of Cambalu, so near unto the Kingdom of China, he should permit the beggerly Nations of the Eastern Tartars to conquer that rich and mighty Empire in so short a time, he in the mean season sitting still as a dull spectator, neither considering his own danger, nor putting in for a share of so great a booty. Thirdly, I observe that in the treating of a Marriage between Xanbicus the great King of the Eastern Tartars, now reigning in China, with a Daughter of the King of Tanguth, the King of Tanguth is called Prince of the Occidental, or Western Tartars, by which name the Chinese call all the Tartars inhabiting the vast Countreys of Altay and Cathay, specially so called, (as being Westward of themselves, and the Eastern Tartars;) which Title the King of Tanguth had not merited or durst have assumed unto himself, if there had been any such great Cham then reigning in Cathay, and residing in Cambalu, as our Authors speak of. And fourthly, I observe it as a matter probable, that as at the breaking of this Empire into pieces upon the death of Tamerlane, the Precopenses, or European Tartars submitted to a Prince of their own Nation, under the Power and Government of whose Successors, they do still continue: and much of the Asiatick Tartary being subdued by the Moscovites, the neighbouring Tartars did return to their ancient Government by Hordes or Tribes; that so the Kings of Tanguth might not only recover their own Inheritance, but by degrees possess themselves of the greatest part of all Altay, if not of some part of the Proper Cathay also. And therefore that some of the last great Chams mentioned in the former Catalogue, are no other than the Kings of Tanguth, or the Chams of Zagathay, in whom (if any where) remaineth the Succession of the House of Cingis.

for

From these Premises I conclude, that all which hath before been spoken touching the great power, authority, and revenue of the great Chams of Tartary, must either be referred unto the times of their greatest glory, when their Empire was entire, or not much dismembered; or else relate, with some qualifications, to the Cham of Zagathay, or the Kings of Tanguth. But these my observations and considerations, with the conclusion issuing from them, I willingly submit unto better Judgments.

And thus much for TARTARY.

OF CHINA.

HINA is bounded on the North, with Altay, and the Eastern Tartars, from which separated by a continued chain of hills, part of those of Ararat; and where that chain is broken off, or interrupted, with a great Wall extended 400 Leagues in length; built, as they say, by Tziantzou, the 117 King hereof; on the South, partly with Cauchin, China, a Province of India, partly with the Ocean; on the East, with the Oriental Ocean; and on the West, with part of India, and Cathay; from which no otherwise separated than by such natural bounds, and Rumparts as commonly divide great Countreys from one another.

The Northern parts hereof were utterly unknown unto the Ancients, both Greeks and Latines; But for the Southern parts hereof, they make up that Country which Ptolomy called Sine, or Sinarum Regio, by which name the whole Country is called at the present by our modern Latins; and from whence that of China seems to be derived. By Paulus Venetus called Mangi, by the neighbouring Countries Sanglai, by the Natives Taine, and Taybino; which last signifies no other than a Realm; or by way of excellence, the Realm. By the Arabians it is called Tziniu; and the Inhabitants call themselves by the name of Tangis.

It is said to contain in circuit 69516 Dioes of China measure, which reduced to our European measure, will make a compass in the whole of 3000 Leagues: the length thereof extended from the borders of India, to the most Northern Provinces of this Continent, 1800 Leagues: But they that say so, speak at random. For besides that 1800 Leagues in length, must needs carry a greater compass than 3000 Leagues, they make it by this reckoning so, be bigger than Europe; which I think no sober man will grant. And answerable to this vast compass, it is said also to contain no fewer than 15 Provinces, every one of which is made to be of a greater Continent than the greatest Realm we know in Europe. Yet not a Continent of waste ground, or full of uninhabitable Desarts, as in other places; but full of goodly Towns and Cities. The names of which Provinces, and the number of their Towns and Cities, I have thought fit once for all, to lay down in this Diagram following.

The Provinces, Cities, and Towns in China.

| Prov.       | Cit. | Tow. |
|-------------|------|------|
| 1 Canton    | 37   | 190  |
| 2 Foquien   | 33   | 99   |
| 3 Olam      | 90   | 130  |
| 4 Sishan    | 44   | 150  |
| 5 Tolenchia | 51   | 153  |
| 6 Canjay    | 24   | 122  |
| 7 Minobian  | 25   | 29   |
| 8 Ocbian    | 19   | 74   |
| 9 Honan     | 20   | 102  |
| 10 Pagnia   | 47   | 150  |
| 11 Taitan   | 47   | 78   |
| 12 Shincben | 45   | 113  |
| 13 Chaguan  | 43   | 95   |
| 14 Sushan   | 41   | 105  |
| 15 Quinsay  | 31   | 114  |

By which it doth appear, that in these fifteen Provinces there are 591 Cities; 1993 walled Towns; and besides them 154 Castles, 4200 Towns unwall'd; and such an infinite number of Villages, that the whole Country seems to be but one City only. But here we are to understand, that these great Provinces are divided into many lesser, and some of them presented to us (in late stories) under other names, according to the Languages and Appellations of those several Nations, which either have recourse unto them, or do traffique with them; which the Reader may take notice of with less doubt or wonder, in regard that the main Country of China it self is called by so many several names, as before was shewn.

It reacheth from the 130th. to the 160th. Degree of Longitude: and from the Tropic of Cancer, to the 53 Degree of Latitude. So that it lieth under all the Climates from the third to the ninth, inclusively: the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours, and forty minutes; increased in the most Northern parts, to 16 hours, and 3 quarters. Enjoying by this lye an air somewhat of the hottest, especially in those parts which lie under the Tropic; but withal very sound and healthy, and fit for the production of the choicest Fruits.

The Country very rich and fertile, inasmuch that in many places they have two, and in some three Harvests in a year: well cultivated, and sowed with all manner of Grain, and planted with the best kind of Fruits: which do not only come to a speedy maturity, but to more excellency and perfection than any of these Western parts. The like is also said of their Pearls and Berzors; fairer and of greater vertue than those of America, or any other part of the world besides. Particularly it aboundeth with Wheat, Bamley, Rice, Wool, Cotton, Olives, Vines, Flax, Silk, all kind of Metals, Fruits, Cattel, Sugar, Honey, Rhubarb, Camphire, Ginger, all kinds of Spices, medicinal wood, call'd China wood, by the name of the Country, Musk, and Salt: the Custom for which last in one City only, which is that of Canton, amounteth to the yearly value of 80000 Crowns. It yieldeth also an Herb, out of which they press a delicate juice, which doth not only serve them in stead of Wine, but preserveth their health, and freeeth them from many of those inconveniences, which the immoderate use of Wine doth breed to others. Such store of Poultry of all sorts, but of Ducks especially, that in the Town of Canton only before mentioned, it is thought there are 12000 eaten every day, one day with another.

The people are for the most part of swart complexion, but more or less, according to their nearness to the heat of the Sun, short nosed, black eyed, and of very thin beards. They wear their Garments very long, with long loose sleeves, and their Hair much longer than the neighbouring Tartars, who wear their Hair exceeding short, and their cloaths much closer; to which two Fashions so addited, that more of them took up Arms for their Hair and Habit (when required to conform in those particulars to the will of the Conquerour) than had done either for their King, or their common liberty. So much delighted with their own fashion and composure, that as the Negroes use to paint the Devil White, as a colour contrary to their own: so when these Chinois use to draw the Picture of a deformed person, they set him forth in a short coat, broad eyes, long nose, and a bushy beard. They are much given unto their bellies, and eat thrice a day, but then not immoderately: drink their drink hot, and eat their meat with two sticks of Ivory, Ebony, or the like, not touching their meat with their hands at all, and therefore no great foulers of Linnen. The use of Silver Forks with us, by some of our spruce Gallants taken up of late, came from hence into Italy, and from thence into England. Their Marriages they celebrate most commonly in the New Moon, and many times put them off till March, when the year beginneth with them as it doth with us: in which solemnity they spare for no cost nor charge, Musick, and Stage-plays, and good cheer many days together. Yet doth not this take them off a jot from their natural industry, and their proficiency in Mechanick Arts: For the Son is bound to follow his Father's occupation: which Law, preventing the roaving about of idle people, and exciting in each breast an emulation in every Art, maketh the Inhabitants excellent Artificers. In giving Alms they are bountiful to the maimed, and the lame; but reject the blind, as being sufficiently able to get sustenance for themselves by corporal labour, as grinding of Corn, &c. They have long enjoyed the benefit of Printing before it was known in Europe, but Print not as we do, from the left hand to the right; nor as the Japs, from the right hand to the left; but from the top of the leaf downward to the bottom: Guns also have been used among them time out of mind: whence they are so well conceited of themselves, that they use to say, They themselves have two eyes, the Europeans one, and the rest of the people of the world not one. A pretty flourish of self-praising. Now that Guns were in use in these Eastern Countries, and consequently also amongst them, even when Bacchus made his Expedition into India (which was some three or four years before, or after the departure of Israel out of Egypt) Sir Walter Raleigh seemeth to affirm: because Philostatus, in the life of Apollonius Tyanicus, telleth us how Bacchus was beaten from a City of the Oxydraca, by thunder and lightning; which he interpreteth to be the Cannon. But certainly himself in another place of his most excellent Book, acknowledgeth this Philostatus to have written fabulously; and therefore no fit foundation for a conceit so contrary to probability, and the opinion of all times. Besides, whereas Dion telleth us, that by the benefit of thunder and lightning from Heaven, Severus discomitted Pescennius Niger; and by the same means, was himself repulsed from the Walls of Petra in Arabia: we may (if this interpretation hold good) as easily maintain, that Severus had great Ordinance in his Camp; and the Arabians in their Town. As for Printing, whether Jabu Gittenberg learned it of the Chinois; or whether good inventions, like good wits, do sometimes jump, I dare not determine: sure I am that he first taught it in Europe; and as some say, in the year 1440. At Harlem a Town of Holland, it is first said to be practised; and at Menax perfected. Now whereas it is by some doubted, whether the Art of Printing be available to the proficiency and advancement of Learning; or not; I must not herein be both a Judge, and a party: but must leave the decision of the point to men uninteressed. Only this I dare boldly say, that this most excellent invention hath been much abused, and prostituted to the lust of every foolish and idle Paper-blurrier: the Treasury of Learning being never so full, and yet never more empty; over-charged to with the froth and foam of foolish and unnecessary discourses. In which (though all Nations have their share therein, and we of late as much as any) the Dutch have been accounted the most blameworthy: who not content to scatter their poor conceptions amongst themselves, and print them in their own Tongue only (as our English Paper-blurriers do) publish them in the Latine to the eye of others, and send them twice a year to the publick Marts, though neither worth the Readers eye, nor the Printers hand. Scriptorum plus est bodie quam mularum olim cum caeteris maximè; the complaint once of an old Comedian, was never truer than at the present.

But not to dive too deep into this dispute, the people, as before was said, are good Artificers, ingenious and excellent in all things which they take in hand: the Porcelain Dishes, curious Carvings, and the fine Painted Works which we have in Tables, Leather, Stuffs, being brought from thence. Effeminated with much ease and pleasure, they are not much given unto the Wars, which make them the more easy prey to the Neighbouring Tartars, whose very name hath bred more terrors in them, than their Arms

Arms or Conquests. Inasmuch that when Usangneus, requested Aid of Zungneus, King of the Eastern Tartars, against Lycustneus, and his rabble of Rogues, which sacked the City of Peking, and placed himself in the Throne Imperial; the Tartarian having but few men in readines, advised him to array a good part of his own Souldiers with the Arms and Colours of the Tartars, that on the Terror of that sight he might obtain the cheaper, and more certain Victory; which prudent Council was pursued, and it proved accordingly: but what they want in courage, they supply with Wit, being said to be a politic and judicious people; but withal very jealous of their women, and great Tyrants over them, not suffering them to go abroad, or sit down at the Table if any stranger be invited, unless he be some very near Kinsman. A Tyranny or restraint, which the poor women give no cause for, being said to be very honest and much reserved; not so much as shewing themselves at a window for fear of offence: and if they use painting, as most of them do, it is rather to preserve themselves in the good affections of their Husbands, than for any other lewd respects. For the most part of a fair Hair, whereof very curious, binding it about their heads with Ribbands of Silk, and garnished with Pearls and precious Stones. Neat in their dress, and very costly in their apparel, with reference to their estates, and the degree of their Husbands: the richer sort wearing attin strip'd with Gold, and interlaced with very rich Jewels; the poorer in Serge, and razed Velvets. They have most of them little feet, which they take great pride in, and for this cause bind them up hard from their very Infancy; which they endure patiently though it be very painful, because a small foot is accounted for so great a grace. And yet it is conceived that this proceeded not so much from their own curiosity, as from the jealousy of the men, who have brought it in, to the end that they should not be able to go but with a great deal of pain; and that going with so ill a grace, and so little ease, they should have no desire to stir much abroad. A custom so Ancient and received, that it hath got the force of Law; and if any Mother should do otherwise in breeding their Daughters, they would undergo some censure or mark of infamy. If a desire to see their Parents get them the freedom of a visit, they are carried to them in close Chairs, and attended by so many waiters, that it is not possible for any man either to see them, or hold any discourse with them.

Of both Sexes it is thought that this Country containeth no fewer than 70 Millions. Which though it seem to be a number beyond all belief; yet it is knowingly averred, and may be thought probable enough, if we consider the spaciousness of the Country. 1. The secret goodness of the Stars, and temperature of the Air. 2. The abundance of all things necessary to life. 3. That it is not lawful for the King to make any War, but merely defensive, and so they enjoy perpetual peace. 4. That it is not lawful for any Chinois to go out of the Country. And 5. That here the Sea is as well peopled as whole Provinces elsewhere. For the Ships do resemble a City, in which they buy, sell, are born, and die. And on the several Rivers which water the Walls of Namquin, and Pekin, for no less than 300 Leagues, the Ships are said to be so thick ranked, that it seemeth to be a continual Street.

The people hereof in matters of Religion, are generally all Gentiles, and conceive thus of the Creation: viz. That there was one Taine, who created Panxou; and Panxina, whose Posterity remained 90000 years; but they for their wickedness being destroyed, Taine created Lutixam, who had two horns: from the right came men, from the left came women. When any of them dieth, they cloath him in his best apparel, all perfumed, set him in his best Chair, and there all his nearest Kindred kneeling before him, take their leave with tears. When he is Coffin'd, they place him in a room richly furnished, and set by him a Table full of viands and good cheer, with Candles continually burning on it. Not much unlike to which Ceremonies, we find, how whilst the funeral was preparing for Francis the French King, his Statue apparelled in Royal Robes, with the Crown, Scepter, &c. was laid on his Bed; whether Dinner and Supper was daily served in, with the like State and Solemnity as when he was living. But to return again to my dead Chinois; when he haslain, as is above said, fifteen days, he is carried forth to his Funerall, the place whereof is in the Fields; for to be buried within the Walls, were a thing of all others the most wretched. Hither, when they are in the manner of a Procession, come; they burn his body, and with it Men, Cattel, and other provision, for his attendance and sustenance in the other world: as they use in the Funerals of Tartary. As great Idolaters as any, sacrificing to the very Devil, and that upon the same reason, as the most ignorant sort of the Gentiles do; because forth he is a wicked and mischievous creature, and would otherwise hurt them.

Yet in the middle of this darkness there appeareth some light; whereby we may perceive that Christianity had some footing here, in the times foregoing; for they believe, that God is an immortal Spirit; that by him the first man was made of nothing; that the Soul dieth not with the Body, but is capable of reward and punishment in another life, according to the works it hath done in this. Which left they should be thought to be only some remainders of the light of nature, (the learned men amongst the Ancient Greeks and Romans, having so much Divinity as this, without the Gospel;) we may here add, that the Idol most generally worshipped by them, is painted with three heads looking one on another, signifying, as themselves affirm, that they have all but one will, which makes some think they had been Anciently instructed in the Doctrine of the Holy Trinity. They have also the Picture of a very fair Woman holding a Child in her Arms, who, as they say, was Daughter of some great King; and that she was delivered of that Infant when she was a Virgin. And as some add, they have pictures of the twelve Apostles, (as usually painted in some part of the Christian Church;) of whom they are able to say nothing, but that they were great Philosophers who lived virtuously here, and were therefore made Angels in Heaven. And finally they hold, that there is a great number of Saints, or men Estates in an eminent degree of Happiness, who in their times exceeded others in knowledge, industry, or valour; or lived an austere life without wounding any man, or otherwise deserved nobly of the Commonwealth, and the Authors of some signal benefit unto their Country. These I conceive to be some evident remainders of Christianity, or the Remembrances rather of that Christianity, which formerly was known amongst them; first planted here (as may be probably collected) by St. Thomas, or some of his Disciples; an Ancient Breviary on Limbo of the Indian Churches, giving good hint to it. Where it is said, For D. Thomas regnum calorum videtur, et ostendit ad Sinas; i. e. that by St. Thomas the Kingdom of Heaven was Preached unto those of China. Some Chinologists here were also of it, in the time of the Tartars, though now obliterated, and not visible but in these de-facement; and in this state it stood till the time of our Fathers, in which the Jesuits (commendably industrious in the propagation of the Christian Faith) not without great danger to themselves, have endeavoured; and in part part effected, their Conversion. For though they have gained but few Profelytes, (in regard of those infinite numbers of people which are said to live here) yet some converts they have made amongst them; and thereby sown those seeds of that saving Truth, (which mingled with some seeds of their own) which may in time increase and spread over all the Country. For at the present they have not only got footing in the Ports and Sea-Towns; but also in many mid-land Cities, and in some also very far distant from the Sea; in all of which, they have both Churches for their followers, and Cells or Monasteries for themselves; and finally, have gained so far upon the Court, as not only to have their doings well approved of by Authority Royal; but have also gained unto the Faith, the Mother, Wife, and eldest Son of Jungly the last declared Emperor of the Chinusee; which eldest Son they have baptized (and be it an happy Omen, for the good of Christendom) by the name of Constantine.

Hills of great Note: here are not many, here being but one Mountain touched upon by Ptolomy, in his description of the Country called Sinarum Regia, which we conceive to be the Southern part of this China: agreeable unto the observation of Modern Writers, by whom it is affirmed to be so plain and level, and so unswelled with hills at all; that they have Carts and Coches driven with fairs as ordinarily as drawn with horses, in these parts. Not the less destitute of Rivers for this want of Mountains; Ptolomy naming in it, 1. Aphara, 2. Senu, 3. Am-boku, and 4. Cosirix; all which had here their fount and fall; and yet he knew the out-skirts of the Country only. But because the Country of the Sine, of which Ptolomy speaks, is but a South part of this great Country; and the Rivers which before we mentioned in Serica, pass into it also, it is possible enough, that we may find them all amongst the chief Rivers of this Country, whensoever we shall come to have a more perfect Geography thereof: than former names have given unto us. In the modern description now called, are 1. Talo, which rising in the North-east parts of the Country, and passing by the Southern skirts of Loatong, falleth into the Ocean over against the Island of Corea, making a little islet at the mouth of its mouth; with a strong Cattle called Xiang-ko, to signify that entrance; 2. Cecow, which arising in the West by the Loatong, first bendeth its course to the North-east; watering the City of Kiangbom; and after passeth directly Eastward, till it falls at last into the Talo. 3. Polyfanga, which issuing out of some of the branches of Moche Amara, first passeth by the great City of Cambala, and then at last into the mighty Lake of Quinsay; and finally again contracted to its proper Channel, doth this lake to fall into the Eastern Ocean; or in the great River of Kiang, of which more anon. 4. Cacamacon, another of these great Rivers which falleth into the Lake of Quinsay; and possibly may be the same which the Chinese call by the name of Cacoram. 5. Kiang, (which is as the Tartars call it,) which having its origin from Mount Imara, and passing through the middle of this breadth of Quinsay, cutteth through the middle of this Country; which it divideth (like an Equator) into North and South, watering therein the fairest Cities of Nan and Chin; where it is no less than 4 miles broad, and more in breadth by the falling in of several more and more in breadth by the falling in of other principal Rivers; till it come at last to be so miles over and falling up such Mountains of Water, that the Chinese call it not unadvisedly, The Son of the Sea. 6. Chin, which is as the Tartars call it, which the Tartars call Quinsay, which rising out of some other spurs or branches of Chin (as it is called) falleth at last into this Country, and passing by the goodly City of Hangbom on the North, and the fair Town of Xaoking on the South, endeth its course at last in the Eastern Ocean: 7. Quinsay, a River of the Southern parts, but not much observable. Here are also many great Lakes, not inferior to some Seas in bigness; so plentiful in Fish, as if they contended with the sky, which should be most profitable; and yet so swelled with winds (though the winds many times blow strongly) that both upon these Lakes, and on the Rivers and Sea-coasts, they pass up and down in small Barks, with no other Sail than a Bough set up an end in the midst of them; by the help whereof they make good speed in their Navigations. Nor do these Lakes or Rivers use to overflow their banks, or endamage the Country: but when they do, it brings some fatal ruine with it; as in the year 1527, when the Lake of Sancu breaking out, overwhelmed seven Cities, many Towns and Villages, and Country-people, almost infinite numbers.

Towns of most Note amongst the Sine, though nothing but the names be remaining of them, 1. Bramma; and 2. Rhabana, honoured with the title of Civitates; 3. Aphibra, 4. Acharara, more within the Land; but all four under some degree of Northern Latitude. 5. Thine, the Metropolis of the Country, by some called Sine; 6. Serata, 7. Catoranagara; these on the South side of the Line. But in this Ptolomy was mistaken; it being found by the more certain observations of our later Writers, that no part of China comes within 20 degrees of the Equinotial; and so not capable of having any Towns or Cities of a Southern Latitude. Here was also a large Bay called Sinarum Sinus, a Promontory named Notium, in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude; and another named Satorum, lying under the Equinox. More than this of the Cities of the ancient Sine, I have nothing to say, which I dare offer to the Reader.

But to behold them as they are presented to our view in the Modern China, it hath been said, that for number there are no fewer than 591 Cities; and those so uniformly built, so conformable to one another, that they differ not in form and fashion, but in quantity only. Much like the Cities of Utopia, mentioned by Sir Thomas More, Idem sitis omnibus; eadem, quatenus per locum licet, rerum facies; so near resembling one another, that he who knoweth but one of them, may conjecture at all. And this is the manner of their building. Most of their Cities have the benefit of some navigable River, near which they stand: the waters whereof serve them both for navigation, and domestic uses. Two great Streets crossing one another in the very midst, so broad, that ten horsemen may ride a-breast in the narrowest of them; so straight, that a man standing in the middle, may see either end reach end being shut up with a Gate of great strength and beauty; and those Gates fortified and strengthened with thick plates of Iron: Generally greater and more stately than those of Europe; but defective in that point of elegance which the Magnificence Churches; and more sumptuous buildings for the dispatch of publick businesses, in these parts abound with. Their private houses for the most part are also low, and destitute of Porches, Windows, Galleries, the principal ornaments and graces of Architecture. Nor are their Cities built only for resort, or trade, but for strength and safety, environed with deep and broad ditches, the Walls of brick or stone, strong above belief, planted with Ordnance and Artillery in convenient places; and every night the Gates not only locked, but scaled; not to be opened till unsealed by the principal Magistrates. So like they are to one another, that we may say with Quid on the like occasion;

Facies non omnibus una.

Nec diversis variis, qualem decet esse forum.

Which

Which I find thus Englished by G. Sanders.

Amongst them all no two appear the same, Nor differed more than Sisters well became.

But not to rest our selves on this general Character, let us take a more particular view of some of the principal. And in that list we find, 1. Quinsay, called Suntien by the Natives, situate somewhat towards the South, on the Western borders of this Kingdom, where it confineth on Cathay; of this Town many things are reported beyond all belief, as namely, that it contained once in circuit an hundred miles, and had in the midst of it a Lake of 30 miles compass; in which Lake were two goodly Islands, and in them two magnificent Palaces, adorned with all necessaries, either for majesty, or convenience; in which are celebrated the publick Feasts, and the marriages of the better sort. The Lake nourished with divers Rivers, the chief being Polyfanga, and Cacamacon; on which Rivers 12000 Bridges are said to have lifted up their stately heads: and under whose immense Arches, great Ships with Sails spread abroad, and top and top gal-land, might and did usually pass. It is also said to have had ten Market-places, each of them four miles asunder, and every one in form quadrangular, the sides thereof half a mile in length. Here were said also to be twelve Companies of Tradesmen or Artizans, each Company having 12000 Shops, and in all a million and 600000 Families. But whatsoever it was in the former times, certain it is that at this time (if it hath at this time any being at all) partly on the removal of the Court from hence to Cambalu by the Tartars; and since to Nanquin and Pekin by the Princes of the House of Hombu, and partly the fury of Wars, and partly by the violence of Earthquakes, it hath lost no small part of her ancient beauty and renown. 2. Unguen, famous for the abundance of Sugar there made, 3. Nanquin, seated 9 Leagues from the Sea, on the great River of Kiang, whereon ride for the most part no fewer than 10000 of the Kings Ships, besides such as belong to private men. The Town in compass 30 miles, being girt with three fair brick walls, having large and stately Gates. The streets in length two Leagues, wide and paved; the number of houses is about 300000; so that it may equal four of the fairest Cities of Europe. 4. Pekin, or Pagnia, in the middle of the Province so named, (being one of the four Northern Provinces, which take up the whole breadth of this mighty Kingdom) where the King continually resideth; and that, either because the air hereof is more healthful and pleasant, than any of the other, or because it lieth near unto the Tartars, with whom the Chinese are in perpetual War: so that from hence the dangers which may by their invasions happen unto the Country, may with more convenience be either prevented, or resisted. The City said to be inferior to Nanquin for bulk and beauty, but to exceed it in multitude of Inhabitants, Soldiers, and Magistrates, occasioned by the King's abode. Environed on the South with two Walls, of so great breadth, that twelve horsemen may run abreast upon them; on the North, with one Wall only, but that so strong and vigilantly guarded, that they fear as little annoyance on that side as they do on the other. But the greatest Ornament hereof is the Royal Palace, compassed about with a triple Wall, the outwardmost of which would well environ a large City; within which space, besides the many Lodgings for Eunuchs, and other Courtiers, are Groves, Hills, Fountains, Rivers, and the like places of pleasure, larger in circuit, but not comparable for the Arts of Architecture to the Royal Palaces of Europe: First built by some of the Tartar Kings of this Country in imitation of the Royal Palace of Xaidu, mentioned in Cathay, honoured sometimes with the residence of the Chams themselves, which as it gave unto the City the name of Requin, that is to say, the Court or City of the King, in the Language of China; so gave it occasion unto some Writers to make this and Cambalu the same, both names being of the same signification, though in divers Languages. 5. Canton, supposed to be the Cassigara of Ptolomy, by the Chinese called Quamchen, the least of the Metropolisian Cities of this Country, but beautified with many triumphant Arches, a navigable River, large Streets, and many goodly Bridges. Fortified with deep Trenches, 83 Bulwarks, and seated in so rich a soil, both for Fowl and Cattel, that here are said to be eaten daily 6000 Hogs, and 12000 Ducks; besides proportionable quantity of other victuals. If this be one of the least of their Metropolisians, what may we fancy of the greatest? A Town in which the Portugals drive a wealthy trade, being permitted in the day-time to come within the City itself, but at night excluded, and forced to find lodging in the Suburbs. By reason of which restraint they have settled their Mart at Macao, the Port-Town to this, where they have their Factor, and many Families; the Town being almost wholly peopled by them. 6. Leatong, the chief City of Leatong, (another of the four Northern Provinces) and the first Town taken by the Eastern Tartars in their attempts upon this Kingdom, by this door making themselves an entrance into all the rest. 7. Ninguen, made the Metropolis of Leatong after the taking of Leatong by the Eastern Tartars. 8. Sigan, or Sigan, the chief City of Xenfi, another of the four Northern Provinces, and honoured sometimes with the Kings residence. 9. Xaoking, on the South side of the River Cienbang, one of the fairest Cities of China, so environed with sweet waters, as a man may contemplate its beauty, as rounding it in a Boat; consisting of large and fair Streets, paved on both sides with white square stones, and in the middle of them all runs a Navigable Channel whose sides are garnished with the like ornament; and of the same stone there is also built many fair Bridges, and triumphant Arches; the houses being all of the same stone also, which render it the neatest (though not the biggest) City in this mighty Kingdom. 10. Sueban, about two days journey from the Sea, seated in Marishes like Venice, more commodiously, because those Marishes are of fresh water; the streets and houses founded upon Piles of Pine-trees; with many Bridges, and conveniences for passage both by land and water. Well traded, as the fittest Center for dispersion of Merchandize from all the other Ports of the Kingdom: by the multitude and frequency of Ships, almost denying faith to the eyes, which would think all the Ships of China to be here assembled. So infinitely rich, that the small Region whereof it is the Head, containing but eight Cities more, payeth 12 millions to the King yearly income. 11. Hanjen, or Hangeben, on the North side of the River Cienbang, out of which furnished with a Channel of great length and breadth, by which it trades into the Northern parts of this Kingdom; the Metropolis of the Province of Chequia, about two days journey from the Sea; in compass less than Nanquin, but better built; no places in it taken up with Gardens, Orchards, or other pleasures; but all employed for Shops, Houses, and other Edifices. So beautified with Triumphant Arches, erected to the honour of deserving Magistrates, that in one Street there are 300 of great mass, of workmanship. The Temples magnificent and many; the bank-sides of the Channels watering every Street, beset with Trees of shade, and most excellent Fruits: and in the middle of the City a round high Mountain, which gives the eye a gallant prospect into every Street. And not far off a pleasant Lake of great breadth and length, the banks whereof are beautified with Groves and Gardens, and the Lake it, self even clothed with vessels of all sorts, on which the Citizens use to feast, and entertain their idle time with Plays and Spectacles. Two Cities so replenished with all kind of pleasures, that the Chinese use it for a Proverb; Thien Xam, thien thum; xi Xam's bum, that is to say, Look what the Hall or Prefecture Chamber is in Heaven, that Hamsen and Sueben are on Earth. 12. Fachua, thatched amongst many other stately Structures, with a magnificent Tower erected on 40 Marble Pillars, of great elegance, cost, and bigness, every Pillar being 40 spans in height, and 12 in breadth: not to be paralleled, as some say, by any the like work in Europe. 13. Eochiam, in which are 70000 Families, 14. Colan, famous for the best Porcelain. 15. Scianbay, by some called Thien-cin, a station to which an incredible number of Ships resort, both by Sea and River, from all parts of this Kingdom; seated within 24 hours sail of the Isle of Japan; and therefore defended with a strong Garrison, and a Navy. Situate in a pleasant and wholesome soil, the whole Country to be forth with trees, as if it were one continued Orchard. So populous, that it containeth 40000 Households, most of which get their livelihood by weaving Cottons, it being supposed that here are 200000 persons which attend that Manufacture. 16. Chinchiam-sie, whence by a River made by hand, there is a passage to Sueben; the water of which never freezeeth, and for that cause is clogged with Ships in time of Winter, that the passage is stopped with the multitudes of them. 17. Zuan-chien, a most rich and beautiful City, environed with large waters, and the only Southern Port within the Land to which Ships or Boats may have access: 18. Caiton, or Caisung, seated upon the River Ciang, a City once of three Leagues in compass, whose Harbour was seldom without 500 Ships, and sometimes honoured with the Seat or Residence of the Kings themselves: most miserably destroyed Anno 1642, by Zunichin the late King of this Country, who breaking down the dams and sluices to let in the River, for the dislodging of some Thieves and Out-laws, who had then besieged it, gave it so great and forcible a passage towards the Town, that it bare down the greatest part of the houses of it, and therein drowned above 300000 of the natural Citizens; before which time the Metropolis or chief City of the Province of Honan. 19. Kaingchen, on the South-side of the River Crocco, the richest and the fairest City in these parts of the Country, commodiously seated to command that River. 20. Chasking, the head City of the Province of Quam-sung, for the strength and convenience of its situation thought fittest for the seat of Jungly, the last declared Emperor of the Chinese against the Tartars. 21. Sucilin, the chief City of the Province of Quangsi. 22. Taisung, the Metropolis or chief City of Xanxi or Canjay, another of the four Northern Provinces, but not else observable for any thing I find of it, either in point of Trade or Story. 23. Mauchang, a chief City of the Province of Kiangsi, of which little memorable; and less of 24. Cergiron, but that it is like unto the rest in form and structure.

Besides the Provinces before mentioned, there are three others not directly under the dominion of the Kings of China, though depending on it, that is to say, 1. The Province of Sueben, 2. The Island of Corea, 3. The Island of Chexuan.

1. The Province of Sueben, lyeth on the Southwest of this Kingdom, of the same nature both for soil and air with the rest of China, but possessed by a more warlike people: the women here being trained up to feats of Arms, and so well practiced on their weapons, that when the Queen herself went to the aid of the Emperor Vanley against the Tartars, Anno 1618. she took with her a small

Army of 3000 women, performing actions not unworthy the bravest men: the chief City hereof is called Cingw, of great capacity, and so exceeding populous withal, that Changbienebungus (that most barbarous Tyrant, caused no fewer than 600000 of them (men, women, and children, all indifferently) to be slaughtered in one day before his face: The whole Country governed for a long time by its own Kings, of the same Taimingian Race with the Kings of China, from whom having received their investiture, they were afterwards of absolute authority over their own Subjects, who acknowledge no other King but him. And in this state it did continue till the year 1644. when Changbienebungus, whom before I named; entering into this Country with his rabble of Rogues, made a Conquest of it, murdered the young King, Son to the Amazonian Queen, which before we spoke of: dispeopled the great City of Cingw, butchered at one time twenty thousand Priests, at another time eighteen thousand Students; and finally committed such unspeakable outrages, that the Tartars in mere pity to that wretched people, sent an Army against him, by which he was vanquished, and slain; this Province thereupon submitting to the Tartars as their great deliverers.

2. Corea, is an Island of the Eastern Ocean, not far from the North-east of China, over against the fall of the River Yalo. The quality of the soil, the dimensions of it, and what Cities it containeth in it, I have no where found. The people far more warlike than those of China, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Japanites, with whom they have always either open Wars, or uncertain Peace. Invaded by those Islanders and in danger to be conquered by them, they made an offer of their Country to the King of China; who having repulsed the Invaders, restored their Country freely to them, without laying any other Impolition on them, than of love and gratitude, which obligations those of Corea have discharged most fully. For when Vanley, the late Emperor of China, was first invaded by the Tartars, they sent unto his aid twelve thousand men well Armed, and exercised in the Wars; increasing their supplies in the time of Theinkins, who next but one succeeded Vanley. Drawing the whole storm upon themselves by those friendly aids, they were accordingly assisted by the King of China, whose Forces came to seasonably in the heat of a Battle between the Coreans and the Tartars, that the Tartars after a long and terrible fight, were driven out of the Island, but with such incredible loss on all sides, that few or none escaped of the Army of China, seventy thousand of the Coreans slain, and the Tartars leaving fifty thousand of their men behind them; after this they were unmolested, till the fatal and final Conquest of the Kingdom of China, when seeing the Tartars Lords of all, and no possibility of resistance, they submitted to them, about the year 1648. upon condition of retaining their Hair and Habit, which no extremity of personal danger, or fear of public defolation, could compel them to alter.

3. Chexuan, is an Island of the same Seas, on the South of Corea, opposite to the City of Nympus, in the main Land of China; an Island which being heretofore a dwelling place of poor Clowns and Fishermen only, is now become a potent Kingdom. For Lu. Regulus, chosen by a party of his own to succeed to the broken Crown of China, and finding no hopes of withstanding the great power of the Tartars, retired himself into this Island with his friends and followers, followed not long after by great multitudes of the natural Chinese, who chose rather to forsake their Country, than to conform in Hair and Habit to the will of the Tartars; inasmuch that there are now now found in this Island threecore and ten Cities, with a strong and formidable Army, which hitherto hath contemned all the Tartarian Power and Forces, and watch for some happy occasion to advance again their Kingdom in China.

The ancient Inhabitants of the Sine, in the time of Ptolomy, were towards the North, the Semantini bordering a Mountain of that name, and the only one remembered in all this Country: more Southward, the Acadzi, and Aspihrie; Towards the Sea Anabogste, and Ichthyophagi (these last so called from living wholly upon Fish.) United into one body by the name of Sine, and known by that name to the Romans, in the time of Ptolomy, who boundeth them on the North with Serica, on the West with India extra Gangem, and on the East and South with a Terra Incognita: which though it make up the least part of the Modern China, Serica touching only on a Corner of the Northwest of it, and the main Ocean washing it on the East and South: yet the Arabians in their Taxinis, and our late Latine Writers in their Sina and Sienfium Regnum, do from hence give the denomination to this mighty Kingdom. How far they stretched beyond the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, and whether they subdued the Eastern and more Northern Nations, or were Conquered by them, it were hard to say; nor is it easy to resolve, from what original these and the rest of the Inhabitants do derive themselves, whether from the Indians, or the Scythians: or that it was primitively planted by some of the Posterity of Noah, before the enterprise of Babel: which last may probably be concluded from the extreme populousness of the Country, the many magnificent Cities their Industry and Ingenuity in all Arts and Sciences, not to be taught them by their neighbours, more ignorant in those things than themselves. And hereunto the Chronicles of China seem to give some ground, which tell us of three hundred and forty Kings, which for the space of four thousand years have therein reigned. For as their Chronicles inform us, (if they may be credited) the Country being without Rule or settled Government, was first reduced into order by one Vitey, the Son of Ezelem; by whom the people were instructed in Physick, Astrology, Divination, and the Art of tillage: to which, this Vitey, having found out the way of cutting or sawing Timber, added the use of Ships and Houfers, and many other the effects of Mechanical hands. Having by the valour of Linbeon one of the Commanders, subdued a great part of the Country, he drew them into Towns and Villages, distributed them into Offices, and several Trades, disposing those of the same Trade into Streets by themselves; and commanding that no man without leave from himself, or his Officers, should follow any other Trade than that of his Father. He prescribed them also the fashion of their Garments, taught them the Art of making and dying Silks: and having reigned an hundred years, left the Kingdom well established unto his Posterity. Of this Race there are said to have been 217 Kings, who held the State 2557 years.

The last of them was that Tzaintzon, who being ill-nighbourd by the Scythians (not yet called Tartars) is said to have built that vast Wall spoken of before: extended 400 Leagues in length, and at the end of every League a strong Rampart or Bulwark, continually garrisoned, and well furnished with all warlike necessaries. He being slain by some of his Subjects, burdened and wasted with his work, the Race of Vitey ended; and that of Anchoban succeeded, a Prince of much Prudence, but greater courage. In his Line it continued under 35 Kings, but shrewdly shaken towards the close by a Civil War, betwixt Trumhey, the 23 of his House, and his Nephew

Lanpy. Hardly well settled under Quintey, the last of this House, when Tzobu, a great Tyrant of the other Faction, set upon him, and slew him. And so the Majesty of the Blood-Royal being trod under foot, the Crown was also tossed from one hand to another, and made a Prey unto the strongest: there being of the Race of this Tzobu, eight Kings, reigning 62 years; Of the Race of Dian, five Kings, who reigned thirty one; of the Race of Tsoy, three only; who reigned thirty seven; Of the Race of Tenco, one and twenty, who held the Crown 294 years, and eight there were who reigned 120 years, of the House of Tantzom. Of other upstart Families to the number of five, were fourteen Kings also, who governed only for the space of 66 years: And then one Zaitzan, deriving himself from Vitey, the first King of the Country, obtained the Kingdom; which he and seventeen of his Posterity, for the space of 320 years, governed with much peace and honour. Fusfar, the last King of that Royal Family, foretold by Prophecy that he should be deprived of his Kingdom by one who had an hundred eyes, neglected the Advertisment, as unworthy credit: but it fell out agreeable to that Prediction, when vanquished by Chisan-bean (which word signifieth an hundred eyes) Lieutenant unto Van; a Tartarian Prince, but Fendatary and Vassal to the Great Cham. China thus made a Province of the Tartarians, was governed for the space of 93 years, under nine Tartar Kings, Tributaries to the Great Cham, and dependants on him: the Chams themselves many times passing into China, and abiding there according as their pleasures or affairs did invite them to it, which occasioned such a continual intercourse betwixt those of China and Cathay, that they have much participated ever since that time of the manners and customs of each other. But here it is to be observed, that the Tartars spent almost as much time in the Conquest of China, as they did in the possession of it; the war being first begun, Anno 1206. finished 105; the Tartars being totally outed when they had reigned here 90 years only, that is to say, Anno 1358, or thereabouts. For then it happened that a mean person called Hugh, considering with himself the discontentedness of the Chinese under so long Bondage, the luxury of the Tartars, effeminated with the pleasures of that Country, and the unwelcome temper of Gino Cham, then reigning over all in the City of Cambala, raised to himself so strong a Party, that in short time he drove the Tartars out of all; forcing them to betake themselves to those parts of the Eastern Tartars, which now make up the Kingdom of Ninche.

1. Finally turning towards the West, he not only recovered back to China such parts thereof (as had been layed unto Cathay, and incorporated with it by the Tartars; but growing thereby a formidable neighbour to the Cham himself; Advanced for this great Service to the Crown of China, Anno 1269. he took unto himself the name of Hungus (our late Writers commonly call him Hombu) which signifieth as much as the famous Warrior, and gave unto his Children, and their Posterity, the name of the Taimingian Family; which they still continue. For the recovery of this Country, great Tamerlan mustered up his Forces, and though Hombu brought into the field 350000 Horse and Foot; yet nothing could resist the powerful genius of that mighty Conqueror, who obtained here a signal Victory with the death of 60000 Chinese: but wisely moderating his prosperity, and mainly bent upon his war against the Turks, he thought it his best and safest way to let the people of China have a King of their own, imposing on him a Fine of 300000 Crowns in ready money; a certain annual Tribute (long time after paid) with certain other conditions, which as they were pleasing to the Victor, so they were not destructive to be vanquished. By means hereof it came to pass, that such a long communication in affairs of State, having passed between China and Cathay (those of China in old times Lording it over part of the Cathayans, as the Cathayans in late times did over the Chinese) there grew a great resemblance between both Nations, in Manners, Conditions, Arts and Manufactures, as before is said, which circumstances layed together, may afford some reason why in some Writers, easily misguided by such probabilities, Cathay and China have been reckoned to be one and the same. Nor did the Empire of the Chinese extend in old times, only over part of Seychia, but also over part of India, and some of the Oriental Islands. But the Princes of the House of Hombu, finding their own Kingdom large enough to content their desires, abandoned all the Accessories and Out-parts of their Dominions: prompted thereunto, not only by their own moderation, but by some misfortunes which befall them. For as we find that the Romans having by the fury of two violent tempests, lost no fewer than 206 of their Ships and Gallies, resolved to abandon (and for a long time did forbear) the Sea, which had used them so unkindly: So the Chinese having received a great overthrow, and loss of 800 Ships, near unto Zeilan, they freed all the Islands from obedience unto them, and contented themselves with the bounds which nature had bestowed on them. And of their moderation herein we have a very rare example. For when the people of Corea, a small Island abutting on the Confines of China, were invaded by the Japanese, they submitted themselves unto the King of China; who having repulsed the enemy, and thereby freed his own Country from danger, presently re-delivers over unto the Coreans, their Town and liberty. A rare fact of a contented people. Which whether it favoured of greater moderation, or magnanimity, I am not able to determine. In this Family hath the Realm continued under 15 Kings, for the space of 266 years and upward, reckoning from Hombu unto Boneg: who being, the twelfth of this Line, succeeded his elder brother, unfortunately slain with a fall from an Horse. Reported for a Prince of good disposition, great judgement, and a severe Juristician. This Boneg (otherwise called Vanly) begun his Reign, Anno 1573, governing this Kingdom in great prosperity and glory for the space of 40 years and upwards; when causing the Christian Subjects and the Jesuits their Converters to be hardly dealt with, and denying Justice to the Eastern Tartars for the many wrongs done them by their Prefects in the Province of Leautong, he drew that people into Arms, as if marked out for Executioners of Divine displeasure. Stript by them in the year 1618, of a part of Leautong, and braved by their Forces within sight of Pekin, he contracted some melancholick distempers, of which he died about two years after, leaving the Crown to his Son Taichangus, who having held it but four months, left it, and all the troubles of it to his Son Theinkim, a valiant Prince and fortunate against the Tartars, but of short continuance. For dying in the year 1627, he was succeeded in that Kingdom by his brother Zuchininim, a Prince of contrary disposition, cruelly bent, a great Oppressor of his Subjects, and for these causes ill beloved; yet they continued in obedience (though for fear, rather of the Tartars, than for love of him) until the year 1640, or thereabouts. At what time the people in many places oppressed with Taxes, and in the Northern parts with Famine, arise in 8 Companies of Armies, which growing wanton by success, and waiting upon one another, they are at last reduced under two chief Leaders, that is to say, Lycengze and Changlichengze.

These two being come to an agreement took their several ways, the last of them falling into Suehuen, whose villanies and deserved destruction we have there related. Lyenngueu the more fortunate villain, in the year 1641. besieged Chifang the chief City of the Province of Honan, a place of great strength, but far greater riches, on the ruin whereof by the Kings improvidence, and his subduing the whole Province of Xenfi, he took to himself the title of King, and would be called Lyenngueu the Prosperous; and not long after easing the people of the Taxes which the avaritious King had imposed upon them, putting the Tax-masters to death, and gaining upon all sorts of men by his courteous usage, he took unto himself the name of Emperour. Zuachininu succeeds his Brother, hindered by Factions in the Court, from sending a considerable Force against the Rebels, who passing over the great River Croeuu without any resistance prevailed in all places where they came, even to the taking of the great City of Peking, and the Palace Royal; at the hearing whereof, the Emperour seeing no way to escape their hands, hanged himself in his own Orchard. Anno 1644. his example therein followed by the Emperess and his principal Servants. The body of the Emperour cut in pieces, his two younger Sons beheaded, the principal Magistrates murdered, and that great City sacked by command of the Victor. Forced to remove back again to Xenfi by Uangueu Commander of the Army in Leatong, who called in the Tartars to revenge those Outrages, the Rebels taking with them all the wealth and treasure which the Emperours of the Tamngio Family had amassed together in the space of 260 years and upwards. Zungueu the King of the Tartars having thus got the City of Peking, died presently after, leaving his Son at nine years old to succeed him in that glorious fortune. By him commended to the care and protection of Uncles, who very faithfully discharged the trust reposed in them; infinite numbers of Tartars thronging into China upon this occasion, and those not only of the Eastern but the Western Nations.

Nations. By these the Infant-King was proclaimed Emperour of China, by the name of Xaunchius, styling the new Imperial Family by the name of Tailing, the eldest of the Uncles whom the Tartars called Amavangus, having the chief conduct of Affairs.

chief conduct of Affairs. Ujanquius by the Tartars not long after is declared King of Xenfu, out of which he shortly drove the Rebels, and possessed himself of it; Lycangzus being either killed in the fight, or else otherwise lost. Hunquangus Nephew to Vaxley, and Cousin German to Zuchimius, elected Emperor by the Chineses of the Southern parts, is opposed herein by one that pretended himself to be the eldest Son of Zuchimius; which division gave the Tartars a notable victory over all their Forces, and the great City of Ulan in reward thereof.

The new Emperour being shortly after betrayed into the hands of the Tartars by them hanged on the Walls of Peking; which death the Tartars count most noble. The pretended Son of Zunbichinus discovered, and served in the same fort also. And though Loangus first, and afterwards Jungly, and Lsu. Regulus, were chosen and declared Emperours by their several parties, Anno 1648. yet nothing could prevail against the fortune of the Tartars, Loangus being forced to put himself into their power, Jungly to fly into the Mountains, and Lsu. Regulus to secure himself in the Isle of Cheusan.

What hath succeeded since that year, future times will show.

The Government of this Kingdom is merely tyrannical; there being no other Lord but the King, no title of dignity or nobility ever known amongst them; nor Toll or Duty

Duty paid unto any; but to him: the younger Princes of the blood being maintained by Sixpends, and annual Pension, large enough to support their Trains, but without any Land or Tenants, for fear of drawing on them any great dependence. The King alone is the general Lord; and him the Subjects do not only reverence as a Prince, but adore like a God: For in the chief City of every Province, they have the Kings portraiture made of Gold, which is always covered with a Veil: and at every New-moon, the Magistrate and other inferior Officers use to kneel before it, as if it were the King himself. By these and other Artifices of like contrivement the Common people are kept in such awe and fear, that they are rather Slaves than Subjects: railing their King the Lump of the World, and Son of the everlasting Sun, without whose light they were able to see nothing.

In every Province, except Perquin and Telenobia only, he hath his Deputies or Vice-Royes, maintained by liberal Sixpends from the publick Treasury: but those he governeth by himself. Some Laws they have, and those affirmed to have been written 2000 years since, as is like enough they were. So strongly do they favour of the ignorance and Absence of the darkest times; the manner of life by them allowed; most obscene and filial; their Idolatries most gross and palpable; their Exorcisms ridiculous; and the prostitutions of their Virgins most abominable; and the variety of sensual prephanations; to an illuminated mind most base and contemptible. In a word, nothing commendable in their course of life (nor withstanding the brags which they make of themselves) but their Arts and Industry.

The Forces which this King is able to draw into the Field must needs be infinite, considering that incredible number of Subjects under his command. For whereas France is thought to contain 15 millions of people; Italy with the Isles, as many; Germany, with the Switzers and Belgick Provinces, about that proportion; Spain not above seven millions; and the Kingdom of England about four: this Country only is computed at 70 millions; which is more by 15 millions than all together. Proportionably his Levies must be so much greater, than can be ordinarily raised out of those Countries. But because it may be thought that his Subjects, though more in number, may be less trained to the wars than those of Europe; the contrary is affirmed by such as have taken an estimate of the Forces, which every Province is bound to entertain in continual readiness. And by that estimate it appeareth, that in the year 1557: (though a time of peace) - there were dispersed in the fifteen Provinces of this Realm, to the number of five millions, 846500 Foot, and 948350 Horse. Which notwithstanding it may be said, and not unjustly, that he is able to bring in to the field, amongst such multitudes of men, but few good Soldiers, the people being generally unwarlike, and of no great courage, as was before observed of them in that general Character. Nor is he less powerful for Sea-service, having continually great Fleets for the guard of his Coasts, in continual attendance; and many more ready to set out when there is occasion: inasmuch that the Chinese use to say in the way of a Proverb, That their King is able to make a Bridge of Ships from China to Malacca, which are 500 Leagues asunder. Some of these Ships (whereof the King hath above a thousand of his own, besides those of his Subjects) of great magnificence and beauty: the Officers and Soldiers in all which are exceeding well paid, and rewarded answerably to their merits. And as this King is able to raise greater forces than any, from his own citizens; so doth he also use satis docte, when the urgency of his affairs doth require it of him: his ordinary fleet being 300000 Foot; and 100000

And thus far also according to the general current of received opinions have I followed the descriptions and affairs of China, as a distinct Country from Cathay; not ignorant that there are many probable reasons which might incline us to believe them to be one and the same for first it is alledged in favour of this opinion that it is neither new nor strange, for one and the same Country, to be called by divers names, according to the languages and fancies of several Nations; that Country which we call Germany, by the Natives called Dutch land, not long since known indistinctly by the name of Almaine; that part of Britain which we call Wales, being by the French called Gales; and Cambria by the Latine Writers; the mountainous people which the Romans know by the name of Albani, being by some of our Northern Latins, called Confederati Campi Camini by Ammianus Marcellinus, Grænitum by the neighbouring Dutch, and finally Grifon by the French, which four last names do carry all the same sense and signification; though in different words, that China it self, is by the Natives called Tekin; Tekin by the Arabians, Mangui by the Persians; and by the neighbouring Nations Sanglay; and as it cannot be inferred from the like diversity of appellations that Almain, Germany, and Dutch land, make three several Countries, ( & sic de cæteris ) so neither can it be concluded on the same grounds that China and Cathay make two several Empires. In the next place it is alledged that since by later voyages and navigations, this mighty Kingdom hath been discovered, and made known unto us of Europe by the name of China, the name and Empire of Cathay hath grown out of knowledge. For proof whereof they bring in the Itinerarie of Benedictus a Gies, a Jesuite, who in the year 1605, crossing from the North-east parts of Persia to the Realm of China, and naming all the several Countries and Towns of any note which lay in his way, makes no mention of any such Country as Cathay; nor any such Prince as the Great Chan thereof; telling us also that Martin Marinique, who had lived long in China, in his Books entituled Belum Tartaricum, comprehendeth all the Countries betwixt China and Mount Tians, under the general Name and Notion of the Western Tartars; not taking notice of any such Country as Cathay; nor of any greater Prince amongst them, than the King of Tangut; and that Ramusio in his notes on Paulus Venetus, reporteth some conference which he had with Chaggimener a Persian Merchant, who told him that he had seen Campion and Successor Cities of Cathay, in the reign of Demetrius which must be understood of Cathay

in the general Notion, as it comprehendeth all the Tartarian Countries beyond Imam, it being well known that Cambay and Succur are two Cities of Tangut, and not of the proper Cathay, or Cathay specially so called. In the third rank of proofs they instance in the similitudes, or resemblances betwixt both Countries, and both people, which are so great and visible in the temperature of Air, fertility of Soyl, and pleasantness of Situation, in Customs, in Ingenuity, Arts and Manufactures, as may be thought to carry an Identity, or sameness with them; which sameness or Identity they do also find in Pequin the chief City of China, and Cambalu, the supposed chief City of Cathay, being two words of the same sense and signification, though of divers sounds; for Pequin signifieth the Court or City of the King in the Chinian Language, and Cambalu signifieth the Court or City of the Cham, in the Language of Tartary. The like they also have observed of the Royal Palaces, adjoining to the said two Cities, so like in the vast greatness and extent of the outer Walls, the Parks and Forreils intermingled, the magnificent form and structure of the inner Palaces, with all the rest of the particulars before-recited, that a man might very well conclude them to be one and the same, adding withal that such an immense, and unparalleled work, as the great Cham's Palace called Xaindu, must needs require more hands and a longer time, than the great Chams (considering their continual wars, and little intervals of leisure) could bestow upon it. But their four head-proofs, which seem indeed to be the strongest, they derive first from the Testimony of Benedicta Ges above-mentioned, who without taking notice of any such Country as Cathay, in so long a journey, telleth us that at Cialas a City of the Kingdom of Cascar, and not far from China, he was first informed that Cathay and China were the same. 2<sup>d</sup>. From the Testimony of an old Mahometan Pilgrim, who returning from Meccha by Labar (the Royal Seat and City of the great Mongul) affirmed there that he had lived long in Cambalu, their chief City of Cathay, which Kingdom had in it one thousand and fifty Cities, the King thereof being a very mighty Prince, and having a strength of 400 Elephants brought thither from Malacca and Pegu, and that much Merchandize was brought in the Country by Sea: which if it be not meant of China (to which the story may agree in all particulars) must needs be one of the loudest lies that ever came from the mouth of a Mahometan, or a Pilgrim either; our Geographers finding very few Cities or Towns of note in Cathay specially so called, no access thither by Sea for any Merchandize, nor any way to bring those Elephants from Pegu and Malacca, which the Pilgrim dreamt of. 3<sup>d</sup>. A clearer Testimony of some other Mahometans repairing to Pequin every fifth year, either as Merchants or Embassadors, or as both together; by whom the Jesuites there living were informed, that in the Dominions of the Persian, and the great Mongul, from whence they came, the Kingdom of China was called by no other name, than by that of Cathay, they knowing no other Country of that name, but China only. And 4th. from the asseverance of Pamagis, another Jesuite; who in his Letters dated from Pequin much blamed our ordinary Maps for placing Cathay next to China, whereas (saith he) China or Sinai is Cathay, as this Pequin where we now are is the City of Cambalu; which two last evidences coming from the Pen of one who had lived many years in China, and not conducting any way to the advancement of the Catholic cause, must needs be thought to carry some great credit and authority with them.

These reasons if they be of force and moment to the point in hand, we must then add Penelope's part, unraveling all the Web which before was woven, Atque iterum in laem omne redibit opus, in the Poets Language; which that we may the better do, and with as little defacements to the whole piece as possibly we can, I shall thus proceed. First then it is to be conceived that Cathay specially so called, was an aggregate body, containing many several Kingdoms, and distinct Estates, though Homagers to the Kings of Cathay, or dependents on them: as anciently in the Realm of France besides the Kings of France themselves, there was a King of Burgundy, a King of Alençon, a King of Soissons, a King of Orléans; and after that a Duke of Normandy, a Duke of Bretagne, a Duke of Aquitain, and Earl of Campagne, and Earl of Tholonse, all absolute and uncontrollable in their own Estates. And then the Kingdom of Tangut, which we placed in the Southern parts of Alsay, must be made one of the Kingdoms of Cathay; and Demerican, whom we ranked in the Catalogue of the Chams of Tartary, must be brought a peg lower, and looked on as a King of Tangut only, and no more than so. 2<sup>d</sup>. It must be taken for granted, that the Tartars having conquered the Realm of Cathay, and afterwards, by the help of that people, subdued China also, caused all the Northern parts of China to be called Cathay, as being in the same Latitude and Parallels with it, and much of the same nature and complexion, both for Soyl and Air; giving unto the Southern parts (which was the true and proper Country of the Sina) the name of Mangi, transferred afterwards by some Authors to the Country generally: and having thus extended the Name and Territory of Cathay, the first foundation of their greatness, they fixed their Regal Seat in the City of Pequin, which by a new Tartarian name (but of the same sense and signification) was from thence called Cambalu. Thus in the first place the French Kings of the Caroline Family, communicated the name of France (East France it was most commonly called) to the greatest part of Germany, then conquered by them; the Castilians of Spain extended the name of Castile on every side, as they got ground upon the Moors, till it became the largest Province of any one name in all that Continent; and Roger Earl of Sicily, having conquered the Eastern parts of Italy (which now make up the Kingdom of Naples) commanded it to be called the further Sicily, and himself to be crowned King of both, by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And in the second place, the Dukes of Zweibrucken in high Germany are by the French called Dukes De Deux-ponts, by the late Latine Writers called Dukes of Sheritzogen Bosch is by the French called Bois le Duc, by the Latine Writers, Sylvia Ducis; and here at home the Military Towns or Stations of Leitodurum, Colonia, Presidium, ad Lepidem, and Portus Magnus were turned by the conquering Saxons (the former significations being still retained) into Besford, Colchester, Warwick, Stonham, and Portsmouth, commonly now called Portsmouth, Castrum Alatum into Edenburg by the Pills or unconquered Britains. 3<sup>d</sup>. We may take it for a truth unquestioned, that Hambu having expelled the Tartars out of Mangi, or the Southern parts, and fixed the Royal Seat at Nanquin, on the South side of the River Kiang (though paying both fine and tribute to victorious Tamerlane) did afterwards on Tamerlane's engagements beyond the Mountains, and the canonizing of that great Empire amongst his Children, expell them out of the North parts also; his Successors thereupon removing the Court to Pequin (from henceforth known again by its true, proper, and Chinian name) the better to attend the motion of that dangerous Enemy. Jersusalem, commanded to be called Elir by the Emperor Adrian, and London named Augusta Trionbantum by some other of the Roman Emperours; returned to their old names names again, as soon as that authority failed which imposed the new. And 4th. as from this time forwards the Northern parts of China might still retain the name of Cathay, and being most traded by the Persian and Indian Merchants, might be best known by that name in their several Countries: so by dividing this great Empire into so many parts, removing the Imperial Seat to Sameracand, on the other side of the Mountains, erecting many new Estates out of the ancient Prefectures, and Governments of Cathay it self, and parcelling the remainder of it between the Kings of Tangut, Cascar, and such other Princes of the Tartars, as were not wanting to themselves in those opportunities, the true Cathay might lose that name by little and little, which formerly it had communicated to those parts of China. Thus the Burgundian, Lombard, Vandal, Hungari, lost those names at home, in their ancient and native habitations, which still remain unto those Countries that were conquered by them. These reasons and considerations I willingly submit to the Readers Judgment, being my self so great a Sceptick in this point that I dare determine nothing positively on either side. It is enough that I have layed the cause open without partiality, or byassing on either hand, before the Jurors; let them give up their verdict in it as they like the evidence.

OF I N D I A.

INDIA is bounded on the East with the Oriental Ocean; and some part of China, or as some others say, with a great Country called Mange (not much known unto us of Europe) interjected betwixt it and China; on the West, with the Persian Empire; on the North, with some branches of Mount Taurus, which divide it from Tartary; and on the South, with the Indian Ocean. So called from the River Indus, the nearest of esteem and note in all the Country, towards these parts of the world.

It is conceived to be the largest Country, of any one name in the world, except China and Tartaria; affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to be of such a great extent on the Seacoasts of it, that it was as much as a Ship could sail in 40 days. Extended from 206, to 159 degrees of Longitude; and from the Aequator to the 44th degree of Northern Latitude. By which account it lieth from the beginning of the first, to the end of the sixth Clima: the longest Summer-day in the Southern parts being 12 hours only, and in the parts most North, 15 hours and a half.

Concerning the monstrous Fables which the Ages foregoing have delivered to us of this Country, give me leave to say, that as the Poets used of old to fill up the times of which they were ignorant, with strange Fictions, and prodigious Metamorphoses, or as our modern Geographers, in the Maps of the World, fill up those unknown parts thereof, of which they can give us no certain description, with strange Pictures and uncouth shapes of Beasts and Trees, so also the Writers in former Ages have filled the more remote Countries, of which they knew little, with such impossible and incredible relations. Hence there have been attributed to this India, the Fables of men with dogs heads, of men with one leg only, yet of great swiftness; of such as live by scent; of men that had but one eye, and that in their forehead; and of others, whose ears did reach unto the ground. It is reported also that this people by eating a Dragons heart and liver, attain to the understanding of the languages of beasts; that they can make themselves, when they list, invisible; that they have two tubs, whereof the one opened yields wind, the other rain, and the like. But these relations, and the rest of this strain, I doubt not but the understanding Reader knoweth how to judge of, and what to believe. For my part I am of the same mind with Cicero, Plura equidem transcribo quam crede; nec enim affirmare ausus sum quia dubito, nec subducere subijuncto quod accipi: I may perhaps relate some things which I do not credit, but shall not let them pass without some censure; that so I may neither impose any thing on the Reader's belief, nor deprive him of any thing conducing to his contentment.

The Country (to repeat no more of it than it doth deserve) enjoyeth an exact temperature of the air, two Summers, (or one as long as two) and a double increase, blest with all things which are either necessary to the life of man, or of convenience and delight; particularly with Mines of Gold and Silver, and with precious Stones; with Spices of all sorts, and Civers; with the best medicinal Drugs; Metals of all kinds, except Copper and Lead; abundance of all sorts of Cattel, except Horses. Somewhat defective also in Wheat and Vines, that so this Country might be beholding unto others, as well as others to this. Famed also for abundance of Camels, Apes, Dragons, Serpents, Rhinoceros, Elephants. These last more favouring of reason and humane ingenuity, or else more tractable and docile, than any brute creature whatsoever. Of this we have a fair instance in the Story of the A&S of Alexander. The Elephant which King Porus sat upon, finding his Master strong and lusty, rushed boldly into the thickest of the Enemies Army; but when he once perceived him to be faint and weary, he withdrew himself out of the Battel, kneeled down, and into his Trunk received all the Arrows which were directed at his Master. The greatness of the Creature makes it yet more admirable that either he should have soul enough of his own, to aduate so vast a body; or being of such strength and bigness, should submit himself to the instructions of another; some of these Indian Elephants, as Ælian hath affirmed, being nine Cubits high, and as many long; and in breadth or thickness about five Cubits. Nor doth the Sea afford less plenty or variety, than we find on shore: yielding abundance of the richest and fairest Pearls, huge shoals of fish, and amongst them the Whale or great Leviathan; exceeding the proportion of that Land-monster the Elephant. For though the ordinary dimension of the Whale be but 45

Cubits in length, and eight in thickness; yet Nearehus in Asagany is said to have measured one, in these Indian Seas, which was of the length of 50 Cubits, and of breadth proportionable: not to say any thing of that incredible report of Pliny, who speaketh of some Indian Whales, which were nine hundred and threecore foot, or four Acres long.

The people are of five sorts, and as many Religions; that is, not only the Natural Indians, derived from the Original Inhabitants of it; 1. Moor, or Arabians, who were, than two hundred years ago, possessed themselves of some Sea Towns, driving the Natives up higher into the Country. 2. Jews, scattered and dispersed (as in other places) into all parts of it. 3. Tartars, in those Parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mongul. And 4. Portugueses, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Islands, but brag as if they had made a conquest of all the Country. Which notwithstanding, considering that the Natural Indians are by far the greatest number, we must relate to them only in the Character which is made of this people. Affirmed to be tall of stature, strong of body, and of complexion inclining to that of the Negroes; of manners civil and ingenuous, free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The common sort but meanly clad, for the most part naked, content with no more covering than to hide their shame. But those of greater Estates and Fortunes (as they have amongst them many Ancient and Noble Families) observe a Majesty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; sweetening the last with Oils, and Perfumes, and adorning themselves with Jewels, Pearls, and other Ornaments befitting. They eat no flesh, but live on Barly, Rice, Milk, Honey, and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer complexion than the men, yet of lovely countenances, wear their hair long and loose, but covered with a thin Veil of Calicut Lawn. Their ears hung with many rings, so great and heavy, that they are torn, and stretched to much disproportion; their noses also ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their estate and quality. Servilely obsequious to their husbands, whose affections they divide amongst them without jar or jealousy: the men allowed here, as in all the East, the use of many wives, whom they buy of their Parents for a yoke of Oxen; and may marry as often as they list. In which they have too great a privilege above the women, who after the decease of their common husband, do either burn in the same flame with him, or else are forced to doom themselves to perpetual Widow-hood. But of this we may speak more hereafter, when we come to the particulars.

The Christian Faith was first planted in these Countries by St. Thomas, from whom the remainders of Christianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Monuments of that Church do ascribe their conversion. For in one of their Breviaries written in the Chaldean Tongue, and translated into Latine by Father John Maria Campanin a Jesuite, we find it thus, Per D. Thomam christianus error Idolatrie ab Indis, &c. i. e. By St. Thomas the errors of Idolatry vanished out of the Indies; by St. Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptism; by the Adoption of Sons; by St. Thomas, they believed and confessed the Father, the Son, and Holy Ghost; by St. Thomas, they kept the Faith received of one God; And finally, by St. Thomas, the splendour of saving Doctrine did appear to all India. His body, as they say, interred in the City of Maliapar, upon the Coast of Choromandel; the truth of which tradition I dispute not here. But this Plantation of the Gospel by the hand of St. Thomas was not universal over all the Country, but in some Parts and Provinces only: or else was forced to give ground a while to prevailing Heathenism. For in the Reign of Constantine, we read how the Indians living on the further side of the River Ganges (for so I understand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the Ministry of one Frumentius, of the City of Tyre; who having spent the greatest part of his time amongst them, was employed in that service, and consecrated the first Bishop (for those Churches) by the great Athanasius of Alexandria. But being the foundation of this building was laid by St. Thomas, the remainder of Christians here being, ascribe the whole work to him; called therefore Christians of St. Thomas. Governed originally by their own Bishops, subordinate to an Archbishop of their own also, residing at Guagumale fifteen miles from Cochin, one of the chief Cities of this Country; who for a long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Mysal, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by these Christians of India he is still termed. The number of the Christians computed at 15 or 16 thousand Families; or at 70000 persons in the account of others; inhabiting for the most part in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the out-lets of Indus and Ganges, stretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The Points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome, 1. Their administering the Sacrament of the Eucharist in bread seasoned with salt; 2. Administering in both kinds, but using instead of Wine (which is scarce, or not at all, to be had in this Country) the juice of Raisins softened in water over night, and so pressed forth; 3. Not baptizing Children until 40 days old, except it be in danger of death; 4. Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Cross; 5. Allowing one marriage to their Priests, but debarring the second; 6. In painting God with 3 heads on one body, to denote the Trinity; 7. Denying the Use of extreme Unction; And 8. not acknowledging the Pope's Supremacy; but besides these remainders of those ancient Christians, there are some others now of late of a new Plantation, by the pains and travel of the Jesuits, though not with such success here, as they found in China: many of the Inhabitants, partly by the diligence of the Arabians, and partly by the power of the great Mongul, having embraced Mahometanism; and being consequently less inclinable to admit the Gospel, than when they were in the condition of their natural Gentilism. Yet have they made such good progress in it, that Echebar the Mongul, not only founded a fair Church for the use of the Christians in the City of Agra (the Regal City of that Empire) but committed to the care of the Jesuits the Education of two Princes of the Regal Family. And possibly they might have made a great increase of Christians before this time, had they not been opposed therein by Sultan Cyrroon, a bitter Enemy to their proceeding, in the Reign of his Father, and no great favourer of them since. Inasmuch that hearing a Jesuite, called Francisco Carst, report unto his Father how miraculously a wooden Cross of his had escaped the fire, he was very urgent with his Father to have a great fire presently made, and the same Cross to be thrown into it, upon these conditions, that if the Cross consumed not, his Father and himself would become Christians; but if it did, the Jesuite should be burned in the same fire with it. A fiery trial which the poor Jesuite had much ado to put off, and preserve his credit. Howsoever by their practicing amongst the old Christians they have gained one point of very great consequence and importance to the Church of Rome. For in the year 1599. by the solicitation of the Jesuits and others, the Indian Christians renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Mysal, and submitted their Churches Churches to the Jurisdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a National Synod held at Liamper, not far from Maliapar, by the Arch-bishop of Goa (the Primate of the Portugals in those parts) not only rejecting all opinions contrary to the Roman Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and reformed by the said Arch-bishop, according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But these comparatively to the rest, come not to an handful; the main body of the people wallowing in their Gentilism; and still retaining many of those ancient Customs, which they used of old: as viz. 1. Not knowing their Wives after they have born them two children: Nor keeping them, if after five years cohabitation they can raise no issue by them, but then exchanging them for others: 2. Rewarding none for any military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands the head of an enemy: 4. Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decayed by Age, or Sickness: To these they have since added others of a later invention, perhaps more barbarous; of which we may have opportunity to speak anon. Their Priests or Learned men in the time of old were called Brachmanes from one Brachman, the prescriber of their Rites and Laws, by whom instructed in the Rudiments of their Philosophy; some of which, from their going naked, had the name of Gymnosophists; who were to them as the Chaldei to the Assyrians; the Magi to the Persians; and the Druides, to the ancient Britains. Had in great Reverence by the People, and living for the most part an austere and solitary life, in Caves, and Deserts; feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled; and for a time abstaining from all carnal pleasures; but that time past, they may indulge themselves more liberty; and admit the company of women. Others of them live together with the common people, as being their ordinary Priests. Of these, the great Alexander, when he was in this Country surprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many strange questions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himself confessed) some not unsatisfying, though strange answers. To these Gymnosophists, or Brachmans, the Brachmanes do now succeed, both in place and authority; but differ from them most extremely in point of learning, and the civilities of their lives: these Brachmanes being the most impure, libidinous, and sensual beasts in all the Country; privileged with the first nights lodging of every Bride, which when frated with their filthy lust, they sell, or traffick with, to strangers, serving as Stallions to old men, and as Panders to young; so fleshed in wickedness, and ignorant of all good Letters, that they have nothing of a man but the voice and shape. Mahometanism is also entertained in a great part of the Country, first brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Persians, unto whom continuous; but much increased by the victories of the Great Mongul: who being originally a Tartar, and of that Religion, hath caused it to be propagated in most parts of his large Dominions.

Mountains of most note in it, besides Caucasus; and some other of the branches of Taurus, or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Persian Empires, 1. Sardonix, full of Mines of those precious Stones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2. Vindius, 3. Bittigo, 4. Adisatru. 5. Those called Apocopi, and 9. Those named Oradii. And on the further side of Ganges, 7. Byrrhus, 8. Meandrus, 9. Those called Damusi, and 10. Semantibus; part of this last extending also unto China. All of them very fruitful in the production of Mines, and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain, of chief note of all, is that which Pliny called Bittigo, and is now named Gatesgar, the Southern part of the great Mountain Imam spoken of before: extended from Mount Causar, where it crosseth the Taurus in right Angles, to Cape Comari, a known Pass-mountain of Indistan, or the higher Indis: (which is six-fifty miles into East and West) for the Space of 400 Leagues and upwards. Conceived by Ptolemy, a Learned Mathematician, to be that Mount Sepphar, mention whereof is made in the tenth of Genesis; where it is said to be the utmost Eastern limit of the Sons of Jokan; Gen 10. 30. With probability enough, for ought I can see; the Sons of Jokan being settled in these parts of India, and the Provinces of the Persian Empire which lie nearest to them. And of far Alephanus doth concur with Ptolemy, as to affirm of this Mount Sepphar, that it is Mons Indis, and Indian Mountain: both of them grounding on St. Hieron, who expressly saith, Sephara mons Orientis in India, juxta quam habitaverunt filii Jockan. i. e. That Sepphar, or Sepher, is the name of a Mountain of the East in India; near to which dwelt the Sons of Jokan. More probably, without doubt, than that we should transfer it into America, as I see some do, and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes, which runneth the whole length of Pern, from one end to the other, and thence, as some will have it, to the Straights of Magellan. Which should we grant, we must not look for Jokan, or the Sons of Jokan, either in Arabia Felix, where Bocharius placeth them; nor in the Eastern parts of Asia, where most probably they may be found; but we must cross the vast Oriental Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were; besides, that granting this for true, we must allow America to have been known in the time of Moses, which no Author that I ever met with, did so much as dream of.

Rivers of most note are, 1. Indus, which ariseth out of that part of Taurus, which the Ancients called Paropamisus, the Moderns, Nangraot; and having received into it 19 other Rivers, after a course of 900 miles, falleth into the Ocean at seven Mouths; that is to say, 1. Sagappa, being the most Western; 2. Sinbum, 3. Aureum, 4. Cariphi, 5. Sappara, 6. Sabalassa, 7. Louibare, the most Eastward. But five of these being choaked with Sands, or drawn into the neighbouring Channels, there now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and ancient Stories; for giving name unto the Country and that so celebrated voyage of Alexander, who sailed down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding above five months, of which there is said to have passed no day wherein he sailed not 15 miles, or 600 Furlongs. 2. Ganges, which riseth, as some say, from the Mountain Imam, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Imam falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is first collected into a Lake or Pool, (supposed by others for the fountain and original of it) whence with a gentler pace it passeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is said by Pliny, 30 navigable Rivers. In the narrowest place of eight miles breadth, in the broadest 20, seldom so shallow, but that the depth thereof is 100 foor, or 20 Geometrical paces. Parted into five great Channels it falleth at last into the Sea; the first of which most towards the West, is called Cambysium, 2. Magnum, 3. Camberebus, 4. Pindossomum, and 5. that which lieth furthest towards the East, called Amudoli. This River, erroneously supposed to be that Pisus which watered Paradise; and to encrease the reputation of the error, we find it countenanced by Josephus, and other no less eminent names; and also backed by some traditions of the people which inhabit near it. By whom it is affirmed, that one of the Bengalon Kings sent men up the River, who came at last to a pleasant place, blest with a fragrant Earth, sweet air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth so possess them, that at the mouth of this River called Ganges, such as are weary of this world use to cast themselves into the Current, and are presently devoured by a Fish, called Sea-dogs, by whom they hope to find a quick passage to Paradise. The occasion of which error among the Ancients, proceeded from those words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Pisón, that it compassed the Land of Havilah: which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River must be Pisón, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For besides Havilah the Son of Jokan, planted in some part of India, there was another Havilah the Son of Chus, settled in the Land of Havilah or Chusiana, not far from Babylon: this last indeed watered by the River Pisón, and the first by Ganges; too far asunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken or mistaken one for another. But no less famous, because none of those which neighboured the Garden of Eden, perhaps of greater fame than any of those which did. For this River do the superstitious Indians make their solemn Pilgrimages, vainly conceiving that they shall be sure of their Eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the people ascribe the fertility of the Countries adjoining, as the Egyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Country anciently, and at this present is, divided into two main parts, (each subdivided into many particular Provinces) viz. 1. India intra Gangem, 2. India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will first take a brief survey, with reference to the state and story of it in preceding times; and then consider them with reference to the present Age.

1. INDIA EXTRA GANGEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANGEM is bounded on the East, with the River Ganges, till the fall thereof into the Sea; and after that with that large and spacious Bay, called anciently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala; on the West, with Paropamisus, Arachosia, Gedrosia, Provinces of the Persian Empire; and part of the Arabian Seas; on the North, where it is broadest, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamisus, Caucasus, and other parts: and on the South, where it endeth in a sharp Point or Promontory, by Ptolomy called Commaria extrema, but now Cape Commari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being situate on the side of Ganges; by the Moderns, Indostan.

The Country of the same nature formerly, as it is at the present, not altered but by changing of the Channels of Indus; which being shifted by an Earthquake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a sandy Desert: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fatting and enriching all the Land which it overfloweth. The people of those elder times, much like the Scythians, especially in their course of life, living without Cities, Temples, Houses, in their movable Tents; their food the bark of a Tree, called Tala, which served for bread; and the flesh of Bucks, Does, and other Venison, with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free-men, but no Slaves to be found amongst them. Less warlike than the Scythians, but as great contempters of death as they; the very women contending eagerly amongst themselves, which should accompany their Husband (one Husband having many Wives) to his Funeral Pile. Of which thus St. Hierom, He igitur commendans de amore viri, & ambicio summa certantium est ac testimonium castitatis, dignum morte censeri. A Custom still retained amongst them; of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said in another place.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Hydaspes, by Ptolomy (and by him only) called Hydaspes, one of the furthest bounds of Alexander's Conquests. 2. Sutlus, 3. Cas, 4. Acesines, very memorable in the Jests of Alexander. 5. Sandabilis, 6. Zaradus: all coming from the Northern Mountains and all falling (Hydaspes with three other Rivers first received into it) into the great bed of Indus. 7. Diamna, 8. Sorabus, 9. Sos, falling from the like Northern Mountains, into the main Channel of Ganges. 10. Naragones, issuing from Mount Vindius. 11. Bari, from Bitrigi. 12. Chaberis, from Adisathri. 13. Tindus, from the hill called Ventius; and 14. Tina, from the Orodian Mountains, with many others of less note. By what names called at the present, I determine not; nor find I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doubtless to be found in 1. Catamul, 2. Cebcha, 3. Rba, 4. Chenao, 5. Ebeth, all Tributaries unto Indus, which is now called Schinda. 6. Tapi, 7. Harunda, 8. Chambel, 9. Jamena, which empty their waters into Ganges; the which, with such others of the principal Rivers as are now known by name to us, shall occasionally be touched on in that which followeth. Besides which Rivers, here is a famous Lake mentioned in the Jests of Alexander, (but the name occurreth not) not much above a mile in circuit, but exceeding pleasant, shaded on every side with woods, memorable for the great refreshment which it gave to Alexander's Army, when even pined with thirst.

The Country so exceeding populous in the time of Ptolomy, that it afforded him the names of more noted Cities, than any one Country in the world. Of which, 1. Cotiana, 2. Nigama, 3. Sageda, 4. Rarassa, 5. Mafopelle, and 6. Pisandra, are honoured with the name of Metropoles; as being the head Cities of their several and respective Nations. 7. Oxene, 8. Sora, 9. Palibothra, 10. Gange, 11. Batana, 12. Hippocra, 13. Cayra, 14. Madura, 15. Orubura, and 16. Melanga, mentioned as the Royal Seats of several Princes, by the name of Regie. 17. Bardaxoma, 18. Tydiv, 19. Argari, 20. Canula, 21. Chaberis, on the River so called. 22. Palura, on the shores of the Gulf of Bengala, and 25. Palura, on the banks of Cambyum. 24. Telegrammum, marked out above the rest with the name of Civitates (Cities) and therefore probably of more note than others not so distinguished. And finally, 25. Monoglossum, 26. Simylla, near a Promontory of the same name, 27. Nitra, 28. Mazirit, 29. Elanchorum, 30. Colchi, 31. Salir, 32. Sobura, 33. Poduca, 34. Melange, 35. Maliarpha, 36. Contacissila, 37. Nosyge, 38. Barygaza, specified as the most noted and celebrated Empories; besides 39. Cambymus, 40. Snathm, (and 41. a Road opposite to Chrysin) two commodious Stations or Roads for shipping. The names and situation of these places is the most we find of them, which makes me pass them over with a bare recital, only to show how populous and well planted this Country was in the time of my Author.

Of less name, but of more note in the course of story, 1. Nysa, built by Bacchus at the time of his Indian Conquest, and called thus by the name of his Nurse, to preserve her memory, his Mother dying in Child-birth of him. Replenished by him with his sick and wounded Souldiers, whose Posterity continued here till the time of Alexander, who spared the City and the People for his love to Bacchus, who was therein worshipped in a Temple of his own foundation, planted about with Bays, Vines, and Ivy, whose shady branches covered the roof of it. In the midst thereof an Image, with all the Instruments belonging to a plentiful Vintage, all of Gold or Silver.

Silver. 2. Taxilla, or Taxiala, as Ptolomy calleth it; seated betwixt Indus and Hydaspes, in the Region called Verfa, and built most probably by Taxiles, a puissant King of India, in the time of Alexander. Adorned in elder times with a Temple dedicated to the Sun, and therein with an Ivory Image of Ajax; a Golden Statue of Alexander, and the portraiture of King Porus made in Copper. The floor of Mosaic work powdered with Pearls, the Walls of red Marble interlaid with Gold, which made it shine a far off, like a flash of lightning. 3. Nagara, called also Dionysopolis in memory of Bacchus, who was also called Dionysius, and Liber Pater. 4. Adorne, by Diodorus called Aornus, and Avernus by Strabo; so strongly seated on a Rock, that Hercules was not able to force it: which made Alexander, (imitating, and therein out-going the Acts of Hercules) assault it with the greater force, and at last he carried it. 5. Bucephala, built by Alexander on the banks of Hydaspes, and named thus in memory of Bucephalus, his beloved horse, which had served him in all the course of his Fortunes, and dyed hereabouts, being then thirty years old. 6. Pireta, another of his foundations, so called by the name of his Dog whom he dearly loved. 7. Alexandria, on the banks of Indus, another of his foundations also. 8. Mazaga, on the West of Indus, one of the first Towns of India, taken by the Macedonians, though garrisoned within, and invincibly without by an Host of 300000 men: but yielded after some resistance, with the use of her own body, by Cleopatra the Queen thereof, who received it back with other favours, from the hands of the Conquerour. 9. Nora, a strong City on the same side of Indus, taken by Polyperchon, one of his Commanders. 10. Samus, on the banks of the same River, taken by Alexander in the course of his Navigation down that Sea of Waters; the Inhabitants whereof fought against him with poisoned Arrows, with one of which Ptolomy, (afterward King of Egypt) was dangerously wounded, and cured with an herb which Alexander dreamt he had seen in the mouth of a Serpent. 11. Oxydrace, the chief City of the Oxyraians; at the Siege whereof Alexander is said to be the first that scaled the Walls, and the last that could do so, the Ladder breaking as soon as he was at the top. Standing thus alone as a mark to all their Darts, he was by the Souldiers desired to leap down amongst them; he in a daring bravado leaped into the Town among his Enemies: where it was not only his good hap to light upon his feet, but to have an old Tree at his back to defend him behind. In this posture he is said to have maintained the fight a long time, against all the Souldiers of the Town; killing two of them with his own hands; and by that example teaching the rest to be more manly, till being wearied, and dangerously wounded, he was forced to leave his feet, and commit the weight of his body to his knees. In this case Leonatus, Peneestes, and some other of his Captains, came to assist him; who defended their dying Master, till the whole Army entered the Town, and put all the people to the sword, in revenge of their King, whose life they had little hope to enjoy: though he with much danger did afterward recover. For my part I give little or no credence to this story, ranging it in the same Catalogue of truth with the Adventures of Donzel del Phabo, Rosileer, Belianis, Amadus, and the rest of the rabble of Knights Errant. Neither is this the first time that Curtius hath disgraced the foundries of Alexander's Judgment, and the truth of his Actions, with the like idle and impossible Fables: though indeed in that particular, he saith that it was multo magis adsemeritatis quam de gloria famam. And 12. Nicea, built by Alexander on the banks of Acesines, in memory of his many great and signal Victories, Not far from which, finding how unwilling his Souldiers were to pass further East, he purposed to have buried him some Monument of his great Exploits, and to make his fame immortal amongst the Indians. And to that end he caused the form of his Camp to be enlarged, and the Cabins to be made bigger than sufficed for his men to lodge in; the Mangers to be set higher than his Horses could reach; Armour and Bills for horses of too great a size (made not for use, but ostentation of his might) to be scattered up and down the Camp, for the savage people to wonder at in the times to come. By means whereof he got nothing amongst knowing men, but suspicion that his Actions were intended less memorable, than they are reported to have been; since he so vainly laboured to have them thought greater, than indeed they were.

The old Inhabitants heretofore, where the Indo-Scythes, inhabiting on the North-West of Indus, the Mazaga, Sadam, Pirate, Limyrices, Aii, the Soringi, Arvari, Oxydrace, Moli, and Lambate, the Gandarides, or Gangarides, near the mouth of Ganges, the Cassites, under the shades of Mount Vindius. The Musciani, Chatziei, Polinde, Phyllite, Bitrigi, Chadramuite, Pezzari, Adisathri, Mandale, Drylphita, Sabare, Pandiani, with many others, to the number of 122. several Nations, if Megasthenes be not out in his reckoning, too many and too impetuous to be mustered here.

Originally descended from the Sons of Noah, before they left these Eastern parts to go towards the unfortunate Valley of Shinar. We could not else have found this Country so full of people in the days of Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus: who leading an Army compounded of several Nations, to the number of four Millions and upwards (if Ctesias, and Diodorus Siculus, who reports it from him, be of any credit; but certainly the greatest Army that ever was raised) was encountered by Sinurobater, a King of India, with greater force made up of natural Indians only; by whom she was vanquished and slain. A matter beyond all belief, though neither Army could make up a fourth part of that number, if the Indians had been no other than some one of these Colonies, which were sent from ABEL; or rather a second or third Swarm of those former Colonies, which went thence under the command of the first Adventurers. For that any of the first Adventurers, who were present at the building of the Tower of ABEL, travelled so far East, is not affirmed by any who have laboured in the search of their Plantations. So that I take it for a matter undeniable, that the Plantation of India preceded the attempt of ABEL; though by whom made, there is nothing to be said for certain: Yet if I might have liberty to express my own conceptions, I am inclinable to believe that all the Eastern parts of Persia, with China, and both the Indians were peopled by such of the Sons of Sem, as went not with the rest to the valley of Shinar. For otherwise I can see no reason, that the Posterity of Japheth should plant the greatest part of the Lesser Asia, and the whole Continent of Europe, with the Isles thereof; and that the Sons of Cham should spread themselves over Babylonia, Palestina, the three Arabias, and the whole Continent of Africa: the Posterity of Sem being thus up in a corner, the Greater Asia, hardly so big as some one of the Provinces taken up by the other Adventurers. And therefore that I may allow to the Sons of Sem an equal Latitude, I think it not improbable to fix them in these Eastern Countries; spreading themselves this way as they grew in numbers, before the rest of the Adventurers went to seek new fortunes at the Tower of ABEL. And being that the Country was large and wealthy and might have room enough to spare for some second comers (especially descending from the same root with them,) I doubt doubt not but place here all the Sons of Jokan, Havilah, Chafarmaveib, Saba, Abimail, who have left here some tract or monument of themselves, as hath been shown at large in our GENERAL PREFACE; and as concerning Opbir, shall be shewed hereafter. To proceed therefore to our Story, the next who made any invasion on this Country, after that of Semiranius, was Bacelus, or Liber Pater, the Son of Jupiter and Semele, accompanied with Hercules Ægyptius, not much more fortunate than she: the forces of Bacelus being defeated, and Hercules forced to throw away his Golden Shield. But what they could not do by Arms, the effected by Arts. Bacelus instructing them in the use of Wine, Oyl, Sacrifices, and the Art of Architecture, and drawing them in to Towns and Cities; for that cause honoured as a GOD. To Hercules they ascribe the Nation of the Pandionii, proceeding from a Daughter of his called PANDÆA: the memory of both preserved in Statues and Pillars erected by them.

After this, unattempted till the time of Alexander, who having made a full Conquest of the Persian Empire, invaded India with an Army of 120000 fighting men. Beginning with CLEOPHÆ, Queen of the Magaze, a people of Indo-Scythia, he brought her to conformity, possessed himself both of her Person and Estate; on whom he begat a Son called Alexander, who is said to have succeeded in her Dominions. Being passed over the River Indus, Taxiles (by some called Ompbis) a prudent Prince, whose Kingdom is affirmed to be bigger than Ægypt, submitted of his own accord: offering his service and assistance to promote his Conquest; and presenting him with a Crown of Gold, and 80 Talents of ready money. This King made welcome, but his money not so much as looked on; the Macedonians being so far from sparing of this Indian Gold, that he gave him a thousand Talents of his own Treasure. Encouraged by this Royal dealing, Abisjares, another puissant Prince of the opposite Faction unto Taxiles, submitted also, and was as graciously received. Porus, whose Kingdom lay on the other side of the Hydaspes, would not be so conquered; and therefore mustered up his Forces, and valiantly made good the banks of the River. But vanquished at last, not without much difficulty, he was made a Prisoner to the Victor; who honouring the man for his brave resistance, gave him his liberty and Kingdom, with a great enlargement. The Conquerour had a great desire to go further East, but the Soldiers would not be persuaded; sufficiently taught by Porus, what they were to look for, if the Indians should unto their Forces. Unable to prevail, he erected in the place twelve Altars, as high as Towers; where he observed many solemn Games and Sacrifices: and having sacrificed to Hydaspes, Indus, and Acsines, he sailed down Indus, towards the Southern Ocean; which seen at distance, he turned towards Gedrosia, and thence to Babylon, where he dyed.

After his death Samenes raised some part of his Forces hence, but the Macedonians being plunged in a Civil War, one Andracottus stirred up the Indians to recover their freedoms, making himself at first their Captain, but at last their King. Possessed of all that had been conquered by the Greeks, he was encountered by Selenus, who had then got the command of Asa: against whom he brought an Army of 60000 fighting men, and contracted wherewith, Selenus made peace with him, and contracted a solemn League betwixt them, continued with the interchange of friendly Offices amongst their Posterity; and more confirmed by an interview betwixt Antiochus the Great, and Saphagesius, one of the Successors of Andracottus; by whom Antiochus was presented with 250 Elephants; and the promise of some treasure to be sent after him. By the Posterity of Andracottus was the Kingdom held, till the prosperity and full height of the ROMAN Empire. The power wherof though they rather knew by report than tryal, yet was it not amiss to entertain a potent, though remote Seat, in terms of amity. Therefore they sent Embassadors unto Augustus, who presented him with a number of Tigers, (which Beasts, saith Dion, till then, the Roman people had never seen) and which was the most pleasing, a little Boy born without Arms, who with his feet could bend a Bow, shoot, and play on wind-instruments, as exactly as others with their hands. Trajan the Emperour had a great desire to see this Country, but was diverted from that purpose by matters of more necessary importance to the state of his Empire. Moved with the fame of Antoninus the Roman Emperour, they sent a solemn Embassage unto him, making him Umpire in some Controversies which they had with the Bactrians: from which Embassadors it is probable that Ptolomy the Geographer who then lived, might receive his informations of the Estate of this Country. The like they did to Julian the Apollon also, then setting forwards on his Expedition against the Persians, desiring his friendship and alliance. How it was with them in the time of Constantine and Justinian, hath been shewn already. After these times by little and little, Histories have in a manner been silent concerning the affairs hereof; but for some conquests made on the parts next Persia, by the Caliphs of Bagdat. For notwithstanding that there was continual traffick from the Red Sea hither; and between the Persians, Turkijis, and Indian Merchants for Spices, and the other Commodities of this Region: yet were not these Merchants acquainted with the state of the Country, because they entered not into it; but were met by the Indian Merchants at Samarcand, being as it were the common Empory. Neither did the Ægyptians at all enter into India, but were met by the Indians at Ormus, or some other Island: even as now the Chinois make some of the Philippine, the Staple of their Trade with the Spaniards, whom they licence not to come into the Continent among them. But our modern Travellers and Navigators have withdrawn this mask of obscurity, and shew us her lively portraiture in as lively colours. One of the first which brake the Ice, and gave us any certainty of their affairs, was Sir John Mandeville; accompanied at his coming back for the greatest Fabler in the World: so incredible seemed his reports of the magnificence of those Kings, and the wealth of their Countries, and the many rarities which he found amongst them. But better thought of by our neighbours, he obtained a Monument of his Life and Travels, 1372.) the Friars of which keep some things of his, Comma pour honorable memoire de son excellence, for an honourable memorial of his Excellence. Many of his Relations since confirmed by the Portugals, who under the conduct of Vasquez de Gama first discovered this Country, by the new way of the Cape of Good Hope, Anno 1499. or thereabouts. For so it happened, that the Portugals having discovered all the Coasts of Africk, as far as to Cape Verd, by the encouragement, and at the charge of Henry Duke of Visco, one of the younger Sons of King John the first, began to think upon some way to the wealth of India, and getting into their own hands the rich trade of that Country. To which end it was first thought, that Pedro di Camanilla, and Alphonso de Padua, should make a journey into the East parts; to learn the certainty of the Spice trade, and make report of such other Commodities as these Countries yielded. Being come at last by long journeys to the City of Calicut, and having satisfied themselves in the inquiry which they came about, they prepare for their return return to Portugal. Padua dying in the Journey, and Cammanilla, though detained by the Habassin Emperour (commonly, but corruptly, called Prester John) sends home a full relation of his success; inflamed with which, King John the second sends out Bartholomew Diaz, Anno 1587. to find out a way into the Indies by the back of Africa: who having sailed as far as the Cape of good Hope, without giving end to the Adventure, returned back to Portugal. Undertaken with better fortune 10 years after, at the command of King Emanuel, by Vasquez de Gama, above mentioned; who doubling the Cape, and sailing Northward, all along the shores of Africk, as far as the Kingdom of Melinde, received from the King thereof both Pilots and instructions to bring him to Calicut, where he found all true which Cammanilla had before reported. Full of good news at the end of 26 Months from his first setting out, he returns to Lisbone, received for the present with joy and triumph, and about two years after (that is to say 1502.) furnished with 13 Ships and three Caravels, he sets forward again, followed by Stephen de Gama the same year with 5 Ships more, by which great strength he made himself Master of some Ports; and by that means laid the foundation of that great Command, which the Portugals have attained unto in these Eastern Countries. Seconded in this great enterprise by Ferdinando de Almeida, and Alphonso de Albuquerque, and other noble Adventurers of the Realm of Portugal, as after them by such of the European Nations as had the benefit and trade of the Western Ocean.

If it be asked, why the Castilians, or Spaniards, being strong in shipping, bent not themselves to the discovery of these wealthy Countries? it may be answered, 1. That they were busied at the same time in the discovery and conquest of the New World, which they looked on as a nearer, and no less profitable booty than this of India. 2. The Commodities of this Country, being brought home by the Portugals, were sold to them at far cheaper rates, than they could have fetched them in their own bottoms. 3. And chiefly because by the definitive sentence of Pope Alexander the sixth, both the Castilians, and the Portugals, were so limited in their Navigations, that the Castilians might not intermeddle in the Eastern, nor the Portugals in the discovery or Conquest of the Western parts, beyond the bounds which he had set to those several Nations before-mentioned; and by some latter observations who have been informed, that in this part of India were no fewer than 47 Kingdoms, whereof some few have still their own natural Kings, the rest all subject to the power of the Great Mongul, contracted into a lesser number by joining many lesser Territories into one Division. We shall look on it as distributed into 15 Provinces. Some have reduced them unto five, but give us neither the bounds nor extent of any of them. And others in the description of their travels, ramble up and down with such uncertainties (most of them being men of Trades and ignorance) that though they tell us where they lodged, and what entertainments they did meet with, yet we shall hardly know by them (for I think they did not know themselves) in what Province they were, or to what part the several Towns, thorow which they passed did of right belong. So that our passage thorow these Countries (having such blind guides to follow) will be full of difficulty, and not so satisfactory to the Reader as he might expect. Howsoever, I desire him to bear me company, whilst I take the best survey I can of these 15 Provinces, to which the whole may be most handsomely reduced: that is to say, 1. Dulsinda, 2. Pengab, 3. Mandao, 4. Delly, 5. Agra, 6. Sanga, 7. Cambaia, 8. Decan, 9. Canaras, 10. Malabar, 11. Narsinga, 12. Orijan, 13. Botanor, 14. Paisenaw, and 15. Bengala.

DULSINDA is bounded on the East, with the River Indus; on the West, with Paropamisus, and Arachosia, two Persian Provinces, but for the most part under the command of the Great Mongul; on the North, with Caucasus, by whom parted from Tartary; on the South, with the Kingdom of Cambaia. So that it taketh up all the Northern parts of this Estate, which lye upon the West of the River Indus; from which River called by the Natives Sinda, most probable it is that it took this name: and therefore I have written it with an s, Dulsinda, and not Dulcinda with a c, as I see some do, but on no good reason, for any thing that I am able to understand.

The Country, by the reason of the Northern situation of it, more temperate, but less fruitful than the rest of India. The Seat, in ancient times, of the Muzage and Indo-Scythia, when subdued by Alexander. Made up at present, of many lesser Kingdoms, and smaller Provinces; denominated, for the most part, from the Principal Towns and Cities of them; as in other places.

Amongst which those of most esteem, are 1. Caximir, Casimir, or Chesmir, (for by all these names it is called) the chief of a Kingdom once, unto which it gave name, till subdued by Ecebar the Mongul; who in a pleasant Island, (in the midst of a great and deep Lake, about three Leagues off the City) beset round with Trees, built a Royal Palace: which he honoured sometimes with his Court, removed hither from Labor, partly the better to assure this new conquered Kingdom; but principally because his Palace of Labor, and therein an infinite deal of Treasure, had but newly been consumed by fire. The City it self situate in the most healthy Country of all India, encompassed with high Mountains, covered for the most part of the year with Snow, the rest a delicate, goodly Plain, diversified with Pastures, Woods, Cornfields, Meadows, Parks, Gardens, and Rivers, even to admiration. The Air hereof, and of the Country round about, by reason of the Northern situation of it, and the snowy Mountains, very cool and temperate. The soyl abundantly Productive of Wheat, Rice, and Vines; which last they plant at the foot of the Mulberry tree, which seemeth by this means to bear double fruits. Both Town and Kingdom subdued by Ecebar, the Mongul, about the year 1597. their own dissensions more conducing to that subjugation, than any visible force which he brought before it. 2. Roree, a Fort of the Monguls towards Paropamisus; but bordering upon the Country of Multan, to which people it properly belongeth: Garrisoned not so much for fear of the Persian, (for Paropamisus, now called Cabal, in his ancient Patrimony,) but to preserve the People from the Spoil of Thieves, who all ways hang about the Mountains. 3. In the most Northern parts hereof, stood the Nagara of Ptolomy; mislooked by some for the modern Agra, of which more anon. 4. Saiban, the Chief City; as I take it, of the Kingdom of Rabab; situate on the East of Caximir, betwixt it and the Indus: in the same Latitude with that, but not of so temperate an air; the snowy Mountains much conducing to the temperate of the Realm of Caximir. 5. Molatan, a great and ancient City, and the chief of a Kingdom, on the South of Caximir, or Chesmir; and about three French Leagues from the banks of the River Indus. The ordinary thorowfare of the Caravans in the way from Labor to Spaban, (the chief Seat of the Sophy or King of Persia) forced to abide three divers days, sometimes ten, or twelve to enrich the Town; which of itself is of no great trading, nor otherwise able to subsist but by advice.

device; famed most especially for many excellent Bows and Arrows made in it. The Bows made of Horn, excellently glewed and put together; the Arrows of small Cains or Reeds, both of them set off by rich Paint and Varnish. They which are made here being more neat and good than in any part of East India besides. There is another Town or Kingdom of or near this name on the other side of the River Indus, of which we shall speak more in its proper place. 6. Duckee, a Fort or Garrison, situate in the Straights of the Mountains to secure the Caravans, and protect other Passengers from the danger of Robbers, hovering in these Hill-Countries, the out-parts of this Empire.

2. PENGAB.

Opposite to Dulsinda, on the Eastern side of the River Indus, but more inclining towards the South, lieth the Country, or division rather, which my Author calleth by the name of PENGAB: bounded on the West, with Indus, which divideth it from Dulsinda; on the South, with the Kingdom of Mandao; on the North, and East, with those many Kingdoms, which we have comprehended under the name of Botanier.

The reason of the name I find not, nor any thing memorable of the Country; but that it was divided in the time of Ptolemy, into the Provinces of the Lambate, Caspria, Cylindrine, and Sansene: subdued by Alexander in his Expedition into India: the famous Rivers of Acfiner and Hydaspis (but by what names now called I find not) having here their fountains. So that it seemeth to have been a part of the Kingdom of Porus, or that the Kingdom of Porus was a part of this.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Labor, on the Eastern banks of Indus, affirmed to be the fairest and most ancient City in both the Indies; of most esteem for wealth and greatness. In compass about sixteen miles, and honoured for a while with the ordinary Residence of the Great Mongul; till on the burning of his Palace, spoken of before, he removed his Court to Casimier, from thence to Fatipore, and at last to Agra. Since that time made the Seat of the eldest Son, or Heir apparent, sent hither for avoiding all occasion of Factions, which their living in the Court might breed. A City of exceeding Trade, as being the chief Staple for the Spices in these parts, and other commodities of India, from hence transported into Persia by the way of Candahor, the principal Town of Arabia; and to Spahan, the chief City of the Sophian Empire, where they are sold, by reason of so long and chargeable a journey, or excessive rates. It is said that 12000 Camels at the least, pass every year thorough it with their lading; besides what is ferried down the River, and brought up by the Portugals, who therewith traded unto Ormus, till that Town was Taken. By this we may conjecture at the wealth thereof, but more by that great mass of Treasure which a late Governour hereof did leave behind him. At whose death Echebar the Mongul (for the Mongul is the Heir General unto all mens Wealth) found in his Coffers three Millions of Gold ready coyned, great quantity of Gold and Silver uncoyned, and some store of Jewels; besides Horses, Elephants, Household-furniture, and other goods almost invaluable. 2. Sultan-pore, of more antiquity than beauty, yet of good esteem. 3. Athen, in the common Road from Labor to China; reported in the description of the Travels of Benedictus a City, a Portugall Jesuite, to be a months journey from Labor, and yet in the same Province with it. Which if it be true, either the Province must be large, or his journey short; or if not true, we must remember that we had it from the Pen of a Jesuite. And yet as great as this Province or Division is affirmed to be, we do not find the names of any more Towns of consideration, which may be said with confidence to belong unto it; unless perhaps we may reduce under this Division the Kingdoms of Haisaan and Buebor, of which last the chief City is called Bueborjaccor, enriched by the neighbourhood of the Indus, but not else observable.

3. MANDAO.

THE Kingdom of MANDAO is bounded on the North, with Pengab; on the South, with the Realm of Agra; on the East, with Delly; and on the West, with the River Indus. So called from Mandao, the chief City of it.

The Country more Mountainous and rugged than the rest of these Provinces, by reason of the many branches of Mount Bittigo (the Southern part of the Imam) which do over-run it; in other things partaking of the riches of India. The men, as most of those who live in such Mountainous Tracts, of a warlike temper, comparatively with the rest of the Indians: the women here anciently as valiant as the men in other places: riding a horse, and practiced in the Arts of Horsemanship; for that cause called Amazons; some of which are said to be still remaining. Inasmuch as it is written in the stories hereof, that the King of this Country not long since going to the wars, was accompanied by the Queen his Wife, marching in the Front of two thousand women, all well mounted and prepared for service.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Mandao, seated on the banks of the River Mandao, (the Mandao of Ptolemy and the Ancients) whence it had the name. A City of great note, said to be 30 miles in compass; yet so well fortified and furnished with all manner of necessities for defence and resistance, that it held out twelve years against Mirramadius, or Merhamed the Great Mongul, who then besieged it. Surrendered at last, and with it the Kingdom. Memorable for the great battle fought before it, betwixt the said Merhamed, then coming to the relief thereof, and Badurius King of Cambaja, who had then distressed it: in which Badurius lost his Tents and Treasures, and was fain to fly disguised unto Dim, to crave aid of the Portugals. 2. Moltan, which being mistaken for another Town, of or near the same name, on the Western side of the Indus, is by some Writers, said to have been once the chief City of a Kingdom, or a Kingdom rather of it self, but of no great note: the women whereof, though not so good Souldiers as their Ancestors of the Female Sex, yet to come as near them as they can, use boots and spurs when they take a journey, and so fitted sit astride the saddle. 3. Sernus, on the River so called, of more antiquity than greatness, as is also, 4. Polybotbie, the Polibotbra of Ptolemy and others of the ancient Writers; then the chief Town of the Palibothri (by Pliny and Strabo called Prassi) a people of as great authority and power as any in India.

This once a Kingdom of it self of great power and wealth, till Badurius King of Cambaja having conquered the Realm of Citor, and therewith a great part of Sanga, made an attempt upon this also. Galgee, then King of Mandao, finding himself too weak for so strong an Enemy, craved aid of Merhamed (or Mirramadius as the Latines) the Mongul Tartar, then reigning in Chambul or Arachosia, and possessed of some parts of India also, since the times of Tamerlane. Who compounding an Army of his own Subjects, some mercenary Persians, and a great body of Zogabian Tartars, from whom originally defended, came in accordingly: discomfited the vast Army of Badurius, consisting of 150000 Horses and and 500000 foot, in two set battels, the first at Duceti, the next at Mandao, and following his blow, possessed himself of the whole Kingdom of Cambaja. But not content with that success, quarrelled the Mandao King in whose aid he came; besieged him in his principal City, which at last he won, and therewithal the Kingdom also: the wretched King shewing hereby both a fair evidence and example to succeeding Ages, that the easiest way for a Prince to ruin his own Estate, and endanger his neighbours, is to admit a Foreign power into his own Dominions; which he cannot as easily thrust out, as he hath brought them in.

4. DELLY.

DELLY is bounded on the West, with Mandao; on the East, with the Kingdom of Botanur; on the North, with the Eastern parts of Pengab on the South, with the Eastern parts also of the Kingdom of Agra. So named from DELLY, the chief City of it, by some called Delin.

The Country, besides what is common to it with the rest of India, is said to be more abundantly stored than any other part of it, with Horses, Elephants, and Dromedaries. Of the people nothing singular. Except it be that many of them taking more delight in thievery than honest trades, live for the most part upon spoil; but those especially whom they call by the name of Belemi, being such of the Nobility or better sort, who since the Conquest of their Country by the Great Mongul, have lived like Out-Laws on the Mountains. Of the same temper with the Resbutes in Cambaja, and the Agrians in Sanga and Dulsinda; who rather than submit themselves to a Foreign yoke, (as they count that of the Mongul) chuse to forsake their proper dwellings, and all honest ways and means of living.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Delly, a City not only honoured heretofore with the residence of the great Mongul, who from hence pass in common appellation, by the names of the Kings of Delly, and that amongst their most knowing Subjects; but beautified with many Sepulchres of their ancient Kings, whose Funerals and Coronations were herein celebrated. And though deserted of late times, by the Great Mongul, moving their Courts from place to place; as they enlarged their Empire, and encreased their Conquests: yet still a great many of the Nobles, and not a few Captains and Commanders, do frequent the same, and have their houses of pleasure and retirement into it. 2. Tremel, upon the Western side of the River Mandao; but not much observable. 3. Duceti, memorable for the great battle fought near unto it, in which Merhamed the Mongul overthrew the forces of Badurius, and thereby opened a fair way to the Realm of Cambaja.

This Country governed a long time by its natural Princes, was at last conquered by some Moors, or Saracens coming from Persia and Arabia, but I find not which; who grew to so great power and wealth, that Sansaradine a Mahometan, one of their Descendants, dreamt of no less than the conquest of all India, if not of the whole continent of Asia also. Having about the year 1300. (memorable for beginning of the Ottoman Empire) subdued by little and little all the neighbouring Princes which made head against him; he pierced at last into Canora, now called Decon: and conquering a great part of it, returned back to Delly. The pursuit of his Victories he left unto one Abdessa his Lieutenant there, who added the rest of that Country to his Masters Territories, but kept the possession to himself; confirmed therein by Sansaradine, with the title of Regent. But Sansaradine dying in a War against the Persians, left for his Successor a Son so unlike his Father, that he conquered Provinces revolted from him unto other Masters, more able to govern and protect them. Confined unto its former bounds, it remained notwithstanding of sufficient power to preserve it self, from any of their equal neighbours, till the rising of the Great Mongul; whose puissance being unable to withstand, it submitted at last to Adabar, the Son of Merhamed, the second Emperour of this Line: who to assure himself of the peoples loyalty, and conquest; settled his Court a while at Delly, the chief City of it; from whence removed on the next prosperous emergency, as before was noted.

5. AGRA.

THE Realm of AGRA is bounded on the North, with Delly, and Mandao; on the South, with Sanga and Cambaja; on the West, with Indus, which parteth it from the Province of Sinda, a part of the Kingdom of Cambaja; on the East, with Orissa, or Oriaa. So called from Agra the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royal of late times of the Great Mongul.

The Country said to be the best and most pleasant of India, plentiful in all things, and such a delicate even piece of ground, as the like is hardly to be seen. Well watered, as with other Rivers, so most especially with those of Tamlico and Jemena, which last runneth thorough the midst of it, North and South, or rather from the North-west to the South-east, from whence bending more directly Eastwards, it falleth at last into the Ganges, or that which is supposed to be Ganges; for the head of that great River is not certainly known. The people for the most part Gentiles, Mahometanism coming in with the Great Mongul; and generally inclining somewhat to the Pythagorean. For such as live upon the banks of the River Jemena, neither eat flesh, nor kill any thing. The waters of which River they esteem so sacred, that thereof they usually make their Temple, and say their Prayers therein, but naked (in which posture they both dress their meat and eat it) lodging upon the ground, being imposed by them as penance, and so conceived.

Places of most esteem herein, 1. Fattipore or Fettibarris, on the West side of the River, a very fair and goodly City, once beautified with a Royal Palace here built by Echebar (after the removal of his Court from Casimier) with many spacious Gardens belonging to it; but much decayed, since the fixing of the Court at Agra, to which most of the stones are carried, and so small quantity of Corn sowed within the Walls. 2. Agra, on the North bank of the River Jemena, inferior to Labor for wealth and greatness, but far more populous: the constant residence of the Court here in these latter times, drawing to it great resort of all sorts of people. By some supposed to be the Nagara of Ptolemy, but such a supposition as is built on no better ground, than some resemblance of the names. For Ptolemy's Nagara is by him placed on the Western side of Indus, in the Latitude of 33, whereas this Agra standeth on the East of the River Jemena, five degrees more Southwards, in the Latitude of 28. But what it loseth in antiquity, it hath got in honour: the Town and Territory being a peculiar Kingdom, till Echebar the Mongul subdued it, Anno 1598, in his passage from Labor to Decon. But it lost nothing by the hand: for Echebar delighted in the situation of it (and that withall it stood in the midst of his Kingdoms) made it the Seat-Royal of his Empire; fix there, for the most part ever since: by means whereof exceedingly increased in wealth, beauty, and greatness: the very Castle in which the Mongul usually resideth, being two miles in compass.

invironed with most high and unscalable Walls, and fortified with great store of Ordnance. The whole space betwixt it and Fatipore, being 18 miles, beautified with many Mahometan Temples, and with one also built by Echebar, for the use of such Christians as had been gained unto the faith, by the care and diligence of the Jesuites. For the supply hereof with Victuals, and other necessary provisions, and the security of such as resort unto its affirmed to be a continual Market: and all the Interval from hence to the Town of Labor (from which distant 400 miles towards the South) adorned with continual Rows of Trees on both sides of the ways, most of them bearing a kind of Mulberry; and at every ten miles end, houses erected by the King or some of the Nobles, for beautifying the way to the Regal City, for preserving their own memory, and the safe lodging of Passengers, in danger otherwise by night, of Thieves and Cut-throats. 3. Hende, a Town more towards the South, beautified with a fair Castle of the Kings, cut out of the main Rock, and wrought with carved work round about; fortified with 50 Pieces of Ordnance, and thought impregnable; for that cause made a Prison for great Persons. Here are also two Hospitals for such Captains (and Captains only) as are maintained in the Wars. 4. Biani, twelve course or 18 miles from Battipore; the most noted place for Indies in all the Indies; for the making whereof they have here a twelve Mills. Which Indies (by the way) groweth on a small shrub like our Gooseberry bushes, bearing seed like a Cabbage seed: which being cut down, are laid in heaps for half a year, and when rotten, brought into a Vault to be trodden with Oxen from the stalks; and being ground small and fine at the Mills, is left of all boiled in Furnaces, refined, and sorted, and so sold to the Merchants.

To this division also me may reduce the Kingdom of Gwalior, so called of Gwalier the chief City, where the Mangul hath a very rich Treasury of Gold and Silver; kept in a strong Castle, wherein his Prisoners are secured likewise; and for those reasons, continually guarded by a strong Company of stout and well appointed Souldiers.

6. SANGA.

SANGA is bounded on the North, with the East parts of the Realm of Agra; on the South, and West, with Cambaia; from which parted on the West, by the Mountain Gates; and on the East, with Oristan. The reason of the name I find not: this Country being too far South to be so called from Sangalassa, a Town of chief note near the Fountains of Indus, where placed by Arianus lib. 5.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Azimere, or Agimer 180 miles from Agra. At the end of every course (each course a mile and a half) a fair Pillar erected, and at every tenth course a fair Seraglio, (such as we call Inns) for the entertainment of Travellers. All built by Echebar, who wanting children, is said to have gone in Pilgrimage on foot from Ara to Azimere, saying his Prayers at the end of every course, and lodging all night at the tenth. 2. Citor, the chief City of Sanga, and once a Kingdom of it self, or the chief of that Kingdom. Situate in the middle way betwixt Surat, a known Port of Cambaia and Agra spoken of before; and most magnificently built on the top of a rocky-hill, to which the passage is so narrow, and so well fortified, (there being in it three Gates, at the top, the middle, and the bottom) that thereby, and by other advantages of Art and Nature, it was thought impregnable. Affirmed to be 12 miles in compass, beautified with many good buildings both publick and private; but once more glorious than it is; here being to be seen the ruins of 100 Temples, and above 100000 houses, either demolished by the Wars, or suffered to decay by the Great Mongul, who would not willingly have any thing in the Indies of more Antiquity than themselves; and therefore are rather inclined to build new Cities, than uphold the old. The greatness and antiquity of it have made some men think, that it was the Royal Seat of Porus. Others affirm the same of Delly, but neither rightly: the Kingdom of Porus lying more towards the River Indus, and not so far South. Governed not long since by a Queen called Crementina, not more fair than valiant, who revolting from Badurins King of Cambaia, to whom the formerly had paid tribute, was dispossessed of the Town of Citor, where she had fortified her self with 30000 Foot, and 2000 Horse: the people in a desperate resolution, laying all their Treasure on a heap, which they burnt together with themselves, in which flame it is said that there perished 70000 persons. But the Cambaia did not long enjoy his Victory, for not long after both the City and a great part of the Country was conquered by the Great Mongul; the mountainous parts hereof being held against him by Ramee, the Son or Successor of Queen Crementina: till seeing himself destitute of all better helps, he put himself into the hands of one of the Sons of the late Sultan, by whom reconciled unto his Father. Some other Towns there are in this Province, and in the rest before mentioned; and those of good esteem perhaps amongst the Natives: but of no observation or importance in the course of business. Under this name we may also comprehend the Kingdom of Nagracil, so called of the chief City of it; and that most memorable for a rich and sumptuous Chappel, cieled and paved with Plate of pure Silver, most curiously imbossed over-head in several figures, which they keep exceeding bright, with often rubbing and continual burnishing. Malway, another of these Kingdoms, for its near neighbourhood to Citor, may be placed here also, affirmed to be a fruitful Province, and the chief City of it to be called Rampipore.

7. CAMBAIA.

CAMBAIA hath on the East, Delly, and part of Mandao; on the West, Gedrosia, a Province of the Persian Empire; on the North, Dulinda, and the rest of Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean, and some part of Deean. It lieth on both sides of the Indus; and is so called from Cambaia, the chief Province of it. The whole divided into 1. Sinda, 2. Guzarate, and 3. Cambaia, especially so called.

1. SINDA, (by some called the Kingdom of Tutta, from Tutta the chief City of it) hath on the East, the River Indus, by which separated from Mandao; on the North, that part of India which is called Dulinda; on the West, part of Gedrosia and Guzarate, and on the South, the rest of Guzarate only: coasting along the Western banks of the River Indus, whence it had the name; that River being now called Schind, as was said before. And for this reason, as I take it, the Western part of India lying North of this took the name of Dulinda, and not Dulinda (with a C) as most commonly written.

The Country for the generality very rich and fertile; but in some places nothing but a sandy Desert, inhabited for the most part by wild Asses, Foxes, Deer, and some wilder beasts; but none so wild as the Calier, a robbing Nation, so numerous wical, that they sometimes rob whole Caravans as they pass that way; notwithstanding the the many Forts and Castles built of purpose to secure those passages.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tutta (Gutu Negar Tutta) on the banks of Indus, a Town of great Trade, but most frequented by the Portugals, who here receive such Indian Commodities as come down the water from Labor, returning Pepper in exchange, which they bring up the River from their other Factories. 2. Lawribander, at the mouth or out-let of the Indus, three days journey from Tutta, the Port-Town unto which it is, notwithstanding that distance. Supposed to be situate in or near the place of that Alexandria which Alexander built in memory of his Navigation down this River to the Indian Ocean. An Haven much frequented, because free from Worms; which at Surat, and other Havens on these Seas, so infect the Ships, that without much cost and care bestowed upon them, they make them unable to return. 3. Calwalla, memorable for the Tourne, as given by Echebar the Mongul to a company of women and their posterity for ever, to bring up their Daughters to dancing, and more wanton exercises. 4. Rademipoore, a great Town with a strong Castle, seated at the edge of the Deserts: thorow which those that are to pass, use here to provide themselves of water and other necessities for their journey. 5. Naraqemire, a pretty Town on the further side of the Deserts, esteemed a Paradise by such as have passed thorow those uncomfortable and dangerous Sands, for the space of ten or twelve days journey. 6. Sarrama, a large Town, twenty miles from Tutta, the Center in which all Lines meet; and from whence the distances of all Towns of Sinda are accustomably measured.

The Country anciently subject to the King of Cambaia, and in the right of that Crown to the Great Mongul: but the people for the most part so untamed and masterful, that except in some of the greater Towns, they pay no Tributes; and in some places, even within half a days journey of Tutta, will acknowledge no King, but rob and spare whom they please. If at any time the Mongul sends a force against them, (as he doth sometimes) they fire their houses, made like a Bee-Hive of Straw and Mortar, which are soon rebuilt, and retire themselves unto the Mountains. Yet one good quality they have amongst many ill ones: When they have robbed a Traveller, took money of him in the way of Toll or Custom for his passage by them, they will conduct him honestly to the end of the Deserts, lest any should rob him but themselves.

2. GUZARATE hath on the North, Sinda; on the South, the main Ocean; the River Indus on the East; on the West, Gedrosia, which the Indians call Nawatacor, but the Persians, Circum.

The soil of the same temper and fertility with that of Cambaia, especially so called; and there we shall speak further of it. The Common people whom they call Guzarates, of the same disposition generally with the rest of the Indians: but the greatest part of the Country is possessed by the Resbutes or Resbooches, the ancient Inhabitants of this Tract. Who when their Country was subdued by the Moors or Saracens, retired unto the Mountains or Fastnesses of it, standing upon their guard; and were never yet subdued by the Great Monguls. Who though possessed of the Sea-shores, and most Towns of consequence, are fain to leave the In-land parts and open Countries to the power of the Out-laws; who either prey upon the people, or force them to compound for their peace and quiet at uncertain prices. Their Arms most commonly a Sword, Buckler, and Lance; well horsed and resolute in any thing which they undertake; which made one of the Monguls say of them, That no man in the world knew to dye, but they.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Div, in a Peninsula looking towards Persia, but on the East side thereof, near the mouth of Indus. Possessed by the Portugal, and by them fortified with a strong and impregnable Citadel, built with the leave and liking of King Badurins thereby to buy their aid against Merhamed the Mongul, who had newly vanquished him. A matter of such consequence to the Crown of Portugal, that John Botelius, confined to India for some crimes by him committed, undertook (in hope by the merit of that service to obtain his pardon) to carry the first news of it in a small Vessel, not above 18 foot long, and but 6 foot broad (the best which for the present could be provided;) which with great courage he performed, and through that large, wide, and tempestuous Ocean came in safety with his news to Lisbon, to the great joy of the King; but greater admiration of all sorts of people. Scarce settled in their new possession, when besieged by Solyman Bassa, Admiral to Solyman the Magnificent, with a Fleet of 80 Ships and Gallies, Anno 1537. offended with the Portugals for aiding the King of Persia more for diverting the Spice-trade from Alexandria. In which he had so ill success, that having assaulted it in vain with his Land Forces, he was fain to raise his siege in such haste and tumult, that he left his great Ordnance behind him. 2. Sarran, a Town and Castle of the Resbutes, spoken of before, and by them held against the power of the Great Mongul. 3. Baldra, a very fair and beautiful City, but of no great Compass. 4. Arduvat, not far from the banks of the Indus, on the North of this Region towards Sinda. 5. Madabas, by some called Amadabas, affirmed to be both for wealth and greatness the chief of Guzarate, near as big as London; well walled, and situate on a Plain near the River side: seldom without Merchants of all Religions, Jews, Gemiles, Christians, Moors, some of all, and neither. 6. Sparinga, 7. Periano, 8. Skerkoffe, this last remarkable for the Sepulchres of the old Kings of Cambaia; fair, and well kept, and visited from all parts of the Kingdom.

Nothing considerable in this part of the Country as to point of story, but what is common to them with the rest of Cambaia; but that the Resbutes, or Resbooches still remain unconquered. Possessed not only of the Hills and Mountains, but of some strong holds; and governed by the heads of their Casts or Tribes, all which acknowledge the Mongul for their Superior, in regard of his power, but none of them obey him as their Lord or Sovereign: conceiving it to be some abatement of their own authority, if they admit him as an Umpire to compose their differences, which they sometimes do.

3. CAMBAIA specially so called, hath on the North, Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean, and some part of Deean; on the East, Surat, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains; on the West, the main Ocean, with some part of Guzarate. It standeth on the East sides of the out-lets of Indus, running along the Sea-shore for 500 miles, and took this name from Cambaia, the chief City of it.

The Country said to be the most fruitful of all India, abounding in Rice, Wheat, Sugar, Spices of all sorts, and choicest fruits: of Silk and Cotton is great plenty, that they freight yearly forty or fifty Ships with those commodities. In the Mountains they find Diamonds, Gubulomies, and a kind of Onyx stone, which are called Cornelins, and corruptly Cornellins. Amongst the rarities hereof, they reckon the Abades, a great beast, twice as big as a Bull, having on their snouts a little horn, and the Hide so hard, as no man can pierce it with a thrust, which is the Rhinoceros of the Ancients.

The people effeminate and unwarlike, and therefore not much used by the Monguls in a war of consequence; to supply which defect he furnisheth himself with Souldiers out of Persia, of which his standing bands consist; most of their Sultans and Commanders of that Nation also. More given to Merchandise than War, and therein thought to be as cunning (if not deceitful: withall) any people in the World: treacherous in their trust, proud in their carriage, bloody upon advantage, and much given to Venerie: ignorant of Letters, but well practiced in Mechanical Arts. In matters of Religion for the most part Gentiles, not knowing or condemning the Law of Mahomet; but very punctual in their own heathenish superstitions. The Bannians in this Country, being natural Indians, nussed in Paganism, and so wedded to their old Idolatries, that no persuasions can prevail with them, make the greatest number; and seem to be all Pythagoreans in some opinions, for they eat not any thing that hath blood or life, but feed on Rice, Roots, Plantons, and such natural fruits: paying a large Revenue yearly to the Great Mongul, that no Oxen may be killed amongst them. And because new opinions should not grow amongst them, they marry in their own Tribes only, and never out of their own Trades; secure thereby as they conceive from all innovations.

Cities of most observation in it, 1 Cambaia, three miles from the Indus, and as many in compass, one of the neatest, and best built in all the East. So populous withall, that it is thought to contain 130000 Families; and is therefore called the Caire of the Indies. Of most esteem in all this Kingdom (though far less than Madabat) to which it doth impart its name. 2 Baracho, Southwards of Cambaia on the top of an hill, with a fair River underneath it; well walled, and noted for the best Calicuts (a kind of linnen Cloth so called from the City of Calicut, where it was first made) not to be matched in all the Indies. 3 Swalley, still more unto the South, and about a mile from the Sea-shore; but giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, where the ships ride that trade at Swat. 4 Swat, about ten miles from the Bay of Swalley, from whence the River navigable but by Boats and Shallops, fortified with a Castle of stone, well stored with Ordnance. The houses for the most part of Sun-dried Bricks, very large and lasting: built with flat Roofs, but Battlemented on all sides for fear of fallings and beautified with goodly Gardens of Pomgranates, Melons, Figs, and Limons, interlaced with Riverets and Springs. Made of late years a Factory for the English Merchants, who have here their President, and a magnificent house for their reception, and staple of their Commodities. 5 Neriland, a great Town, and as remarkable for the making of Indico, of the matter and making whereof we have spoke already, when we were at Biani, a Town or City of the Kingdom, or Division of Agra; as memorable for that Commodity as this Neriland, or any other of India. 6 Daman, upon the Sea-side over against Dim; and possessed as that is by the Portugals. A beautiful and pleasant Town, fortified with a strong Castle at the North end of it, of white chalky stone, well planted with Ordnance: opposite whereunto on the South side of the Town a goodly Church, edged on the top with white. Which with the houses for the most part of the same colour also, afford a pleasant prospect to the Sailors by 7 Campansu, situate on the top of an high Mountain, and environed with a seven-fold wall, once the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Cambaia. 8 Dacaiote, a place of such strength, that the Great Monguls could never get it by force. Rendred at the last upon composition, conditioned they should still be governed by a King of their own. 9 Neiberby, a great Market of Brazen ware, Bealls, and Armour. 10 Bandore, at Tandi, &c.

This Kingdom taking in Guzarate and Sinde, as parts hereof, is extremely populous; said said to contain 60000 Towns and Villages, very well inhabited: but the people not accustomed to, or uninit for wars. Anciently governed by Kings of their own, it was first subdued by the Arabians or Moors, Anno 1423: under the conduct of one Mahomet or Machamus; who having forced the Resbutes or Naturals of the Country to betake themselves unto the Mountains, was made King hereof. To him succeeded his Son Mamudius, one of no great action. But what he wanted was supplied by his Son Badarius, who having conquered the Kingdom of Citor, invaded that of Mandao also. His Army for that war consisted of 500000 Foot, 150000 Horse, 1000 great Pieces of Ordnance, 500 Wagons loaded with Powder and Shot; and as many Wain-loads of Gold and Silver to pay his Army. But being discomfited in two great Battels by Merhamed the Mongul Tartar, whom Galgee the Mandaoan King had called in to his aid, he shaved his beard, and fled in a disguise to Dim, then possessed by the Portugals; whom he licensed in that distress to build the Citadel, slain afterwards by a mean Mariner, as his return from the Portugal Vice-Roy, whom he had visited on ship-board. And though Mamudius his successor endeavoured to free his Kingdom from both pretenders; yet weakened with the loss of so great an Army, he was not able to effect it. First driven from Dim, which he had besieged both by Sea and Land, to his great dishonour; and after vanquished in battel by Adabar, the Son of Merhamed, not far from Serkisse, the ancient burial-place of the Kings of Cambaia, but then the Sepulchre of the Kingdom; which by that victory fell to the Great Monguls, who have since enjoyed it.

4. DECAN.

DECAN is bounded on the East, with Narvinga; on the West, with the Indian Ocean; on the North, with Cambaia; on the South, with Malabar and Canara. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It lieth along the Sea-coast for the space of 250 miles, betwixt Aliga and Bate, two noted Rivers; extending East, as far as the Mountain Gates, and afterwards thrusting into the North betwixt Cambaia and those Mountains till it meet with Cambaia. The soil much of the same nature with the rest of India, but not so flourishing as Cambaia. The people for the most part Mahometans, which Religion was first planted there by the Conquests of Sa-Nofaradine, 350 years ago; yet not without some intermixture of their ancient Gentilism.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Bider, the Seat-Royal of Mamudza, once sole King of this Country; who to beautie and adorn this City, commanded every one of his Presets, or subordinate Governours, being eighteen in number, to build here a Palace, and to reside therein certain months in the year: each one to leave a Son there in perpetual hostage. Situate in the most Northern parts of the Country more near the Borders of Delly: from the King, whereof Mamudza had then newly revolted; and therefore would make sure of this place, as most in danger. 2 Visapore, bordering on Cambaia, the Princely Seat of Idalcan, one of the Kings of Decan, after it was dismembred into several Kingdoms. 3 Danager, consisting on Canara, a beautiful and flourishing City, once the chief Seat of Nisalamocus, or Nizalmoxa, another of the Kings hereof, after that division. 4 Decan, so called by the name of the Province; of which the chief City next to Bider, the Imperial Seat. Six miles from which there is an Hill encompassed with an high wall, and kept by a strong Garrison, because of the great store of Diamonds, which are digged out of it. The Town so wealthy, that that the people generally are attired in silks, or the purest Tiffany. 5 Sintacora, on the mouth of the River Aliga, where it falleth into the Sea. 6 Goa, a Sea Town also, situate in a little but most pleasant Island, called Tienarianum, fifteen miles in compass; opposite to the mouth or out-let of the River Mandao. A noted Empory, and one of the chief keys which unlock the Indies; for number of Inhabitants, magnificent buildings, and pleasantness of situation, one of most note in all this Country. Possessed by the Portugals, who have here their Arsenal, and harbour for their Indian Fleet; by which they do command these Seas. So strongly fortified withal, that though beleaguered by Idalcan (of whom before) with 35000 Horse, 6000 Elephants, and 250 Piece of Ordnance, Anno 1573, yet he could not force it. Made in regard of the convenient situation and strength thereof, the ordinary Residence of the Portugal Vice-Roy, who hath here his Council, Chancellor, and other Officers, for the government of such parts of India as belong to that Crown: as also of the Arch-bishop or Primate of the Indian Churches planted by that Nation, who is hence called the Arch-bishop of Goa. 7 Chaul, a Sea-Town, in the hands of the Portugals also, and by them well fortified: Inasmuch as Nisamalocco assaulting it at the very same time with a very great Army, was fain to leave it as he found it. 8 Balaguete, in the Up-lands or Hill-Country, whence it had the name: Baia in the Persian Language signifying a top, or summit of a Mountain; and Guate an Hill. 9 Brampore, once the chief fell of another Kingdom, called the Kingdom of Chandü, now the chief City of those parts of Decan which are subject to the Great Mongul. Situate on a great River in the midst of a spacious Plain, beautiful, and of very great Trading; in biggness equal unto Paris, yet yielded to Echebar the Mongul, without any resistance Anno 1600. Miram then the King thereof forsaking it, and betaking himself to 10 Sy-ra, a strong Hold both by Art and Nature; Situate on the top of an hill, which is in compass five Leagues, and environed with a triple Wall: furnished with Victuals, and all other necessary Provisions, sufficient to maintain 60000 men many years; 3000 great Pieces of Ordnance planted on the Walls. Besieged herein by Echebar with an Army of 200000 fighting men, he held out against him; till overcome by promises of fair correspondence, drawn out of his Hold: some of his Councillors being bribed to persuade him to it) he was detained by the Mongul: and the Commanders won by rewards and hopes yielded up the Fort, and therein all the Princes of the Royal Family, accustomed kept therein when the Throne was full; which vacant, the next Heir was taken hence, to succeed unto it. Of the same nature, as it seemeth, with the hill Amara in Ethiopia, or the Abassine Empire.

The Country formerly inhabited by a people called Venazarari, by Religion Gentiles, and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sa Nofaradine, a Mahometan, and King of Delly: who driving the Inhabitants into the Hill-Countries, possessed himself of a great part of it, compelling them to submit unto his Religion. The residue hereof subdued by Abdessa, whom Sa Nofaradine left here to pursue the war, was by him governed with great justice for 20 years, when dying he left his Government to his Son Mamudza, confirmed by the Successor of Sa Nofaradine in his Fathers Regency, on the payment of an annual Tribute. Mamudza soon finding that the young King was of no great spirit, not only refused to pay the Tribute imposed upon him, but took unto himself the title of King Decan, giving this name unto the Country (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a Mongrel body of Christians, Mahometans, and Cemiles, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in Language, Customs, or Religion; the word Decan signifying in that Tongue, as much as illegitimate brood, or a body of Bastards. Out of these he made choice of twelve (others say eighteen) whom he appointed Governours of so many Provinces: not daring to trust any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the Country; and hoping that these Slaves, so promoted by him, would be more subject to command. But here his silly hopes deceived him. For these Slaves either governed by their Masters example, who had done the like unto the Son and Heir of Sa Nofaradine; or presuming on their own strength, and some Foreign Aids, left to their Master nothing but an empty Title; each one becoming absolute in his several Province. Nor did his Successors for any long time enjoy that Title: Daquem, the last of them, being taken at Bider his chief City, and thereupon the name of King usurped by every one of these petit Tyrants, reduced at last into fewer heads. Such of them as were left, became considerable Princes, as appeareth by the great Army raised by Idalcan for the siege of Goa: But in the end, distressed on the one side by the Portugals, who embarrased their Trade, and invaded on the other side the Great Mongul with most puissant Armies, Melic entruled King of Decan, and Miram King of Brampore, were in fine subdued by Echebar, about the year 1600. Against whom and his Successors, though the Venazarari still hold out, as the Reibutes or Ras-boches do in the Realm of Cambaia; and that the King of Amdanager, and perhaps some other petit Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country, the residue of these Royalties, and petit Princes (if any of them be remaining) being Homagers or Vassals to him. Against whose further Progress to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar so greedily aimed at, the puissant Kings of Narvinga, and those of Malabar have opposed their power; whose Kingdoms and Estates we must next survey, before we take a view of those other Provinces which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9. CANARA.

CANARA is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof anciently it was a part); on the South, with Malabar; on the East, with Narvinga, from which separated by the Mountain Gates; on the West, with the Ocean. The reason of the name I find not, nor much worth the searching.

The Country hath a fair Sea-coast, with many capacious Harbours in it, which cannot but add much to the wealth thereof; as liberally furnished in the in-land parts with Rice, Figs, and Sugars: but destitute of Wheat, Pulse, and Barley. Nor much the poorer for that want, the people either not knowing, or not regarding the use of bread; but living on such fruits as the earth produceth of it self, without the charge or care of the husbandman. In other things but little differing, if at all, from the rest of the Indians: their Religion for the most part Paganish, but intermixt with Mahometans.

Principal Towns and Cities of it, 1 Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2 Onor, a Port Town of good note, sometimes held by the Portugals. 3 Faticalla, situate in the richest part of all this Country; never possessed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4 Mangalor a Town of great wealth and trades; fortified with a strong Castle, once destroyed by the Portugues, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narvinga, who is Lord of this Country. 5 Mysendre, more within the Land. And so is also, 6 Lispor, famous for her Quarries of Adamant.

Adamant. 7 Salfette, in a Peninsula of 20 miles compass, containing 36 Villages, and 80000 Inhabitants; the Town about 9 miles from Goa, and subject with the whole Peninsula to the Portugals.

This Country is now subject to the Kings of Narvinga, but formerly under the command of its own Princes: the name of Canara, comprehending in those times all that Country also, which is now called Decan. Conquered by Sa Nofaradine and Abdissa, and by Mammusa cantoned into many Prefectures, this part reverting to its old name, fell to the Narvingan, who taking his advantages, in the Minority of one of their Princes, became Master of it. And when the Idalcen (for I take that not so much for the name of a man, as a Title of dignity) quarrelled his possession of it, as appertaining properly to the Kingdom of Decan; Chrijamaras, then King of Narvinga, brought a powerful Advocate to defend his right; that is to say, an Army of 606000 Foot, 29650 Horses, and 537 Elephants; every Elephant having a Tower on his back with four men in it. With which strong Argument the Idalcen being confuted in the Schools of War, with much difficulty saved himself though he lost his cause; the Narvingan ever since continuing quiet in the possession of this Country, except only some of the Sea Towns in the power of the Portugals: Who in the year 1567 destroyed in those few places by them possessed, no fewer than 200 of their Idol Temples, with many of their Pagodes, or Idols in them, converting the Rents and Lands which belonged unto them, with the Revenues raised from the several Ports which they hold herein, to the maintenance of a College of Jesuites in Salfette, and other Religious houses founded by them, in their other Cities.

10. MALABAR.

MALABAR is bounded on the North, with Canara, from which parted by the River Gangeraco; on the East, with the great Mountain Gates, by which divided from the Realm of Narvinga South-east; on the West and South, with the main Indian Ocean. On the Coast whereof it doth extend for the space of 300 miles: that is to say, from the River Gangeraco to the Cape Commari: which I conceive to be the Commari Extrema of Ptolomy, though others take it for the Promontory by him called Cory. But the breadth hereof is nothing answerable to the length, not above 50 miles where broadest, and ending towards the Cape in a point or Corner.

The Country more populous, for the bigness, than any in India, enjoying a very temperate Air, and a fruitful soil; well watered, and indented with many Creeks: unfit for Corn, but plentiful in Rice, and all manner of Spices, as Ginger, Cinamon, Cassia, Pepper, and most excellent fruits. Amongst their Trees there is one whose name my Author speaks of, which bears Dates like unto the Palm; out of which they have not only Wood for fuel, but they draw from it Wine, Sugar, Oyl, fine Cloth, and Cordage; another Tree, which beareth Cotton, and Cypres, or Cobweb-lawn, of the Leaves whereof they make a fine stuff like to Satin or Taffatie. They have also great store of Apes, and Monkeys, Parats, Parakeets, and other Creatures not known in these parts, but from thence: not to say any thing of their Lyons, Elephants, Bears, Bugles, common to them with others of their Indian Neighbours. The flowers there always in their Verdure, and the Trees perpetually green, by reason that the Air is so sweet and temperate.

The people are of coal-black colour (differing therein from the rest of the Indians, swarth and complexioned

(like the Olive) well limbed, and wearing their hair long and curled: about their heads a handkerchief wrought with Gold and Silver; and about their middle a cloth, which hangeth down to conceal their nakedness. Of manners treacherous and bloody, more properly to be termed desperate than stout and valiant; and for more surety in their Wars, they use poisoned Arrows, as they do also in their thieving both by Sea and Land, to which more addicted. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, and more besotted generally on their Idolatries, than the rest of these Nations. The Pagode, or Idol which they worship, is seated upon a brazen Throne, and Crowned with a rich Diamond; From his head issue out four horns; from his mouth four tusks; his eyes fiery like a Glow-worm, his nose flat and ugly, his visage terrible; his hands like claws, his legs and thighs like those of a Lyon. In a word, we cannot paint the Devil in a more ugly figure than they do their God. Unto this Pagode or his Prisht, they offer the virginity of all their Daughters: the Pagode having in the place of his privy parts a Bedkin of Gold or Silver, upon which the Bride (married most commonly at ten or twelve years of age) is forcibly set; the sharpness of it being such, that it forceth out the blood in great abundance: and if the prove with child that year, it is said to be of his begetting, and more esteemed. Others with more humanity, instead of torturing their daughters on this wretched Idol (parallel almost to the offering of their Sons to Moloch amongst the Syrians) present them to the Bramini, or Idol-Priest, to be defouled the first night of the Wedding: and without one of these two handels no man is suffered to enjoy the use of his Wife, not their Kings themselves. More privileged yet than many women neighbouring on them, in that they are not compelled to burn themselves with their Husbands bodies; but may have many husbands either successively or at once, as they list themselves: and if at once, she sends her children to that husband (as we know who did) who she thinks to have the best right to them.

The Country very well watered, as we said before, and parted by large Rivers into many Provinces; as if intended naturally to be cantoned into many Kingdoms. Divided at present, and long since, into those of 1 Cononor, 2 Calicut, 3 Cranganor, 4 Cochin, 5 Cai-Colam, 6 Coulan, and 7 Travancor.

1. CONONOR joyneth to Canara, extending Southward on the shore about 20 miles, where it bordereth on the Kingdom of Calicut. The chief Cities of which, 1 Cononor, giving name to the whole Kingdom, well built and beautified with a very fair Haven, no more and safe than spacious, capacious of the greatest Vessels, and for that cause much frequented by foreign Merchants; but especially by the Portugals, who for the assuring of their trade have here a Citadel, erected and well garrisoned with the Kings Consent. 2 Cota, not far from Cangeraco, the border betwixt this and Canara. 3 Peripatan, on the Confines of Calicut. 4 Marabia, 5 Tramopatan, 6 Main, intermediate Towns, but not much observable.

2. CALICUTE, South from Cononor, extending on the Sea-shore 25 Leagues, and situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of all Malabar. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Pandarane, on the skirts of Cononor. 2 Tanor, a retiring place of the Kings. 3 Partangala, 4 Chatusa, on the borders of Cranganor. 5 Chale, a strong piece, once in the hands of the Portugueses; but in the year 1601. recovered by the King of Calicut, who had besieged it with an Army of 90000 men. 6 Capacote, the Haven of Calicut. 7 Calicut, the chief City of the Kingdom, to which it gives name, in length upon the Sea three miles, and a mile in breadth; containing about 6000 houses, but but standing some of them far asunder; mean and low built, few of them exceeding the height of a man on horse-back; the soil being so hollow and full of water, that it is not capable of the foundation of an heavier building; for that cause unvalued. Inomuch that Merchants houses are here valued but at 20 Crowns, those of the common fort at no more than ten. Which notwithstanding, of great trading, and much frequented by Arabians, Persians, Syrians, Indians, yea the very Tartars; these last from the furthest parts of Cathay (taking Cathay in that general sense, as it comprehendeth all the Countries of the Tartars, between the Mount of Imau, and the Eastern Ocean) being 6000 miles distant from it, inomuch that it is said by some of the Spanish Writers, that when Vasques di Gama, the first discoverer of the way to the East Countries by the Cape of Good Hope, first arrived in this Haven, he found in it no fewer than 1500 Merchants Ships of all sorts, but without Anchors and the Compass, few of them fit for a Sea-fight, not able to sail (in regard they had not the use of the Compass) but by four-winds only. The common Staple in those times of all Indian Merchandise, till distracted into several Ports by the power of the Portugals: who being more industrious, and better Architects, have forced a foundation on the Shore for a very strong Cattle; by which they do command the Haven, and receive Custom of all Merchandise going in and out. The inconvenience whereof being found by the King of Calicut, he besieged it with 100000 men; and though the Portugals held it out a whole Winter together, yet in the end they were fain to quit it; but first demolished it to the ground, that it might not be made useful to those of Calicut. A City of exceeding wealth, and of no less wantonness; the men here using to change Wives with one another, to confirm their Amities: and the women spending their whole time in adorning themselves with Rings and Jewels about their ears, necks, legs, arms, and upon their breasts; though going naked for the most part, one would think that a little dressing might suffice them. If covered, it is only with a Smock of Calicut, a kind of linen cloth here made, and from hence so called: and that not used but by those of the better sort.

3. CRANGANOR lieth on the South of Calicut, a small Kingdom, and affording little worth the speaking of; but that a great part of the Inhabitants of it are of those old Christians, whom they call Christians of St. Thomas. Cranganor, the chief City, which gives name to the whole, affirmed to be so full of them, that they amount unto the number of 70000; vexed and exposed to publick scorn both by the Idolaters and Mahometans, amongst whom they live. The City rich, commodiously built for trade, at the mouth of a River, which watering with his crooked streams the most part of the Country, makes it fat and flourishing.

4. COCHIN, more South than Cranganor, extended on the shore for the space of 40 leagues; and therein many Christians of the first Plantation, besides some Converts made of later times by the Jesuites. Towns of most note herein, 1 Augamale, the Arch-bishops See of those ancient Christians, fifteen miles from Cochin. 2 Cochin, a Bishops See, but of later erection, and the chief City of this Kingdom, which takes name from hence. Situate on the mouth or out-let of the River Mangar, by which almost encompassed like a Demy Island. Of great trade in regard of its Haven, very safe and spacious; as also by the friendship of the Portugal Nation. By whose power and favour they have not only freed themselves from the King of Calicut, to whom before they did acknowledge some subjection; but drawn from thence a great part of the traffick also: this King permitting them to erect a Castle on the Haven, to secure their trade, which the other on good reasons of State forced them to destroy. The King hereof in some respect superior unto him of Calicut, when a Vassal to him: this King being the Pope, or chief Bishop, as it were of all the Bramines: for which cause revered by all the Kings of Malabar, (as the Pope by many Princes of these Western parts) who look upon him as the head of their superstition, and pay him many annual duties.

5. CALCOLAM is on the South of Cochin, with which agreeing both in the temper of the Air, and fertility of the Earth: which notwithstanding, the King hereof is not so rich as his other neighbours. Here live also many of the old Christians, taking name from St. Thomas; but those so destitute of Priests and Ministers to instruct them in the Principles of Christianity, that once in three years there came some formerly from the Patriarch of Mazal in Assyria to baptize their Children. Better I hope provided for in these later days, since their embolomening and reconciliation to the Church of Rome. Their chief Town of the same name with the Country, hath a very fair Haven, in the fashion of a Semi-Circle; well traded till destroyed by the Portugals, but since that re-edified. Of less note there are many both Towns and Villages, but such as do deserve here no particular mention.

6. COULAN, upon the South of Cai-Colam, extended 20 Leagues more Southwards upon the Shores, is said to be destitute of Corn, but plentiful of Pepper, and most sorts of Spices. So stored with Horses, and fit Riders to serve upon them, that the King hereof keeps 20000 Horses in continual readiness either for invasion or defence. This Kingdom, as the rest before, takes name from the chief City of it, which is called Coulan, 24 miles from Cochin, and once a Member of that Kingdom; of great resort for foreign Merchants, by reason of the fair and commodious Haven. In former times the ordinary seat of the Cobritin, or chief Priest of the Bramines, till moved to Cochin, and held to be the Metropolis or Mother City of all Malabar, the rest being thought to be but Colonies of this. Both in the City and the Country there are many Christians, as well of the original foundation of Christianity, as of the late improvements which are made by the Jesuites.

7. TRAVANCOR, called also TRANCANOR reacheth from the Kingdom of Coulan, to the Cape of Comari, and turning towards the East, bendeth again unto the North, as far as Cael in the Kingdom of Bisnagar or Narvinga. By which account it hath the benefit of the Sea on all sides except towards the North: reaching in breadth from the West Seas unto the East about 60 miles. The Country as the Rest before, inhabited by many with the name of Christians, if they may be called so which want Sacraments: the condition of these Thomasean Christians in former times being so unhappy, that in 53 years before the coming of the Jesuites, (if the Jesuites may be believed from whom we have it) they had seen no Priest, nor other Minister of the Gospel. Chief Towns hercof, (for of those many others of less note I shall make no mention) are 1 Travancor, the chief City, which gives name to the Province, but neither well built, nor of very much trading; 2 Quilacare, the head City of a Signeury, but held of the Kings of Travancor, as their next and immediate Lords; though all those Kings also Feudatories of the Crown of Narvinga. And were that the worst Tenure by which they hold, it might be tolerable; but there is a matter of worse consequence which attendeth these besotted Princes. The Kingdom here is but a pomp of 12 years continuance, and then endeth in a sad Catastrophe. For at the end of those twelve years, the King repairs to Quilacare, prayeth before the Idol above-mentioned, then mounteth on a Scaffold covered with Silk or Tapestry; and in the sight of all his People, gathered together to behold this strange solemnity, cutteth off his nose, ears, lips, and other parts, which he casts towards the Idol, and in conclusion cuts his own throat for his final Sacrifice: his deliquent Successor being present at this bloody Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at so dear a rate: For though all Crowns be lined with thorns, yet here the pomps of Sovereignty be less lasting than in other places; the entrance full of fears, and the end of horrors.

These Kingdoms heretofore but one, till the year 900 or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into these seven, by Sarama Perimal, the sole Monarch. He by the solicitations of some Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein so devout, that he resolved upon a Pilgrimage to Mecca, there to end his days. At his departure he divided his Estates into these seven parts, distributing them amongst the nearest of his Kindred; assigning unto him of Conlan the preeminence in sacred matters: and the Imperial dignity unto him of Calicut, with the title of Samarin, that is to say, Chief Emperor, or as some write, a God on Earth. He only privileged with the right and power of Coinage; the rest to be subordinate, if not subject to him. From Perimal's setting forwards to the City of Mecca, the Malabars accomplish their reckonings, and begin their years; as the Christians from the birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his Heirs were punctually observed. But the Kingdom of Calicut being weakened by the power of the Portugals, the other Kings began to free themselves from that subjection; and in the end to cast off all relation to him, and to his Prerogatives. Yet still he is esteemed of more Power and Majesty than any of the rest of the Kings of Malabar; and looked on with more reverence than any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have no where met with, but conjecture them to be very great; first in regard of that infinite trading which is managed from most parts of the World in this Port of Calicut, the Customs and Impolls upon which must needs be of exceeding value; and secondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are said to equal some Kings in Africa; and Dukes in Europe not a few.

Quid Domini facient? audent cum talia Furis.

And if the man such Riches have,
Then what must he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raise may be fully seen by that which hath been said before; wherein we find him with an Army of 90000 men besieging and taking in the Fort of Chalen. with another of 100000 beleaguering the Castle which the Portugals had built near the City of Calicut. And when the said Portugals stirred up the King of Cochin to make head against him, he fell upon them suddenly, both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-Souldiers, and 200 good Vessels of War for his Service at Sea. Sufficient force to reduce the rest of these petit Kings to their old acknowledgments, but that some of them to avoid the danger, have put themselves under the Vassalage, or protection at the least, of the Great Mongul: others by suffering the Portugals to build Forts in their Kingdoms, have engaged them in defence of their Estate against this pretender. His Forces consist most of Foot. Horse being unerviceable in these Countries, by reason of those many Rivers which interlace it, and these Foot are composed most of Gentry, which they there call Nairors, trained to their Weapons when they are but seven years of Age; every one to that Weapon which he most delighteth in, which makes them very expert and nimble at them; much privileged for that cause by the Laws of the Country, and so esteemed of by the King, that out of them his Sisters choose what men they please to their Husbands, some of them by that means being made the Fathers of the King succeeding.

Nothing else memorable touching the affairs of Calicut, but the way of succession to the Kingdom; the Crown descending upon none of the Kings Children, but on the Son of his eldest Sister, or nearest Kinswoman, For being that one of the Bramines hath always the maiden-head of his Queens, and that some of these Stallions are continually allowed to keep them company, it is presumed, or very probably supposed, that the Queens Children are the Bramines, and not the Kings.

8. NARSINGA.

NARSINGA is bounded on the South, with Travancor; on the West, with the Mountain Cates; on the North, with Orijan, or Orixu, on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Narsinga the chief City of it, and the Royal Residence of the King.

The Country is said to be in length 600 miles, or as some say, of as much extent as can be travelled in six months, plentiful in the same Commodities which the rest of India doth afford, except Pepper and some other Spices which are proper to Malabar. Not so well furnished with Rivers as some other places: which want is liberally supplied by water falling from the Mountains and received into trenches, meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfully cool, moisten and enrich the Land, causing the Corn and Cattel to prosper above all imagination. Most destitute in this kind is the Province of Choramandel, in which if any year passeth without rain, they fall into such extremities, that they are fain to sell their children.

The People in Religion, Gentiles, so worshipping one God, as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature, that they joy the Devil or their Pagodes in Communion with him, whereto induced by the persuasion of their beastly Bramines, who thereof suck no small advantage. Some Christians there are intermixt of the old Plantation; especially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choramandel; but not so well instructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles, nor to disswade them from the use of some Heathenish Customs though barbarous, inhumane, and against all reason; nor used in any place, but amongst the Indians. Amongst which I reckon for most savage, the forcing of poor women to burn themselves with their husbands bodies, the womens kindred, not the husbands, thrusting them on these hard conditions; who reckon it a disgrace to their Family, if she should refuse. And because they will be sure not to have that infamy stick upon them, they have ordered that the woman who shall so refuse, must shave her head, and break her Jewels, and not be suffered to eat, drink, or sleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miserable than the Flames which they seek to shun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greediness, and to contend which shall be foremost; she being thought to have been most loving during his life, which is now most willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her self to his Manes, at the Funeral Pile: whereunto thus alluded the Poet:

*Es certamen habent, levis, quæ viva sequatur
Conjugium; pudor est non licuisse mori.
Ardent viatrices, & præbent pistora flamma;
Imponuntque suis ora perusta viris.*

A flame 'tis to die; they therefore strive,
Who may be fain'd to follow him alive.

The

The Victor burns, yields to the flame her brest;
And her burnt face doth on her husband rest.

Chief Cities of this Country, 1 Cacl, on the borders of Travancor, belonging anciently to the Kings of Conlan, now to those of Narsinga; the people whereabout called Paravi, are a kind of Christians, who live for the most part by fishing for Pearls; which they sell to the Portugals, and Bengalan Merchants. 2 Golconda, the chief City of the Province called Musulipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sophian Sect; but a Vassal to the Kings of Narsinga. 3 Chamdagrin, one of the Seat-Royals of the King. 4 Prepeti, three miles from Chamdagrin, memorable for a yearly Feast here celebrated in honour of Perimal (once sole King of Malabar) reckoned for a Saint at least in these parts of India: the offerings at which accumulably amount unto 200000 Crowns. 5 Chadambaram, the Mother-City of those Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Perimal; who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of Annual Rent, all consumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have been born out of Perimal's head. 6 Madura, honoured with the residence of the Chochanada, or the chief Prelate of the Bramines of this Kingdom; so numerous, that in this Town, and the Territories of it only, are thought to be no fewer than an hundred thousand. The seat also of one of three Naiabhs, or Tributary Kings of the Crown of Narsinga; the other two residing at 7 Gingi, and 8 Tanajor, the chief Towns of their Principalities, but not else observable. 9 Maliapur, called also St. Thomas, from an opinion that the body of the Apostle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolatrous Indians, whose Posterity in other things like unto other men, are said to have one leg and foot as big as an Elephant's: a punishment inflicted on the whole Generation for the sin of their Ancestors. How true this I cannot say, but sure I am that Dorothens faith, that he rested at Calamina, where he was slain with a Dart. However the Portugals, to make some use of the old Tradition, removed some bones from this place, where were said to be his, and enshrined them in Gosa, their own City; much visited by profitable Pilgrims, to their great enriching. The City once so large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples, for the use of divers Nations which resorted thither. In these latter days desolate and forlorn, inhabited only by some old Christians, till the Portugueses began to people it with new Colonies. 10 Choramandel giving name to a large Sea-Coast, lying on the West-side of the Gulf of Bengala. 11 Casta, a Town of Choramandel, in which the woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Country, but buried quick in the same grave with him. 12 Negapatam, in the same Region, inhabited for the most part by St. Thomas Christians. 13 Tarnassari, once the chief City of a Kingdom so called, the King whereof was able to bring into the field 100000 Horse and Foot, and 100 armed Elephants, but now subject to the King of Narsinga. The people black, but so out of love with their own colour, that they willingly prostitute their Wives or Daughters, to any people of a whiter and more clear complexion. 14 Bijnagar, once the chief City of this Kingdom, whence the King is sometimes called the King of Bijnagar. In those times 24 miles in compass, with nine Gates in it, (amongst others) continually guarded with Souldiers; and a magnificent Palace, not elsewhere equalled. In the year 1565, sacked by four of the Mahometan Kings of Decan, who with their joyn't Forces had invaded this Kingdom; it became desolate and forsaken; and the Court removed to 15 Penegardo, eight days journey within the Land (Bijnagar being seated on the borders of Decan) but long it had not staid there when removed to 16 Narsinga, where it hath ever since been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdom, unto which it gives name; though the King many times calls himself by the name of that City where he resideth for the present.

Of the Antiquity of this Kingdom I have little to say, these Eastern parts not being known at all till these later times, not well known in these. About the year 1550 their King then reigning was imprisoned by three of his Captains or Commanders; who shewed him only once a year to his Subjects, parting the power and government amongst themselves. He being dead, and his Son kept in the like restraint, Romaragio the first Captain ascended the Throne, Timaragio managed the Estate, and Bengake commanded the Army. But these Usurpers being overthrown by the Kings of Decan, in the year 1565, Timaragio the Survivor took the charge of all; whose Son, to make himself sure of the Kingdom, murdered his imprisoned Sovereign (the life and liberty of Kings being much of a date) whence followed many broils and troubles touching the succession, till settled in the person of Chrismarao, the undoubted Heir: who did not only restore peace and quiet to Narsinga it self, but recovered Canara out of the hands of the Idalcans, who had before endangered his estate therein. Of the great Army which he led against this Idalcans, we have spoke already; adding here only; that before he went upon this enterprise (called the journey of Rachiol) he sacrificed in nine days 2036 Beasts to the Country Idols, the flesh whereof he caused to be distributed amongst the poor. Routed at first, and being perswaded by some about him to go out of the field, he is said to have made this Noble Answer. That he had rather the Idalcans should boast that he had slain him, than vanquished him. And thereupon leaping into the thickest of his Enemies, and well followed by the valiantest of his Friends, he obtained the Victory. But this vast Army of 60000 Foot, 30000 Horse, 537 Elephants, with necessaries answerable to such infinite multitudes, speaks only what he can do on extreme necessity, or when he had some long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better measured by their standing Forces, than by necessitated Levies. And herein this Prince comes not much short of his greater Neighbours: his standing Bands consisting of 40000 Nairors, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, which serve on foot; 20000 Horse, who are either Persians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants; well paid, and kept in continual readiness; his Foot defrayed out of his Revenues, his Horse maintained like the Turky Timariots, out of certain Lands distributed amongst his Captains (some of which are said to have a million of Crowns per annum) to furnish him with these stable Bands of Horses and Elephants.

As for his Revenue, it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three; defraying with the rest the expence of his Household, and the entertainment of his Foot. This Sum amassed together out of the Lands, Mines, and Forrefts of the Country, which are wholly his; and the waters of some Rivers (sold by him to his Subjects) which he monopolizeth, the common people having nothing but their Arms and Labour. Of which, the Mines, Forrefts, and one third of the Lands, he retaineth to himself; the other two being divided amongst his Captains. So that it is no marvel if so rich a Country yield him such an income, considering it is all his own. I do rather wonder (of the two) it should yield no more.

9. ORISTAN.

ORISTAN or ORIXA, is bounded on the South, with Narfinga; on the West, with Dely and Sauga; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Bosanters on the East, with the Gulf Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane; so called from Orissa, the Chief City of it.

The Country hath plenty of Rice, cloth of Cotton, and a fine stuff like silk, made of graft, and there called Zerza; with which, together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Myrabolans, and other Commodities here growing; they use to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Orissa only. The people to well governed, or so hating theft, that in the time of their own Kings, before they came under the Monguls, a man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points, of the same temper and religion with the rest of the Indians subject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moisten and refresh it; but none so beneficial to the Kings hereof as the River Guanga (of old called Chaberis) the waters whereof esteemed sacred by the Kings of Calicut and Narfinga, and much used by them in their sacrifices and superstitious purgations, are wholly ingrossed by this King, who selleth them to those Princes at excessive rates. Besides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-coast, of 350 miles in length, that is to say, from Cape Guaderino in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narfinga, to Cape Leogora in the East, which parts it from Bengala. But for all that not very much traded, because not so well provided of commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far less Territory.

Towns of most note herein, 1 Orissa, on the Sea-side, or not far from it, the best traded Port of all this Kingdom; to which the name thereof is to be ascribed, as the Head City of the Country. 2 Cateoba, six days journey within the Land, the ordinary residence of their Kings: before it was subdued by the Great Mongul. 3 Angeli, a well frequented Port, at the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; from whence many Ships are yearly laden with Indian Wares. 4 Bacoli or Bacola, more within the Land, and once the head City of a Kingdom; but a very poor one. 5 Simergan, where they held it an impiety to eat flesh, or kill any beast. 6 Senerpate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deserves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom, but that the Kings hereof were Gentiles, subdued not many years since by the King of Patanaw; and both grown weaker by that War, by Echebar, the Great Mongul.

10. BOTANTIER.

BOTANTIER (under which name I comprehend all those Petit Kingdoms which are crowded together in the North and North-East of this part of India) lieth on the South, Oristan and Patanaw; on the West, the River Guanga or Chaberis, by which parted from the Realms of Pengab; on the North, the Zagathian Tartars, divided from it by some branches of Mount Taurus, on the East the famous River Ganges. So called from Bosnia, the principal City of Botanter; which is the chief of the small Kingdoms.

The Country great, of three months journey in extent, full of high Mountains, one of which may be seen five days journey off; in which are said to dwell a people with ears of a span long or more, whom otherwise those of the valleys count as Apes. In those parts which are next

Pengab, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more inclined to the Olive colour. Their garments they wear close to their bodies, so freight that one cannot see a pleat or wrinkle; and those they never put off by night nor day whilst they are able to hang on: nor do they wash at any time, for fear of defiling, so pure a Creature as the water. Contented with one Wife (devised to be held a miracle in these Eastern parts) and yet cobabit not with her after two or three Children. When any of them die, the South-fayer is to tell them what to do with his body; according to whose direction (first consulting his books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towns of note there are amongst them. The principal, 1 Bosnia, the Metropolis of it. 2 Clamur, of which little memorable. 3 Kakres, the second Kingdom of this rank, large, but exceeding mountainous, as being over run by the branches of Mount Caucasus, which divides it from Tartary. So named of Kakres the chief Town thereof, by some called Negarior, their Staples for the sale of their cloth (most of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinoy, and Tartarian Merchants, who resort frequently to those Markets. This is a distinct Kingdom of it self, the Kings whereof are called Dermain, but Vassals to the Great Mongul. And so is he of 3 COUCHIE, another Kingdom of this Tract, fronting upon Cochin-China, beyond Ganges; so called from Combe, the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reason that it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will: full of good pastures by that means, and those well stored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Deer, and other Cattel; though the people neither kill nor eat them, but on the contrary build Hospitals for them, in which when lame and old, they are kept while they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them; their small money being Almonds.

4 GOUREN, the most Northern Realm in this general division, to called of Gor, or Goren, the chief Town of it. The Country in some parts mountainous, out of which springeth the River Sielly, one of the Tributaries unto Ganges, the rest a kind of a Desert or unpeopled Country, joyneth close to Combe. In which are few Villages, grafs (or reeds rather) longer than a man, and therein many Buffs, Tigers, and other wild Beasts; none wilder than the Thieves, who frequent the Wildernesses.

In this Tract also are the Kingdoms of 5 RAME, and 6 RECON, joyning upon Zagathay, or inclining towards it; possessed by the Mongul Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, if not before: but Fendataries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachofia, who commanded in the North-East of Persia, and these North parts of India; and from those places drew his Army or the greatest part of it, when called unto the aid of Galgee, the King of Mandao. Here is also the Kingdom of 7 TIPPUBA, naturally fenced with Hills and Mountains, and by that means hitherto defended against the Mongul Tartars, their bad Neighbours, with whom they have continual wars. But of these Northern Kingdoms lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be said; and that little of no certain knowledge, those parts being hitherto so untravelled, that they may pass in the Account of a Terra Incognita.

11. PATANAW.

PATANE or PATANAW, is bounded on the North, with the Realm of Botanter; on the East, with Ganges; on the West, with Oristan; and on the South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patane the chief City of it. There is another Kingdom

Kingdom of this name in the further India: but whether it were so called because a Colony of this; or from some resemblances in the nature of the several Countries, or from the signification of the word in the Indian Language, I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that though they have the same name, yet they are under several Governments, and situate in far distant places: no otherwise agreeing than in some resemblances, as Holland in the Low-Countries doth with Island in Lincolshire.

The Country yieldeth veins of Gold, which they dig out of the pits, and wash away the earth from it in great Bolls. The people tall, and of slender making, many of them old: great Praters, and as great dissembles. The women so bedecked with Silver and Copper, especially about the feet, that they are not able to endure a shoe. Both Sexes use much washing in the open Rivers, and that too intermix together in their natural nakedness; especially such as live near the banks of the River Jamena (esteemed more holy than the rest) which from Agra passing thorow this Country falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Patane, a large Town and a long one, built with very broad streets; but the houses very mean and poor, made at the best of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Metropolis of this Kingdom, because the ancientest, and that which gives the name unto it. 2 Banaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries use to come in Pilgrimage, to bath themselves in the holy waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanaw, very fair and flourishing, and beautified on the Rode with handsome Villages. 2 Siripur, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of this Country; not yet subdued by the Great Mongul. 4 Ciandecen, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Jesuites, when blamed by them for the worship of so many Pagodes, as contrary both to the Law of God and Nature; For causing them to rehearse the Decalogue, he told them that he did offend no more against those commandments in worshipping so many Pagodes, than they themselves in worshipping so many Saints. 3 Satagan, a fair City (for a City of Nairs) once part of Patanaw, since ascribed to Bengala.

The people of this Country properly called Patanians, but corruptly Partians, were once of great command and power in these parts of India. Lords, for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Bengala, into which driven by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grand-father of Echebar. Their last King being slain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joyned in an Aristocracy, and warring upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their Successors attempted Oristan, and added that also to their Estate, but they could not long make good their fortunes, subdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made subject to him. Three of them, viz. the Prince of Siripur, the King of Ciandecen; and he whom they call Masfadalim, retain, as yet (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their ancient Paganism as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Mahometanism, have vassalled themselves to the Great Mongul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country.

12. BENGALA.

BENGALA is bounded on the North, with Patanaw; on the East, with the Kingdoms of Pegu; on the South and West, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 360 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land. A Country stored with all things necessary to the life of man, great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and long Pepper. Such abundance of Silk, and Cotton, and of Flesh and Fish, that it is impossible that any Country should exceed it in those commodities. And which crowns all, blest with so temperate and sweet an air, that it draws thither people of all sorts to inhabit it. Here is also amongst other rarities, a Tree, called Moser, which beareth so delicate a fruit, that the Jews and Mahometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam to sin.

The natural Inhabitants for the most part are of white complexion, like the Europeans, subtil of wit, and of a curious disposition; well skilled in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandize, if not somewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with some smattering in Philosophy, Physick, and Astrology. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparel: not naked, as in others of these Indian Provinces, but clothed in a shirt or smock reaching to their feet, with some upper Garment over that. The women of an ill name for their unchastity, though Adultery be punished with cutting off of their noses. Neat, if not curious and too costly in this one custom, that they never feast meat twice in the same Pot, but for every boyling buy a new one. In Religion, for the most part Mahometans, especially on the Sea-shores, which lay most open and commodious to the Arabians; by whom Mahometanism was here planted many Ages since.

Of Rivers we need take no care, having spoken of Ganges; that with its many channels may abundantly serve to water so small a Province. But hereof more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now unto the Cities. The principal whereof, 1 Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, situate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned for one of the most beautiful Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages, by reason of the holiness and divine operations ascribed by the Indians to the waters of it: there being few years in which not visited by three or four hundred thousand Pilgrims. 2 Gouru, the Seat Royal of the ancient Kings. 3 Catigan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4 Taxda, once a Town of great traffick, and situate in those times on the banks of Ganges; now by the changing of the channel (occasioned by the frequent over-flowing of it) above a League off from the River. 5 Porto Grande, and 6 Porto Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals; but without Forces for defence, or rules for Governments. Places like the Asylum, which was built by Romulus; whereunto such as dare not stay in their own Countries, or any well regulated Cities, use to make their resort; privileged here to live in all kind of licentiousness.

Here is also in the North parts of this Province, or adjoining to it, the City and Kingdom of ARACHAN, lying along the banks of Ganges, but so remote from the Sea, that it is 50 miles distant from the nearest branch of it. Wealthy, and populous withal; governed heretofore by a King of its own, so wallowing in wealth and sensual pleasures, that he had in this City, and the parts adjoining twelve Royal Palaces or Seraglios, all strowed with women for his lust. Now subject with Bengala and Patanaw, betwixt which it lyeth, to the Empire of the Great Mongul.

There are some small Islands in the Gulf of Bengala, which I account unto that Kingdom. 1 Bazacata, now called Basse. 2 Barasse, of which name there are five in Ptolomy, three of them by Mercator said to be Mindado, Cailon, and Subur. 3 Two, called the Islands of Good Fortune.

Fortune, by him placed under the Aequator, and said to be inhabited by Ambropobagi, or man-eaters; as also were three more which he calls 4 Sadadibze, now named Caimam. 5 Isfulz Satyrorum, or the Isles of *Satyr*s, three in number, the people whereof were reported to have tails like *Satyr*s. And 6 those called Maniole, in number ten. (now Isles de Prace) reported by Ptolomy to be so stored with Adamant Stones, that they violently drew to them any ships or vessels which had Iron in them; for which cause they which used these Seas fastened the planks of their Ships with wooden Pins. But our later Navigators find no such matter, unless perhaps it may be in the exploits of Sir Huon of Bourdeaux, where indeed we meet with such an Island, in the course of his Errand.

But to return again to the Kingdom of Bengala, we find it of a different constitution from the rest of the Kingdoms of these parts. Not governed by a Family of Successive Princes, descended from the Stem of a Royal Ancestry, as others are. Chance, or necessity, had brought thither many Habassines, or *Aethiopian*s, who made a Conquest of the Country; and chose a King out of themselves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Royal honour to the Habassin Nation, they procured thence yearly thirty thousands of Slaves, whom they trained up unto the wars, advanced unto the highest commands in Civil and Military Service; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Sovereign; as the Mamelucks in the Kingdom of Egypt, whom herein they followed. By some Arabians trading with them, they came in time to admit Mahometanism, amongst themselves the Sea-coasts especially. Dispossessed first of some part of their Kingdom, lying about Satagan, by the Parthians, when driven to seek new dwellings by Baburza, the Mongul Tartar: and of their whole Kingdom, by the valour and good fortune of Echebar, who added it unto the rest of his Estate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this side of Ganges (the Kingdoms of Malabar and Narsinga being but a Parenthesis in the construction of this sentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his descent from the Mongul Tartars, one of five great Tribes or Nations into which that people were divided. Derived originally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almost all the Greater and Lesser Asia unto his Estates, left Persia, with the parts of India which lay nearest to it on the North, to Myrza Charr, his fourth Son. But his Issue failing in Abdula, the fourth of that Line, those Estates fell to Abnsaid, descended from Maromcha, the third Son of Tamerlane: whose Son and Successor called Zenzer, by some Malauceres, being dispossessed of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Persia, by Ussan-Cassanes, the rights of all, with the possession of Arachosia (now called Cabul) and Paropamisus (now Candahor or Sablestan) together with so much of India as was held by those Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger Sons of Abnsaid: whose Posterity laying hold on such opportunities as were offered to them, have made themselves Masters in few years of this mighty Empire. whose Successors and their achievements we shall here present.

The Great Mongul.

- 1473 1 Hamed, the son of Abnsaid, of the Race of Tamerlane, after the Conquest of Persia by Ussan-Cassanes, succeeded in Cabul, Candahor, and the parts of the Realms of India subject to the Tartars.
- 1500 2 Babor or Baburza, in danger to be dispossessed of most of his Estates by the neighbouring Usbeques, living upon the borders of Persia, Tartary, and India, whom at last he quieted; enlarging his dominions by the Conquests of some part of Patanam, and other Kingdoms in the North.

- 1532 2 Hamoyen, the Son of Babor, or Baburza, commonly called Emanpaxda, vanquished by the Parthians or Patanians, and their confederates, craved aid of Tamara, the second Persian Monarch of this Line, on promise to conform to the Sophian Sect: and by that aid confirmed and settled his affairs; but held himself to the Principles of his Irreligion.
- 4 Merhamed or Miramudim, Son of Emanpaxda, called in by Galgee the King of Mandao, against Badurim the Cambian, vanquished the Cambian King in two pitched fields; and conquered the Kingdoms of Mandao, and Balassia, with some other Provinces.
- 5 Adabar the Son of Merhamed, added the Realms of Dely and Cambaita, unto his Dominions.
- 1550 6 Mahomet Selabdin, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the most fortunate and victorious Prince of all his Family, subdued the Kingdoms of Caximir, Agra, Decan, Orissa, Bengala, Patanam, and divers others of less note.
- 1605 7 Selim, surnamed Jangbeere, the Son of Echebar, who added nothing that I hear of, to his Fathers Conquests.
- 1627 8 Blackie, the Grand-child of Selim by his eldest Son, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon or Agra) proclaimed King on the death of his Grand-father; but shortly after made away by Asaph Chawn, so to make room for
- 1627 9 Curroon, the third Son of Selim or Jangbeere, and Son-in-law unto Asaph Chawn; having by his own Ministers, and the hands of his Father-in-law, murdered the proclaimed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royal blood, succeeded into the Estates, and was Crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince, still living for ought I hear to the contrary.

To look a little on these Princes, their estate and power; in matters of Religion they have generally been Mahometans, that Religion being long since embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally descended. But not so scrupulous or precise in that profession, as to endeavour the suppressing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his Son Jangbeere, being so inclined unto Christianity, that they permitted the Jesuits to build Colleges and Churches in Agra itself, the Imperial City, and many other chief Cities in his Dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, that being doubtful what Religion to adhere unto, he caused 30 Infants to be so brought up, that neither their Nurses nor any body else should speak unto them; resolving to addict himself to the Religion of that Country, whose Language should be spoken by them, as most agreeable to nature; and he did accordingly. For as those Children spake no Language, so was he positive and resolved in no Religion; able to see the vanities of Mahomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the strictness of Christianity. And though Selim who succeeded, to content his Mahometan Subjects, declared himself for that Religion; yet his affairs being once settled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as Neutral as his Father; Sultan Curroon now Reigning, Reigning, of the same Neutrality, and 'tis well he is so; there being no Religion so impure and bloody, which he would not dishonour by his known ungraciousness.

The Language spoken by these Princes, and their natural Subjects the Magors, or Mongul-Tartars, is said by some to be the Turkish. But I think rather, that it is some Language near it, than the very same: And that the Language which they speak is the ancient Scythian or Tartarian, from which the Turks (a Scythian people) differ but in Dialect, a sprinkling of the Persian intermixt amongst them. A mixture not to be denied, in regard of their long dwelling in that Country, the intercourse which their Subjects of those parts have with these of India; and that the greatest part of their Soldiers, Officers, and Commanders are supplied from thence.

Their Government is absolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every man's estate which is worth the having: the Persons and Purves of his Subjects at his sole disposing; so that he may amass what Treasures, and raise what Forces for the Wars his need requirith; or the Avarice or Ambition of his Ministers shall suggest unto him. First, for his Treasures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to fifty Millions of Crowns; and there are reasons to persuade that it may be more. The Country very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the world, the Import upon which, is of infinite value; besides the vast sums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countries whatsoever, which hold traffick here; their Commodities not being to be parted with but for ready Coyn. The whole Land being also his, he estates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himself, and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleasure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themselves, but him: it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbents death, to enter on the whole estate of the Tenant by the way of Echebar: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him of course, the Wife and Children of the deceased being fairly dealt with, if he content himself with the personal estate, and leave the Land to them to begin a new; for Instance, of those huge sums which in so rich a Country may be had this way, it is said, that when the Vice-Roy of Laboa dyed, he left to Echebar three Millions of Gold, besides Silver, Jewels, Horses, Elephants, Furniture and Goods, almost invaluable: And of one Raga Gagnar, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mongul seized of his into his hands 3300 pound weight of Gold, besides Plate and Jewels. Besides these means of heaping Treasure, all the Mines of the Country are wholly his, and the Profits given by all sorts of Suits, hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his presence which comes empty handed. Finally, if Badurim, which was King of Cambaita only, could bring into the field at once 500 Tun of Gold and Silver to pay his Army, and after the loss of all that treasure, advanced upon the sudden the sum of 600000 Crowns, which he sent to Solyman the Magnificent to come to succour him; both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treasures must we think this Prince to be Master of, who hath more than four times the estate of the King of Cambaita; and far more trading now than in former times.

By the like Parallel we may conjecture somewhat at his Forces also; Badurim the Cambian brought into the field against Merhamed, and the King of Mandao, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horse, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 Pieces of brass Ordnance, of which were 4 Basilisks, each of them drawn with 100 yoke of Oxen; and 500 Carts loaded with Powder and Shot. What then may we conceive of this Prince, who is Lord of so much a greater Estate than he, but that his Levies may be raised proportionably to so great Dominions? But because possibly Badurim did extend himself to the utmost of his power, and having lost two Battels, was never able to recruit again, which no wise Prince would do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mongul, without running any such hazards on the loss of a Battel, can in an instant raise 50000 Elephants 300000 Horse and Foot proportionable; and yet have stock enough for an After-game, if that he should chance to lose the first. But it is seldom that he hath advanced to so high a Muster. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Decan, he had but an hundred thousand men, and a thousand Elephants for fight; though possibly of all sorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in times of Progress, it is said that his followers of all sorts amount unto two hundred thousand; and that his Tents do usually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithstanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire hath not only been at a stand, since the death of Echebar; but the Rasbooches in Cambaita, the Venazarari in Decan, and other puissant Rebels in other parts of his Dominions, hold out still against him; some of them being said to command as much Land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have always in readiness 20000 horse, and 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature, or Divine providence hath given to Empires, as to Men, a determinate growth, beyond which there is no exceeding.

2. INDIA EXTRA GANGET.

INDIA EXTRA GANGET is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further side of the River Ganges, from the spring or fountain of it, whereforever it be, to the fall thereof into the Sea by the fifth and last mouth thereof, which is called Antiboli: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this side of that River. From hence extended Eastward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Country in those elder times so renowned for wealth, that one Track of it had the name of The Silver Region, and another of The Golden Chersonese: this last supposed to be the Opbir of Solomon, of which more hereafter. The people of the same nature and disposition, in the elder times, as those which did inhabit on the hither side of the Ganges; not so well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reason of the remoteness of their situation; nor so well discovered at the present. So that the best account we shall be able to give of it (though that lame enough) will not be so exact and punctual as of that before; with reference either to the state thereof in the times of the Ancients, or the affairs of it in these days.

Mountains of most note in it, 1 Beryrus, 2 Meandrus, 3 Semantibinus; and 4 those called Damasi, touched upon before, in our general discourse of India. Out of which, and from other springs, flow these following Rivers, 1 Catabada, 2 Borsanna, 3 Sadu, 4 Temala, 5 Bosynge, 6 Chrysastra, 7 Polandus, 8 Attabas, these three last in the part hereof called the Golden Chersonese, 9 Danasi, and 10 Dorici, rising out of the Mountains called Damasi. Others there are whose names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now distinguished it is hard to say. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1 Balanga, 2 Cirtatha, 3 Tafale, 4 Tagma, and 4 Malibura, have the name of being the Metropolis of their several Nations, Triglyphon, only honoured honoured with the name of Regia: more memorable perhaps for the white Crown, and bearded Heirs, which are said to have been thereabouts, than for being the Seat-Royal of some petit Prince. After these 1 Sada on the banks of the River Sadiu. 2 Samba, 3 Sabara, 4 Coly, 5 Zube, and 6 Sinda, have the name of Cities. 7 Baracura, 8 Barabunda, 9 Bebynga, 10 Tacola, 11 Sabana, and 12 Thibonobastus are marked out for the most noted Empories, or Towns of Trade; the memory of Sabana being still preserved in the Frith of Sabaon, betwixt this Cherfoufe and Sumatra. Others there are not noted by those special Adjuncts, of which 1 Cocconagora and 2 Balonca, in the Golden Cherfoufe. 3 Rhandamarcotta, in the Midlands, 4 Pentapolis, near the mouth of Ganges, called Antibolum; 5 Aganagara, near the Bay called Sinus Magnus; and 6 Corygaza, one of the principal Towns of the Marande, may be some of the chief.

The old Inhabitants hereof, besides the Marande last spoken of, were the Gangarides, and Gangani, inhabiting on the banks of Ganges; the Tacorzi, bordering on the Mountain Bepyrus; as the Tileda on Meandrus; and the Animache, and Caboca, near the hills called Damasi. The Esfade, said to be crooked, short, and thick; but of a cheerful aspect, and clear complexion: of which complexion also the Inhabitants of the Golden Cherfoufe were observed to be: the Barre, and Cudute, on the Bay called Sinus magnus; the Lestori, a thievish and pyritical people, who lived in Caves, and were affirmed to be of so hard a skin, that it was not penetrable by an Arrow. These, with the rest, too many to be here recited, the issue in most likelihood of Chavilah and Saba the Sons of Jocktan; of whom we find so many footsteps in Sabara Civitate, Sabaraco, Siam, Sabana Emporia, Sobanus Fluvius; and in the Countries now called Ava, and the Kingdom of Cavelan. Of any of their actions we find little in ancient stories, or of the power of any of their former Kings, but that it was given out in the time of Alexander, that beyond the Ganges lived a Prince called Agramenes (the most powerful King of all those Countries) able to bring into the field 200000 Foot, 20000 Horse, 3000 Elephants, and 2000 armed Chariots. With which report though Alexander was the more inflamed to try Matters with him; yet his Souldiers were so terrified with it (remembering the hard bout which they had with Porus) that no persuasions could prevail with them to go further Eastward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unless the conversion of the Indians in the time of Constantine, may be applied to those on that side of the River, as perhaps it may.

As for the latter observations and discoveries of it, we find it (as most barbarous Countries else till reduced to order) dismembered and subdivided into many Estates; almost as many Realms as Cities, and distinct governments amongst them, as Tribes and Nations. Most of them Gemiles in Religion, with whom the name of Christ and Christianity not so much as heard of, till the coming of the Jesuites thither; who have not only obtained leave but some invitations, for the promoting of the Gospel. And for Mahometanism, though it had got some footing on the Sea-coasts of the Gulf of Bengala, lying most convenient for the trade of the Arabian Merchants; yet on the North, and midland parts, and those towards China, and the Oriental Seas, it was a little heard of as Christianity. But for the Kingdoms of this part, I mean the chief of them, to which as many of the rest who are worth the looking after are to be reduced, they are those of, 1 Brama, or Barma, 1 Cauchin-China, 3 Camboia, 4 Jangoma, 5 Siam, and 6 Pegu.

1. B R A M A.

THE Kingdoms of B R A M A or B A R M A have on the West, the River Ganges; on the North, part of Cathay in Tartary; on the East, Cauchin-China; and on the South, the Kingdom of Pegu. So called from the Brachmanes, Bramanes, or Bramers, possessed for many Ages past of these North-West Countreys. By the transposing of a Letter, they are now called the Kingdoms of Barma.

The Country of these Bramers or Bramanes, extendeth Northwards from the nearest of the Peguan Kingdoms, for the space of 150 Leagues, but far more from West to East: watered with many great remarkable Rivers, issuing from the Lake Chiama, which though 600 miles from Sea, and emptying it self continually into so many Channels, contains four hundred miles in compass, and is nevertheless full of waters for the one or the other.

By the overflowing of which Rivers, and the commotion of the Lake, the Country is wonderfully enriched, as Egypt by the overflowings of Nilus. Which notwithstanding, there are in it many huge Forests, in the West especially; and therein many Lyons, Tygers, Ounces, Serpents, and other Creatures of a mischievous and hurtful Nature.

The whole Country containeth the Kingdom of 1 Calam, 2 Prom, 3 Melinta, 4 Miranda, 5 Bacan, 6 Tangu, 7 Ava, and 8 Brama.

Of 1 MELINTAY, and 2 MIRANDA, I find little written, but that they were conquered with the rest, by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, in the first rising of his fortunes; becoming the foundation of his following greatness. Of 3 BACAM, it is said, that it is plentifully enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver. In 4 CAVILAN, commonly and contractedly called CALAM, we find apparent foot-steps of the name of Cavilah the son of Jockan. Of the rest more is to be said, not much.

5. PROM, though it be a little Kingdom, is exceeding populous, and stored with a warlike people. Given by the second King of Pegu of the Tangum Race, to a younger Son; who being by his Father commanded to try Matters with him; yet his Souldiers were so terrified with it (remembering the hard bout which they had with Porus) that no persuasions could prevail with them to go further Eastward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unless the conversion of the Indians in the time of Constantine, may be applied to those on that side of the River, as perhaps it may.

6. TANGU, is the name of one of these Bramain Kingdoms, so called from the chief Town thereof: formerly subject with the rest of the Kings of Pegu, and governed by their several Vice-Roys. One of which taking his advantage of the wars between the Kings of Pegu and Siam, began to set up for himself; and huffed his affairs so well, that he became sole Lord of these Bramain Kingdoms; as afterwards of all the rest in this part of India. Not long enjoyed by his Successor, when dispossessed and slain by one whom he married to his Sister, and made Governour of this very Province. In which he bore himself so stiffly, that being sent for by his King to aid him against some of his Rebels, and to bring all the Inhabitants of the Country with him: he answered that he would send one half; to send all, unreasonable. Incensed with which denial, the King armed against him; but he put the Leaders to the sword, and seized their Followers. After this being now in Arms, and despairing despairing of reconciliation, he took upon himself the Title of King of Tangu; and to secure himself therein, joyned with the King of Arrachan against his Sovereign: whom he most barbarously slew (after he had put himself into his hands) with his Wife and Children. Neither enjoyed he long the fruits of his villany, subdued not long after, with the rest of these Indian Princes, by the King of Birma; of which more hereafter.

7. A V A, another of these Kingdoms, and one of the Plantations of Cavilah also, is liberally furnished with all things necessary for the life of man. It affordeth also store of Rubies, which they dig out of the Mountains, a certain creature which breeds Musk, together with great plenty of Horse and Elephants. Their chief City is called Ava, which name it giveth to the River upon which it is built, issuing out of the Lake of Chiama; and communicates the same to the whole Province. Subject for many Ages past to the King of Pegu, till conquered by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, as before is said; and by him given, with the Title of King, unto one of his brothers. Who rebelling against the Son and Successor of his Benefactor, and by him slain in single Combat, this Kingdom was conferred on a Son of the Conquerour. A Prince of more virtue than his Brother, and one which grew at last unto great power, that in the bustle or combustions of the Kingdom of Pegu, he surprized or forced the Fort of Siriangh, formerly given unto the Portugals by the King of Arrachan, slew all the Souldiers, and spitted Philip de Britto, who commanded it. After which, gathering together the dispersed *Peguan*s, and repairing part of the City for them, he was likely to have made himself a good bargain by it; if the sudden coming of the King of Birma, had not spoiled his markets.

8. B R A M A or B A R M A, the most Southern of these Bramain Kingdoms, the King whereof was Fendastrie to the Kings of Pegu, by of their appointment. Of no account when the Portugals came first acquainted with India, nor in many years after; now of most renown. For sitting still when all the rest of their neighbours were employed in wars, they gathered so much power and strength, that in the end, one of the later Kings hereof observing how the Forces of his neighbouring Princes were consumed, and their Treasures wasted, levied an Army of 300000 fighting men, 40000 Elephants, with all things suitable. And with this power subdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan; conquered the Cities of Pegu and Odia, (the two chief Cities of these parts) invaded the Kingdom of Siam, and possessed himself of it: making in little time all the lesser Princes to become his Tributaries, as they still continue.

2. CAUCHIN-CHINA.

CAUCHIN-CHINA is bounded on the West, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the East, with part of the great Realm of China; on the North, extending towards Tartary; on the South, bordering on Camboia.

The Country aboundeth with Gold, Silver, Aloes, and great store of Silks, of which the Inhabitants make Tasfata, and other stuffs. It affordeth also plenty of Porcelaine earth, which being made into Cups, Dishes, and other Utensils of household, is sold by the name of China-ware; well counterfeited of late amongst us, by putting a white crust on our Potters earth, as neat for use and shew as the natural China.

The people very stout and warlike, especially for Foot-services; though they have many horses here, and those fit for War: Well practiced on their Peees also, on which they spend great store of powder, but not so much in War, as in Sports and Triumphs: yet making much more than they spend, the earth in some parts yielding very fit materials for that commodity. Trained up to Mansuetude, especially to the making of Powder, Silks, and Porcellaine, which they sell to the Chinese; Idolaters for the most part, as are those of China; whose Characters and Language they also use; but so that there appear some inclinations unto Christianity, in many of them who have erected many Crosses, and do admit the Pictures of the Blissful Virgin; and the final Judgment. Men not unlikely to have made a further Progress in the Gospel, if they had met with better Teachers than those Laymen Books.

The chief City hereof is called Cauchin-China by the name of the Province; situate on a River coming out of China; and passing hence into the bottom of a large and capacious Bay. The whole Country divided into three Provinces; and as many Kings; over which one Parasmani but little and they the tributaries of the Kings of China. Belonging hereunto is a little Island called Awa, seven miles from the Land; where the Inhabitants have a great trade of fishing for Pearls. The only Province of the Indies, which is wholly subject to the power of a Foreign Prince; the Portugals holding in this Continent many Towns and Cities, but no whole Provinces.

3. CAMBOIA.

CAMBOIA is bounded on the North, with Cauchin-China; on the East and South, with the Ocean; on the West, with parts of the Kingdom of Siam, and the Realm of Jangoma. So called from Camboia, the chief City of it: Divided commonly into the Kingdom of Champa, and Camb, is specially so called.

1. CHAMPA, the northern part hereof, bordereth on Cauchin-China; and is liberally provided of all necessities: besides which, there is plenty of Gold, and of the Wood called Lignum Aloes, prized at the weight thereof in Silver, much used in Balms, and at the Funerals of great persons. This a distinct Kingdom of it self, but subject with the rest to the King of Birma. The chief City of it, called by the name of Champa, which it communicates to the Country, is situate near the Sea-side, and of very good traffick.

2. CAMBOIA specially so called, lyeth South of Champa, a very great and populous Country, well stored with Elephants and Rhinoceros, which last the Indians call Abades. It yieldeth also great plenty of sweet-wood, which they call Calamba; as precious and as much esteemed of as the wood of Aloes, (if not the same, or some Species of it as I think it is) together with abundance of Rice, Flesh, and Fish; well watered with the River Mecon which issuing out of China, and having received many lesser streams falleth first into a great Lake of 200 miles compass; and thence into the Indian Ocean: making betwixt the Lake and that an hundred Islands. By the overflowings of this River the whole Country is enriched (as Egypt by the like overflowing of Nilus) the Inhabitants at those times betaking themselves to their upper Rooms, and passing altogether by boats from one place to another.

The people are conceived to be strong and warlike, though more enclined to Merchandize and Navigation, than to deeds of Arms. Idolaters of the worst kind, esteeming Men and Beasts of a like condition in regard of any future judgment: of late, beginning to set up, and adore the Cross, which (it seems) the first Principle of Religion in which the Friers are wont to instruct their Converts. Not weaned as yet by these new Teachers, from burning the women with their Husbands, common to them with many other Indian people, nor from burning their Nobles with the King, used any here; but voluntarily to express their loves, not upon constraint.

The chief Towns of it, 1 Camboia, one of the three prime Cities of this part of India; the other two being Odin and Pegu, of which more anon. Situate on the River Mecon before it was destroyed: where it hath its fall into the Sea. Well traded, as the Staple for all this Country, the Commodities whereof are brought hither, and here sold to the Merchants. 2 Cudumuch, twelve Leagues from Camboia, on the same River also. 3 Toul, on the Sea-side in the very South-west Angle of all the Country. The Kings whereof, once absolute, and at their own disposing, till invaded by a vast Army of the neighbouring Laos: in which their King being slain, and his forces weakened, his Son and Successor was constrained to become a Vassal to the Crown of Siam. But fearing the loss of his Estate, when the Kingdom was made subject to the Kings of Pegu, in the year 1598 he applied himself unto the Portugals, offered them a Peninsula (part of his Dominions) extending three Leagues into the Sea; and sent to the Jesuites for some of their Society to live and preach amongst the people. Not able for all these honest Policies to preserve himself from being made a Fendatory of the King of Burma.

4. JANGOMA.

JANGOMA, or the Country of LAOS, is bounded on the East, with Camboia and Champa, from which parted by the River Mecon; on the West, with the River Pegu, by which divided from that Kingdom; on the South, with the Realm of Siam; on the North, with Brama.

It took its name from Jangoma, the chief Province of it; the other two (for there be three of them in all) being those of Luea, and Curry. All of them joyned together called the Country of Laos, by the name of the people. A mighty Nation and stout, by Religion Gentiles, naked from the middle upwards, and trussing up their hair like a Cap. Their Country very rich and level, but very ill neighboured by the Gueoni (Paulus Venetus giveth them the name of Gangigu) who possess the Mountains; whence falling in great companies to hunt for men, whom they Kill and eat, they commit cruel butcheries amongst them. Inasmuch as this people, not able to defend themselves against their fury, or rather wanting good Leaders to conduct and order them (for it is said that they can make a Million of men) were fain to put themselves under the protection of the King of Siam, whom they obeyed no further than the honour took them.

Towns they have none of any note, except those three which give name to the several Provinces, and those of no note neither but for doing that. The people for the most part live on the banks of their Rivers, where they have Cottages of Timber; or else upon the Rivers in Boats and Shallops as the Tartarians of the Defarts in their Carts or Wheel-houses. One of their Rivers (commonly called River of Laos) said to extend 400 Leagues within the Land, as far as Tartary, and China; and from July to September to invert its course and flow back strongly towards its Fountain. No governed by any certain rule or order, till they submitted to the Patronage of the King of Siam; and then no other than they listed: though for their sakes, that King engaged himself in a War against the Cambials, their most deadly Enemies, accompanied with 25000 Foot, 20000 Horse, and 10000 Elephants. Secured by his protection from the teeth of those Cambials (of whom otherwise they had been devoured) in the year 1578, they defended the River in great multitudes, to the number of 200000; and fell in to the Realm of Camboia; but they made an unprosperous adventure of it. For though the King of Camboia lost his life in the Battel, yet he gave them such a fatal Blow, that they were almost all slain, drowned, or captivated in the fight. Weakened wherewith they became an easie prey to the Vice-Roy of Tangu, when he first made himself sole Master of this part of India. Who giving to his Brother the Kingdom of Ava, and leaving to his eldest Son the Kingdom of Pegu, with the Sovereignty over all the rest, conferred this Country, with the Title of King of Jangoma, on a younger Son. But he, begotten on a Daughter of the King of Pegu, and born after his Father had attained this whole Empire, was easily persuaded by the Talapoes, (so they call their Priests) that his Title was better than that of his Elder Brother, who was born before it. Prevented in his claim by the Kings of Arachan and Tangu, by whom that King was slain, and his kingdom wasted. How he sped afterwards I find not: But probable it is, that he submitted with the rest to the King of Burma.

5. SIAM.

SIAM is bounded on the North, with Jangoma, and part of Pegu; on all other parts, with the wide Ocean, save that it toucheth on the East, with a part of Camboia; and on the West, with a Point of Pegu. So called from Siam the chief of all those Kingdoms which pass under this name, as that from Siam the chief City of it.

The Country of greater length than breadth, stretcheth it self Southwards into the Sea many hundred miles, in form of a Peninsula or Demy-Island, called anciently Aurea Chersonesus, or the Golden Chersonese: one of the five famous Chersoneses or Peninsulas of the elder Writers; the other four being Peponesus in Greece, the Thracian Chersonese near Proponis, the Taurian Chersonese in the Euxine, and the Cimbrian Chersonese in the North of Germany; now part of Denmark. It had the name of Aurea, or the Golden, superadded to it, from its plenty of Gold, for which much celebrated by the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans. (and therefore not improbably thought by some to be Solomon's Ophir) still famous with the rest of the Countries of the Kingdom of Siam, for abundance of Gold, Silver, Tin, and other Metals; great quantity of Pepper sent yearly thence, with store of Elephants, and Horses. The whole Country very fat and fertile, well stored with Rice, Corn, Grass, and all other necessaries.

The people generally much addicted to pleasures, if not to Luxury; delighted much in Musick and rich Apparel: and such as stand much upon their honour. For their instruction in good Letters they have publick Schools, where their own Laws, and the Mysteries of their own Religion, are taught them in their natural Language; all other Sciences in strange Tongues understood by none but by the Learned. To tillage they can frame themselves, and are painful in it; but by no means will follow any Mechanical Arts, which they put over to their Slaves. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, worshipping the four Elements amongst other Gods; to each of which as they are severally affected, so are their bodies to be disposed of: either burnt, buried, hanged, or drowned, after their decease; as in their lives they were most devoted to the Fire, Earth, Air, or Water. Some Christians here also in and about the parts possessed by the Portugals, but more Mahometans; who possessing two hundred Leagues of the Sea-coasts of this Country, have planted that Religion in most part of the Country now by them possessed.

It containeth in it many Kingdoms, some of little note; Those of most observation, 1 Malaca, 2 Patane, 3 Jor, 4 Muantay, 4 Muantay, and 5 Siam, properly and especially so called. Of which Malaca is now in the hands of the Portugals, for which Patane are possessed by the Arabians or Saracens, the other two have followed the fortunes of the Kings of Siam.

1. The Kingdom of MALACA taketh up the South part of the Golden Chersonese, extended towards the North from the Cape or Promontory which Protemy calleth Malanomia, in the extreme South point hereof near unto Sabana, then a noted Empyre for the space of 270 miles. So called from Malaca the chief City of it, of old times called Musicaea, or built very near it; from whence this Tract is called by Sirabo, Musicaea Terra. The City seated on the banks of the River Gaza, which is here said to be 15 miles in breadth; by the frequent overflowings whereof, and the nearness of it to the Line, (being but two degrees in the North) the Air hereof, and all the Territory belonging to it, is very unwholesome; and for that cause the Country but meaply populous. In compass it is said to be 20 miles of great wealth, because of almost infinite trading; for Spices, Unguents, Gold, Silver, Pearls, and Precious Stones, the most noted Empyre of the East. Inasmuch that it is said by Ludovicus Barthema, who was there before the Portugals knew it, that it was traded by more Ships than any one City in the world; more by far since the coming of the Portugals to it, than it was before. The people (as in all this Tract) of an Ash-colour, with long hair hanging over their faces, bloody and murderous; especially when they meet one another in the Night. Few other Towns of any note, in a place so unhealthy, except 2 Sinapura, situate East of Malaca, near the Promontory of old called Magnum, supposed by some to be the Zaba of Protemy: and that more probably, than that it should be his Paltura; as Maginus would have it, Paltura being a City of the Hiber India, and different at the least 20 degrees of Longitude from any part of this Chersonese. But whatsoever it was called in the former times, it was in these later Ages the mother of Malaca; the greatest part of the Trade and people being removed from thence to this newer foundation: before which time it was the best frequented Empyre in these parts of the East. 3 Pulo Zambilan, 120 miles on the West of Malaca, from whence to Sinapura, coasting about the Southern Cape (now called Lape Liampo) we have a Sea-shore of 270 miles, as before was said. No other habitation of any reckoning, but a few Sheds upon the shore for the use of Fishermen, and some scattered Villages in the Land: the People dwelling most on Trees for fear of Tigers.

This Tract in former times possessed by the Kings of Siam, about the year 1258 became a Kingdom of it self; founded by Paramisera, and some other of the Asian Nobility, who flying the tyranny of their own King came into this Country; where they were lovingly received by Sangsefinga, then reigning under the Siamite in Sinapura. Him they persequently slew, and invited Paramisera in his Dominion. Outred of which by the King of Siam, he was forced to seek a new dwelling; and after two or three Removes, fell upon the place where Malaca now standeth: which City, pleased with the commodiousness of the situation, he is said to have built. The trade of Sinapura in short time removed hither also, which so increased the wealth and power of the Kings hereof, that joyning with the Mopra, who began to plant themselves on the shores adjoining, and receiving withal the Law of Mahomet, they began to cast off all subjection to the Kings of Siam, to whom the Son and Successor of Paramisera had submitted his new-raised Kingdom, and became their Homager. Incensed wherewith, the Siamite about the year 1500 sent out a Navy of 200 Sail to distress it by Sea; and an Army of 30000 men and 400 Elephants to besiege it by Land. But before he was able to effect any thing, hindered by tempests, and the insolenities of some of his Souldiers, the Portugals in the year 1511, under the conduct of Albuquerque had possessed themselves of it, who built there a Forticels and a Church. And though Alodinus the Son of the expelled King (whose name was Mahomet) endeavoured the regaining of his Estate, and that the Saracens, Hollanders, and the Kings of Jor and Achen (two neighbouring Princes) envying the great fortunes of the Portugals, have severally and successively laboured to deprive them of it: yet they still keep it in defiance of all opposition which hath been hitherto made against them.

2. North unto that of Malaca lyeth the Kingdom of TOR, JOR, or JOHOR, so called of Jor, or Jubor, the chief City of it. Inhabited for the most part by Mopra; or Saracens, Mahometans, by their means prevailing on the Natives of the Country also. A Kingdom of no great extent, but of so much power, that joyning his Land-forces with the Navy of the King of Achen, he besieged Malaca, and built a Royal Fort before it; in which, when taken by Paul de Lima by the defeat of this King, were found 900 Pieces of Brass Ordnance. After this, picking a quarrel with the King of Pahan, he burnt his Houses, Barns, Provisions, and the Suburbs of the City it self; but in the course of his affairs was interrupted by the King of Achen (one of the Kings in the Isle of Sumatra) his old Confederates; who after 29 days siege took the City of Jor. What afterwards became of this King or Kingdom, I am not able to resolve. In former times it did acknowledge him of Siam for the Lord in Chief.

3. More Northward yet lyeth the Kingdom of PATAN, denominated from Patane, the chief City of it; but different from Patane in the other India, as Cleveland in Yorkshire from Cleveland in Germany; or Holland in the Low-Countries from Holland in Lincolnshire; as hath been fully shewn before. The City made of Wood and Reed, but artificially wrought and composed together; the Mesquit only (most of the people being Mahometans) is built of Brick. The Chinoi make a great part of the Inhabitants of it, inasmuch that in this small City there are spoken three Languages; viz. the Chinese, used by that people; the Malayan (or Language of Malaca) which is that of the Natives; and the Siam, to the King whereof this small Crown is Fendatory. Built of such light stuff and combustible matter, it must needs be in great danger of fire; and was most miserably burnt in the year 1613 by some Javan Slaves in revenge of the death of some of their fellows: at which time the whole City was consumed with fire, the Mesquit, the Queens Court, and some few houses, excepted only. The Country governed of late years by Queens, who have been very kind to the English and Hollanders, granting them leave to erect their Factories in Patane. Not memorable for any great exploit by them performed, but that a late Queen a little before that dismal fire, offended with the King of Pan or Pahan, who had married her Sister, and reigned in a little Island not far off, the sent against him a Fleet of 70 Sail, and 4000 men; by which compelled to correspond with her desires, he brought his Queen and her Children with him to make up the breach.

4. The Kingdom of Siam, strictly and specially so called, is situate on the main land (the rest before described being in the Chersonese) betwixt Camboia on the East, Pegu on the West, the Kingdom of Muantay on the North, and the main Ocean on the South. The chief Cities of it, 1 Socotai, memorable for a Temple made wholly of metal 80 spans in height, raised by one of the Kings; it being the custom of this Country; that every King at his first coming coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple, which he adorned with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2 Quedon, renowned for the best Pepper, and for that cause very much frequented by foreign Merchants. 3 Tavay, upon the Sea-coast where it joyneth to Pegu. Whence measuring along the shores till we come to Champa before mentioned, being all within the Dominions of the King of Siam (not reckoning the Chersonese into this Account) we have a Sea-coast of the length of 600 Leagues. 4 Lugor, upon the Sea-side also, near that little Isthmus, which joyneth the Chersonese to the Land; from whence to Malaca, is 600 miles fall all along the coast. 5 Calahan, the head City of a little Kingdom, but subj. to the Crown of Siam. 6 Siam, the chief City of this part of the Kingdom, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very commodiously seated on the River Menam, for Trade and Merchandise. So populous and frequented by foreign Nations, that besides the Natives, here are said to be thirty thousand households of Arabians. The houses of it high built by reason of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the Upper-rooms; and unto every house a Boat for the use of the Family. Those of the poorer sort dwell in little sheds, made of Reed and Timber; which they remove from place to place for the best convenience of their Markets: And yet so strong, that being besieged by the Tanguan Conquerour, then King of Pegu, Anno 1567, with an Army of fourteen hundred thousand fighting men, for the space of 20 months together, it resolutely held good against him: not gained at last by Force, but Treason, one of the Gates being set open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Christianity; but hitherto so ill instructed in the Principles of it, that they maintain, amongst many other strange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years, from what time I know not (the World shall be consumed with fire; and that under the ashes of it shall remain two Eggs, out of which shall come one man and one woman, who shall people the world anew.

5. MUANTAY, the last of these Kingdoms, lieth betwixt Jangoma and Siam, memorable for nothing more than the City of Odia, or Udia, the principal of all the Kingdoms of Siam; and the usual residence of those Kings. Situate on the banks of the River Caipuma, and containing in it 400000 Inhabitants, of which 50000 are trained to the Wars, and in continual readiness for present service. For though this King be Lord of nine several Kingdoms, yet he useth none of them in his Wars but the natural Siamites, and those of this City, and the rest of his Subjects of Muantay. It is said that for the use of this City only (being seated like Venice upon many little Islands, not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 Skiffs, and Shallops; serving to wait the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great strength, and almost impregnable. But being beleaguered by the Tanguan or Bramin Conquerour with ten hundred thousand fighting men (an Army big enough to have buried a greater City than this, if every man had but cast a shovel full of earth upon it) it was won at last.

The Government of these Kings of Siam, was absolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being sole Lord of all the Land in his Kingdoms; which he either gave to his Nobles, or Farmed out to Husbandmen, during life or pleasure, but never passed over unto any the right of Inheritance. And these he grants unto his Subjects, beside rents in money, upon condition to maintain a determinate number of Horse, Foot, and Elephants: thereby enabled without further charge unto the Subject, to levy 20000 Horse, and 250000 Foot for present services;

besides far greater numbers out of the residue of his people, if occasion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was said to keep 6000 Souldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which Beasts he is reported to have 30000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the War. By reason of so great a power he became Master of the Realms of Cambaya and Campa; held those of Malacca, Jor, Pahan, and Patane, as his Vassals and Tributaries; with that of Tangoma and the Laot, under his protection. But when the fatal time was come, and that his City of Siam was betrayed to the King of Pegu, he poisoned himself upon the news, his Son becoming Tributary to the Peguan Victor. This Son of his, too much a Prince to be a Subject, revolted from a Son of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King, degenerating from the gallantries of so worthy a Father; by whom he was believed in Siam with 900000 fighting men. Unable to resist his Army if he had previously declared such a resolution, he entertained the King with Treaties, and promises of delivering the City to him the third month after, (which was March) when suddenly the River was to overflow all the Country for 20 miles about: by which sudden and violent inundation (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there perished all of this great Army, except 70000. After this blow, the conquering Siamite, Anno 1600, besieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more anon; and dying in the year 1605, left his Estate unto his Brother. Whole Son succeeding, settled a Factory in Siam of the English Merchants, Anno 1612, and was in a fair way of obtaining the Sovereignty of Pegu, then destroyed and wasted; if the violent and unrelenting coming of the King of Burma had not crossed him in it: to whom now subject with the rest of the Indian Princes, on that side of the River.

6. PEGU

PEGU is bounded on the East, with Jangoma, and a part of Siam; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Burma; on the West and South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City, as that by the name of the River upon which it standeth. Divided commonly into the Kingdoms and Estates of 1 Verma, 2 Macin, 3 Orachan, 4 Martavan, and 5 Pegu, specially so called.

1. VERMA is the name of a small Kingdom bordering upon Bengala; and so denominated from Verma, the chief Town thereof: A Kingdom which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moors and Mahometans, which can be said of no other of these Indian Kingdoms.

The People black, naked above the Waste and covered beneath it only with a Veil of Cotton; in matter of Religion, Gentiles; and in war right valiant. This last apparent by the long and frequent Wars which they had with the Peguan; to whom made tributary in conclusion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACHIN, so called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of these Peguan Kingdoms. Of final esteem, but for the great quantity of the Sweet-wood, by the Latines called Lignum Vitæ, by the Natives Calamba, so much in use for Funerals and Bathes, (as was said before) held also by the Indians for a sovereign and unparalleled Medicine against many dangerous distempers; great quantities hereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchant. One of the first Kingdoms which was conquered by the King of Burma, (upon whom it bordereth) in the beginning of his Fortunes.

3. ORACHAN, or Arrachan, lieth on the West of Macin, and the South of Verma; environed round with with Mountains, and impassable Woods. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Dianza, taken and destroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the King of Arrachan, Anno 1608. 2 Sundiva, situate in an Island unto which it giveth name, six Leagues off from the Continent of Bengala, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, Anno 1602, and from them taken by this King about two years after, and made a member of his Kingdom. The Island 30 Leagues in compass, very strong, fruitful, and the Town well fortified. 3 Arrachan, the head City, which gives name to all, distant from the Sea 45 miles, but seated on a large and capacious River. The King and Kingdom of no note, till the ruins of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the Desolation of which State the King hereof combining with him of Tangu, besieged the second Peguan King in the Castle of Meeao; and had betwixt them the whole Pillage of that wealthy City, together with the possession of the best Towns of it. After this victory, he returned to Arrachan in triumph, leading with him the White Elephant of the King of Pegu, sumptuously adorned; the Brother and two Sons of the Peguan following in the Pageant. A solemn and magnificent entry. The better to assure himself of his new Dominions, this King bestowed upon the Portugals the Fort of Siriagh, on the River Pegu. For which favour, ill-requited by the Portugals, who had taken his Son, and put him to a grievous ransom, they brake out into open Wars. In the pursuit whereof, after many losses, the King recovered from them the Isle of Sundiva; and manning out a Fleet of 1200 Sail (of which 75 were of so great burden, as to carry every one twelve Pieces of Ordnance) and in that Fleet 30000 Souldiers, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 great Pieces, besieged the Forts: assisted in that action also by the King of Tangu. And though he failed in his design, yet like enough he had prevented the King of Ava, who took it in the year 1613, as before is said, had he not been outed in the mean time of his own Kingdom by the King of Burma: of whose great rise, the conquering of the Realms of Macin and Arrachan were the first foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richest of these Kingdoms, lieth South to Arrachan, a little turning towards the West. The soil so fertile, that it yieldeth three Harvests in a year; and sent annually fifteen Ships to Cochin, and as many to Malaca, laden with Rice. Rich also in Mines of Iron, Lead, Steel, Brass, Silver, Gold, and Rubies, and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forests well stored with Harts, Bores, and Buffoles; store of Pines and Palms: the Woods with Sugar-Cane, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and shrubs either Medicinal or Odoriferous. The principal City of it called also Martavan, situate on a Haven open at all times of the year, and not choaked with Sands, as usually other Havens are in the Indian Winter: of great trading, much splendour, and a temperate air. Faithful unto the last to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were subject; and in that constancy they twice repulsed the King of Siam, who then had conquered the most part of the Kingdom of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite caused two of his cowardly Captains to be cast into a Caldron of scalding Oyl; and at the third Assault became Master of it. Banhalaim the old King hereof (99 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects being compelled to hide themselves in the Woods and Desarts.

5. PEGU, the most Predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Crescent or Half-Moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on the coast from Negrain unto Tavan, the next Town of Siam, for the space of three hundred miles, and upwards; but little less in breadth, if not quite as much.

So called from the River Pegu, which runs through the midst of it, and gives this name also unto Pegu the most noted City.

The Soil hereof exceeding fruitful, by reason of the annual overflowings of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear Wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth also many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lacca, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make Wax) store of Elephants, and abundance of Parrots, which speak plainer, and are much fairer than in any place else.

The people of a mean stature, somewhat corpulent, and naturally beardless. If any stragling hair thrust forth, they always carry Pincers with them to pull them out. Nimble and strong, but yet not very fit for Wars; spending too much of their strength in the love of women, to which most passionately addicted. They black their Teeth, because they say that dogs teeth be white; and wear no cloaths but on their heads and about their nakedness. Said by the Jews to be descended from some of the Tribes of Israel, confined hither by Solomon; but by the Peguan themselves, to be begotten of a Dog and a China woman, which were saved here upon a Shipwreck. By Religion for the most part Gentiles, imagining innumerable Worlds one after another, and a determinate number of Gods for every World: more Orishados, in assigning after this life according to the merits of the party deceased, one place of Torments, and another of Delights and Pleasures, if they had not added a third also for satisfaction.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, 1 Cosmi, seated in a Territory full of woods, as those Woods of Tigers, Wild Bores, Apes, and Parrots; the houses made of Canes, which serve here for Timber, (some of them being as big as Hogheads) covered over with Thatch. 2 Jocabela, a great City on the River Pegu. 3 Dian, on the same River also where they make Barks or Vessels as big as Galleasses; which serve both for Trade and Habitation. 4 Coilan, a City four-square, and each square four miles. 5 Lanagen, a pleasant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6 Dala, in which were the Kings Stables for his ordinary Elephants: his four White Elephants (for so many he had) being always kept about the Court, not seen abroad, but in great solemnities, when trapped in Furnitures of Gold; and no less honoured by the people, than the King himself: called therefore King of the White Elephant by the neighbouring Princes. 7 Silvanpede, where many victualling Barks are made to serve for dwelling on the Sea. 8 Meeao, where they use to unload such goods, as are to pass by Land to Pegu. Neighboured by the strongest Castle in all this Kingdom, and therefore chosen by the King for his place of Retreat, when distressed by the Kings of Arrachan, and Tangu. To the last of which making choice to yield up his Person, with his Wife and Children, because he had married him to his Sister, he was by him perfidiously and basely murdered. 9 Siriagh, a strong piece on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arrachan to the Portugals, and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Britto, in the year one thousand six hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good against him, and the King of Tangu his associate for the space of thirteen years together, was at last forced to yield himself Prisoner to the King of Ava, by whom cruelly tortured on a Spit. 10 Pegu, the glory of these parts, great, strong, and beautiful: Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old inhabited by Merchants, the New by the King and his Nobility. The Houses made of Wood, but covered with Tiles: a Coco-Tree before every house, yielding a comfortable shade, and a pleasant shew. The streets as straight as any line, and so broad that ten or twelve men may ride abreast in the the narrowest of them. In figures square, each square having five Gates, besides many Turrets, all of them beautifully gilded. The whole well walled with Walls of stone environed on all sides with great Ditches; and in the midst the Royal Palace, walled and ditched about, most sumptuously gilded; but especially the Temple or Idol-chappel, the walls whereof were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleasure as the World could yield: his Empire not extending only over these Kingdoms now described, but over all the Provinces or Kingdoms of the Bramines also; which he governed by his several Vice-Kings, or rather TRIBUTARIE Kings. A happiness too great to continue long. For in the year 1567, the Vice-Roy or Tributary King of Tangu, by the aid of his Faction, and reputation of his Virtues, entered into rebellion; and slaying the Nobles of the Land, usurped that Kingdom. After this he subdued the Cities and Kingdoms of Calam, Melintay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Brames or Bramines; and therefore taking to himself the Title of the King of Brama, because his fame and fortunes took their rise from his victories over them. Following the course of his successes he first assayed the Cities of Odia, and Siam, but repulsed with loss. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleaguered Pegu, and subdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the siege of Siam, had it yielded to him. Dying, he gave the Kingdom of Ava unto one of his Brothers; that of Prom, to one of his Grand-sons; the Kingdom of Jangoma to a younger Son, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Sovereignty over all the rest, to his eldest Son, a Prince of a vicious and tyrannical nature: and not more cruel to his Subjects, than they disobedient to him. Whereupon preparation are made on both sides, the people, to defend their liberty; the King, to preserve his Royalty. During these civil discords, the titular King of Siam, whose late overthrow was not yet fully digested, came violently into the Country of Pegu; burning Corn, Grains, and Fruits, killing Man, Woman, and Child: and having fatished his Fury, returned to his home. This spoil of the Fruits of the Earth, was but a prologue to an unsupportable Famine, which consumed all the Inhabitants of this flourishing Kingdom, except such whom the Granaries of the City of Pegu preserved, Anno 1568. For here the Fathers devoured their Children, the stronger preyed upon the weaker, not only devouring their more fleshy parts, but their entrails also: nay they broke up the skulls of such as they had slain, and sucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu, to make his best advantage out of his neighbours affliction; though made his Brother-in-law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For justly tearing the displeasure of his angry Prince, to whose aid he had refused to come, when sent for by him, he joyned himself with the King of Arracan, besieged his Lord and Sovereign in the Fort of Meaco. Brought to extremities, the unfortunate Prince, thought best to put himself into the hands of his Brother of Tangu, who assaulted and entered Pegu: where he found as much Treasure as 600 Elephants, and as many Horses, could conveniently carry away. This havock being made, he villainously murdered the King, Queen, and their Children, and departed; leaving the gleanings of his spoil to the King of Arracan: who, Anno 1600, was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Burma having with an Army of an hundred thousand fighting men, and forty thousand Elephants, subdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arracan, followed the currents of his victories; conquered Siam, drove the King thereof from PEGU, where he hath built a most magnificent Palace: and is now the sole Monarch of the Twelve Kingdoms of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-settled estate, we cannot yet understand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces. Merchants, whose inquisitiveness into the State-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading, cannot give us any full satisfaction: Scholars and Statists are not permitted to observe; and such of the Natives as could give us the most light, are not suffered to travel. Only we may conjecture by the great wealth of those several Princes, and the vast Armies by them raised in their several Territories; that his Annual Revenues, Casualties, and united Forces must be almost infinite.

And so much for INDIA.

OF The Oriental Islands.

THE ORIENTAL ISLANDS, so called from their situation in the Oriental, or Eastern Seas, may be divided into the Islands of 1 Japan, 2 the Philippine, and Isles adjoining, 3 the Islands of Bainam, 4 the Molucces, 5 those called Sinde, or the Celebes, 6 Borneo, 7 Jave, 8 Sumatra, 9 Ceylan, and 10 certain others of less note.

1. JAPAN.

JAPAN is an aggregate body of many Islands, separated by small Gulfs, Streights, and Turnings of the Sea; but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66 in all; others ascribe that number to so many Kingdoms, into which these Islands (be they in number more or less) use to be divided. But whatsoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find) there are three only of account, to which the several petty Kingdoms are now reduced: that is to say, 1 Japan specially so called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms, of which 26 are under the King of Meaco, 12 under the King of Amaguce, the other 15 under other Princes of inferior note. 2 Ximo, which containeth in it nine Realms, the principal whereof are those of Buogo and Figen. 3 Xicoum, which comprehendeth four only of these petty Seigneuries.

JAPAN, the chief of all these Islands, to which the residue may be accounted of but as Appurtenances, is situate over against the Streights of Anian (if such Streights there be) towards which it looketh to the North: distant from New Spain on the East 150 Leagues, or 450 English miles; and 60 Leagues from Canton, a Province of China, opposite to it on the West. On the South it hath the vast Ocean, and those infinite shoals of Islands which are called the Philippine, and the Isles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from West to East 200 Leagues, but the breadth not proportionable thereunto: in some places not above 10 Leagues over, and in the broadest part but 30.

The Country Mountainous and barren, but of a very healthy air, if not too much subject unto cold, yet in some places they have Wheat ripe in the Month of Mays; but their Rice, which is their principal sustenance, they gather not before September. The surface of the Earth, clothed with Woods and Forrests, in which some Cedars of so tall and large a body, that one of them only is sufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it stored with divers Metals, and amongst others with such inexhaustible Mines of Gold, that Panlus Venetus reporteth some of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered, in his time, with heaps of Gold, as ours in Europe are with Lead. But I find no such matter in our latter Travellers. Their Fields and Meadows full of Cattel, and hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their Fens much visited by wild Ducks, as their house-yards with Pigeons, Turtles, Quails, and Pullen.

The People for the most part of good understanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and subtle in their dealings. Of body vigorous and strong, accustomed to bear Arms until 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive Colour, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads shaved off. Patient they are of pain, ambitious of glory, incapable of suffering wrong, but can without dissimulation their resentments of it till opportunity of revenge. They reproach no man for his poverty, so it cometh not by his own unthriftiness, for which cause they detest all kinds of gaming, as the ways of ill-husbandry; and generally abhor Slander, Theft, and Swearing. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their feasts in black; their teeth their colour black also, to make them beautiful: they mount on the right side of the horse, and sit (as we are used to rise) when they entertain. In Physick they eat salt things, sharp, and raw; and in their salutation they spit off their shoes. The very Antipodes of our world in customs though not in fire, and the true Type or Figure of the old English Puritan, opposite to the Papists in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that opposition. In other things they do much resemble those of China, if not the more ceremonious of the two: washing their Infant children in the nearest River, as soon as born; and putting off their shoes when they go to meat.

The People have but one Language, but those so intermingled with the words of other Nations, that it seems rather to be many Languages than one. They have long used the Art of Printing, which probably enough, they might have from China: the Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and signify not only Letters, but some whole words also. In matters of Religion, Gentiles, adoring anciently the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven; and giving divine honour to wild beasts, and the Stags of the Forrests: but specially worshipping some of their deceased Priests and Princes, by the names of Fotoques and Camezto the first of which they use to pray for goods of the other world, and to the last for Temporal blessings. Their Priests they call by the name of Bunzes, settled in goodly Cathedrals, and endowed with very large Revenues: who though divided into eleven different (if not contrary) Sects, do well enough agree in denying the Providence of God; and the Immortality of the Soul. Of late times by the care and diligence of the Jesuits, Christianity hath begun to take footing here; whether with such a large increase as their Letters called Epistole Japonice have been pleased to tell us, I am somewhat doubtful. They tell us there of some Kings of these Islands, whom they have converted and baptized; that within 50 miles of Meaco they had 50 Churches, 200 at the least in all, and that in the year 1587, the number of their Converts were two hundred thousand. Of the the one half be true, we have great cause to praise God for it, and to give them the commendation of their pains and industry; not letting pass the memory of the first Adventurer, who was Father Xavier, one of the first foundation of this Society, (employed in this business by Ignatius, the first foundation of it) who landed here about the year 1556.

Rivers of note I find not any, though the Island be generally well watered, more memorable for two Mountains in it, than for all the Rivers. One of which called Figenoama, is said to transcend the clouds in height; the other (but without a name) useth to cast forth dreadful flames, like Sicilian Atna: on the top whereof the Devil, environed with a white and shining cloud, doth sometimes show himself unto such of his Votaries, as live about this hill an abstemious life, like the ancient Hermis.

Chief Cities of the whole Islands, 1 Meaco, seated in Japan, and the chief of that Island, formerly 21 miles in compass, but now by reason of their wars, scarce a third part of it: The ordinary residence of the Triumviri, or three principal Magistrates; which sway the affairs of all these Islands: of whom the first, entitled Zazo, hath the chief care in sacred matters; the second, named Vao, doth preside in Civil; and the third, called Cabacama, manageth the concerns of Peace and War. At this time it is used for the common Empory of the trade of China; that people not permitting Merchants to come amongst them, but bringing to this place their Merchandise, as the common Staple; where they are sure to meet Chapmen to buy it of them. 2 Ofacay, a great and renowned City, conceived to be the richest in all the East; of so great trade, that every ordinary Merchant is said to be worth 30000 Crowns. 3 Fenoama, or Figenoama, at the foot of the hill so called, and about nine miles from Meaco. An University of Bonzes, for whose convenience and study, one of the Kings of Japan is said to have founded in this Town, and about that Mountain 3800 Convents, and to endow it with the third part of the Revenues of the Kingdom of Yorn. These Colleges or Convents now reduced to 800 only: but still the University of such fame and credit, that they give not the command or government of it unto any but the Kings Son, or his nearest Kinsman. 4 Banoim, another of their Universities, where they give degrees; affirmed to be as big as Paris. 5 Bonzo, the chief of all that Province, in which the Jesuites have a College; the Japanes learn the Portugul Language; and the Europeans that of Japan. 6 Coia, the Sepulture of their Princes, or some part of them: it being anciently ordained, that if their whole bodies be not here interred, they must at least send one of their Teeth. 7 Fiongo, about 18 Leagues from Meaco, the subject of many great misfortunes. Destroyed in part by Nabunanga, one of the Kings of this Island, who lived Anno 1550. that which he left, terribly scattered by an Earthquake, Anno 1556. most of the ruins of it since consumed by fire. 8 Amangafagni, five Leagues from the Sea, much fairer than that, and the chief seat of one of their Kings. 9 Firando, a Seat-Royal also of some other King, where in the year 1613. there was a Factory established for the English Merchants. 10 Ochinosamane, one of their most noted Havens. 11 Tosa, or Tonsa, giving name to one of the Islands.

These Islands utterly unknown to the Ancients, were first discovered by Antonio Mote, a Portugul, in the year 1542. I know Mercator taketh it from the Aurea Chersonesus, spoken of by Ptolomy; and I cannot choose but wonder at it: The situation of it so far distant from that of the Chersonesus, that either Mercator must be grossly out in his conjecture; or Ptolomy as much mistaken in his informations; which no man hitherto can justly accuse him of. But passing by the improbability of Mercator's fable, we are to know, that in former times these Islands were subject to one Prince, whom they obeyed and revered with great affection: which government continued, as themselves report, 1600 years in great State and Majesty. But in the end, the Dairi, (so they call their King) addicting himself wholly unto pleasures, any laying the burden of Government upon other mens shoulders; his Deputies, or other inferior Officers, usurped Regal power, plumed themselves with the Eagles Feathers, used in their style the name of Jucatas, or Kings, and in a word, left nothing but the name of Dairi to their Lord and Sovereign. His Issue to this day do enjoy that Title, but little else: the Princes bordering on Meaco, once his Royal Seat, hardly allowing him sufficient means to find himself Victuals and Apparel; but otherwise befooing him with as glorious Titles, as if he were possessed still of his ancient power. Only they let him execute the place of an Herald, in giving Arms, and settling Dignities and Honours; which brings him in the greatest profit he hath to trust to. Of all these Kings, he which can make himself Lord of Cochinai (which are the five Realms about Meaco) is called Prince of Tenza, and esteemed Sovereign of the rest. Which height of dignity, Nabunanga, before mentioned, in his time attained to; after him Faxiba, and since him Taicofuma: that Sovereignty being now in a line way to become hereditary. For Faxiba having brought under his command most of these small Kingdoms, transported the vanquished Kings, and the chief of their Nobles out of one Country into another: to the end that being removed out of their own Realms, and amongst strange Subjects, they should remain without means to revolt against him: a merciful and prudent course. Having reduced into his power at least 50 of these petit Kingdoms, he divided the greatest part of the conquered Territories amongst his own faithful friends and followers, binding them to supply him with certain numbers of men upon all occasions. By which, and other politic courses, he so settled himself in those Estates, that Taicofuma his Son succeeded without those Estates, who, had he lived, would have abolished the vain title of the Dairi, or took it to himself, as he had the power; solicited thereto by the King of China. But dying in or about the year 1607. Fereicofuma his Son succeeded, and may be still alive for ought I can learn.

What the Revenues of this King are, it is hard to say. I guess them to be very great, in regard he maketh two millions of Crowns yearly, of the very Rice which he reserveth to himself from his own Demefine. The store of Gold and Precious Stones which these Islands yield, being wholly his, must needs add much unto his Coffers. And for his power, it is said that Faxiba was able to raise so good an Army out of the Estate demised by him to his faithful followers, that he resolved once on the Conquest of China: and to that end caused Timber to be felled for 2000 Vessels for the transporting of his Army. And had he lived a little longer, 'tis probable enough he might have shaken that great Kingdom, the Japanes being so much the better Souldiers, that a small party of them would defeat a good Army of Chinese. The fear whereof made the King of China, after his decease, correspond so fairly with his Successor.

2. The PHILIPPINE, and Isles adjoining.

South of Japan, lyeth a great fry of Islands, which are now called PHILIPPINE, in honour of Philip the Second, King of Spain; in whose time discovered by Legaspi, a Spanish Captain, Anno 1564. Strangely mistaken by by Mercator for the Barruffe of Ptolomy, those being placed by him in the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, five degrees South of the Aequator, these situate on the East of China, in 13 or 14 degrees of Northern Latitude: those being only five in number, these reckoned at above ten thousand.

The Air in all of them generally very mild and temperate, especially in the mid-land parts; that on the shores somewhat inclining unto heat. The soil abundantly fruitful of all Commodities both for necessity and delight; that is to say, Rice, Pulse, Wax, Honey, Sugar-Canes, many pleasant Fruits, the fairest Figs of all the world, plenty of Fish, variety of Birds and Beasts, as well wild as tame, great store of Cotton-Wool, some Mines of Gold, and of other Metals great abundance.

Of all these Islands there are only forty in possession of the King of Spain, belonging properly to Asia, but by him placed under the Government of New Spain in America; because discovered by Legaspi at the instigation or procurement of Don Lewis de Velasco, who was then Vice-Roy of that Province. In these forty Islands there are thought to be at the least a million of people, subject to that Crown; many of which have been converted by the Friars and Jesuites unto Christianity. Of these the principal in account are, I. LUSSON, affirmed to contain in compass 1000 miles; beautified by the Spaniards with a fair City, seated on a commodious Haven, which they call Manilla: in which resides the Deputy or Lieutenant Governor for all these Islands, and the Bishop of the Philippines for ordering all affairs of those Churches. II. MINDANAO, 380 Leagues in compass; in which are many good Towns, as 1 Cailon, 2 Pavados, 3 Sumbat, 4 Dapiro, and some others. III. TANDAIR, more fruitful than any of the rest, and of good extent, 160 Leagues in Circuit, more specially called Philippina; because first discovered and so named. IV. PALLOHAN, as much mistaken by Mercator for the Bakacata of Ptolomy.

These with the rest, subject in former times to the Kings of China, till they did voluntarily abandon them; and confine their Empire within the Continent. On this relinquishment the people fell into Civil Wars, every man getting what he could for himself, and the stronger preying on the weaker: which factions and divisions gave great help to the Spaniard, in the conquest of those few which are under their power. Islands of more importance to the Spaniards, than is commonly thought; and therefore furnished by them at their first Plantations with Bulls, Kine, Horses, and Mares, which before they wanted, and do now reasonably abound with. For besides the abundance of victuals, and some plenty of Gold, which they find therein, the situation is very fit to subdue the rest of the neighbouring Islands, to settle the commerce betwixt China and Mexico, to bring on a continual Trade betwixt the Islands of this Sea, and of those America; and finally, to prevent the Moors or Arabians from planting their Mahometanism any further Eastwards.

Not far from these, on the South of Japan bending towards the West, is another great heap of Rocks and Islands. Some of them rich in Gold, and furnished with very choice fruits, and other necessities; and peopled with a stout and warlike breed of men, well skilled in Archery. The chief whereof have the names of 1 Lequin Major, 2 Lequin Minor, 3 Hermosa, 4 Reix Magot, &c. of which little memorable, but that Hermosa, as the Spaniards, or Formosa as the Latins call it, hath lately got the name of New-Holland; because not long since taken, planted and strongly fortified by some Adventurers of that Country. And not far off are those called 5 Ciumbabon, in which is said to be a Plant-animal or sensible tree.

6 Mattan, unfortunately remarkable for the death of Magellanus, slain there in a battel of the Natives, in favour of the King of 7 Sebat, an adjoining Island; by the King whereof he had been kindly entertained: and who by his persuasions he had gained to the Christian Faith, and baptized him by the name of Charles, in honour of Charles Emperour and King of Spain, under whom he served in this present voyage. But long this miscreant King (Hamabar he was called before his Baptism) continued not in this good opinion; treacherously killing Jahu de Serran chief Pilot of Magellanus's small Navy, with about 70 of his men, and probably relapsing to his former Gentilism.

3. The Isles of BANDAN.

THE Isles of BANDAN are in number seven, that is to say 1 Mira, 2 Roslargium, 3 Aii, 4 Rom, 5 Nerra, 6 Gannape, the last of all, continually burning; and for that cause deserted of its Inhabitants: and 7 Bandan, bigger than any of the rest, and therefore giving name to all. Situate South of the Philippines in the seventh degree of Southern Latitude. More fruitful of Nutmegs, than any other of all these parts; for which cause never without the concurrence of foreign Merchants from Java, Malacca, and China: and of late times from these Northern Countries of Europe also. Where by the way, the Nutmeg-tree is like a Peach, or Peach-tree, the innermost part whereof is the Nutmeg it self, covered over with a thin film or coat, which we call by the Arabian name of Maciz, or Mace, and over that the fruit it self, as it is in Peaches, Malacootons, and such fruits as those.

The People barbarous and rude, slothful, of weak bodies, and dull of wit; living confusedly together without rule or order. Some of them still continue in their ancient Paganism; but the greatest part are thought to be Mahometans: in which Religion very zealous, and so devout, that they will not go unto their work or worldly businesses, till they have visited the Mosquits, and done their devotions. A flame or pattern (shall I say in this, unto many Christians!) All of them bloody and revengeful: but yet so far from wronging the body of a Dead Enemy, that they use to bury it with sweet Odours.

Some Towns they have, of which the principal 1 Nera, and 2 Lontore, joyned in a League against the rest; the quarrel rising from the cutting down of certain trees proceeding to the butchery of one another, and ending in the loss of their common liberty. Subject in shew to the King of Batone, one of the Molucces, but too much at their own disposing. They had not else entered into quarrels with one another. Which opportunity being taken by the watchful Hollanders, they did not only settle four Factories there; but for the security of their Trade, and to awe the Natives, they have built three Forts. They had also turned one of their Mosquits to a Fortress; whereat the people were so incensed that they promised liberty to their Slaves, to get them out of it, who falling desperately on, fired it over their heads, and killed every man of them. The English Merchants have some trading also in these Islands, more acceptable than the others; because not so insolent, and grounding their possession on a better title: the people of Lontore, voluntarily submitting themselves to the protection of King James, the first Monarch of the British Islands, and to his use giving possession of their Country to Captain Robert Hayer, Novem. 24. 1620. The like done at the same time by the Inhabitants of Wayre, and Rosingen, two other Islands; which, if they be not the same with those of Mira and Roslargium, spoken of before, are probably some lesser Islands, neighbouring to Poleton and Poslamay, of which more hereafter.

There is not far off another Island, not in this account, called Timor, situate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Islands which lie round about it; but not else observable, except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabitants for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLUCCOES.

THE MOLUCCOES are in number many; the King of Terenate which is one of them, being said to have Dominion over 70 Islands: but the determinate number of them I do not where find. Situate on both sides of the Aequator, and consequently of an hot and intemperate air: the soil so dry and spongy, that it sucketh up the greatest shower of Rain that doth fall amongst them, before it can pass into the Sea. Nor very well furnished with necessaries for the life of man; but that deficient supplied with the abundance of Spices which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmegs, Mastic, Aloes, Pepper, and the like commodities; for which, the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But 'tis the Clove, which is the great Riches of these Islands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A Spice, which groweth on Trees, like Bay-trees yielding blossoms, first white, then green, (at which time they yield the pleasantest smell in the world) and last of all red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature so extreme hot that if a Pail of water should only stand in the room, in which they are cleaned and sorted, the Cloves in two days would dry it up. Of which nature the unspun Silks of China are affirmed to be.

The People for the most part Idolaters, intermixt with some Mahometans dwelling on the shores; and of late time with Christians in their several Factories. Of several Originals, and different Languages, but all in general fraudulent, peridious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickedness. Few of them clothed, nor much caring to hide their shame. Not civilized by the cohabitation of more modest and civil Nations. Pity such ill conditions should be lodged in such handsome bodies: the people being said to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for strength and valour not followed by any of them.

Of all the Islands which pass under this name, there are not above five or six of any reckoning: that is to say, 1 Terenate, 2 Tidor, 3 Macir, 4 Rachian, 5 Machian, and 6 Borone: None of them above six Leagues in compass, many not so much; the whole cluster of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 Leagues in the Circumference: yet of such consequence and importance, that the two famous voyages of Americus Vesputius, and Ferdinand Magellanus, the first employed by Emanuel King of Portugal, the other by Charles the Emperour, and King of Spain, were undertaken only to find out the next way unto them.

Of the rest, Machian and Tidore have their proper Kings; so hath Borone also, if that be one of them: the King whereof had anciently some title and authority over those of Bandon, Macir, and Machian, are subject to the King of Terenate, who is a Mahometan in Religion; and said to be the Lord of 70 Islands. This the most puissant Member of this scattered body; and for that cause most aimed at by all Competitors, the Spaniards having here one Fort, and the Hollanders three. Both Nations hated by the Natives, whom they consume and waste in the wars betwixt them; but of the two the Spaniards looked on by the people as the more a Gentleman; the other stomached and despised for their fordid dealings.

Nothing else memorable in the story of Chorography of them, but that they were discovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the Reign of Charles the Fifth, who employed him in it, Anno 1519, and that there is in Terenate a Prodigious Mountain, in height above the Clouds of the Air, and in Nature agreeing with the Element of Fire, which it seems to mount to: huge flames whereof, with dreadful thunders, and dark smoke, it sends forth continually. Reckoned by some amongst these Islands, but howsoever neighbouring near them, are those of Polerone, and Poolamay, the next more plentiful of Cloves, the second more proper for the Nutmeg, but both acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Kings of England; for Polerone, by the general and voluntary Act of all the chief men of the Country, was surrendered into the power of King James, the possession of it being given for his Majesties use to Captain Courtop, Decemb. 23. Anno 1616. no other Nation at that time having any interest in it, or Pretensions to it: which notwithstanding it was not long after seized on by the insolent and ungrateful Hollanders, who being to restore it upon composition, cut down all the Clove-Trees, so to deprive the English of the benefit of them. Poolamay made the like surrender at the same time also, declared by setting up the English Colours on the top of their Castle, giving to Courtop a green turf (whereby as by Livery and Seizin) to take possession of the Country, promising the annual tribute of a branch of Nutmegs; and that they should sell neither Mace nor Nutmegs to any, but to those of the English Nation. The like done at or near the same time, by Wayre and Rosingen, two other Islands of these Seas; which if they be not those two of Bandon, pointed at before, must needs be brought within the number of this scattered Company.

5. The SINDÆ or SELEBES.

NEAR the Molucces, and almost intermingled with them, are a set of Islands which Prology calleth SINDÆ, and the Moderns, SELEBES; many in tale, but not above four of any weight; that is to say, 1 SELEBES, 2 Gilolo, 3 Amboina, 4 Macassar; of which the two first are situate under the Aequator, and the last somewhat on the South of it: all of them in the time of Prology inhabited by Ambropophagi, and a long time after, inasmuch as the Kings of the Molucces did use to send their condemned persons unto these Islands, there to be devoured. Which said in general, we will take a more particular view of them, as they lie before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the rest, and hath under it many lesser Islands, is large and rich. The soil thereof exceeding fertile, the people tall and comely, and of colour, not so much black as ruddy. Much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters till of late. Governed by many Kings or petit Princes, the cause of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are said to have been converted to Christianity; and for that cause much hated by their heathenish Subjects, who thereupon rebelled against them. It is situate West of the Molucces, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Christian Kings: but possibly not so called until their conversion; the proper name thereof being Cian. 2 Nibon, in the South, and 3 Teroli in the North parts of it.

2. GILOLO, called also Batachina, is one of those Islands, which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Moro. Of large extent, conceived to be half as big as Italy. By that account (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater than Zeilan in compass, though of less reputation: That being governed by its own Princes; This subject for the most part to the King of Terenate.

Terenate. Situate East of the Molucces, exceeding plentiful of Rice, well stored with wild Hens; and on the shores provided of a kind of Shell-fish, which in taste much resembleth Mutton. A tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their bread; and of the sap or juice of it they compose a pleasing drink, which serveth them instead of Wine. The air intemperately hot; the people well proportioned but rude and savage; some of them Gentiles, some Mahometans, of which last Religion is their King. The chief Town of it is Batachina, or Batachina, (whence the new name unto the Island) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3. AMBOINA, South of the Aequator, and the third of the Sindæ, hath many Islands of less note, which depend upon it, and do communicate in the name. In compass about five hundred miles, said by Maginus to be extremely rough and barren; which must be understood with reverence to some kinds of Grain. For otherwise it is very fertile, abundantly productive of Rice, Citrons, Limons, Oranges, Coco-nuts, Sugar-Canes, and other fruits, and very plentiful of Cloves. Which last, as it makes some to reckon it amongst the Molucces; so may it be a reason why the Island is defective in such fruits as require much moisture: the Clove being of so hot a temper, as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moisture of the Earth, which is near unto it.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infect all the neighbouring Islands, Detained for Cannibals, or Man-eaters: it being here a constant custom, that when their Parents were grown old, or sick of any incurable Disease, they give them to one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note than other, which they call Amboina, by the name of the Island. First, taken by the Portugals, and by them secured with a strong Fort: during whose power here, the Jesuites, who had in it their several Residences, converted many to Christianity. But in the year 1605, the Island and the Fort both were conquered by Stephen of Hagan, for the States of the United Provinces: who having cleared the Country of the Portugals Forces, possessed themselves of it. Received by the Natives at their first coming with Joy and Triumph: but they go little by the change, as they found soon after: their new Masters being more burdensome, and insufferable, than the old had been. For claiming it the right of Conquest, and think they may oppress the Natives by the Law of Arms; and ingross all trade unto themselves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongst the rude and savage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity executed upon some of the English (the greatest Patrons under God which they have in the world) whom in the year 1618, they most cruelly tortured, and most wickedly murdered; under colour of some plot to betray their Fort: but in plain truth for no other reason but because they were more beloved by the Inhabitants, and began to gain upon their trade.

4. West of Amboina, and South-West of Selebes, lieth the fourth of these Islands, called MACASSAR, said to contain from East to West 600 miles; plentiful of Rice, Fish, Salt, and Cotton-Wool; not destitute of Gold and Pearls, and well stored with Sandar (Sandals it is called in Latine) a medicinal wood, growing like a Nut-tree: of several colours, white, red, yellow, but the red, the best: the fruit in making like a Cherry, but of no esteem. In some parts overgrown with wood, in which certain fiery Fliers make nightly such shining light, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle. In the middle covered with high Mountains, out of which flow many navigable Rivers.

The people for the most part Gentiles, intermixt with the Sea-coasts with some Mahometans. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Senderem, the Kings Seat, situate near a large Lake, very commodiously for traffick. 2 Macassar, an English Factory, so called according to the name of the Island.

Near to these Islands, and somewhat North to Batachina are some other Isles, plentiful of all things necessary for the life of man; but inhabited by a thievish and Piratical people: the principal of which, 1 Terro, 2 Sanguin, 3 Solor, 4 Morotay, in which last they eat Battata Roots instead of bread; besides some others of less note. Most of the people Gentiles, except those of Sanguin, the King whereof being gained to the Christian Faith, by some of the Jesuites, hath brought many of his Subjects to the same Religion.

6. BORNEO.

WEA of these Selebes, lieth BORNEO, of more note and greatness, than any hitherto described, in these Indian Seas. In compass, after their account who speak most sparingly, 2200 miles; but as some say, no less than three months sail about. Situate under the Aequator, which parteth the Dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Lau: opposite on the North to Camboja; on the South, to Java; on the East, to Selebes, on the West, unto the Isle of Sumatra.

The Country said to be provided naturally of all things necessary; yet said withal to be unfurnished of Asses, Oxen, Herds of Cattel, except only Horses, and these but small of stature neither: the greatest riches of it being Camphire, Agarick, and some Mines of Adamant, erroneously conceived by Mercator to be the Isula bona Fortune, spoken of by Prology; that being seated opposite to the out-lets of Ganges, in the Latitude of a hundred forty five Degrees, and fifteen Minutes; this Eastward some degrees of the Golden Chersonese, and consequently twenty Degrees distant at the least from that Island in Prology.

The people generally more white than the rest of the Indians, of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans, or Gentiles. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions; the King of Borneo and his Subjects being all Mahometans; those of Lau till remaining in their ancient Gentilism. These think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their children; ascribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun especially; whom they salute at his first rising with great Reverence, saying certain Verses. Their publick businesses are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Counsellors of State meet, and ascend some tree, viewing the Heavens till the Moon rise, and then go to the Senate-house. The same Apparel generally of both Religions; but thin, by reason of the great heat of the Air: a shirt of Silk, or of Calicut, or some such slight stuff, worn more for modesty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Borneo, situate in the North-West part of the Island near a goodly bay, but in the middle of the Fens like the City of Venice, and seated as that is, on Piles; the building sumptuous, of hewed stones, covered with the leaves of the Coco-tree. The Town so large as to contain 25000 Families. 2 Taiopura, 3 Tamaoratus, 4 Malano, all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodious Havens. 5 Sagadana, a Factory of English. 6 Lavi on a large Bay in the South-East part of the Island, the ordinary Seat of the King of Lau, 7 Pare, on another capacious Bay, not far from Lavi, and directly opposite to Borneo: that being seated on the North-West, and this on the South-East of the Island. Betwixt these two Kings is the whole divided; but so, that he of Borneo hath the greatest part of it, and therefore keeps the the greater State: not to be spoken with, but by the mouth of some of his own Interpreters; and in his Palace served by no other Attendants, than Maids or Women.

7. JAVA.

Opposite to Borneo towards the South lie the Isles of JAVA, two in number, both situate South of the Aequator, both of great Circumference, and commonly distinguished into Major and Minor, or the greater and the lesser Java.

1. JAVA MAJOR, the more Northward of the two, and by much the bigger, is said to be in compass 2000 miles; and that by them who reckon elsewhere Borneo for the biggest of these Seas. But the truth is, that the South parts of this Island not being perfectly discovered, make the amasurement thereof to be very uncertain. Conceived most properly to be the Abadis of Ptolomy, the most Northern part whereof is placed by him in the eighth degree of Southern Latitude: said by him to afford much Gold and Silver, to be exceeding fruitful of all other necessities; and finally, that the name did signify κεκλινη νηος, or the Island of Barly. All which agreeth punctually with the present Island, the word Jabad, signifying a kind of grain much like our Barly; and Diu in the Persian and Indian Tongues signifying an Island. And so in Jabadu, we have found the Island of Java, the mutation of B. into V. being ordinary.

Then for the riches and fertility of it, it is said to yield great plenty of Fruits, and Corn, but of Rice especially; flesh of all sorts, salted and sent from hence into other Countries; great store of Fowl, both wild and tame, plenty of Gold, some precious Stones, and the best kind of Brasi; Silks in abundance, and great quantities of Pepper, Ginger, Cinnamon, and some other Spices. In a word, so befurnished by the bounty of Nature, that Scaliger calleth it Epitome Mundi, or the whole World contracted in a lesser Volume. But withal it is much exposed unto storms and tempests, from which seldom free.

The people of a middle stature, corpulent, and of broad Faces, most of them naked, or covered only with a slight Silken stuff, and that no lower than the knee; accepted the most Civil people of all the Indians, as fetching their descent from China: but withal treacherous, very proud, much given to lying, and very careless of their words, to which so used, that they count it not amongst their Faults. And therefore when a King of theirs had broke promise with the Hollanders, and was challenged for it, he answered, that his tongue was not made of bone. Cruel they are also said to be, and implacable, if once offended: accustomed of old to eat the bodies of their friends: accounting no burial so honourable, nor obsequy so applause. This also a custom amongst many of the rest of the Indians, and so hath it been ever since the beginning of the Persian Monarchy. Herodotus reporteth how Darius Hystaspes understanding of this custom; and withal knowing how the Grecians use to burn their dead, sent to the Greeks, that it was his pleasure they should eat the bodies of their dead: But they used all means of persuasion and intreaty, not to be forced to so brutish and barbarous a custom. Then commanded he the Indians to conform themselves to the fashion of the Grecians; but they all more abhorred to burn the dead, than the Greeks did to eat them. So impossible it is for a custom either to be suddenly left off, or to seem undecent and inconvenient if once thoroughly settled.

In matter of Religion they are all Mahometans, or Gentiles, according to the fancy of their several Kings, whereof in this Island there are very many; one for every great Tribe, or more powerful Family. Zealous in their Religion which so ever it be, as appears by the sad story of the Daughter of the King of Ballambua, murdered by her Husband the King of Passarua, the second night after her Wedding, with all her Attendants; because they would not be Mahometans, which was his Religion. Yet in some common Principles they agree well enough, punishing Adultery with death; in which case the woman chopteth her nearest Kinsman for her Executioner: but otherwise spending the Day and Night in much Sloth and Dalliance. Of the two, Gentilism is the more diffused, because most ancient; the Sect of Mahomet not being introduced till the year 1560. though of a very swift growth, and of a great increase for so short a time.

Their chief Towns, 1 Pasaruan, near a burning hill, which in the year 1586. brake forth exceedingly, oppressed infinite numbers of men, and cast great stones into the City for three days together. 2 Joriam, a Town of 1000 Houholds, the Inhabitants whereof are Gentiles, and have their Temples in the Woods: the Chief Priest of whose superstition hath his dwelling here, of great authority and power over all the Island. 3 Ballambua, 4 Passarua, 5 Taban, 7 Matara, 7 Dannia, 8 Taggal, 9 Surra-bea, 10 Gataboon, the seats of so many of their Kings: some of them also furnished with convenient Havens. 11 BANTA M, the seat also of a King, but of most trade in all the Island, seldom without the company of English, Portugals, and Hollanders; the principal Factory of the English in all the Indies, though they have many besides this. The Town unwholly seated in a moorish ground, and much subject to fire. 12 Sunda, situate in a place abounding in Pepper. 13 Agracan, a convenient Port; Here was also in the time of Ptolomy a Town called 14 Argyropolis, or the Silver City, long ago destroyed. And now here is, 15 Sura, a new Town in the Territories of the King of Bantam, built by some of the Subjects of the King of Passarua; who being oppressed by their own King, came into this part of the Country, where they got leave to build this City. The people whereof live quietly according to their own Laws, follow their Husbandry abroad, but never marry; and yet do not want a constant Succession, adopting some of the other Javans into their Society, as they find their number to diminish.

Of the story of this Island I can say but little. Divided into many petit and inconsiderate Kingdoms; and those divided too by Mountains, crossing the Island in the middle from West to East, which cut off all commerce and correspondence betwixt one another. Some of these Kings Mahometans, some Gentiles, as before was said; all subject or homagers at least to one of the Kings of the Gentiles, who hath his dwelling in the midst of the Island. Next him, the King of Taban was conceived to be richest, and the King of Ballambua of the greatest Territory; whose Family after long war and blood-shed, begun in the murder of his Daughter, is said to be wholly rooted out by the King of Passarua. These Kings much revered by their subjects, and so well obeyed, that whatsoever they command, is done, be it never so dangerous.

2. JAVA MINOR, situate on the South of the other, is said to be 2000 miles in compass, and to be very near the firm Lands of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent. Not very well known to any of our late Adventurers; but generally affirmed (not so much on certain knowledge as uncertain conjecture) to be of the same nature and condition with the greater Java. The Inhabitants hereof in the time of Paulus Venetus, who had travelled in it, reported to be Cannibals, Idolaters, devourers of their Parents and dearest friends; and to worship all day whatsoever they saw first in the morning. Divided then into eight Kingdoms, distinguished by by the names of their principal Towns. Six whereof he had seen, which are these that follow. 1 Felcech, where the Towns were Moors, and the Peasants, Gentiles. 2 Baf-ma, which did acknowledge the Great Cham of Tartaria for Lord in chief; but without paying of any tribute. 3 Samara, where none of the North-stars could be seen. 4 Sambri, in which some men were said to have tails like Dogs. 5 Fanfur, in which they have a Tree, the wood whereof put in water, will sink like Iron; of which they use to make Lances that will pierce an Armour. And 6 Dragorian, of which there is nothing memorable or prodigious, but that the people of it use to eat their nearest Kinsmen; and that no Prodigie at all, because used by others.

To these two we may joyn MADURA, on the North of the greater Java, fertile of Rice, but otherwise of so waterish and moist a Soil, that men and Cattel use to go knee-deep when they sow it. The chief Town whereof is called Aroibay. And on the East the same Java the Island Baly, exceeding populous for the bigness, supposed to contain 600000 Inhabitants; and very well provided of Bul, Buffals, Goats, Horses, Swine, many kind of fruits, and some store of metals.

8. SUMATRA.

SUMATRA lieth on the North of the greater Java, betwixt it and the Streight of Sinapura, the most Southern Town of the Golden Chersonese. The Streight in that place so strait and narrow, not above a Musket-shot in breadth, that some conceive this Island to have been formerly joyned unto it by some little Isthmus; since worn away by the violence and working of the Sea; and that this Island, and not the Land of Malacca, was that Golden Chersonese, which we find in Ptolomy. More probably by far, than that we should run after it to the Isle of Japan, situate on the East of China, so far from any part of India, where it is placed by the Author of the Atlas Minor.

The length hereof, extended from the North-west to the South-east, is said by some to be 900, by others but 700 miles, the breadth 200, and the whole compass 2100. Strangely affirmed by some Writers to be the biggest of all the East; who yet assign a greater circuit unto Java, and as great to Borneo. Situate under the Aequator, which divideth it into two parts, very near an equality: that on the North-side reaching unto five degrees, that on the South-side but to seven degrees from the line it self. By which account there is little difference betwixt the length of a day and a night; both much at one in all times of the year whatever.

The air hereof by consequence must be very hot, but withal unwholome: not so much in regard of the extreme heats, as by reason of the gross vapours drawn from the many Fens and Rivers which are found to be in it; and the thick Woods which intercept the free course of a purging wind. The Soil not capable of such grain as in other places, except Rice and Miller (for I know not otherwise how to render the Latine, Milium) but yielding Ginger, Pepper, Campfire, Agarick, and Cassia, in great abundance. It affordeth also great plenty of Wax and Honey, store of Silks and Cottons, rich Mines, not only of Tin, Iron, Sulphur, and other Minerals; but of Gold such quantity, that some conceive this Island to be Solomon's Ophir. And if Pedrunks Siris, one of the Kings of this Island, in a Letter written to King James did not brag too impudently; it may be probable enough. For by that Letter it appeareth that all the furnitures of his house, and trappings of his Elephants and Horses, with all his Armour, were of pure Gold, and that he had in his Dominions a whole Mountain of Gold; King of which Golden Mountain he entituled himself in his Regal Stile.

The Inhabitants are many of them good Artificers, cunning Merchants, or expert Mariners. All of them Gentiles till about two hundred and thirty years since, at what time by the diligence of some Arabian Merchants trading to this Island, Mahometanism began to spread upon the Coasts. But in the In-land parts of the Country, they are Gentiles still, and still retain amongst them their old barbarous custom. The most loving men unto their Enemies that were ever known; for otherwise they would never eat them. Having eaten, they use their skulls instead of Money, which they exchange or barter for such necessities, as their wants require: and he is thought to be the wealthiest man amongst them, who hath most of this coin. Those of the other Religion, though in most points and customs they agree with the rest of the Mahometans, have this one singular to themselves: which is, that once every year on a certain day they go solemnly unto their Mosquits to see if Mahomet be come, leading a spare horse for him to ride upon: which (milling him) is mounted, at their coming back, by the best man in the company. Of any great Progress that Christianity hath made here, I have no good evidence.

That here are many and great Rivers, hath been said before, but their names I find not. Here are also many Mountains, and those great and high; that of most note called Balaluanus, said to burn continually. Out of which, or not far off do arise two Fountains, of which the one is said to run pure Oyl, and the other the best Balsammum: which I bind no man to believe, but such as have seen it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Achen, the Seat-Royal of that Kingdom, beautified with the Regal Palace, to which they pass thorow seven Gates one after another, with green Courts between the three outermost; those three continually guarded with women expert at their weapons, and using both Swords and Guns; the only ordinary guard that he hath for his person. The materials of this Palace mean, but the furniture costly, the Walls thereof being hanged commonly with Velvet and Damask, and sometimes with cloth of Gold. 2 Pediar, 3 Pacom, 4 Cambar, 5 Menamabo, 6 Aura, and 7 Andragide, the seats of so many of their Kings. 8 Passaman, a Town of great Trade, but situate in a Moorish and unhealthy place, found so experimentally by too many of the English, who have there their Factory. 9 Priamon, and 10 Tecoo, of a more healthy air, but not so commodious in their Havens as is that of Passaman: these three Towns standing in that part of the Country where the Pepper groweth.

All that we know touching the story of this Country, is, that the Portugals when they first came hither, found in it nine and twenty Kings; reduced since to a smaller number. For Abraham, sometimes a Slave, afterwards King of Achen, having turned Mahometan, by the help of the Turky and Arabians, subdued the Realms of Pedir and Pacom. Aladine, who succeeded him, being once a Fisherman, and grown famous for his exploits at Sea, was by this King preferred to the marriage of one of his Kinswomen, made his Lord Admiral, and by him trusted with the protection of his Son and Heir: of whom instead of a Protector he became a murderer, and usurped the State unto himself. When King, he headed to his Crown the Kingdom of Arn, or Aura, and Manucabos, and almost all the rest on the North part of the Island. In this Kings time, the English were first settled in their Factory there. Grown old (a hundred years at least) he was imprisoned by his eldest Son, impatient of a longer stay, alledging that his age had made him unfit for Government, Government, Anno 1604. The name of the New King Sultan Pedrucha Siric, who in his Letter to King James, spoken of before, styles himself the sole King of Sumatra: either with greater brags than truth, or else because the Kingdoms of Tecco, Priaman, and Barong, being conquered by him, all the rest were become his Tributaries. Associated with the Forces of the King of Jor, or Jabor, who had married his Sister, he besieged Malacca, and distressed it: But being beaten from it by the Portuguese, he turned the tide of his displeasure upon his Confederate, and subdued that Kingdom: who with the King of Siak (some other petit Prince near Jor) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1613. brought Prisoners to Achem. The Government of this King is absolute, and merely arbitrary, executing what he hath a mind to, without form of Law. So cautious, that without his Placard no stranger can have Ingress into his Dominions, or free Egress out of them. Nor is admittance to his presence granted unto any whom he first sends not for by an Officer with a Gilded Staff. He is conceived to be strong both by Sea and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained, able to put to Sea 120 or if need be 200 Gallies and Frigates for any service, most of which carry Demi Cannon, Culverin, Sakar, Minion, and other the like Ordnance of Brass. So great a Master of his Subjects, that in 21 days he had a goodly Channel drawn about his Palace, from a River, which was eight miles off. Of his Revenues, I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden Furnitures which he hath about him.

And now I am fallen on this Kings Gold, I cannot but take notice of some Islands on the West of Sumatra, called Anree Insule, or the Golden Islands; the chief of which named Andramania, is possessed by Cannibals, or Man-eaters. Opposite unto which on the East side of this Island, are those called Linga, Bimra, and Bintam: which last is said to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for shipping. The houses built of Stone, but thatched, except that of the King (for even these sorry Islands love to have a King of their own) whose house more eminently seated, is more handsomely covered.

9. ZEILAN.

WEST of Sumatra, somewhat inclining to the North, is the Island of ZEILAN, ten degrees distant from the Equator, and near adjoining to the Promontory in the higher India which Plolomy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only, the whole circumference at 700 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the situation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the ancient Writers. Ovidius and most other intelligent men of these later times are of that opinion. Only Mercator who hath carried the Golden Chersonese to the Isle of Japan, and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which last I must confess he hath many Partners) will have this Island to be that which Plolomy calls Nanigeris, though that be four Degrees more West than the Promontory of Cory to which this Isle in former times seems to have been joyned.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, that this Zeilan or Ceylan is the Taprobane of the Ancients, we will a little look on the state of that Island, with reference to the times when those Authors lived. By Plolomy affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, and all kind of Metals. By Pliny, that the Gold is pure, and the Gems rarer than any in India; that there were also Groves of Palm-trees, and great store of Elephants; is declared by Strabo, and some others. Watered with many fair and pleasant Rivers, viz. 1. Suavia, 2. Azania, 3. Baracus, 4. Ganderis, 5. Phagis: the Hills in many places having a full prospect over the adjoining Valley: the chief of which were Males, and those called Calibis the Vallies perpetually enriched with the choicest fruites. Escorted populous for the bigness, and stocked with many Towns of note. Of which Magammum only hath the name, of a Metropolis, 1. Margava, 2. Jugana, 3. Sindocanda, 4. Klodoca, 5. Nabariba, 6. Dugana, 7. Dionysopolis, 8. Bocana, 9. Abaratha, 10. Pfocrum, 11. Nagadiba, and 12. Anubingara, have the name of Cities. 13. Medutun, and 14. Talacorum, noted for the Towns of Traffick. 15. Priape, 16. Mardus, 17. Rhizala, 18. Spatana, and 19. that of the Sun, for commodious Havens. 20. Anurogrammum being honoured with the title of Regia, or the Royal City. As for the name, it is said by Plolomy to have been first called Taprobane, then Simonds Insula, and finally in his time Salice, and the People Salis; from whence the name of Selan or Seilan seems to be derived.

To take a view of at the present, I find it said to be of an Oval form, divided from the main Land by a narrow Channel, the Havens refreshing it with their Dewes, the Air with a fragrant freshness, and the waters with their many Rivers and Fountains; the Earth diversified into lofty hills, and lowly valleys; her inward Chambers filled with Metals, and Jewels, her outward Coat of the pleasantest colour, stored with whole Woods of Cinnamon, besides Fruits, Limons, Oranges, &c. bettering those of Spain. Of Fowls and Beasts great plenty both wild and tame; and the best breed of Elephants in all the world. Destitute only of the Vine, the want of which supplied with a pleasant drink made of the juice of fruits, more natural to them than the other, and so preservative of life that the people are reported to be longer lived than in any other parts. In a word, so abounding in all contentments, that the Indians hold it to be Paradise, and take upon them to point out some of Adams footings, left for a memorial in some parts of it. And to confirm them in their Error, they have an Hill there which the Spaniards call by the name of Pico de Adam, affirmed to be seven Leagues in height, from whence Adam ascended into Heaven? for that cause visited by the Moors or Arabians, with continual Pilgrimages.

The People for the most part tall and frail of body, naked from the girdle upwards, unwarlike, and much given unto ease and pleasures; So queasie stomached that the poorest of them will not eat that meat which another hath touched; inclined to bravery, and therefore make wide holes in their ears, which they stretch out with Jewels to their very Shoulders. Cunning Drifters in all Metals, one of them making a Crucifix of such exquisite workmanship, that it seemed to give life to the dead; and was sent by the Archbishop of Goa to the King of Spain, as the rarest Jewel which had ever graced his Royal Cabinet. They are also very active, and well skilled in Juggling, both men and women, travelling thorow India with their tricks and Hobby-horses, by which they get themselves both delight and money. In matter of Religion, they are generally Idolaters, especially the Natives, whom they call Cingalas, which live in the In-lands; the Sea-coasts (as in other Islands) being filled with Mahometans. No Christians that I hear of but in Columbo, a Town of the Portugals.

Cities of most repute amongst them, 1. Candie, the seat of one of their Kings, supposed to be the Sindocanda of Plolomy, memorable for the Statue of their supposed Adam, most artificially wrought, of five or six Fathoms high, symmetrically proportionable to the print of his foot, which which they conceive to have amongst them. 2. Ventane, of great renown for an Idol-Temple, in compass 130 paces, of great height, and all white except the top, which hath the Spires thereof so gilded, that when the Sun shines, men are not able to look upon them, 3. Janaspitan, 4. Trigui Lemale, (supposed to be the Tarichi of Plolomy) 5. Batecolom, 6. Vilassam, 7. Tanamaca, 8. Laula, 9. Galle, the seats of many of their Kings; 10. Nagarita, conceived to be the Nigari; as 11. Agana, the Iogana of Plolomy. 12. Colmuchi, the seat Royal of the chief King of this Island, situate on a capacious Bay in the Southwest of it, and of most trade in all this Country: many great Ships laden with Cinnamon, Gems, Elephants, and other Indian Commodities going yearly hence. Fortified by the Portugals (by whom called Columbo) with a very strong Castle, built with the King's leave at first, to secure their trading; but since used by them as a curb to hold him in with, and to compel him to pay Tribute.

This Country first discovered to be an Island by Onesicritus, Admiral of Alexanders Fleet, was in the time of Plolomy inhabited by several Nations. The principal of which were the Galibi, and Mudutta dwelling in the North, the Rhogandani and Nanigiri in the South; the Sindocanda in the West, and the Tarachi in the East, the middle parts being taken up by the Anurogrammi, Maggabdi, Soani, Semni. But little or nothing is said of them in the way of story, but that they were good Mimicks, did imitate the tunes of Birds, and could speak to two at once, as if double tongued; that they were very studious of Astrology, and worshipped the Sun and the Host of Heaven; that some of their Embassadors coming to Rome, in the time of Claudius Cesar, Solem à Leva oriri mirati sunt, &c. admired to see the Sun rise on the wrong side of them; and finally, that the King was chosen by the people with respect had to his age and clemency; who being enthroned, appointed thirty Judges to administer Justice to the Subject, without the Major part of whom, sentence of Death was to pass on no man. In following times this Monarchy (for such it was in the time of those Authors) was broken into many Pieces: the Portugals finding nine Kings in it, at their first coming thither, all Homagers or Tributaries to the King of Colmuchi. After that, their chief King was wickedly murdered by his Barber, who drove the other Kings out of the Country, and for a while usurped the Monarchy to himself. Since which time, having once again recovered their Kingdoms, six of them (as I have somewhere read, but remember not where) put themselves under the protection of the Great Mogul, and became his Feudataries.

Near hereunto on the Coasts of Malabar, are the Islands which they call Maldiva, many in number, but so called from the principal of them, as that from Maldiva, a noted and well-traded Empory, where the King resideth: Not very plentiful of necessaries for the use of man, did not the Palm alone supply them in all other wants. Inhabited by an industrious and sober people, who make themselves long Garments of Silk or Flax, brought from other places, wherewith more modestly adorned than the rest of the Indians; and by their Fishing draw up shells of such mingled colours, that they serve amongst the Siameters instead of money.

BESIDES these Islands represented to us by their several names, and some who have nothing but their names to take notice of; there be many thousands of less note which we find in gross: these Indian Seas being so prodigiously full of Islands, that it is almost impossible to believe there should be such multitudes; but utterly impossible to credit what is told us of them: Some of the most remarkable of them we have touched upon, as Accessories or Appurtenances to some greater Islands. The rest we shall present only in the general Muster, together with a taste of some of those strange reports, with which some men have fouled their Papers, and abused their Readers. Of the Philippines there are said to be 11000, though but 40 of them in possession of the King of Spain. More South, but over against China, is another Frie of them, affirmed by Mariners to be no fewer than 7448, and (as if nature had delighted to disport her self by sowing Islands in these Seas) another Shoal of them about India, no fewer in number than 127000, all which laid together would make a Continent as large as three or four parts of Europe; and are still groaning under the burthen of Heathenism. These Islands stand so nigh unto one another, that they seem only to such as are afar, to be all but one firm Land; but whosoever also passeth between them, may with his hands touch the Boughs of the Trees on the one side, and on the other. Of these and the other Indian Islands, Travellers relate many incredible Fables, viz. That there be Hogs that have two teeth growing out of their snouts, and as many behind their ears, of a span and a half long; a Tree whose Western part is rank poison; and the Eastern part an excellent preservative against it. They tell us also of a Fruit, that whosoever eateth, shall for the space of twelve hours be out of his Wits; and of a Stone, on which whosoever sitteth, shall suddenly have a rupture in his body. We are told also that hereabouts are taken Tortoises of that bigness; that ten men might sit and dine within one of the shells; and that there is a Tree, which all the day-time hath not a flower on it, but within half an hour after Sun-set, is full of them. All huge and monstrous lyes, and not fit for credit. Galvano reporteth also, that in some of these Islands there is a Fruit, of which if a Woman that is with child eat, her Child will presently move; that there is a River plentifully stored with Fish, whose water is yet so hot, that it doth immediately scald off any skin of the Beast that is cast into it; that some of the men have tails; and most of their Swine Hogs; that they have Oysters which they call brals, the shells whereof are of so large compass, that they Christen Children in them; that in the Sea there are Stones which grow and increase like Fish, of which the best Lime is made; that there is a bird called Monicodiata, which having no feet is in a continual motion; and that there is a hole in the back of the Cock, in which the Hen doth lay her eggs, and hatch her young ones. I bid no man to believe these Relations: for my part I say with Horace,
Quodcumque ostendis mihi sic, incredulus odi.
Whatever thus thou tell'st me, I
Will always hate it as a lye.

And so much for these EASTERN ISLANDS.

An Advertisement to the Reader touching the ERRATA of this P A R T.

I N the first place the Reader is to be advertised that Fol. I have adventured to prove the Alamatha of Ptolomy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, of the Holy Scriptures, The place ill pointed, but the judicious Reader will easily find out the scope and meaning. Yet if this shall not be approved of, I should then think it to be that Elam or Melam where David discomfited the Army of the Mesopotamians; mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16, 17. In the next place within the compass of five lines, the Victory which Asa King of Judah obtained against the numerous Army of Ethiopians, is twice repeated: in the first place ascribed to Jethir, in the next to Maresha, (though the other also hath good Authors) let that of Jethir be supplied in this manner following. 5. Jethir or Jethir, in the North Border of this Tribe toward Eleutheropolis: a City anciently of the Levites, in St. Hieroms time called by the name of Jethira, and then replenished altogether with Christians: now nothing but the name remaining. 6. Marcella, &c. And finally, whereas Ajalon, p. is placed in the Tribe of Ephraim, and p. in the Tribe of Dan, the reason is, because being situate in the Borders of both Tribes, it is by some Writers ascribed to Dan, and by others to Ephraim. The like may be also said of Michpas, mentioned also in two Tribes according as it is disposed on by several Authors:

Of AFRICK.

AFRICK is bounded on the East by the Red-Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Asia; on the West by the main Atlantick Ocean, interpoling betwixt it and America; on the North by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia: and on the South, with the Ethiopick Ocean, separating it from Terra Australis incognita; or the Southern Continent. Parted from all the rest of the World, except Asia only, to which joyned by a narrow Isthmus, not above 60 miles in length, and memorable for the great design which Cleopatra the last Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this. When Mark Anthony was encountered by Augustus in the Naval Battell of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the success, fled through the midst of all his Fleet, with the 60 Gallies which were appointed for her Guard. Being come to the North part of this Isthmus, she gathered together all her portable Treasures, and intended to hoist her Shipping out of the Mediterranean, and hale them over the Land to the Red-Sea, from whence she had purposed to take Sail, and together with her Sweet-heart Anthony, and some other choicest Friends, to seek out some other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans. But from this, Anthony, who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at last disswade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramid reverfed; the Basis of which, from Tanger on the Strait of Gibraltar, to the point where it joyneth unto Asia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920 Italian Miles, the Conus of it very narrow. But from the Conus or Pyris to the most Northern part of the Basis, it extendeth it self the space of 4155 Miles, being much less than Asia, and far bigger than Europe.

By the Grecians it is called most commonly Libya, (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole: by the Ethiopians, Alkebu-lam; by the Indians, Besebar. But the most noted name thereof is Africa, which Josephus out of Cleodenus and Polybistor, deriveth from Epher or Apher, one of the Nephews of Abraham, by Midian the Son of Ketwab. The Arabians, by whom it is called Ifrichea, derive it from the Verb Faruch, signifying to divide; because more vitibly divided both from their own Countrey, and the rest of the World, than any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fables fetch it from one Afer, a companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain. Some fetch it out of Apher, an Hebrew word, signifying Dust, agreeable to its sandy and dusty Soil. Festus an old Grammarian, from A Privativum, and the Greek word phoros, which imports a country void of cold, as suitable to the fiery temper of the Air. By Bocharius, who brings all from the old Phœnician, it is said to be derived from Perus, Spica, an ear of Corn, which mollified into Erie, came at last to Africa, that is to say, a Country plentiful in Corn. Which Etymology of his may receive some countenance from that great plenty of Corn which was bred in this Country: especially in those parts hereof which the Romans called the Proper Africa; whereof we shall speak more when we come to Barbary: the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africa. But in my mind, (if that from the Hebrew Epher or Aphar, be not worth accepting) I should prefer the Etymon of Fetus, before any other, unless we might be sure that Carthage anciently was called Africa, as Suidas telleth us it was; for then without all peradventure we would seek no further. For other more particular Names by which it hath been called in some elder Writers, i. e. Olympia, Oceania, Ejebatica, Coryphe, Anmonis, Heperia, Ortygia, and perhaps some others, it is enough to our design to take notice of them.

It is situate for the most part under the Torrid Zone, the Æquator crossing it almost in the very midit: and for that cause supposed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly, in the middle and more Southern parts of it; or if at all, with such strange people, as hardly did deserve to be counted men. Pomponius among others was of this opinion, guessing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by such fange Brutes as the Cynophanes, who had heads like dogs; 2. The Sciapode, who with the shadow of their foot, could and did hide themselves from the heat of the Sun; 3. The Gamofaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the use of Weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the sight of men; 4. The Blemmyæ, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their Breasts; 5. The Æripani, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be men, but the shape and making of their bodies. These people (as they thought) possessed some small portion of the mid-land parts of this great Country; the rest they knew not, or conceived to be uninhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late discoveries and navigations have found the contrary; the Country proving in most parts to be well inhabited, and the coolness of the nights, by mists, dews, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

Quodque die Solis vehementi excaudit æstu, Humida nox reficit, paribusque refrigerat horis.

That is to say,

What the Sun burns by day, the Night renews,
And doth as much refresh with moistning Dews.

For notwithstanding that it be in some places full of sandy deserts, a disease incident to some parts of Arabia, Persia, and other Countries of a more Northerly situation: yet it is said by some, who speak it upon knowledge, that the greatest part of those Regions which lie under the Line, or near it, (both in America, and here) have so many goodly Fountains, Rivers, and little Brooks, such abundance of Cedars, and other stately Trees of shade, so many sorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing, and at all times beautified with blossoms; as may make them hold comparison with any others, supposed to be of a more temperate situation.

But as was said before, the Ancients knew not much of this Country, and therefore spoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful hear-say. For though Hanno a noble Carthaginian employed by that State, discovered much of the Western Shores of this great Peninsula, yet he ventured not so much into the Land: nor did his Journal (either suppressed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to pursue those Voyages; being writ in the Carthaginian Tongue, but since translated into Greek, and published at Basil by Sigismund Gelenius, Anno 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that some Phœnicians in the days of Necho, passing down the Red-Sea, should sail about the Coasts of Africa to the Straits of Gibraltar, and so return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what those Ages disbelieved or esteemed impossible, is now grown ordinary; the Circumnavigations about this Country being very frequent, since first performed by Vasquez de Gama, an adventurous Portugal, in the year 1497. being 80 years after, or thereabout, from the time that the Portugals first attempted the discovery and circumnavigation of the Coasts of Africa, which at the last, to the no small glory of their Nation, was accomplished by them. For so it happened, that having extended their dominions as far as they could upon the Continent of Spain; and having withal a large Sea-coast, and fit for Shipping, they turned their Forces on the Moors which dwelled in Africa, from whom they took many of their best towns which lay along upon the Shores of the main Atlantic. Encouraged by this good success, Henry Duke of Visco, one of the younger Sons of King John the first, resolved to spend his purse and credit upon new discoveries. And to that purpose, having had some conference with some persons of knowledge and experience in Cosmography, he draweth together the best men of Action, both in Spain and Italy. By their means, and his own good fortune, he first discovers the Isle of Madera, Anno 1420. The Isle of Holy Port, Anno 1428. The Islands of Cape Verd, Anno 1440. the Maritime parts of the Land of Guinea, Anno 1452. which fair foundations being laid, and the way opened to those great discoveries which after followed; that glorious Prince deceased in a good old age, Anno 1463. leaving this Character behind him, that he was the first that made the Portugals in love with the Sea; discontinued after his decease above 20 years, it was resumed again by King John, the second of that name, who by the conduct of Diego Con, Anno 1486. discovered the Realms of Angola and Congo, with the Isle of St. George, and thereupon resolves in the next year following to try his fortunes for compassing the whole Coast of Africa, thereby to find a way to the wealth of India, in which he employed Captain Bartholomew Diaz, who passing beyond Cape Verd, discovered first the Princes Island, and sailing from thence Southward to the furthest Promontory (since called the Cape of good Hope) returned home again; either discouraged by cross Winds, or unruly Seas, or the untractableness of his Mariners, or by all together. The man to who the honour of this Enterprize was reserved, was that Vasquez de Gama above mentioned, employed in this service by King Emmanuel, Anno 1497. who having in his way discovered the Islands of St. James, and St. Helen, and after doubled that terrible Cape, which Bartholomew de Diaz durst not pass, gave it the name of Cabo di Buena Esperanza, or the Cape of good Hope, because of the good hope it gave him of finding the desired way to the Trade of India; and having so doubled this Cape, and got Africa on the left hand of him, he kept his course on towards the North, till he discovered the Countries of Quiloa, Mozambique, Mombaza, and Melinde, with the King of which last he contracted an especial friendship, and by his favours and directions, found the Port of Calicut in East-India, from whence with infinite joy and honour he returned to Lisbon, Anno 1500. The design followed followed the next year by Alvarez Capralde, furnished with 12 ships, 1500 Souldiers; but he being cast upon the Coasts of Brazil, and diverting wholly in a manner on the discovery of that large Country, it was pursued the next year with greater strength, by Vasquez, and his Brother Stephen, afterwards by Ferdinand de Olmeda, and Alphonso de Albuquerque, and divers others of that Nation, and finally by the English, Hollanders, Merchants almost of every Country, which have any Trade upon the Ocean. By means whereof the latter Ages are better instructed in the particulars of it than the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire, and some parts adjoining upon Egypt, more than the strange beasts and more strange reports which they had from hence; occasioning hereby the By-word, Africa semper aliquid apertat novi.

Touching the state of Christianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; most of those Regions which Christian Religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometanism having since regained from Christianity: inasmuch that not only the North part of Africa near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Gospel once so exceedingly flourished, that three hundred Catholick Bishops were at one time banished thence by Genfericus King of the Vandals, is at this present utterly void of Christians, (except some few Towns belonging to the King of Spain;) but even in all this vast Country, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Christian, but the Kingdom of Habassia only, and perhaps not that; none where the Christians are intermingled with Mahometans, but only Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Angola, and some few Towns upon those Coasts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have those Nations gotten by our late discoveries; it being Gain, not Godliness, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Country, or dispersed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly so called, Egyptians, Habassians, Arabians, Jews, and some European Christians only in their Forts and Garrisons; the Jews in all the good Towns where Trading is stirring; the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-Coasts bordering on the Red-Sea; but wandering in great hords or companies all about the Country with their Wives and Children: the Habassians and Egyptians in their several Kingdoms: The Africans again subdivided into Moors and Cafers; of which the Moors are wholly under the Law of Mahomet, the Cafers dwelling in the in-land and more Southern parts, not discovered anciently in their wonted Gentilism. Accordingly, the Languages herein spoken are different also; The Portugal or Spanish being used by the Europeans; 2. The Chaldee or Syriack by the Jews; 3. The Arabick by those of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco only; 4. The Habassian, and 5. the Egyptian in those Kingdoms: 6. That called Aquel-amarig, or the Noble Language, supposed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with some Arabian words, and spoken generally in Morocco, and so amongst some of the Inhabitants of Barbary, nearest to Mount Atlas: 7. That named Sungai, used in Tombutun, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8. That called Gubee, spoken by those of Æthiopia inferior, and such of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the state of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Diocess of Egypt, Africa, and part of the Diocess of Spain. The Diocess of Egypt subdivided into the Provinces of, 1. Libya superior, 2. Libya inferior, 3. Thebaïs, 4. Augustanica, 5. Aradia, and 6. Egyptus, especially so called, distinguished by other names in the Nicene Council: That of 1. Africa Tripolitana, 2. By- zæcena, 3. Zenghana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cesariensis, 6. and Mauritania Sitifensis; the other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Diocess of Spain. The rest of this Peninsula, as they never conquered, so it never was much taken into consideration. But being more perfectly discovered now than in former times (though not so perfectly, as that I can be able to promise an exact account of it) it is divided commonly into these seven parts. 1. Egypt, 2. Barbary, or the Roman Africa, 3. Numidia, 4. Libya, neither of which the same with those of the ancient Romans; 5. Terra Nigritarum, 6. Æthiopia superior, and 7. Æthiopia inferior. Such of the Islands as do not properly belong unto any of these, shall make up the eighth. In the descriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Platinius, and begin with Egypt, as being peopled and possessed before all the residue.

OF EGYPT.

EGYPT is bounded on the East with Idumea, and the Bay of Arabia; on the West with Barbary, Nubia, and part of Libya; on the North with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Æthiopia superior, or the Habassian Empire.

This Country in the Holy Scripture is called Misraim, from Misraim the Son of Chus, and Grandson of Cham, by whom first planted after the Flood, the Footsteps of which name do remain among the Arabians, who still call it Misra. Named in the same regard in the Book of Psalms, the Land of Ham: a name retained in some of the sacred Offices of the old Egyptians, where (as Plutarch witnesseth) it was called Chemia, for Chemia no doubt; as that from Cham or Ham, the first stock of their Nation. In prophane Authors it hath had the several names of 1. Acria, from the fertility of the Air, which is never clouded; 2. Potamia, from the propinquity of the Sea, washing two sides of it; 4. Ogygia, from Ogyges, a supposed King thereof; 4. Melampolus, from the black colour of the soyl; 5. Osiris, from their God Osiris, here in high esteem; 6. and finally, it was called Egyptus, which in the end prevailed over all the rest, either from Egyptus the Brother of Danau once King hereof (in the stories of this Nation better known by the name of Ramesses;) or from Egyptus, the old name of the River Nilus, by whose annual over-flowings made both rich and famous and of the soil and rubbish which that River brought with it from the higher Countries, it was by some supposed to have been raised into firm land, and gained out of the Sea. Called therefore in some Writers by the name of Nili donum, or the gift of Nilus. Yet some there be, who would have it called Egyptus for Aligphus, and that derived from Al Capus, which signifieth the Land or Country of Copus, that being supposed to have been anciently the chief City of it. And some again will have the name derived from Chibth, by which the Egyptians call themselves to this very day.

It containeth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Astsa, or Syene, bordering on Æthiopia, 562 Italian Miles: in breadth (exclusively of Cyrene and Libya) from Rosetta unto Damiata, or from the most Westerly branch of Nilus to the farthest East, 160 of the same miles; to which the adding of those two Provinces makes a great accession: situate under the second and fifth Climates, so that the longest day in Summer is but 13 hours and an half.

By reason of this Southerly situation of it, the Air is here very hot and offensive, so that to avoid the insupportable heats thereof, and to have the benefit of some fresh wind, the inhabitants are accustomed to build high Towers ers in all their Towns, on which they use to solace and refresh themselves. The soil made fruitful by the overflowing of Nilus (whereof more anon) is so exceeding plentiful of all sorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum Populi Romani, the Granary or Store-house of the People of Rome: which City it did annually furnish with four months provision, inasmuch that it was said by Pliny, that the greatness of the Roman Empire could not long continue without the Corn and Wealth of Egypt, the plenty or famine of that City depending wholly on this Country. It abounds also with rich Pastures, in which they feed great flocks of Camels, Horses, Asses, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats, greater of growth than usually in most places else, and by reason of the moistness of the Country, they have great flocks of Fowls. Of Poultry they have also good numbers about their houses, hatched in a different manner from all other Countries, not by the sitting of the Hen, but by the heat of Furnaces, or Ovens; in which their Eggs are orderly laid in dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is also liberally furnished with great plenty of Metals, some precious Stones, good Wines, and the choicest Fruits, as Limons, Oranges, Pomgranates, Citrons, Figs, Cherries, and such as these, excellent both for taste, and colour. Of Palm-trees also great abundance; of which though we have spoke before, yet we shall here more fully declare the nature and strange properties of them. They grow in couples, Male and Female, both thrust forth Cods full of Seed, but the Female is only fruitful, and that not, except growing by the Male, and having his Seeds mixt with hers. The pith of these Trees is an excellent Sallad, better than an Artichoke, which in taste it very much resembleth. Of the branches they make Bed-steds, Lattices, &c. of the leaves, Baskets, Mats, Pans, &c. of the outward husks of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner, Brushes. The Fruit it bears best, known by the name of Dates, are in taste like Figs: and finally, it is said to yield whatsoever is necessary to the life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never so ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the burthen, but still to resist the heaviness of it, and to endeavour to lift and raise it self the more upwards. For this cause planted in Church-yards in the Eastern Countries, as an Emblem of the Resurrection: in stead whereof we use the Evee-tree in these cold Regions. For the same reason given to Conquerours as a token of Victory, it being the Emblem or Hieroglyphick of a Soldier's life. Hence figuratively used for Precedency, as Huic equidem consilio Palmam do, in Terence; sometimes for the victory it self, as Non auferent tamen hanc Palmam, in Pliny; & Plurimarum Palmarum homo, for a man that had won many Prizes in the Fence-School, as in Tully pro Roscio: more naturally for the sign of Victory, as in that of Horace:

—Palmaque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos celsis ad Deos.

That is to say,

The Palm, of Victory a sign,
Equals men to the Powers Divine.

The People, though the Country lye in the same Climate with Barbary are not black, but tawny, or Olive-coloured, affirmed by Pomponius Mela to weep and mourn over the bodies of their dead, daubed over with dung; to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them; but having embalmed them, to lay them in some inward Room of their Houses: the men to keep themselves at home, for the household-business, the women to follow Merchandise and affairs abroad; the men to carry burthens upon their heads, and the women theirs upon their shoulders: Antipodes in these last to most other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenious people, the first Inventors of Geometry, Aritmeticke, Physick, as also of Astrology, Necromancy, and Sorcery. They first taught the use of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians, by them imparted to the Greeks. Accustomed at the first to express their conceits in the shape of Birds, Beasts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphick; of which two or three Examples out of Orus will not be impertinent. For Eternity they painted the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: For a Year, they painted a Snake, with his tail in his mouth, to shew how one year succeeding another, kept the world still in an endless circle. For a Month, they painted a Palm-tree, because at every new Moon it sendeth forth a new branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he soareth so high, as that he governeth the lesser Birds. For Integrity of life, they painted Fire and Water, both because these Elements are in themselves most pure, and because all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was Abominable to the Gods, they painted a Fish, because in their Sacrifices the Priests never used them; and the like. From this manner of expressing ones self, the invention of Letters is thought to have had its original (though learnt by them no question of the children of Israhel, when they lived amongst them;) the History whereof take briefly, and word for word, out of Tacitus. Primi per formam animalium Egyptii, &c. "The Egyptians first of all expressed the conceptions of the mind, by the shapes of Beasts; and the most ancient Monuments of man's memory, are seen graven in Stones; and they say, that they are the first inventors of Letters. Then the Phœnicians, because they were strong at Sea, brought them into Greece; and so they had the glory of that which they received from others: For there goeth a report, that Cadmus sailing thither in a Phœnician Ship, was the Inventor of that Art among the Greeks, when they were yet unexpert and rude. Some report, that Cecrops the Athenian, or Livius the Theban, and Palamedes the Grecian, did find out sixteen Characters at the time of the Trojan War; and that afterward Simonides added the rest. But in Italy the Etrurians learned them of Demaratus the Corinthian; and the Aborigines of Etruria the Arcadian. So far Tacitus. That the Phœnicians were the first Inventors of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory hereof to the Egyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were herein skilled before either: yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-masters to the Greeks, I think I may with safety maintain, having Lucan in consent with Tacitus.

Phœnices primi (fame sacerdotum) assis
Mansiram rudibus vocem signare figuris.

Phœnicians first (if fame may credit have)
Dar'd in rude Characters our words engrave.

Of this mind also is Isidore of Sevil, in the first Book of Origination, who also addeth, that for that cause the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in red Letters, as it is by some still in use. Hinc est quod Phœnicio colore librorum capita describantur, quia ab ipsis litera initium habuere, cap. 3. As for the less vulgar Letters, which the Latines call Cyphre, and whereof every exercised States-man hath peculiar to himself; they were first invented by Julius Cesar, when he first began to think of the Roman Monarchy, and were used by him in his his Letters to his more private and tried Friends, that if by misfortune they should be intercepted, the contents of them should not be understood; Εως εγους τις ποδός τα γράφματα: Ne ultra literarum lectio citius esset. Augustus, one of the greatest Politicians of the World, had another kind of obscure writing; for in his Letters of more secrecy and importance, he always used ἱερὸν γράμμα, to put the Letter immediately following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary writing he should have used. As for Brachygraphy, or the Art of Writing by short Characters, so useful for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is spoken: I find in Dion, that Mæcenus, that great Favourite of Augustus Cesar, and favourer of Learning, did first invent them; ad celeritatem scribendi, for the speedier dispatch of Writing; ἡ αὖτε ὁ Κρητα γράμματων τινὰ (they are the very words of my Author) ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱεροῦ ἔχουσιν. Isidor in the second Chapter of this Book above mentioned, ascribeth it to Aquila, the Liberius or Freed-man of his Mæcenus; and to Tertius Persannius, and Philargius, who added to this Invention. Yet had all they their chief light in it from Tullius Tito, a Freed-man of Cicero's; who had undertaken and compassed it in the Prepositions, but went no further. At the last it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into order and method; the whole Volume of his contractions consisting of 5000 words. Deinde Seneca contracto omnium diglossaque & aucto numero, opus efficit in quinque milia.

So eminent in Arts and Learning were the old Egyptians, that from them Pythagoras and Democritus learnt their Philosophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, their forms of Government; Orpheus and Homer, their Poetical fictions of the Gods. Particularly here flourished 1. Aristarchus, the famous and learned Grammarian; 2. Herodian, a diligent Student and Searcher into curious Arts; 3. Ammonius, the Master of Plotinus; 4. Didymus, surnamed Calceuteres, for his indefatigable Industry in several Sciences; 5. Mæthion, an old Historian, of whom we have nothing but some fragments; 6. Appianus, an Historian of a later date, whose words are extant; 7. Didymus the Grammarian; 8. Cl. Ptolemaeus the Geographer; 9. Achilles Statius the Poet; 10. And before all, the profound Philosopher Mercennius, surnamed Trismegistus. And after their Conversion to the Faith of Christ, 1. Pantenus, the first Reader of Divinity in the Schools of Alexandria; 2. Origen, and 3. Clement Alexandrinus, both skilled in the Universality of Learning; 4. Dionysius; 5. Athanasius, and 6. Cyril; all three Bishops of Alexandria, and the glories of their several times.

This notwithstanding, their Religion before the embracing of Christianity, was the worst of Gentilism; these people not only worshipping the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, Creatures of greatest Use and Glory; nor only sacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollo; and the rest of the Gods, (many of whom were Authors in their several times of some publick benefit to mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing Divine honours to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlic, Leeks, and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Christian Fathers, so most deservedly exposed unto publick scorn, by the Pens of the Poets:

Porram & cepe nefas violare, & ledere morsus;
Fetices populi, quibus hec nascuntur in Hortis
Numina! — Quis nescit qualis dentens
Ægyptus portenta colat, &c.

Which may be rendered to this purpose;

To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more Than deadly sin. The Numen they adore
Grows in their Gardens. And who dares not know What monstrous Shapes for Gods in Egypt go?

But the Gods most esteemed by them, and by all sorts of the Egyptians the most adored, was Apis, a coal-black Ox, with a white star in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his back, and two hairs only in his tail. But it seemeth his Godship was not so much respected by strangers. For Cambyses when he conquered Egypt, ran him with his sword through the Thigh, and caused all his Priests to be scourged. And Augustus being here, would not vouchsafe to see him, saying, Quis duxit hunc deum in Ægyptum? that the Gods, and not the Oxen of Egypt were the object of his Devotions. A speech most truly worthy to brave an Emperor.

But it is time we should proceed to a survey of these Egyptians, as they stand at the present, much differing from the ingenuity and abilities of their Predecessors; nothing but Ignorance and Barbarism to be found amongst them. For such as have observed the nature of the Modern Egyptians, affirm them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Ancestors; prone to Innovations, devoted to Luxury, cowardly, cruel, addicted naturally to cavil, and to detract from whatsoever is good and eminent. In their dealing with other men, more observant than faithful, of a wit much inclining to craftiness, and very eager on their Profit. Of person, of a mean stature, tawny of complexion, and spare of body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities, apply themselves to Merchandise, grow rich by trading, reasonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in dress and fashion. Those in the Country, who betake themselves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a savage and nasty people, cruised over with Dirt, and stinking of smook; fit company for none but those of their own condition: Nothing now left amongst them of the Arts of their Ancestors, but an affectation which they have unto Divination; to Fortune-telling great pretenders; by which, and some cheating tricks in which very well practised, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and so get their livelihood; occasioning the Vagabonds and Stragglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the same false Arts, to assume their names. The whole Body of the Inhabitants now an Höcspot or Medley of many Nations, Moori, Arabians, Turks, the natural Egyptian making up the least part of the reckoning.

The women of the same complexion with the men, but well formed and featured, did not they too much affect a seeming Corruptelley; which if they cannot get in Flesh, they will have in Cloaths. Very fruitful in Child-bearing, and quick of dispatch when they are in labour: some of them having three or four children at a Birth; those that are born in the eighth month living to good Age, and not in danger of death, as in other Countries. Such of them as dwell in Cities cover their faces with black Cypris bespotted with red; their arms and ankles garnished with bracelets and hoops of Gold, Silver, or some other Metal. Those in the Country for a Vail, use some dirty cloth, having holes only for their eyes, which little is too much to see and abstain from loathing. Both in the City and the Country, contrary to the custom in all places else, the Women use to make water standing, and the men crouching on their knees.

The Christian Faith was here first planted by S. Mark, whom all Antiquity maketh the first Bishop of Alexandria. His

His Successors, till the time of Heraclius and Dionysius, chosen continually out of the Presbytery or Cathedral-Clergy; afterwards out of the Clergy at large. Their Jurisdiction settled by a Canon of the Council at Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Dioecesis of Egypt, (taking the word Dioecesis in the civil notion) containing Libya, Pentapolis, and Egypt specially so called; to which, though Epiphanius adds Thebais, Marœtica and Ammoniac, yet he adds nothing in effect; Thebais and Marœtica being parts of Egypt, as Ammoniac was of Libya. Afterwards the Æthiopian or Abassine Churches became subject to this Patriarch also, and do acknowledge to this day some relation to him. By the coming in of the Saracens, and the subjugation of this Country, Christianity fell here into great decay; languishing so sensibly since those times, especially since the Conquest of it by the Turks: that whereas Borchardus in his time reckoned three hundred thousand Christians; in the last estimate which was made of them, they were found to be fifty thousand. This small remainder of them, commonly called Copti, either from the Greek word κόπτος Scindo, because they retained the use of Circumcision with their Christianity; or from Coptus, a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reside; or finally by Abbreviation from Ægypti, corrupted from Ægyptii, their own National name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithstanding in some particulars, in some from all Christian Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The points most proper to them, 1. Using Circumcision with their Baptism, but rather as a National than Religious custom; though in that sense also laid aside, as is said by some, by the persuasion of some Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Caire, Anno 1583. 2ly. Conferring all sacred Orders under the Priesthood, on Infants immediately after Baptism; their Parents, till they come to sixteen years of age, performing what they promised in their behalf, viz. Charity, fasting on Wednesday and Friday, and four Lenten days of the year. 3ly. Reputing Baptism not to be of any efficacy, except ministrated by the Priest, in the open Church, in what extremity soever. 4ly. And yet not baptizing any Children till the fortieth day, though they die in the interim. 5ly. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Eucharist, as soon as Christened. 6ly. Contracting Marriages even in the second degree of Consanguinity, without dispensation. 7ly. Observing not the Lords day, nor any of the Festivals, except only in Cities. 8ly. And in their Liturgies, reading the Gospel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome. 1. Administering the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper under both kinds. 2ly. Administering in leavened bread. 3ly. Admitting neither Extreme Unction, nor the use of the Eucharist, to those that are sick. 4ly. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead; 5ly. Nor using Elevation in the act of Administering; and 6ly. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical, and esteeming no better of the Latine, than they do of the Jews. In these Opinions they continue hitherto against all Opponents and persuasions. For though Baronius in the end of the sixth Tome of his Annals, hath registered an Ambassage from Marcus, the then Patriarch of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8. wherein he is said to have submitted himself and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome; yet upon further search made, it was found but a Cheat, devised to hold up the reputation of a sinking cause. The Patriarch of Alexandria still adhereth to his own Authority; though many of late, by the practice and solicitation of some bulle Priars, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome, and to use her Liturgies.

Among the Rarities of this Country, some were the works of Nature, and some of industry and magnificence.

Of this last kind I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramids, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their several kinds, the envy of the Ages past, and the astonishment of the present. Look we first on the Pyramids, many in number, three more celebrated, and one the principal of all; situate on the South of the City of Mempbis, and on the Western banks of Nilus. This last, the chief of the Worlds seven wonders, square at the bottom, is supposed to take up eight Acres of ground. Every square 300 single Paces in length, ascended by 255 steps, each step above three foot high, and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top consisting but of three Stones only, yet large enough for 60 men to stand upon. No Stone so little in the whole as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted, is an equal wonder. Built for the Sepulchre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the rest for others of those mighty Princes) who employed in it day by day twenty years together, no fewer than 366000 men continually working on it. The charges which they put him to, in no other food than Garlick, Radishes, and Onions, being computed at a thousand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is said to be the work of a Daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Herodotus writeth) both to finish her Fathers undertaking, and raise her own unto the height, by the prostitution of her body, requiring but one stone towards the Work from each one of her Customers; but the Tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater truth, though affirmed by Josaphus, and supposed by many good Divines, that the Drudgery put upon the Israelites did concern these Pyramids: the Materials of these works being Stone; their employment Brick. But past all doubt, advanced by those considerate Princes upon good advice, and not for ostentation only of their power and glories. For by this means they did not only eternize their memory to succeeding Ages, but for the present kept the Subject from sloth and idleness; who being a people prone unto Innovations, were otherwise like enough to have fed that sin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently diverted.

As for the Labyrinth, it was built by Psemmiticus on the banks of the River Nilus, situate on the South of the Pyramids, and North of Arsinoe, or the City of Crocodiles. It contained within the compass of one continued Wall a thousand Houses, and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble; and had only one entrance, but innumerable turnings and returnings, sometimes one over another; and all in a manner inviolable to such as were not acquainted with them: the building more under ground than above: the Marble stones laid with such Art, that neither Wood nor Cement was employed in any part of the Fabrick; the Chambers so disposed, that the doors upon their opening, did give a report no less terrible than a crack of Thunder. The main entrance all of white Marble, adorned with stately Columns, and most curious Imagery. The end at length being attained, a pair of Stairs of 90 Steps conducted into a gallant Portico, supported with Pillars of Theban stone, which was the entrance into a fair and spacious Hall, (the place of their general Conventions) all of polished Marble, set out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Dedalus, in the Cretan Labyrinth, though that fell as short of the glories of this, as Minos was inferior unto Psemmiticus in Power and Riches.

Next unto these, I place the Isle and Tower of Pharos, the Island opposite unto Alexandria, once a mile distant from the Land, but joynted to the Continent by Cleopatra, on this occasion. The Rhodian, then Lords of the Sea,

Sea, used to exact some tribute or acknowledgment out of every Island within those Seas, and consequently out of this. Their Ambassadors sent unto Cleopatra to demand this Tribute, she detained with her seven days, under colour of celebrating more solemn Festivals; and in the mean time, by making huge dams and banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and speed; united the Island to the shore; which finished, she sent the *Rhodian*s away empty-handed, with this witty Jeer, telling them, That they were to take Toll of the Islands, and not of the Continent. A Work of great Rarity and Magnificence, both for the bigness of it, taking up seven furlongs of Ground, and for that cause called Heptastadium; and that incredible speed wherewith it was finished. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latine Pharos, by the name of the Island; it was built by Ptolomy Philadelphus, for the benefit of Sailers, (the Seas upon that coast being very unsafe, and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deservedly esteemed another of the Worlds seven Wonders; the other five being, 1. the Mausoleum, 2. the Temple of Ephefus, 3. the Walls of Babylon, 4. the Colossus of Rhodus, and 5. the Statue of Jupiter Olympius. This Watch-Tower, or Pharos was of wonderful height, ascended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein Lights burned nightly, as a direction to such as sailed by Sea. The Materials were white Marble; the chief Architect; Sophtratus of Gnidus, who engraved on the Work this Inscription: Sophtratus of Gnidus, the Son of Dexiphanes, to the Gods Protectors, for the safeguard of Sailers. This Inscription he covered with Plaster, and thereon engraved the Name and Title of the King, the Founder: to the end that the Kings Name being soon wasted and washed away, his own, which was written in Marble, might be eternized to posterity as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cæsar pursuing Pompey into Egypt, and having discontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Soldiers, had his Navy which here lay at Anchor, assaulted by Acchilles, one of young *Ptolomy*s Servants, Cæsar himself being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the Skirmish, he hastened to the Pharos, meaning to succour his Navy in person: but the Egyptians making towards him on all sides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and swim for his life. And though (to avoid their Darts) he sometimes ducked, yet held he still his left hand above the water, and in it divers Books, which he carried safe unto his Ships, and animating his men, got the Victory. It is said that Egypt hath only two doors; the one by Land, which is the strong Tower of Peleusium, or Damiata; the other by water, which is this Pharos: Tota Egyptus maritimo accessu, Pharos, pedestre vero, Pelusio, velut clausuris munita existimatur, saith Opian.

Amongst the Rarities of Nature, we may reckon those strange Beasts and Fishes, proper almost unto this Country, i. e. the Crocodile, the Ibneumon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horse) the Ibis, the Ape, and many several sorts of Serpents. To speak of which particularly were a Work more proper to a Natural History, than a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt than all the rest, cannot be parted with in silence; a Creature of a strange nature, hatched of an Egg no bigger than that of a Turkie, and increasing to the length of thirty foot; his tail as long as all the rest of his Body, with which he is accustomed to inchain his prey, and draw it into the River; his Feet armed with Claws, and his Back with impenetrable Scales; his Mouth so wide (of which he moveth only the upper Jaw) that he is able to swallow a Heifer; equally used to both Elements, but better sighted in the Water, then on the Land; Cowardly, though a Creature of prey, and such as usually flies from those which dare set upon him; and easily vanquished by the Dolphin, who (swimming under the water woundeth him in the belly, where assailable only. Whether so easily destroyed by the Ibneumon (a kind of Water-Rat) skipping unto his mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers say, hath of late been questioned.

Of less dispute, but not less Rarity in Nature, are these that follow: 1. That in all this Country it never raineth; or if a Cloud do sometimes happen to dissolve upon them, it bringeth on their Bodies innumerable Sores, and strange Discaises. 2. The annual overflowings of the River Nilus, and the many memorable things which are said to follow on the fame. Of which it is thus said by Lucan:

*Terra suis contenta bonis, non indiga Mercis,
Aut Jovis; in solo tanta est fiducia Nilo*

*The Earth content with its own Wealth, doth crave,
No Foreign Mart, nor Jove himself; they have Their hope alone in Nilus fruitful Wave.*

This Nilus from the 15 day of June, swelleth above his Banks, for the space of 40 days; and in as many more, gathereth his waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the Earth is deficient in her abundance of increase, for want of moisture: and if the waters surmount the superficies of the Earth, more than seventeen Cubits, then like a drunken man, it cannot produce its natural operation, as having his stomach (as it were) overlaid and surcharged with too much Liquor: but if the Mean be granted, there is no Country which can brag of the like Fertility; the Corn being all housed before the 20th of May. During this Inundation, they keep their Beasts and Cattel on the tops of such little hills, which either the Providence of Nature, or the Industry of Man, hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decrease of the Waters: and on these Hills also stand most of their Towns and Villages, appearing in the time of the Flood like so many Islands; and holding a Commerce and continual Traffick by the intercourse of Boats and Shallops, by which they do transport their Marketable Commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time, that the River doth not thus overflow the Country, it is not only the fore-runner to a following dearth, but prognosticateth some ensuing mischief to the Prince and State: Confirmed by the testimony of good and creditable Authors, who have told us that in the 10th and 11th years of Cleopatra, the River increased not at all: that it was noted as a Fore-teller of the Fall of those two Great, but Unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra and her Sweet-heart Antonius. A second Commodity which ariseth from the overflowings of Nilus, is health, which it bringeth with it in most parts of the Country; the Plague, which oftentimes miserably rageth upon the first day of the Flood, abating instantly; inasmuch that whereas 500 may die of that Discaise in the City of Caire but the day before, there dieth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River is, that keeping its waters united in a Body together, after it falleth into the Sea, it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean, further than any part of it can be seen from the shore. Add unto these, the many living Creatures which the slime thereof engendereth, on the withdrawing of the River to its natural Channel; whereof Ovid thus;

*Sic ubi deservit madidor Septemfluvius agros
Nilus, & antiquo sua flumina reddidit alto;
Plurima Cultores versus Animalia glebis Juvenerunt.*

Which I English thus:

*So when the Seven-month Nile the fields forsakes,
And to his ancient Channel him betakes;
The Plough-men many living Creatures find,
By turning up the Mud that's left behind.*

Amongst which Creatures so engendered, are said to be such innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furnish this Country with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured, the Plague of Frogs would come a second time upon them to their utter destruction.

On the Banks of this River also grew those sedge Weeds called Papyrus, of which Paper was made in former times, which I reckon amongst the Rarities of Egypt also, but a Rarity of Art and Nature mixed. They divided it into thin flakes, (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moistening them with the glutinous waters of the River, they pressed them together, and after dried them in the Sun. By means of which invention, Books being easier to be transcribed and reserved than formerly, Ptolomy Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria; and understanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, strived to exceed him in that kind of Magnificence, prohibited the carrying of it out of Egypt. Hereupon Attalus invented the use of Parchments, made of the Skins of Calves and Sheep; from the materials called Membrana, and Pergamena from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cause, that in short time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of use; in place whereof succeeded our Paper made of Rags; the Authors of which excellent Invention, our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the use of these Papers and Parchments were first made known, I observe three ways of Writing amongst the Ancients. (I hope I shall be pardoned this short digression.) 1. On the inward side of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Libri; and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Caudex, gave the Latines occasion to call a Book Codex. 3. They used to cover their Tables over with Wax, and thereon to write what they had to signify; from whence a Letter-carrier was named Tabellarius. The Instrument wherewith they wrote, was a sharp pointed Iron, which they called Stylus; a word now signifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kind of Phrase which any man useth; as Negligens stylus, in Quintilian; and Exercitatus stylus, in Cicero. I should have also noted, that they used sometimes to write in Leaves; That the Sibyls Oracles being so written and scattered abroad, had the name of Sibyllæ Folia; and that from thence we have the phrase of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Now to these Rarities of Nature, and Magnificent Industry, most of them near the River Nile, or relating to it, we are to add another of far greater moment, and such as plainly seemeth to be supernatural, which is, that above five miles from the City of Caire, there is a place, in which, on every Good Friday yearly, there appear the Heads, Legs, and Arms of Men rising out of the Ground, to a very great number: which if any man draw near unto them, or touch any of them, will shrink again into the Earth. Supposed by some to be an Impiety of some Water-Men only; who tick them over-night in the Sands, and keeping them secret to themselves, obtain thereby the ferrying over of many thousands of people to behold the sight. But Stephen Duplex, a sober and discerning man in the opinion of Goullartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwise of it: affirming soberly that he was an Eye-witness of the wonder, that he had touched divers of these rising Members; and that (as he was once fo doing to the head of a Child) a man of Caire cried out unto him Kali, Kali, ants maseraside; that is to say, Fold, fold, you know not what you do. A strange Forerunner (if it be of undoubted credit) of the Resurrection of the whole Body, preferred yearly, in the Rising of these several parts.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus and that great increase of wealth which accrued thereby to all the Country, in the improvement of the natural commodities of the Earth: let us next look on the Red-Sea, and the Riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have spoken already, as to the reason of the name, the extent thereof, and the several Islands contained in it, and therefore shall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to this Country, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous passage of the Israelites thought it as upon dry-land, and the drowning of Pharaoh's Cenchers and all his people, at large commemorated in the Books of Holy Scriptures: as also for that through it the Spices of India and Arabia, were brought to Alexandria; and thence by the Venetians dispersed through all Europe, Africa, and Asia. I suppose I shall not too amiss to set down Historically out of Galvano, a relation of the beginning continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received so great Commodity. Known then (saith he) that Ptolomy Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation, was the first that set on foot this Navigation: Coltr (of old called Myos, Hormos) on the Sea-side being the ordinary Haven out of which they hoysed Sail for India; and into which they returned, full fraught with their Commodities. From hence they were by Land conveyed to Coptus, and so down the Nile to Alexandria; by which Traffick the City grew exceeding Rich; inasmuch that the Custom-bouse there yielded Ptol. Auletes 7. Millions and an half of Gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enhanced the Customs to double that sum: they sent into India every year (as Pliny witnesseth) 120 Ships, whose lading was worth 1200000 Crownis; and there was made in return of every Crown 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths and Moors had torn in pieces the Roman Empire, all Commerce between Nations began to cease. At last perceiving the inconvenience, they began anew; conveying the Indian Commodities partly by Land, partly by Water, unto Capha in Taurica Chersonesus, belonging to the Genoese. Next Trabezond was made the Mart-Town, then Sarmachand in Zagataia, where the Indian, Turkish, and Persian Merchants meet to barter Wares: the Turks conveying their Merchandise to Damascus, Barutti, and Aleppo; from whence the Venetians transported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Christendom. Once again, viz. Anno 120. the Soldans of Egypt restored the Passage by the Red-Sea; which having continued more than 200 years, is now discontinued by the Portugal, Spaniards, English and Dutch, which bring them to their several homes by the back-side of Africk: So that not only the Traffick of Alexandria is almost decayed, and the Riches of the Venetians much diminished; but the Drugs and Spices have lost much of their Virtue, as impaired by too much moisture in so long a Voyage. So much saith he, touching the course and alteration of this Trading; to which I shall take leave to add, that for the better and more quick return of such Commodities as were usually brought into this Sea; some of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it to the River Nile, passable by Ships of greatest burden; the marks of whose proud attempts are remaining till. Sesotris was the first who designed the work, having before before with good success cut many Trenches from the River, and some Navigable into many places of the Country; by which unprofitable Marishes were drained, the Country strengthened, Trade made ealie, and the People better furnished with water than in former times: Darius the great Persian Monarch, seconded the same Project; so did one of the Ptolomies; The like is said of a Capricious Portugal in these latter times: But they all gave it over on the same consideration; which was a fear, lest by letting in the Red-Sea they might drown the Country, and perhaps make a second Deluge in the parts of Greece and Asia Minor which lay nearest to them: that Sea being found to be much higher than the Mediterranean, and the flats of Egypt.

But here we are to understand, that all which hitherto hath been spoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt strictly, and specially so called; containing only so much of the Country of Egypt as lieth upon the Banks and Channels of the River Nile, and not to all that tract of ground which lay betwixt the Red-Sea and the borders of Libya, which was reckoned in the compass of the Kingdom of Egypt, much less as comprehending Libya and Cyrene also, though now accounted Members of that Body, and anciently parts or Provinces of the Diocesi of it. For Egypt, in the largest sense and acceptance of the word, may be, and generally is divided into these three parts, viz. 1. Egypt, in the general Nation, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean from the borders of Idumea to the Roman Libya, or Marmarica, lying Weltward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleoticum: and on the borders of Ethiopia Superior from the said Red-Sea, to the Country of Libya Interior. 2. Libya or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly so called, and the Province of Cyrene or Pentapolis. And 3. Cyrene or Pentapolis, reaching from that Libya to the greater Syria; where it bordered with that part of the African Diocesi, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in this first acceptance of it we shall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains and chief Cities; which done, we shall describe the other in their proper places; and then unite them all in General Story.

As for the Mountains of this Country, there are very many: there were no living elfe for the people in the time of the overflowings of the River. The principal of those, 1. Those called Montes Libyici, lying in a long Chain on the West of Nilus; 2. Alabastrinus; 3. Prophyrinus; 4. Troicus; 5. Basilanus on the East thereof. Betwixt these Hills the course of the River is fo hemmed in on both sides, that at the upper part of the stream, where it first entrench into Egypt, the space betwixt the Mountains is not above four miles broad; enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Caire to thirty seven; then opening wider and wider, till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Country doth increase in breadth. On these and other of the Mountains and lesser Hills, stand most part of the Towns, the receptacles of the Country-people in the time of the Flood, rising when least, to fifteen Cubits, or seven yards and an half.

Rivers of Note here are none but Nilus, nor indeed any one but that; that being sufficient of it self to enrich this Country, which otherwise would be nothing but a Sandy Desert. The Head thereof not in the Mountains of the Moon, as was once supposed, but in the Lake Zembre in Ethiopia interior; passing from thence through the Higher Ethiopia, or Habassine Empire, till it falls at last into this Country; and running in one continual Channel (excepting where it brancheth into little Islands, as it sometimes doth) before its influx into the Sea, is divided into seven great streams, opening into the Sea with so many mouths. Namely 1. Heracleoticum; 2. Bolbiticum; 3. Schaniticum; 4. Patinicum; 5. Mendicum; 6. Carniticum; 7. Pelusiaticum. The first and last of these Currents

(which are the only two now left) being far distant from the other, and growing into one at the first point of the Rivers division, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta, because to such as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy, or Anatolia, it resembleth that Letter in the Greek Alphabet. Now because Nilus so runneth in its certain Channels, that the People have no other water to make use of for all necessities; there are many by-trenches and deep Ditches cut in convenient places (by the Care and Munificence of their Kings) to receive its Waters, and to communicate them to the people, who know almost no other drink than the Waters thereof, and indeed they need not; the Waters of this River being of such excellent both taste and virtue, that when Pescennius Niger saw his Soldiers murmur for want of Wine; What (said he) do you grumble for Wine, having the Water of Nile to drink?

But beside the Waters of this River, and the Trenches of it, the people are supplied with that Commodity by Lakes and artificial Channels, which serve for watering their Cattel, tempering of Mortar for their Buildings, and other such inferior uses; sometimes perhaps for drink for the poorer sort, who cannot be conveniently furnished with the waters of Nile. Amongst the Trenches (which were many, as before was said) those of most estimation were the Works of Ptolomy, and the Emperour Trajan, the first falling into that branch of the Nile, which maketh the Ife called Heracleotis; the other into the main body of it not far from Caire. These two, by reason of the many fresh Springs which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authors: and betwixt these was feated the Land of Gessen, extending from Nilus to the Red-Sea on the East and West. The chief of Note amongst the Lakes, were those called, 1. Marotis, not far from Alexandria, by Pliny called Aravotter, Maria, by Ptolomy; all which names are now lost, and changed into that of Lago di Arason, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2. Lacus supposed to be the same which in the Book of Maccabees is called Abstar, lib. 1. cap. 9. And 3. Morira, now called Bucharia, more memorable than the rest. In compass 3500 furlongs, 50 fathom deep, in the midst whereof were two Pyramids, 50 fathoms above the water, and as much beneath it: the Fish of this Lake for one six months in the year, is said to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the Kings Exchequer; for the other six, each day a Talent. 4. The Lakes called Amari, into which the Trench, or River called Ptolomeus, doth discharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided anciently into two parts onely. 1. That called Delta, betwixt the two extrem branches of the River Nilus, the form of which Letter it resembleth to him who standing on the Sea-shore, could take a view of it, as before was said. 2. That called Thebaïs from Thebe, the principal City of it, comprehending all the rest of the course of that River, shut up on both sides with the Mountains spoken of before. But this Division leaving out all those parts herof, which lay on the East-side towards the Arabian Gulfs, and on the West, as far as to the borders of Libya Marmarica: the Macedonians laying it all together, divided it into 18 Cantreds, or Districts, by them called Nomi; increasing in the time of Ptolomy the Geographer, to 46; Ortelius out of divers Authors hath found 20 more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Diocesi of the Empire: it was divided into four Provinces, not reckoning Marmarica and Cyrene into the account; that is to say, 1. Egyptians, specially so called, containing all the Delta, and the District or Nomus of Mareotica, bordering on Marmarica. 2. Augustanica, so called from Augustus Caesar, on the East of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petrea. 3. Arcadia, so called from the Emperour Arcadius, in whose time it was taken out of Thebais lying on both sides of the River, from the Delta to the City of Antinous. 4. Thebais, extending on both sides of the River from the borders of Libya Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) from Antinous unto Æthiopia; Divided otherwise by some into Superiorem, reaching from Æthiopia to the City of Antinous, Mediam, stretching thence to the point of the Delta; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the rest. But at this time, that part herof which lieth on the South and East of Cair, is called Sand, or Salid; honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the ancient Pharaohs, because nearest unto Æthiopia, their most puissant Neighbour. 2. That betwixt Caire, Rosetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Errisja, wherein the Ptolomean Princes did most reside; because most convenient for receiving Supplies of Men from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Caire, to Teneis and Damiata, is now called Marema, in which the Turks and Mamaluks made the seat of their Empire; because more neighbouring to the Christians, whom they stood in fear of, as likeliest to invade them upon that side. In the whole Country there was reckoned in the time of Amasis the second, no fewer then 20000 Cities; but if the Towns and Villages be not reckon'd in, I should much doubt of the account. By Diodorus Siculus, it is said, that there were 3000 in his time: but Ortelius on a diligent search, finds 300 only.

Those of most note in the Province of Augustinica, 1. Pelufium, the most Eastern City of Egypt towards Idumea, situate on the most Eastern Channel of Nilus, called hence Pelusiaceum; by Ammianus to be the work of Pelusus the Father of Achilles, commanded by the Gods to purge himself in the Lake adjoining, for the murder of his Brother Phoenix. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to those who came thither by Sea; the Metropolis of the Province of Augustinica, the birth place of Ptolemy the Geographer, and the Episcopal Seat of St. Isidore, surnamed Pelusiotes, whose eloquent and pious Epistles are still extant. Out of the ruins herof (if not the same under another Title) arose, 2. Damiata, memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Christian Armies; for none more then that under John de Brenne, the Titulary King of Jerusalem, and the Princes of Europe, Anno 1220. During which (being of 10 months continuance) the Famine and the Pestilence so extremely raged, that the Town in a manner was depopled, before the Beliegers knew any thing of their condition: till in the end two venturous Souldiers, admiring the silence and solitude of so great a City, in a Bravado scal'd the Walls; but found no man to make resistance. The next day the whole Army entred, where they found in every house, and every corner of the streets, whole heaps of dead bodies, none to give them burial: A lamentable and ruthless spectacle! 3. Heris or Civitas Heroum, in the Arabian Idumea; at the very bottom of the Gulf; remarkable for the first interview betwixt Jacob and Joseph after his coming into Egypt. 4. Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, now called Besjames; in the Scriptures On, of which Potiphar the Father of Arsenab (whom Pharaoh married unto Joseph) was Priest, or Prince, as is said, Gen. 41. 45. Given (as Joseph telleth us) for an habitation to the Sons of Jacob; by consequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Ramesses or Goshen: and memorable in time succeeding for a publick Temple built for the Jews, with the consent of Ptolemy, surnamed Philadelphus, by Onias the High-Priest, then dispossest of his Authority and Office by the power of Antiochus: a Temple much esteemed by the Hellenists, or Greeking Jews; and though Schismatical at the best in its first original, yet not Schismatical and Idolatrous too, as was that of Mount Gazizim. 5. Babylis, somewhat more North then Heliopolis, by some of the ancients called Auaris, by the Scriptures Pibeseth, another City of that tract; now better known by the name of Ziob: supposed to be the same which the Notitia calleth Castra Judæorum; memorable in times of Paganism, for a famous Temple of Diana. 6. Arsinoe, on the shore of the Red-Sea, so called in honour of Arsinoe, Sister of Philadelphus, and Wife to Lysimachus King of Thrace; afterwards called Cleopatra in honour of Queen Cleopatra; now better known by the name of Suez. Of great commerce and trading in the time of the Ptolomies: Now almost abandoned; and would be utterly deserted, were it not made the station of the Turkish Gallies, that command the Gulf: which being framed at Caire of such Timber as is brought thither by Sea from the Woods of Cilicia, and sometimes from the shores of the Euxine Sea; are again taken in pieces, carried from Caire unto this City on the backs of Camels, and here joyntly together. Conceiv'd to be the same which in former times was called Baal-Zephon (of which see Exod. 14. 9.) the last incamping place of the Tribes of Israel, who from hence passed through the Red-Sea, upon dry Land. 7. Gleba Rubra, by the Greeks called Hiera Bolus, and sometimes Erythra Bolus also, more near the Latin; the redness of the soil giving name unto it: situate on the River or Trench of Tritan: more memorable for a misfortune that befel it than for any thing else; purposely burnt by Amenophes the fifth, upon this occasion. Being blind, he was assured by some of his Wizzards, that if he washed his eyes with the Urine of a Woman, which had never known any but her own Husband, he should be restored unto his sight. After a long search and many vain trials, he met with one whose water cured him; whom he took to Wife: and causing all the rest whom he had made trial of, to be brought together to this Town, he set fire on the City, and burnt both it and all the women there assembled; which Tale, if true, is little to be honour of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of most note and observation in the Province of Egypt, strictly and specially so called, are 1. Alexandria, situate Westward of the Delta, over again the Isle of Pharos; and built upon a Promontory, thrusting it self into the Sea; with which on the one side, and the Lake Mareotis on the other, it is exceeding well defended: the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks, immediately after his Conquest of Egypt. The Regal Seat of the Ptolomies, whilst Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom: and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Diocesis. Adorned with many stately Buildings; of which most memorable the Serapium, (or Temple of their God Serapis) for sumptuous workmanship, and the magnificence of the Fabrick, inferior to none but the Roman Capitol: and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had stored it with 700000 Volumes; unfortunately burnt in the War against Julius Cæsar. A City of great Trading, and infinite Riches: ut supra ipsum Ægyptum Ægyptum the greatest Empory of the World, as is said by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens so abound in all licentiousness both of life and speech, that they spared not the Emperour himself if he came in their way. But they paid dearly for their folly. For Caracalla not so patient of a Contumely as some wiser Princes, having felt the lashes of their tongues, when he was amongst them, assembled all the youth of the City, as if out of them he would have chosen some to attend his Person: and suddenly gave command to his Souldiers, to put them all to the Sword. A slaughter so great and universal, that the River Nilus coloured with the blood of the slain, might not improperly at that time be called a Red-Sea. In this City, Anno 180. Pantenus read both Divinity and Philosophy to all such as would come to hear him: which as it is conceived to give the first hint to the instituting of

Univer-

Universities in the rest of Christendom, so from that small beginning the Schools of Alexandria grew so great and eminent, that Nazarianen calleth them ἱεροσολαϊστίνων, ἐπιστήμιον, the Shop, or Work-house, as it were, of all kinds of Learning. Much short of what it was even in point of Trading, especially since the diversion of the Spice Trade from the Bay of Arabia; and utterly divested of those beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the present by a mixture of Nations, Moors, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Christian Coptics; more for some little gain which they reap by Traffick, than any pleasure in the place. Now called Scandaria by the Turks, remarkable only for the house of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the most part in Caire) and a Church in which St. Mark their first Bishop was said to be buried. 2. Canopus, situate East of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Hieracleoticum; so called from Canopus the Pilot of Menelaus, who having suffered shipwreck upon this Coast, was there interred by his Master. A Town so branded in old times, for varieties of all kind of beastliness, and Luxury, that as Seneca very well observed, he that avoided the viciousness and debauchery of it, could not escape the infamy: the very place administering matter for suspicion. 3. Rosetta, on the same branch of the River, and not far from Canopus, out of whose ruins it arose; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Caliphs; unwall'd, and destitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all sorts of Commodities, and well frequented by the Merchant. 4. Nicopolis, now called Munia, the Monument of some eminent Victory, and probably of the Conquest of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town standing within 30 Furlongs of Alexandria. 5. Aphroditis and Aphroditopolis, so called from Venus, who was here worshipped: situate betwixt the two middle branches of the Nile. 6. Sais, betwixt the same branches of the River also: whence that Nomus or Division had the name of Saites. It is now called Sibiti, or Signiti. 7. Plimbis, on the Sea-side; and 8. Hierax, more within the Land: the chief Towns of the Region called Mareotica.

In Arcadia, called also Heptanomis, because it contained seven of the Nomi or Divisions, into which Egypt was distributed by the Macedonians, and the places of most note were and are, 1. Memphis, on the Western banks of Nile, not far from the sharp point of the Delta, where the River first beginning to divide it self; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs: by one of which who removed the Seat-Royal from Theba hither, it is said to be built, and called thus by the name of his Daughter. In compass, when it flourished about 20 miles; great, populous, and adorned with a world of Antiquities; amongst others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, and Serapis, beset with Sphinxes: now nothing left of the Ruines of it, but the Statues of some monstrous Resemblances, sufficient to shew what it hath been formerly. The Pyramides before described, stood not far from hence; to which the Poet relateth, saying, Barbara Pyramidum sileat miracula Memphis.

Let barbarous Memphis brag no more
Of her Pyramids, as before.

2. Babylon, called for distinctions-sake, Babylon Egyptiorum, built on the other side of the River, and somewhat more unto the North: said to be founded by Cambyses the Persian Monarch, the first that made this Kingdom stoop to the yoke of a Foreiner; and by him peopled with some Babylonians or Chaldeans transplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruins; amongst which, many of the Christian Temples and Monasteries do lie there in rubbish; the Castle whereof served long after for the Garrison of the three Legions, appointed to defend this Country in the time of the Romans. This, thought by some to be the Babylon mentioned by Saint Peter, in his first Epistle Chap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my Son, (Saint Mark being the first Bishop of the Alexandrians, and the Apostle of Egypt) may make somewhat probable, but the truth and reality herof, I dispute not now. Out of the ruins of this City arose 3. Caire, now, and for many Ages past, the chief of this Country: raised from the ashes of old Babylon by the Caliphs of Egypt, and by the Mamaluks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compass not above eight miles; but full of Streets, the number of which said to be 18000, every one of them fortified with a Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every several street an impregnable Fortrefs. Found by Selimus the first, when he conquered Egypt; who spent three days in forcing his way through it with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean; the publick, especially the Mosques, beyond thought magnificent. Visited every seventh year with a dreadful Pestilence; yet still so populous, that it is conceived to be in good health, if there die not above a thousand in a day, or three hundred thousand within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards both within the City and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleasant Lake; but made more pleasant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual solace and delights. Fortified at the South end with a stately Castle (the Palace of the Mamaluks, Sultans) situate on the top of a Mountain; overlooking the City, and a great part of the Country also. So large, that it seemeth a City of it self, immured with high walls, divided into many partitions of several Courts, in times past the places of exercise; and entred by doors of Iron. Destroyed for the most part by Selimus, for fear of giving opportunity to some rebellion; or envying the Mamaluks the glory of having been the Masters of so brave a Mansion: that which is left, now serving for the habitation of the Turkish Bassas, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4. Metared, or Matara, not far from Caire; the soil whereof is said to be so rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with Sand or Gravel, so moderating the extrem rankness of it. 5. Arsinoe, on the West-side of the Nile, and somewhat South of the famous Labyrinth before described; called also (to difference it from another of the same name on the shore of the Red-Sea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monster. 6. Niopolis, or Nili Civitas, in the Island called Hieracleotis, made by the imbracements of the River; most memorable for being the Episcopal Seat of Cheremon, a right godly Prelate; of whom see Eusebius in the 6. Book, and 34. Chapter of his Ecclesiastical History. 7. Troia, on the Eastern stream which makes that Island not much observable, but for giving name to the Montes Troici lying near unto it; out of which were digged the Stones which made the Pyramids. 8. Cinopolis in a little Island upon the water. 9. Hermopolis, or the City of Mercury; called also Hermopolis magna, to difference it from another of that name not far from Alexandria, to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10. Antinous, now Antinus founded by Adrian the Emperour, in honour of Antinus his especial Favourite; the most Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11. Dionysus, or the City of Bacchus, situate on the Southern end of the Lake of Moeris, in the Nomus or Division called Oasis parva. 12. Clymas, upon the shores of the Golf, a Roman Garrison.

Cities of most note in the Province of Thebais, 1. Panopolis, the Panos of Antoninus, one of the greatest of this part, 2. Ptolomais, the foundation of one of the Ptolomies, and the goodliest City of this Province, succeeding unto Thebe both in power and greatness. 3. Saïet, a fair and large Town, six days Journey from Caire, going up the water; but by what name called amongst the Ancients, I do not where find. Affirmed (erroneously, I think) to be the dwelling-place of Joseph and Mary, when they fled with CHRIST our Saviour from the fury of Herod. Beautified with a goodly Temple, but now somewhat ruinous, of the foundation of Helen, the Mother of Constantine. This City much resorted to (on the strength of this Tradition only) by many aged Christian Coptites, who desire to die there. 4. Diophys, or the City of Jupiter; all of them on the banks of the River. 5. Tentyra, in a little Isle so called, made by the circlings of the Nile: The Inhabitants whereof were the only men who durst encounter the Crocodile: A Creature of a terrible name, but a cowardly nature; of which it is said by Ammianus Marcellinus, that it assaileth those which flee from it, and fleeth from those who do assault it: In that point very like the Devil, of whom it is said by the Apostle James 4. 7. that if he be resisted, he will flee from us; Or as the good old Poet hath it,

Eft Leo, si fugias; sistas, quasi Musca recedit.

*Give ground, a Lyon he will be;
Stand to it, and away flies he.*

6. Coptor, upon the head of a Trench or Water-courfe, which falleth into the Nilus, on the South of Tentyra, but on the other side of the River, in old times, a most noted Empory for Indian and Arabian wares: from whence not only the Christians of this Country are thought to have the name of Coptites; but the whole Country to be originally called Aegyptus, from At-Coptus, or the Land of Coptus.

7. Thebe the residence and foundation of that great Tyrant Busris, in compass 140 furlongs, or 17 miles and half; called also Hecatompylia, from the number of an hundred Gates, which were said to be in it. So beautified with Colosses, Temples, Palaces, the Sepulchres of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, and other Ornaments of State, that it was thought μὴ δύνασθαι ἄνθρωπον ὑποκαταλεῖν to be the Nonesuch of the world. Decayed on the removing of the Court of Memphis, it became a ruine so long since, that there was nothing left of it in the time of Juvenal; as he telleth us, saying,

Atque vetus Thebe centum juacet obruta portis.

*Old Thebe, yielding to the Fates,

8. Abydos, now called Abutick, once the Seat-Royal of Memnon, from thence called Memnonium, renowned for the Temple of Ofiris; more for the Statue of Memnon, which though made of stone, did at the rising of the Sun yield a vocal sound. 9. Elephantis, on the banks of Nile, neighboured by Cryphi and Mophi, two sharp Rocks, betwixt which the River falling down with a violent current, makes the Lesser Cataract, of which, and of the greater, we shall speak more fully in Aethiopia. The City seated in an Island of the River Nile, on the borders of Aethiopia sub Aegyptio, (as the Ancients called it) known unto Ptolomy by the name of Elephantina, but to our Ecclesiastical Writers by the name of Tubenna. Memorable in times of Heathenism for the Town and Temple of Onchis, wherein stood the Nilometerion or standing Pillars, by which they did observe the increase of the River; removed since to the Castle of Michis, two miles from Caire: in times of Christianity, for the dwellings of infinite numbers of Monks and Hermits, called from this place Tabenistae. 10. Syene, (now Asina) a little North of Elephantis; situate directly under the Tropick of Cancer, and memorable for a deep Well there digged by some Astronomers; which when the Sun entered into the Sign, was wholly enlightened with his beams, without any shadow: so perpendicularly did the body of it stand over the pit. This the last City of Egypt towards Aethiopia.

And now I should proceed, according to my Method in other places, to the Story of Egypt: but being that Libya and Cyrene, are now accepted Members of it; the fortunes whereof they have also followed in all or most of the mutations of State and Government; I shall first take a view of them as the limbs of this body, and shew you how they were united under that one Head, by which now directed.

2. MARMARICA.

LIBYA or MARMARICA, hath on the East, Egypt, properly so called; on the West Cyrene, on the North, that part of the Mediterranean Sea, which was hence called Mare Libyæum, and sometimes Parthenium; and on the South, some part of Aethiopia Superior.

It had the name of Libya, from the old Greek word λύβος signifying Black, agreeable to the complexion of the people, which is black and swarthy; λύβος, antiqua lingua Græca niger, faith a learned Writer: or possible enough from Lub, an Arabian word signifying Thirst, as futable unto the nature of the soil, which is dry and sandy, in which respect called by the Greeks, Xero-Libya, or Libya Siccæ. From hence the South-wind, blowing from these Coasts towards Greece and Italy, had the name of Lybris, and the Promontory in Sicily opposite unto it, that of Lilybeum. It was also called Marmarica, perhaps from the Marmaride, a chief people of it, though placed by Ptolomy in Cyrene; and sometimes Barca, from Barce a chief City in it; of late times Barca Marmarica, by both names united.

The Country for the most part very dry and barren, and but meanly peopled; inasmuch as Alexander passing thorough part of it towards the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, in the space of four days, saw neither Man, Beast, Bird, Tree, nor River. Covered over in most places with a thick light sand, which the winds remove up and down continually, turning Vallies into Hills, and Hills into Vallies. Found by Cambyses to his cost, who as basely esteeming of the Gods as he did of his Subjects, sent part of his Army into this Country to destroy the Temple above-mentioned: but in the passage towards that prohibited place, fifty thousand of them were overwhelmed and smothered in a storm of Sand; the rest with much ado escaping. Called therefore Xero-Libya, or Libya Siccæ, as before was noted; and Libya sitientis, thirstily Libya, (— per calidus Libyæ sitientis arenas) in that verse of Lucan.

The people, Neighbours unto Egypt and consequently, much of the same condition. Said by Herodotus (by whom they were called Adynnaclide) to be governed by the like Laws and Customs as the Egyptians were; but do differ from them in their habit. Of colour dark and black; of constitution, lean and dry, and inclining to Melancholy; angry on every little occasion, very litigious, and eager profecutors of their dues. By an old Observation servation among themselves, they abtained both from Beef and Hog-meat. So obstinate in denying their accustomed Tributes, that he who could not shew the marks of his sufferings for it, either Black or Blue, was accounted no body: And so resolved to conceal any thing disgraceful to them, that if any of them were apprehended for a Robbery, no torment could compel him to tell his name. At this time little differing in person, temper, or condition, from the Egyptians, Moors, and Arabes, intermixt amongst them.

Converted to the Faith of Christ, with, or not long after the rest of Egypt, of which then reckoned for a Province, it became part of the Patriarchate of Alexandria; whose Jurisdiction over it was confirmed by the Council of Nice: to the calling of which famous Council, this Country occasionally concurred, by bringing into the World that wretched Arius; who with his Heterodoxies and contentious Cavils, had disturbed the Church. His Heresy condemned in that famous Council; but his Person, by the Divine Justice of God, reserved to a more remarkable punishment, Being sent for by the Emperor Constantine to make a Recantation of his former Heresy, he first writ out a Copy of his own Opinions, which he had in his Bosom; and then writing out the Recantation expected from him, took Oath that he did really mean as he had written: which words the Emperor referred to the Recantation, he to the Paper in the Bosom. But God would not be so cozened, though the Emperor was. For as he passed in Triumph through the Streets of Constantinople, he drew aside into a private house of ease, where he voided his Guts in the Draught, and sent his Soul as an Harbinger to the Devil, to make room for his Body.

Not more infamous for the Birth of this Miscreant, who denied the Divinity of Christ; then famous for the Birth of one of the Sibyls, hence surnamed Libyca, by whom the same had been fore-shewn. Which Sibyls seem to have taken denomination from Διὸς βίβας, i. e. Jovis consiliorum conficiæ. They were in number Ten, viz. 1. Persica, 2. Libyca, 3. Delphica, 4. Cumea, 5. Samia, 6. Hellepontica, 7. Tiburina, 8. Albunea, 9. Erythraea, and 10. Cumana; which last is affirmed to have written the nine Books of Sibyls. They were all presented by an old Woman to Tarquinius Superbus; but he not willing to pay so great a sum of Money as was demanded, denied them; whereupon the old Woman burnt three of them, requiring as much money for the other six, as for all which being denied, the also burnt another three, asking as much for the three remaining, as for the rest; which Superbus amazed gave, and the old Trot vanished. These Books contained manifested tokens of the Kingdom of Christ, his Name, his Birth and Death. They were burned by the Arch-Traitor Stilico. So that those Prophecies of theirs, which are now extant, are for the most part only such as had been extracted out of other Writings, where their Authority had been quoted. Concerning which, though Cassaubon, and some other of our great Philologers, conceive them to be pie fraudes; composed of purpose by the Fathers of the Primitive Times, to win credit to the Faith of CHRIST: yet dare I not so far disparage those most godly Men, as to believe they would support so strong an Edifice with so weak a Prop; or borrow help from Falshood to evict a Truth. Or if they durst have been so impudently venturesome, how easie had it been for their learned Adversaries, Porphyry, Julian, and the rest of more eminent note, to have detected the Imposture, and silenced the Christian Advocates with reproach and scorn? But of this enough here, more at large elsewhere.

Rivers of Note I find not any. This well, if in a Country so full of Sands, there be any at all: some Lakes, I meet with in my Authors; the principal of which, 1. Lacus cur, 2. Lacus Lacomedis, now Linxamo, 3. Cleartus; sufficient to preserve their few Cartel from the taint of thirst. The Mountains of most note, 1. those called Anagambri, 2. and that named Azar; this last extended West and East in a straight line, from the 51 degree of Longitude, to the 53. 3. Aliphus, 4. Ogdomus, 5. Imodes, 6. Alpis; not much observable, but that they serve for Land-Mark to discover the Country.

Towns of note there are none now in it. Of most esteem in former times, 1. Barrabus, by some called Menelau, an Haven-Town, 2. Phibia, and 3. Anesiphrya two Port-Town also. 4. Tetrabyrgia, so called from its four Towers, the Antipyrgus of Ptolomy. 5. Mesuchis, more within the Land, 6. Mazacila, another midland Town. 7. Chereola, mentioned amongst the chief Cities of this Tract, by Ammianus. 8. Paratonium, now Porto-rassa, which with Pelusium are by Florus called the two Horns of Egypt; which whosoever held fast, would be sure to master it. By some old Writers it had formerly been called Ammonia, as we read in Stephanus and Strabo; from the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, seated very near it. So anciently honoured with an Oracle, (if that were any honour to it) that Semiramis is said to have come hither to enquire of her death; Pessus and Hercules, touching their adventures. The like, but not long after, was done by Alexander the Great: but the Oracle by that time had learnt to flatter, and puffed him up with a proud conceit of being the Son of that God whom he came to worship. The Temple seated in the middle of a vast sandy Desert, environed with a pleasant and delightful Grove, about six miles or more in circuit; watered with wholesome Springs, refreshed with a temperate Air, and shaded with fruit-bearing Trees, which carried in their leaves a perpetual Spring. Fortified with a Triple-Wall, within the first whereof was a Royal Palace of the Kings, within the second a Seraglio for his Women, in the third Lodgings for the Officers of Court; The Oracle fitly placed (so the Priests would have it) near the Seraglio of the Ladies; before the entrance a fair Fountain, wherein the Oblations were first washed, then offered. A place of great repute in sacred and civil estimate; all the adjoining Country taking hence the name of Ammoniaea, and by that name reckoned amongst the Provinces of the Patriarchate of Alexandria. 9. Antiphra, on the East border of it towards Alexandria. 10. Barce, called afterwards Ptolomais, by the name of one of the Ptolomies, by whom repaired and beautified. Of such account, that from hence the whole Country had the name of Barca, and the Inhabitants of Barcei, (— Laseque firentes Barcei) as in that of Virgil.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Libyarchæ and Bassachite, in the North; the Ogdoni, Buzes, and Adymachide, in the South; the Gomate and Prosadite, in the midland parts; the Libyegyptii, bordering nearest unto Egypt, with the people whereof so intermingled, as to make up betwixt them but one name and Nation. Others there were of less, or as little note, but all descended properly of Naphusim, the Son of Misraim; from whom the Name of Neptune, originally a Libyan Deity, seems to be derived: yet so that Lebabin his Brother must come in for a share; the Founder, as it is conceived, of the Libyegyptii before mentioned. Being then of the same original with those of Egypt, they followed the same fortunes also, till the times of the Ptolomies; by whom sometimes given for portion, with the title of a Kingdom, to their younger Children. By the last will and Testament of Apion, the last King hereof, a Bastard-Son of Ptolomy surnamed Euergetes, the seventh King of that House; bequeathed unto the Senate and People of Rome. By whom first first suffered to live under them, as a Free-State, till the Conquest of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and so accordingly described by Ptolemy; where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammonica, occur amongst the Nomi, or Divisions of it. Afterwards made a distinct Province of that Diocesis, and governed by a Lord-President, under the Prefectus Augustalis, or Supreme Commander for the Emperours.

3. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the East, with Marmarica; on the West, with Africa propria, or the Realm of Tunis; and some part of the Mediterranean, and the Greater Syria; on the North, with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South, with Libya Inferior, or the Desert of Libya.

It took this name from Cyrene, the chief City of it, from whence sometimes also called Cyrenaica; by Pliny and some other Roman Writers it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz. 1. Cyrene, 2. Ptolemais, 3. Arsinoe, 4. Darnice, 5. Berenice; by Ammianus for the same reason Libya Pentapolis, the name of Libya extending over many of these Roman Provinces. And finally, at the present, it passeth with that last described by the name of Barca, or Barca Marmarica: the whole extent whereof in length from the Greater Syria unto Egypt, is no less than 1300 miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Country in the South parts desolate and barren, stored with few Towns, and not many Villages; the people living up and down in scattered houses, and at such a distance, as if it were in so many Islands. Deditute not of Springs and Rivers only, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping; if any fell, it was dried up presently by the Sands. But within fifteen miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitful and well inhabited.

The people in old times were said to have been utterly ignorant of buying and selling, of fraud and stealing, not knowing, or not caring for the Use of Money; content with little, nor superfluous in their Cloths or Buildings; their houses for the most part (except only in their greater Cities) made of Oiler-Twigs. Much altered in the first part of their Character, since the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Thieving Nation, given wholly to Robbery and Spoil. So lazy, that they will not Manure or Till their Land, but provide themselves with Corn from Sicily; laying their Children to pawn for it, till by their Thieving they can raise a sufficient sum to discharge the Debt.

One only River I find in it, but of fame enough to serve for many; By Ptolemy called Lutbon, by Pliny Lebon, from the Poets Lebe. Swallowed by the Earth not far from its first original, it riseth up again about Berenice; fained therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulness in all them that drink of it; it being the condition of the dead to remember nothing. Thence the occasion of the fancy. Some Lakes I find also in it, whereof one occasioned by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the Land (where indeed more necessary) near Paliurus. With Mountains better stored (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, 1. Those called Herculis Arene, the Sands of Hercules, thwarting the Country East and West, 2. Bucolicus, on the South of those; and 3. Volpius, a long ridge of Hills, bordering upon Africa Propria.

Cities of most note in it, 1. Apollonia, in the East parts near the Promontory called Zephyrium, in the Confinces of Libya, or Marmarica. 2. Cyrene, in the West of that; once of such power, that it contended with Carthage for some preheuncencies: Then the chief Lady of this Tract, which it gave this name to. The birth-place of Eratostratus the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jews compelled to carry our Saviours Cross. 3. Ptolemais, betwixt Cyrene and Arsinoe; built or repaired by Ptolemy Philadelphus; the Episcopal City of Synesis, a learned and religious Bishop of the Primitive times, as appears by his Epistles extant. 4. Arsinoe, on the East-side of the River Lutbon; so called in honour of Arsinoe, the Sister of Philadelphus, and Wife of Magus, once King of this Country. 5. Berenice, on the Western Bank of the said River, so called from Berenice the Mother, or (another of the same nature) the Daughter of Magus: The furthest Town of all this Country, bordering on the Promontory called Boreum, and the Greater Syria. This last a Quick-sand very dangerous to Mariners, in compass 635 miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6. Paliurus, more within the Land, but on the borders of Libya or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7. Aptungis, now Lungisari, by Ptolemy called Aptuchis Fanum. 1. Herculis Turris, the Tower of Hercules near the Greater Syria; erected in the honour of Hercules, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing the Orchards of the Hesperides of their golden Apples. Those Hesperides said to be Aegle, Arethusa, and Hesperetibus, the three Daughters of Atlas: their Orchard placed by Ptolemy betwixt this Tower and Paliurus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantic Islands; by Virgil, in Mauritania Tingitana; by Pliny, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and possibly in all alike. 9. Zemithus. 10. Acabis in the mid-lands; all worn out of memory. 11. Fessan, of greatest name now, though scarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Arabe on the East, the Barcite near the Greater Syria, the Macrae and Leganici near the Mountains of Hercules; all probably descended from Naphthumim the Son of Mizraim, of whom there still remain some foot-steps in Aptuchis Fanum, the Fane or Temple of Aptuchus. This Aptuchus, by some mistakingly called Antuchus, and by the Grecians said to be the Son of Cyrene, and the Brother of Aristem: who being sent out to seek their Fortunes, Aristem fell into the Isle named Ceas; and Aptuchus, or Antuchus, into Libya, both by them first planted. Nephtune, the Deity of this Country, by the Egyptians called Neptunim, seems to come from Naphthumim; most highly worshipped by this People, because he first taught them the Art of training Horses to the Coach or Chariot; in which the Cyrenians after grew so expert, that they could drive their Chariot-wheels in a round, or circle, and always keep their Chariot-wheels in the self-same tract. Of no great power, till Batus a noble Spartan, landing in this Country, had built the City of Cyrene; and founded it in so good a course of Life and Discipline, that in short time it came to have Dominion over the most part of this Country; and to contend with Carthage about their Territories. Warred on by Apries King of Egypt, they sued unto the Greeks for aid, and by their assistance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themselves, they craved aid of Ptolemy the first of that Race, by whom they were finally subdued. Left by him at his death to Magus, a Son of his last Wife by a former Husband, whom he had married to Arsinoe, one of his Daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the marriage of Berenice, the Daughter and Heir of Magus, with the Son of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Alienated from which Crown again, for the preposterous offence of the younger Princes; and in the end given by one of the Ptolemies, the last King hereof, to the people of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Augustus Caesar, by whom united in one Government with the Isle of Crete: but but made a Province of it self by the following Emperours, never since separated from the fortune and affairs of Egypt, to which now we hasten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the question in this point, betwixt them and the Scythians, being not easily decided. Whether it were so ancient, as the Egyptians say, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, that they had the memory and story of 13000 years; and a succession of 330 Kings in the time of Amasis the second, who was contemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if understood of Solar years, measured by the course of the Sun, must not be allowed of; because it maketh them many thousand years older than the Creation: but if of Lunar, which is most agreeable unto the account of the Egyptians, who reckoned their years by months; it will amount unto no more than to 1000, or 1100 years, and so fall answerably to the times following after the Flood. But for their Kings, 330 in their reckonings, and those of 24 or 25 several Dynasties, the matter is not so soon made up. For either those Kings, must not be all Kings or supreme Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their several Regents or Vice-regents, armed with Regal power; those Dynasties not the successions of so many Regal Families, but of their Substitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live successively under one Supream: or else we must needs look on Egypt as distracted in those times, into several Kingdoms, amongst the Princes of those Dynasties before remembered; or finally, we must look for some of those Kings and Princes before the Flood. By either of these ways, the business may be well agreed. For if that most of them were but the names of several Regents, (as probable enough it is) there might be many such in the Reign of one King; according to the King's fancy, the merit of particular persons, or the necessities of State: Changes of great Officers, especially if grown too great, are not new nor strange. If they were all Kings, or Supreme Rulers, (as it is also probable) we find not any thing of moment to persuade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their several parts (as in other Countreys in those times) till the greater had devoured the less. Or if they were the names of such sovereign Princes, as had the sole command of Egypt before the Flood, (as some think they were) they might amount in all to so great a number, and so many Dynasties; the iniquity of those times, the ambition of great persons, and consequently the short lives of the Kings being duly pondered. That Egypt, and most part of the World, was peopled before the Flood, hath been already proved in our General Preface: If peopled, there no question under some form of Government: the names of which Governours (call them Kings or Rulers, or what else you please) might be preserved in Egypt on Pillars of Brass or Stone; or otherwise transmitted by tradition unto Cham the Father of Misraim, by whom this Country was first planted after the Confusion of Babel. But that old stock of Kings and People being destroyed in the general Deluge, the Children of Mizraim succeeded next in their desolate dwellings: yet so, that the posterity of Chus and Lehabim, two others of the Sons of Cham, had their shares therein. From the first of which descended the Inhabitants of those parts of Egypt, which lay along the shores of the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: in which respect, not only one of the Nomi, or divisions bordering on the Isthmus, had the name of Arabia: but the people dwelling on those shores were called Arabes, divided into the Arabes Azarei, and Arabes Adeli. And from the other came that mixture of Nations, called Liby-Egyptii, or Libyanis and Egyptians intermixt together, inhabiting in Maraotica, and the Western parts. But though these people were derived from several Ancestors, they made one Nation in the total: subject to Mizraim as their Chief, and after his decease, unto his Successors in the Kingdom of Egypt. Concerning whom we may observe, that in Cham, our greatest Antiquaries find the name of Jupiter Hammon: Misraim they guess to be Osiris, the great God of Egypt. To him succeeded Typhon, not by right of blood, but by Usurpation; who dispossessed by Lehabim, the brother of Mizraim (whom the Greeks call Hercules Egyptius) the Kingdom was restored to Orus, the Son of Osiris. During the time of these few Princes, happened all those things which are recorded in the Scriptures concerning Egypt: from the first going down of Abraham in the time of Osiris, to the advancement of Joseph in the Reign of Orus: in which there passed the 15, 16, and 17. Dynasties of Regal Vice-Roys; Lieutenants only, as I take it, to those mighty Princes. The Kings themselves, called generally by the name of Pharaoh, though they had all their proper and peculiar names: as afterwards their Successors here had the name of Ptolemy, and the Roman Emperours, that of Cesar. Few of them famous in the stories of other Nations, or of renown for their Achievements and Exploits abroad, contenting themselves with the Revenues of their own Dominions, and spending the surpluse thereof in building Cities, draining the Marshes of the Nile, or other works of Ostentation and Magnificence. Only Sesostris is of fame for his undertakings; though when he had cast up his account, he got nothing by them: of whom it is reported, that being a King of great wealth and puissance, he had brought under subjection all his neighbouring Princes, whom he compelled in turns to draw his Chariot. It hapned that one of these unfortunate Princes cast his eye many times on the Coach-wheel: and being by Sesostris demanded the cause of his so doing, he replied; That the falling of that Spoke lowest, which but just before was the highest in the wheel, put him in mind of the instability of Fortune. The King deeply weighing the Parable, would never after be so drawn in his Chariot. He was also the first that encountered the Scythians in Battel; having already in conceit conquered them, before he led his Army against them. The Scythians much marvelled, that a King of such great Revenues would wage war against a Nation so poor, with whom the fight would be doubtful, the Victory unprofitable; but to be vanquished a perpetual infamy and disgrace. For their parts they resolved to meet him as an Enemy, whose overthrow would enrich them. When the Armies came to joyn, the Egyptians were discomfited, and pursued even to their own doors by the Enemy. But the Scythians could not enter the Country, because of the Fens, with whose passage they were unacquainted; and so they returned. Which said, without troubling our selves with their many Dynasties, we will lay down the Succession of their Kings, as well as we can; the disagreement of Historians and Chronologers, touching this Succession, being irreconcilable.

The PHARAOHS, or KINGS of EGYPT of Egyptian Race.

- A. M.
- 1 Mizraim, the Son of Cham, by the Grecians called Osiris: in whose time Abraham went into Egypt.
- 2 Typhon, an Usurper.
- 3 Orus, the Son of Osiris, restored unto the Kingdom by his Uncle Lebamus; the Advancer of Jeseph.
- 2207 4 Amasis, Themosis, or Amos, in whose time Jacob went down into Egypt. 25.
- 2233 5 Cheborn. 12.
- 2245 6 Amenophis, or Amenophthis. 21.
- 2266 7 Amasis, the Sifter of Amenophthis. 22.
- 2288 8 Mephres. 12.
- 2300 9 Mepharmubefis. 25.
- 2325 10 Thamus, or Thuthmosis. 10.
- 2335 11 Amenophthis II. supposed to be Memnon and the Vocal Statue. 31.
- 2366 12 Orus II. the Buffis of the Grecians, a bloody Tyrant; who commanded the male-children of Israel to be slain. 37.
- 2403 13 Acencheres, by some called Thermutis, the Daughter of Amenophthis the second, and afterwards the Wife of Orus; who preferred Moser, and furnished her Husband. 13.
- 2416 14 Raibefis, the Son of Orus. 6.
- 2422 15 Acencheres II. 12.
- 2449 16 Cenchres, by some called Arenasis; Bocchoris, by others; drowned in the Red-Sea, with his Horses and Chariots. 16.
- 2453 17 Acherris. 8.
- 2462 18 Cherres. 10.
- 2472 19 Armais, by the Grecians called Danais, whose 50 Daughters being married to the 50 Sons of his Brother Egyptus, murdered their Husbands; for which cause Danais, being forced out of Egypt, passed into Greece, where attaining to the Kingdom of Argos, he gave unto the Grecians the name of Danai.
- 2575 20 Ramsete, surnamed Egyptus, the Brother of Danais.
- 2580 21 Amenophthis III. 10.
- 2590 22 Seshor, or Sefothis. 55.
- 2645 23 Rhapsaces, or Ranser. 66.
- 2711 24 Amenophthis IV. 40.
- 2751 25 Ramsete II. 26.
- 2777 26 Thamus 7. After whose death succeeded a Race of twelve Kings, called the Diophtian, who held the Kingdom for the space of 177 years. Their Names we find not, but that one of the latest of them, whose Daughter Solomon married, was called Vaphris; and perhaps Ogdane, who removed the Royal Seat from Thebes to Memphis, might be another, and the eighth, as his name in portech.
- 2961 39 Smendes, the Sifac of the Scriptures, who made War upon Rehoboam the Son of Solomon; conceived to be the Sesytis of Herodotus, and others of the ancient Writers, of whom sufficiently before.
- 2987 40 Pseucenes, conceived to be the Cheops of Herodotus, Founder of the vast Pyramid before described. 41.
- A. M.
- 3028 41 Nephher-Cherres. 4.
- 3032 42 Amenophthis V. 9.
- 3041 43 Osfobon, the Asychieis of Herodotus.
- 3047 44 Psamucbor, 9.
- 3056 45 Pseucenes II. 14.
- 3070 46 Sifonchis. 21.
- 3091 47 Usurthos. 15.
- 3106 48 Takelotus. 13.
- 3119 49 Patubastis. 40.
- 3159 50 Oferebon, the second Hercules, Egyptus, as some will have it, 8.
- 3167 51 Psammit, 15.
- 3185 52 Bocchoris, called by the name of So, 2 Kings 17. 4. taken and burnt by Sabacon the King of Aethiopia, 44.
- 3229 53 Sabacon King of Aethiopia, 8.
- 3238 54 Sabacon Son of Sabacon, 14.
- 3252 55 Tarason, falsely supposed to be the Zerah of the Scriptures, 10.
- 3270 56 Stephinates. 7.
- 3277 57 Niclupsis, after whose death followed an Aristocracy of 12 Princes, who having governed 15 years, were divested of their Authority by one of their own number, called
- 3288 58 Psammiticus, who first made the Grecians acquainted with Egypt, whom he invited to his aid against the Syrians: the Founder of the famous Labyrinth before mentioned, and no less memorable for his prudent preventing of the Scythians from breaking into his Country, of which we spake before, when we were in Tartaria, 54.
- 3335 59 Necho, who slew Jesiah at the battel of Megiddo, 25.
- 3360 60 Psammit II. 44.
- 3366 61 Apries, called Hephra, Jer 44. subdued by Nebuchadnezzar, and deposed by Amasis, 25.
- 3391 62 Amasis II. 44.
- 3435 63 Psammitas or Psammiticus II. a King of six months onely; vanquished by Cambyses the second Monarch of Persia, who united Egypt to that Empire, under which it continued till the time of Darius the sixth King of the Medes and Persians: in the 2d. year of whose Reign it revolted from him, and became a Kingdom of it self, as in former times.
- 3555 64 Amyrteus, the first King after the Revolt, 6.
- 3561 65 Nephtheris. 6.
- 3567 66 Achoris. 12.
- 3579 67 Psammit III. 1.
- 3580 68 Nephtheris II. a King of two months onely, 69. Neftanebos, 18.
- 3598 70 Teos or Tachos, deposed by
- 36000 71 Neftanebos II. the last King of the natural Egyptian Race, that ever governed Egypt by the name of a King. For in the 18th. of the Reign of this King, Egypt was again recovered by the valour of Ochus, the eighth Emperour of Persia. And when Alexander had overthrown Darius, he came, and without blows won this fertile Kingdom; which yielded him him during his life the yearly value of 6000 Talents. After his death this Kingdom fell to the share of Ptolomus the Son of Lagus, from whom all the subsequent Kings of Egypt were called Ptolomies.

The Second DYNASTY, or the PTOLOMEAN Kings of Egypt.

- A. M.
- 3461 1 Ptolomy, one of Alexander's Captains, reputed the Son of Lagus; but supposed to be the Son of Philip of Macedon, half-brother to Alexander, 40.
- 3681 2 Ptol. Philadelphus, who filled the Library of Alexandria with 700000 Volumes, and caused the 72 Interpreters to translate the Bible.
- 3717 3 Ptol. Evergetes the Son of Philadelphus, vanquished Seleucus Callinicus King of Syria, and probably had subdued the Kingdom, if not called back by Domestick dissensions, 26.
- 3743 4 Ptol. Philopater, a cruel, voluptuous and incestuous Prince; cruelly slew Cleomenes the last King of Sparta, who had fled to his Father for relief in the time of his exile, 17.
- 3760 5 Ptol. Epiphanes, at the age of five years succeeded his Father; protected by the Romans against Antiochus the Great of Syria, who had an aim upon his Kingdom, 28.
- 3784 6 Ptol. Philometor, the Son of Epiphanes, by Cleopatra the Daughter of Antiochus; protected in his nonage by the Romans also: caused himself to be Crowned King of Syria, but again relinquished it, 35.
- 3829 7 Ptol. Evergetes II. for his deformity called Physcon, the Brother of Ptol. Philometor, a wicked Prince, and one that spent the greatest part of his Reign in a cauleless war against Cleopatra, his Wife and Sister, 29.
- 3858 8 Ptol. Latbargus reigned 16 years with Cleopatra his Mother, by whom dispossessed of his Estate for the space of ten years; after her death was sole Lord of Egypt. His Brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Associate, in the time of his deprivation, and passing in the account of the Kings of Egypt.
- 3892 9 Ptol. Auletes, the Son of Latbargus, surnamed also Dionysius, whose Brother being settled by him in the Isle of Cyprus, was most unjustly stripped of it by the power of the Romans: and he himself outed of Egypt by his own Subjects, but restored by the aid and love of Pompey.
- 3922 10 Ptol. Dionysius, called also Junior, or the younger, together with Cleopatra his Wife and Sister, succeeded Auletes in the Throne, which they held together by the space of three years. In the last of which, Pompey was barbarously slain on the shores of Egypt, by the command of Achillas the young Kings Governour; and the young King himself unfortunately slain in the Alexandrian
- A. M.
- 3925 11 Cleopatra, the Wife and Sister of Dionysius, restored to the Crown of Egypt by the bounty of Cesar, of whom exceedingly beloved for her wit and beauty. After which she governed Egypt 19 years in her own sole right, with great pomp and splendor: when being imbarqued in the bed and fortunes of Marc Anthony, she killed her self not long after his fatal Overthrow at the Battel of Adium, that might not be led in triumph through Rome.
- These Ptolomean Princes of Egypt, were for the most part in wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns victorious, and vanquished; neither Prince having cause to boast of his bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whose live and love with Marcus Antonius I will not now relate, this Country fell to the share of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governour hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome; no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a maxim of State, not to suffer men of great Houses to come into that Country, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt. For besides the natural situation of the place, very defensible; and besides the abundance of Money with which it was stored; this Country alone furnished the City of Rome with Corn, for four Months yearly. Whence Vespasian being chosen Emperour by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his concurrent Vitellius, halted hither: to this end only, that detaining the ordinary provision of Victuals, he might by famine compel the City of Rome to stand at his devotion: Urbs in quoque externa opibus indigam fame urget, as the Historian hath observed. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperours sole Peculiar: afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Dioecesis of it self, subordinate to the Praefectus Praetorio Orientis. In the division of the Empire allotted to the Constantinopolitans, whose Government being thought to be insupportable by this wanton people, they called in the Saracens, by whom the Greek Garrisons were cast out, and the Country made subject to Haumar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards weary of them also, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards we shall meet with two Caliphs at a time; the one residing at Cair in Egypt, to whom the Saracens or *Moor*s of Spain and Africa did submit themselves: the other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the rest, at least as to the Supreme Title, and some chief Prerogatives; though the main power was cantoned and disposed of among their Sultans.

The Third DYNASTY, or the CALIPHS of EGYPT.

|      |      | 15 Etachar.   |
|      |      | 16 Elphaiz.   |

17 Etzar Ledin Illahi, the Son of Elphaiz, the last Caliph, or King of Egypt, of the race of Phatime: the Turks succeeding after his death in this opulent Kingdom. Concerning which we are to know, that Elphaiz, the Father of Etzar, being overpowered by Almericus King of Hierusalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkish Sultan of Damascus; which he received under the conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachob, a right valiant and stout Commander: who taking his advantages, not only cleared the Countrey of Almericus, but got the whole Kingdom to himself, dashing out the brains of Elphaiz with his Horseman's Mace. And though Etzar his Son assumed for a while the Title of Caliph; yet the destruction of himself, and the whole Phatimean Family rooted out by Sarracon, soon put an end to that Claim, and left the Kingdom in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Sultans.

The Fourth DYNASTY, or the Race of the TURKISH KINGS or CALIPHS of EGYPT.

- 1163 1 Afereddin, surnamed Shirachob, called Sarracon, by the Christian Writers; the first of the Turks which reigned in Egypt of the Noble Family of Aimb.
- 1186 2 Zeli-heddin, called Saladine by the Christian Writers; the Son (or as some say, the Nephew) of Sarracon, or Shirachob; confirmed in his Estate by the Caliph of Bagdet, under whose jurisdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schismatics. He obtained also the Kingdom of Damascus, conquered Mesopotamia and Palestine; and in the year 1190, regained the City of Hierusalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to succeeding Ages, nor to glorify him in the Kingdom of Heaven, but the saving knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.
- 1199 3 Elaxiz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Egypt; which he exchanged afterwards with his Brother Eladel for the Kingdom of Damascus.
- 4 Eladel, or El-Abtzel, by the Christian Writers called Meledine, succeeded upon this exchange in the Kingdom of Egypt; and overcame the Christians, without the loss of a man, at the siege of Caïre, by letting loose the Sluces of Nilus, which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleasure.
- 1210 5 Elchamul.
- 1237 6 Melech Affalab, by the Christian Writers called Melechala, the Son of Elchamul, who overcame Lewis the 9th. of France: and going with that King towards Damietta, was slain by the Soldiers of his Guard, called Mamalucks.

- 1242 7 Elmuran, the Son of Melech Affalab, succeeded for a time in his Fathers Throne. But the Mamalucks being resolved to obtain the Kingdom for themselves, enforced him to flee to a Tower of Wood, which they set on fire; the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran close by it) was there drowned, and the Mamalucks settled in the Kingdom, An. 1245.

These Mamalucks were the Off-spring of a People on the banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circassians: whom Melechala either bought of their Parents, or (at the second hand) of the Tartars, then newly Masters of those Countreys, to supply the want of valour in the idle and effeminate people of Egypt, and out of them selected a choice Band of men, for the Guard of his Person. Knowing their strength, and finding their opportunity, they treacherously slew Melechala their Lord and Master; appointing one Azeddin Ihek, a Turcoman by Nation, and therefore by most Christian Writers called Tarquimeneus, (one of their own number) a man of great spirit and valour, to succeed in the Throne. Unwilling to re-give the Supreme Authority into the hands of the Egyptians; and not permitting their own sons to enjoy the name and privilege of Circassian slaves, whom they yearly certain numbers of Circassian slaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be instructed in the Egyptian Language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for Employment, they were taught the Discipline of War, and by degrees advanced into the highest Offices of Power and Trust, as now the Janizaries are in the Turkish Empire: in choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turks were preceded by those of Egypt, so it is possible enough that the Janizaries may make as great a Change in the Turkish Empire, as the Mamalucks did in the Egyptians. So unsafe a thing it is for a Prince to commit the sole guard of his person, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of such, whom not the fence of a natural Duty, but the hopes of Profit or Preferment may make useful to him. For thus we find, that Constantine, a King of the Britains, was murdered by his Guard of Piers: most of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of those whom they intrusted, either with the guard of their Persons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no man can be ignorant, how many times the Princes and Estates of Italy have been brought into the extreme dangers, by trusting too much to the honesty of mercenary Souldiers and Commanders. Take we for instance the proceedings of Giacomio Picenino, who with his Followers first took pay of Ferdinand the first of Naples; left him, to fight for his vowed Enemy, John Duke of Calabria, the Son of Rene Duke of Anjou; whom he also forsook in his greatest need. The like we find of Francisco Sforza, first entertained by the Duke of Milan, from whom he revolted to the Florentines, from them to the Venetians; and being again received into the Pay of the State of Milan, made use of their own Army to subdue that City. Nor can I speak better of the Switzers, or their dealing in this kind with the French Kings, the Sforzas, Dukes of Milan, and with whom not, (to say the truth) that ever trusted or employed them.

Now as it is unsafe for a Prince to commit the custody of his Person, or the defence of his Estates to the Faith of Foreigners; so is it dangerous to him to call in such Aids, and to commit his Fortunes either wholly, or principally, unto their Fidelity. A moderate supply of Men, Money, or Munition, from a confederate King, is, I confess, in most cases convenient, in some necessary: as well to save their Natives from the Sword, as to try a Friend, and interest an Ally in the same cause. But to invite so great a number of Succours, as from Helpers may become Masters, and oppress the people whom they came to defend; is that Rock on which many Realms have suffered shipwreck, and which a good Pilot of the State should with all care avoid. For as in the sickness of the body natural, it is hurtful to a man's health and life to take more Physick, than it may (after the effect thereof be wrought) either digest, or put out again; so in the body Politick, it is a perillous matter to receive more succours, than what (after they have done the deed they were sent for) we may either with convenience reward and settle with us, or at liberty expel. Of all surfeits, this of Foreign supplies is most incurable; and Ne quid nimis, if in nothing else true, is in this case Oracle. There is no Kingdom (I am verily persuaded) under the Sun, which hath not been by this means conquered; no Common-wealth, which hath not been by this means ruined. To relate all examples, were infinite and tedious; to infer some, pleasing to the Reader; and to illustrate the point, not unnecessary. To begin with former times, Philip of Macedon, called into Greece to assist the Thebans against the Phocians, brought all that Countrey, in a manner, under his command. The Romans, by aiding the Sicilians against the Carthaginians, possessed themselves of that flourishing Island; by assisting the Hædus against the Sequani, mastered Gallia; by succouring Androgæus against Cassibelan, seized on Britain; by siding with the Ætolians against Perses, united to their Empire all the Kingdom of Macedon; and by the same course what not? In after-ages, the Britains called in the Saxons, and were by them thrust out of all; the Irish called in the English, by whom they were in process of time totally subdued; and the Indians called in the Mongul-Tartars, who now Lord it over them. These foreign Supplies are invited, or let into a Countrey, commonly in four cases. First, when some one man upon discontent, or desire of revenge, openeth them a way into a Countrey: upon which motives, Narfes invited the Lombards into Italy; and Count Julian brought the Moors into Spain; the one to be revenged on the Emperors Sophis, who had despitiously reviled him; the other to revenge himself on King Roderick, who ravished his Daughter. Secondly, when a weaker Faction makes a way for them, to maintain their cause against a stronger. On which ground, the Duke of Burgundy being oppressed by the faction of Orleans, made way for Henry the fifth to pass into France; and the Leaguers drew the Spaniards in, to hold up their declining cause against Henry the 4th. Thirdly, when an ambitious Prince makes use of a foreign power, to usurp upon the rights of another man. And for that cause Ludowick Sforza persuaded Charles the 8th. to undertake the Conquest of the Realm of Naples; that by the countenance of his Arms, he might appropriate to himself the Dukedom of Millain. Fourthly, when a King overburthened by a foreign or domestic Force, which he is not able to resist, requires the help of a foreign Friend: in which case, Plus à medco quàm à morbo mali, the Physick proves many times worse than the Disease. For thus the Kings of Naples of the house of Aragon, being in danger of the French, drew in the Aids of Ferdinand the Catholique, the Cousin-German once removed of the King then being; and the Caliphs of Egypt, not able to withstand the Forces of Almericus, craved aid of the Turks: by which means, both those Kingdoms were made a prey to their foreign friends, and by avoiding Scylla, fled into Charybdis. Nay, many times it so happeneth, that these foreign Succours join in design with those against whom they were called, and divide the conquered State between them. And so we find, that the Burgundians being called by Stilico into Gaul, to prevent the breaking of the Franks, or French, joined with them in a common League against the Romans, whom they dispossessed at last of all that Countrey. Only amongst so many examples to this purpose, we find the Low-Countrey-men to have prospered by these foreign aids; who by the assistance of the English, ransomed themselves from that yoke of bondage which was intended to be put upon them by the King of Spain. This I acknowledge to be true, and look upon it as a great argument of the integrity and honesty of the English Nation; although it be as true withal, that the English never had such an Army there, as to be able to subdue them. But give me such another instance, I will quit the cause: for the same Low-Countrey-men found it otherwise with the Duke of Anjou, Brother to Henry the 3d. of France, whom they created Duke of Brabant, and their Governour-General; permitting him to bring in as many of the French, as either his Authority, or their own moneys were able to raise: who was no sooner settled in that command, but he made it his chief business to seize upon their strongest Holds, and to be a more absolute Prince amongst them, than ever the Spaniards or Burgundians had been before. So that I think I may conclude, that these foreign Succours are the last to be tried, and the least to be trusted, of any remedies in State. But it's now more than time to return to the Mamalucks; and in them to

The Fifth DYNASTY of the EGYPTIAN KINGS, or the Race of the MAMALUCKS.

- A. Ch.
1255 1 Tierquimeneus, who being promoted to the Kingdom, released King Lewis, whom Melechala his Predecessour had taken Prisoner, but performed not half the conditions agreed upon.
- 2 Clothes (by some called Elmutabaz) taking advantage of the Miseries of the Turks, then distressed by the Tartars; seized on the greatest part of Syria and Palestine.
- 1260 3 Bandocader perfected the begun Conquests of Clothes, and took from the Christians the strong City of Antioch; carrying on his Armies as far as Armenia, where he did much spoil.
- 4 Melechsait, or Melechsar, restored the power of the Mamaluks in Syria and Palestine; where it had been much impaired by Edward the Son of Henry the 3d. of England, and Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, &c.
- 1286 5 Elpis, or Alphix, recovered from the dissenting Christians the strong Cities of Triopolis, Berytus, Tyre, and Sidon; all which he raised to the ground, that they might not be any more serviceable to the affairs of the Christians.
- 1291 6 Araphus, or Eustrephus, by birth a German, released Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, after he had been Prisoner 26 years. He rooted the Christians out of Syria, took Palomais the last Town they there held: and so raised it; that he made it fit to be ploughed.
- 7 Melechsar, when he was Lieutenant to Araphus, was discomfited by Cassanes, a great Prince of the Tartars, with the loss of 40000 Egyptians: but Cassanes being departed, he recovered again all Syria, and destroyed Hiernsalem; for which Service he was afterward made Sultan of Egypt.
- 8 Melehsadel, who I suppose to be that Sultan that governed Egypt when Tamberlane with unresistible violence conquered it; but of this I am not certain: neither can I meet with any constant and continued series (which I dare rely on) of his Successors in this Kingdom, till I come to
- 9 Melehsalla, or Melehsar, who in the year 1423, subdued the Isle of Cyprus, and made the Kings thereof to be from thenceforth Tributaries to the Mamaluks Sultans.
- 1465 10 Cathbeyus, who much reformed the State of Egypt, and was a professed Enemy of Bajazet 2d. the 8th. King of the Ottomans.
- 1498 11 Mahomet the Son of Cathbeyus, deposed by the Mamaluks, for fear the Kingdom might by him be made hereditary; it being against their usual custom, that the Son should succeed his Father, in the name and privileges of a Mamaluks.
- 1499 12 Campsin Charsifus, succeeded on the deposing of Mahomet.

- 13 Zanballat, who dethroned Campsin, and not long after was deposed by
- 1500 14 Tonombeus; ousted of his Estate by the joyn consent of the Mamaluks, so to make way for Campsin Gaurus.
- 1501 15 Campsin II. surnamed Gaurus, reformed the disordered and factious Estate both of Court and Countrey; and for the space of 16 years governed very prosperously. But siding at the last with Hysmael the Perfian Sophy, against Selimus the first of that name the 3d. Emperour, and tenth King of the Ottoman Family; he drew his Kingdom into a War, in which his Armies were overthrown, and himself slain in battel.
- 1517 16 Tonombeus II. succeeded Campsin Gaurus, both in his Kingdom and misfortunes: vanquished in his first year by the said Selimus the first, An. 1517. Who having conquered this rich Kingdom, was used to say, That he had gotten a Farm to feed his Gemoians, or young Souldiers. So Egypt became a Province of the Turkish Empire, as it still continueth.

What the Revenues of it were in the time of the Pharaohs, I am not able to affirm. Great they must be, beyond the proportion of belief; or else they could never have been Masters of sufficient Treasure to finish those vast Structures which they undertook. Twelve thousand and five hundred Talents they amounted annually unto, in the time of the Ptolomies; which of our Money makes the sum of two Millions, and 347750 pounds. Which Sum Augustus Cesar (appropriating this Province to himself) is said to have doubled: but whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the rest in Corn, I determine not. Certain it is, that there was yearly shipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperour, Two hundred thousand Measures of Wheat, every Measure weighing Twenty hundred pound weight; which cometh to Seven Millions, and an hundred forty thousand of our Engliss Bushels; sold by him, or distributed gratis amongst the Poor, as he saw occasion. So that there might be very well some abatement in Money, considering that the Corn amounted to so great a Sum. Nor were they much less, if ought at all, when the Mamaluks ruled in this Countrey. For Campsin Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no less than Ten Millions of Duckats, at one clap, amongst his Souldiers. But the Turk at this day, partly through their Tyrannical Government, and partly through the discontinuance of the usual Traffick through the Red Sea, receive no more than Three Millions of Crowns; one of which is hoarded in his own Coffers; the second is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Bashaw; for support of this Charge, the third is distributed among his Garrison-Souldiers, and such of them as by Land guard his own Million to Constantinople; for by Sea he dares not venture it, for fear of the Florentine, who with a few Ships Lordeth it in the Mediterranean.

And so much for Egypt.

BARBARY.

BARBARY, is bounded on the East, with Cyrenaica; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and some part of the Atlantick also; on the South, with Mount Atlas, by which separated from Libya inferior, or the Desarts of Libya.

It containeth in it the whole Dioecsis of Africa, and part of the Dioecsis of Spain: subject in former times to the Commonwealth of Carthage, and the great Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia. When conquered by the Romans, they gave to that part of it, which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa; calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninsula, and afterwards extended it over all the rest of the Countrey, on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the subjugation of it by the Saracens, by whom called BARBARY: either from Barbar, signifying in their Language an uncertain murmur, such as the speech of the Africans seemed to them to be; or from the word Bar, signifying a Desart, which doubled, made up first Barbar, and after Barbary.

It is situate under the third and fourth Climates: so that the longest Summers day in the parts most South, amounted to thirteen hours three quarters, increased in the most Northern parts to fourteen hours and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantick Ocean to the greater Syrtis, for the space of 1500 miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narrowest, 100 miles; but towards the Straits, where the broadest, almost three hundred.

The Countrey, in such parts as lie nearest to the Mediterranean, is full of Hills covered with Woods, and stored with plenty of Wild-beasts; provided reasonably well of most sorts of Fruits, but unfit for Wheat, inasmuch that most of the Inhabitants live of Barley-bread. Betwixt which and Mount Atlas is a Champain Countrey, watered with many pleasant Rivers issuing from that Mountain, and liberally furnished with Cherries, Figs, Pears, Plums, Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oyl, Honey, Sugar; some Mines of Gold, and that for purity and fineness no where to be bettered. Here are also besides, large Herds of Cattel, some Elephants, Lyons, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like savage nature, and of Apes great multitudes; Horses good store, of excellent both strength and beauty. But taking it in the best parts, it falleth extremely short of that infinite fertility, which is ascribed to it by the Writers of elder times. For besides the miracle of five hundred Ears of Corn growing on the stalk, (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, that not far from the City of Tapepe, in the way to Leptis, a man might see a great Date-tree overshadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig-tree, under that a Pomegranate, under that a Vine, and under all, Pease, Wheat, and Herbs, all growing and flourishing at one time. It is affirmed also by the same Author, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that some fruits of other are gathered in it at all times of the year; and that a piece of ground of four cubits square, was usually rented out at so many Denarii: by which account, (as the learned Biddens doth compute it) an Acre of that ground must be worth yearly, 12800 of the Roman Sesterii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinite and unparalleled increase of the Fruits of the Earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The people are of a dusky colour, but inclining to blackness: much of the same nature with the Arabians, by whose numerous Families formerly they were overspread, but the Africans of the two the better: active of body, well skilled in Horsemanship, but impatient of labour, covetous of honour, inconstant, crafty, and unfaithful: studious in matters of their Law, and in some of the Liberal Sciences, especially Philosophy and the Mathematicks, of which in many parts of the Mohometan Countreys they are admitted to be Readers. They are also said to be stately of gate, exceeding distrustful, in their hate implacable, and jealous of their Women beyond all compare. The Women of a comely body, and well featured, beautiful in blackness, of delicate soft skins, and in their habit and apparel beyond measure sumptuous: so drest, to make themselves more amiable in the eyes of their Husbands; for otherwise not permitted to stir abroad, and seldom to see any body but those of their own houses.

The Language spoken at the present in most of the Martime Towns, except those of Fesse and Morocco, is the Arabick Tongue. In those two Kingdoms, and most part of the Countrey-Villages, the Punic or old African, the ancient languages of the Countrey: the Punic spoken in all places where anciently the Carthaginians were of any power; the African (whatsoever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not subject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder, which though it was the language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it spread so far as to extinguish or suppress the old natural Tongues: and in the Colonies themselves so much degenerated in a short time, so barbarously and imperfectly spoken; that a Sister of the Emperour Severus, who lived in Leptis, a Roman Colony, coming to Rome to see her Brother, spoke it so incongruously, that the Emperour was ashamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of St. Augustine, an African Bishop, were preached in Latin, because preached in Hippo his Episcopal See, which was then a Colony of the Romans; yet he confesseth, that he was sometimes fain to use such words as were not Latine, to be the better understood of his Congregation.

The Christian Faith was first planted in that part hereof which was called Africa Propria, by Epaneus, one of the 70 Disciples; by Dorotheus in his Synopsis, affirmed to be the first Bishop of Carthage: In Mauritania, by S. Simon the Apostle, surnamed Zelotes. Metaphrastes addeth, that S. Simon Peter preached here also, when by the Decree of Claudius Cesar he was forced from Rome: and and at his going hence, left Crescent his Disciple to promote the work. But by whomsoever planted first, it found good increase, and was so propagated in short time over all this Country, that in the year 250, or before, there were in it above 90 Bishops; for so many were assembled in the Synod of Labstium: and in the year 358, when the faction of the Donatists was of greatest power, we find no fewer than 214 Catholic Bishops met together in the Council of Carthage. Which as it is an argument of the great increase of Christianity in those parts of Africa; so it shews also, that the Church was in ill condition; so overpowered by the violence of that mighty faction, who had at least 270 Bishops of their own Opinion; that the Orthodox party was necessitated to increase the number of Bishops for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary side, if ever the difference should come to be examined in a public Meeting. These Bishops ranked into six Classes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Bishops of each Province subject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Dioecesis (contrary to the usage of all other Churches) had the name of Primates: but all of them subordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally invested with Patriarchal Jurisdiction over all these parts. Latius fusa est nostra Provincia; habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritania dux sibi coherentes, are S. Cyprian's words. Which tells, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer, than an Historian or Divine. He would not else have told us in such positive terms, that those of Barbary remained in their old Idolatry, till 250 years before Mahomet's birth; at what time they received the Gospel, and not before. But the good man mistook the reviving of the Orthodox Faith, in the time of Justinian, after it had been long suppressed by the Vandals of the Arian faction (who at one time banished hence 300 Catholic Bishops) for the first planting of the Gospel: otherwise not to be excused. But after this Reviver, it held not long, when suppressed by the Saracens, and so suppressed, that except it be in some few Towns possessed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Christianity to be discerned in all this Country; Mahometism being elsewhere universally embraced amongst them.

Amongst the men of most note for Souldiery, which have been born in this Country, we may reckon 1. Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three Sons: 2. Annibal, 3. Asdrubal, and 4. Mago; men hardly to be parallel'd in any Ages: 5. Masinissa, King of the Numidians, one of their Contemporaries: and in the following times, 6. Septimius Severus, the Roman Emperor. Amongst those addicted to the Muses, those of most note, 1. Terence, 2. Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the world afforded men of more eminent note, nor better deserving of the Church. 1. Tertullian, 2. Cyprian, 3. Julius Africanus, 4. Arnobius, 5. Lactantius, 6. Victorinus Asper, 7. Optatus Milevitanus, 8. Victor Uicensis, 9. Fulgentius, 10. Primasius. And above all, the most learned and divine S. Augustine; a man of such admirable abilities, and indefatigable industry, so constant a Defender of all Orthodox Doctrines against the Heretics of those times, that he deservedly got the name of Malleus Hæreticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Country besides Mount Atlas, (of which hereafter by it self) 1. Pborca, 2. Hep-tadelpus, and 3. Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitana; 4. Cinnaba, 5. Garis, 6. Madetubadus, and 7. those called Gariphi, in Cæsariensis; 8. Thamber, 9. Mamp-sarus, 10. Usaleus, and 11. Zuchabarus, in Africa Propria. Of which, and others, we may speak more, if occasion be, in our description of the Provinces, in which they are. And for the Rivers of most note, though none of any long course in so narrow a Country; we have in Tingitana, 1. Sala, falling into the Atlantic, out of Atlas minor; 2. another of the same name, and the same exit also, but far more to the North, towards the Strait of Gibraltar; 3. Melochath, mollified by Sa-lust the Historian into Melucha, and by him placed betwixt the Numidians and the Moors; 4. Malva, the boundary at this day betwixt the Kingdoms of Fesse and Algiers; 5. Phibuth, of more fame than any, of which more anon in Cæsariensis, 6. Nasabath, 7. Sis-rius, and Sorbetus: in Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunis, 8. Rhiccatus, which issuing out of Mount Thamber, falleth into the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius; 9. Triton, which issuing out of the Hill called Usaleus, and making the great Fenn called Tritonia Palus, endeth its course also in the Mediterranean; and finally, 10. Bagradas, the greatest in all this tract, which rising out of Mount Atlas, first runneth towards the East, and then receiving from the Hill called Mamsaris the addition of another Stream, passeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there ends his course.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Land-marks, I should now proceed to the description of the several Provinces heretofore, as in other places. But because each part almost hath had for these later times its particular History, and that it is divided at the present into several Governments, and under the command of several Princes: I will here lay down so much of the Story of it as concerns the whole, before such division; and afterwards pursue the History and Chorography of the several parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Country was first peopled by Phut the third Son of Cham: who leaving his Brother Mizraim well settled in the Land of Egypt, passed towards the West; and leaving Lebani his Nephew betwixt him and Mizraim, possessed himself of all the rest from the greater Syris to the Ocean. Reminders of whose name we find in the River Phut, (by Ptolomy called Phibuth, with but little difference, save that it favoureth more of the African roughness) near which Josephus findeth a Region called the Country of Phut, a Nation called the Phuteans: descended herein by S. Hierom, who speaking of this Regio Phutesis in Mauritania, where the River Phibuth is placed by Ptolomy voucheth in general terms the testimony of old Writers, both Greek and Latine. So that of this there is no question to be made. Such Nations as descended of this Plantation, shall be hereafter spoke of in their several Provinces. Governed at first by the Chiefs of their several Families; but in the end, reduced under the Command of the Kings of Mauritania and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two first, Natives of this Country, of the Race of Phut; the last descended also of the Seed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan: who on the Conquest of their Country by the Children of Israel, forced to seek new Dwellings, and having store of Ships to transplant themselves and their Families; settled in the maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa, properly so called. For, that the people of those parts, though lost into other Names and Families, were anciently of a Canaanitish or Phanician Race, may be made apparent, 1. By the nearness of their Language, the Punic or Phanician, and old Hebrew Tongue, differing only in the Dialect and Pronunciation. Secondly by the name Pani, or Pheni, little differing from that of the Phanices. 3ly, By this testimony of S. Augustine, who telleth us in the Comment on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, begun, but not finished by him; Interrogati Rustici nostri quid sint, respondent, Punic Canaanii; that is to say, That when any of the Inhabitants of this Country (he himself was one) were asked what they were, they answered, Canaanites. 4ly, We find in Herodotus, how Cambyses had totally conquered Egypt, intending a War against the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it seemeth) of some power: But the Phanicians, being the only Sea-faring men Cambyses then had, absolutely denied to be employed in that Service; they being sprung from the same Tree that the Carthaginians were. 5ly, We read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Evagrius Scholasticus) how on two Marble-Pillars, situate high unto Tingis, or Tanger, there was in the Phanician Language and Character engraved, Nos fugimus à facie Josuahæ prædonis, filii Nave; that is to say, We flee from the face of that Robber Josuahæ, the Son of Nun. The settling of this people there, a great incitement questionless unto Dido to come thither also: who feared as much danger from her Brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whose hands had been imbrued in the blood of her Husband; as the others did from the Sword of Josuahæ. Gathering together all her Treasures, which were very great, accompanied with her Brother Barca, and her Sister Anna, she set sail for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after stood the City of Carthage, she obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigness than the could compass round with an Oxen hide. This the beginning of that City; hence the name of Byssa, which at first it had. First founded in, or about the year of the World 3070, which was about 144 years after the building of Solomon's Temple; 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the destruction of Troy. By which account (I note this only by the way) it is impossible that Dido, or Elisa (for by both these names we find her called) should ever see the face of Aeneas, unless it were in picture, or imagination; and therefore as impossible the should either fall in love with him, or be got with Child by him, or finally kill her self on her being forsaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a general belief with most sorts of men. Hereunto consenteth Ausonius, who honouring the Statue of his abused Princess with an Epigram of 18 Verses, among others, gives us these four.

*Invida cur in me stimula fuit Musa Maronem, Fingeret ut nostra damna pudicitie?
Vos magis Historicis (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furta deum, concubinsque canunt.*

Why didst thou stir up Virgil, envious Muse,
Falsely my name and honour to abuse?
Of me let Histories be heard, not those,
Who to the World Joves thefts and lusts expose.

Credible it is, Aeneas being driven on the Coast of Africk, was by some Prince there courteously entertained, as a man whose fame had been his Harbinger: but why the story should be fabled on Dido, I see not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her self, gave occasion to the Poet to fain, that it was for the love of Aeneas: Whereas it was indeed to avoid the lust and fury of Iarbas, a potent King of the Gentili, a powerful Nation neighbouring those parts of Africa in which Carthage stood, who violently desired to have his pleasure on her.

But to proceed; This City thus founded in a place commodious for Trade and Merchandise, in short time grew exceeding wealthy. And having wealth enough to hire Merenary Souldiers (of which the needy Mauritanians, and Numidians, did afford good store) they conquered all the Sea Coasts from Cyrene to the Straits of Hercules (now called the Straits of Gibraltar;) and so much also towards the South, as was worth the conquering; within which space possessed of 300 Cities. Grown to such height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongst them the Kings of Numidia and Mauritania were at their devotion: They began to cast their eyes on Sicily, a wealthy Island, lying near unto their Coasts; which questionless they had possessed, if the Romans, envious of their greatness, and fearing their Neighbourhood, had not took upon them the defence of the Mamertines; and under that pretence got some footing in it. The end of this War, after many brave exploits on both sides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Sicily, their abandoning all the Islands betwixt them and Italy, and the payment of 3200 Talents, amounting to about two Millions of Crowns. And such end had the first Punic War, managed for the most part in Sicily. During which time, and the first War there managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it self was twice invaded; first, by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuse, (or so commonly called) and afterwards by Regulus a Roman General, but with no other great success than the spoil of the Country. The second followed not long after, but the Scene was altered; begun in Spain, prosecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the Son of Amilcar; descended from Barca the Brother of Dido or Elisa: who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increased his reputation and experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes, into Italy it self; defeated the Armies of the Romans, and slew some of their Consuls: So prosperous in the Battle of Cannæ, where the whole strength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good fortune, and made use of his Victory, he might within four or five days after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africk from the Forces of Scipio; who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently translated the War to Carthage. The issue was, that on the loss of the battle of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were necessitated to submit themselves to the will of the Conquerour; that is to say, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their ships and Gallies excepting ten; to make no War without leave of the Romans, to pay for the Charges of the War 10000 Talents; and such other extremities. So ended the second Punic War, A. U. C. 602. And the third followed not long after, not any way occasioned by those of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the People of Rome, who would not think themselves safe whilst that City stood: and therefore sent another Scipio to lay siege unto it. By whom, after a long and stout resistance, it was at last taken and destroyed. The Treasure, which was found in it, notwithstanding their former losses, and the low estate it was reduced to, besides what was consumed by fire, and reserved by the Souldiers, amounting to 470000 pound weight of silver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thousand pounds of our English Money.

Such end had Carthage, and therewith all the rest of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed against her, and aided the Romans in these Wars; yet they soon found their own Fortunes buried in the self-same Grave. Subverted one after another, as occasion was, they became all subject unto Rome; their Kingdoms and Estates turned to Roman Provinces. Of these were reckoned seven in all, that is to say, 1. Africa Propria, called also Zeugitania, and Proconsularis, 2. Byzacena, 3. Tripolitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cæsariensis, 6. Siracusensis, and 7. Tingitana. Of which the last (I know not why) was laid to the Dioecesis of of Spain, called therefore Hispānia Transfretana, Spain on the other side of the Sea, by some elder Writers: the other six made up the Dioecesis of Africk, subordinate to the Praefectus Praetorio for Italy, who had here his Vicarius, or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till subdued by the Vandals, a German Nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb, on the Coast of the Baltick; where now lie the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania. Their memory still retained there in the title of those Princes, who call themselves Duces Vandolorum; and in the Confederacy of the Hanse-towns, called by some Latine Writers, Civitates Vandalicae. A Nation of great power, and numbers, (the Burgundians being only a part of these) one of the five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11th year of the Empire of Arcadius and Honorius, they were invited into Gaul, by the treacherous practices of Silico, Lieutenant of the Western Empire; and after an abode of three years, passed into Spain, together with the Suevi, and Alani, their Associates. But after 18 years, the Goths made that place too hot for them also. So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperours Vicegerent in Africa: who stomaching to see his Office bestowed on Castinus, an unworthy man, and his enemy, betrayed the Country to these Vandals, in the last year of the life and reign of Gundericus, an Arian in Religion, as were the rest of the Nation, to which induced by their Neighbourhood and acquaintance with the Goths: Which Heretice as they brought with them into Africk, driving thence all the Orthodox Christians, so they continued in it till their extirpation.

The Vandal Kings of AFRICA.

- A.C.
412 1. Gundericus, who first invaded Gaul, Spain, and Africk, 16.
428 2. Genfericus, who at the request of Eudoxia, the Widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy, and sacked the City of Rome, the Spoil whereof for fourteen days he gave to his Souldiers; but at the request of Eudoxia, whom he afterwards married, he did not burn it. This Eudoxia was Wife to the Western Emperour Valentinian; who having a mind to a Lady of Rome, the Wife of one Maximus, he cunningly slipped the Ring of Maximus off his finger, and by that token sent for the Lady to the Court, and when she was come, ravished her. To revenge this disgrace, Maximus slew Valentinian, made himself Emperour, and forced Eudoxia to be his Wife. But the storming a Match so unequal to her high Birth; and having some inclining of her Husbands death, sent for Genfericus into Italy. This Genfericus conquered Carthage, and Hippo, and reigned 48 years.
476 3. Honoricus Son of Genfericus, 7.
484 4. Gundebundus, Son to Genzo, the Brother of Honoricus, 15.
499 5. Transmundus, Brother to Gundebundus, 24.
523 6. Hildericus, the Son of Honoricus, deposed by 530 7. Gilimer, the Son of Genzo, one of the Descendants of Genfericus; overcome by Belisarius a worthy and politic Leader, whom the Emperour Justinian employed in that Service.

And thus ended the Kingdom of the Vandals, (having continued in Spain and Africa 146 years) by the valour of Belisarius. Who after this good Service, was employed by Justinian against the Goths, then reigning in Italy; against whom he proceeded very fortunately: but being, on I know not what envy, called to Constantinople, his eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his Bread at the Gate of the Temple of St. Sophia. A bad reward for so good a Servant. But to go on, Justinian having regained Africk, to honour his new Conqueror, exempted it from the command of the Praetorio-Praefectus of Italy, to which formerly subject; and increasing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Isle of Sardinia, made it a Praefecture of it self: appointing his Praefectus Praetorio Africe to reside in Carthage, as the chief City of his Charge; which he then also raised to a Consular Province, having in former times been Proconsular only. But long it held not in this state: For in the year 647, the Romans were finally expelled by Husha, a famous Leader, whom Osman, the third Caliph of the Saracens, had designed to this Service. Africk, from that time forwards, reckoned amongst the Provinces of the Saracenic or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing less and less, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers, getting what he could for himself; this Country was distracted in many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at last reduced to four of most consideration: that is to say, the Kingdoms of 1. Tunis, 2. Tremesen or Algiers, 3. Fesse, and 4. Morocco. To the Chorography and History whereof we do now proceed; adding hereto in the fifth place, the Isles of Barbary.

1. TUNIS.

THE Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latine called Regnum Tunitanum) hath on the East, Cyrene; on the West, the Kingdom of Algiers, or Tremesen; on the North, the Mediterranean; on the South, Mount Atlas. So called from Tunis, the chief City of it; extended all along the Coast of the Mediterranean for the space of 800 miles or thereabout, but the breadth not answerable.

The Country towards the East, barren and destitute of water; but in the Western parts, sufficiently plentiful of Corn and other Fruits, and generally well set with Trees. The People more patient of labour than the rest of Barbary, and for that cause perhaps more healthy; but questionable of so good constitution, that they live commonly to great age, unless a violent death prevent them; and are not much afraid of Sickness, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as some call it) and the Numidia of the Romans; called since Numidia Antiqua, to difference it from the present Numidia, lying on the other side of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countries, besides those spoken of already, were, 1. Audus, 2. Buzara, 3. Cinna, 4. Dior, or the Hills of Jupiter, 5. Gilius, by some named Gigion, and 6. those called Thizabi. Rivers of most esteem with them, though not much with others, besides those mentioned before before. 1. Amphage, now called Collo, and by some Sar Gomar, which divideth this kingdom from that of Tremesen; 2. Catunda; 3. Cyniphut, issuing from the Hills called Zuchabarus, and falling into the Sea; not far from Tripolis. Besides which, there were some great Lakes; the chief whereof, 1. Hipponiter, near Mount Cinna; 2. The Lake of Pallus, or that called Palus Tritonia, where Minerva was said to have shewed her self the Inventress of Spinning and of Oyl, and for that much worshipped by this people; 3. Sylura, another great Lake; but not so famous as the former, because not honoured by a Goddess.

The whole divided by the Romans into these four parts, viz. 1. Africa especially so called, lying on the Sea, from the River Amphage to the lesser Syrtis; 2. Tripolitana, from the lesser Syrtis to the greater; 3. Numidia, lying on the West of Zeugitana, or Africa Propria: And 4. Byzacena, so called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it; the Territory whereof so extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of Corn were sent to Rome in the time of Augustus, and 360 in the time of Domitian Nero, growing on one stalk. But this division being long since worn out of memory, it is divided at the present into the Provinces of 1. Ezzab, 2. Tripolis, 3. Tunis, 4. Constantina, 5. Bugia.

1. EZZAB, is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A small Region, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich, (the richer, in regard they are free from Tributes;) their wealth not rising from the Commodities of their own Country, which affordeth them little else besides Dates and Olives; but from such Merchandise which they buy of the Venetians, and sell to the Numidians. The richest, those of Mesrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath some, but none of note: the chief of which, 1. Mesurata, 2. Sibeca, both upon the Sea; of which the first gives name unto that little Province spoken of before. Of more note in former times was Phileni Villa, situate on the greater Syrtis, near the Promontory then called Hippi, but now Cabo de Santa; memorable for the adjoining Altars called Phileni Ares, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occasion. Some Controversies being grown betwixt those of Carthage and Cyrene, about their Bounds; it was agreed, that two men at a set hour should be sent out of each City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meer-stone of their several Territories. The Phileni, two Brothers nominated for Carthage, were so quick of foot, that they had gotten a good way into the Country of the Cyrenenses before they were met; wherewith the Cyrenenses, much enraged, put to them this choice, either to go so much back again, or to die in the place. This last accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Country before their own, for preservation of whose name and honour to succeeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect these Altars.

2. West of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab, made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana. Not much more fruitful than the other, except in Barley, but more commodiously seated in regard of the Sea, which is here more safe for Navigation; the former lying wholly on the greater Syrtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leptis Magna, so called, to distinguish it from another, but of less note, and therefore called Leptis Parva, situate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A Town of so great wealth and Trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Car- thaginians. 2. Euphranta, called also Pyrgos Euphranta, from some strong Tower in it on the Western bank of the greater Syrtis. 3. Ciniferna, on the Eastern side of the River Cyniphut. 4. Cabis, the utmost City of this Province Westward; the same which Ptolomy calls Tacapa, situate at the fall of the River Triton into the lesser Syrtis. 5. Sabratha; and 6. Hera; not else observable; but that together with Leptis Magna they made up that one City, which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7. Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from those three Cities before mentioned: A City of great Name and Riches, till destroyed by the Saracens. By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colleges, and Hospitals; and flourishing in much Wealth and Lustre, it became a Kingdom of it self, but subject to the King of Tunis, till taken by the Genoese with a Fleet of 20 Sail, and by them sold to the King of Fesse. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, it came to see more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navarre, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Catholic, the first Monarch of Spain: whose Nephew Charles the 5th, conferred it on the Knights of St. John of Hierusalem, then expelled from Rhodes: whom the Turks under Sinan Baj General of Selimus the Second, dispossessed by force, An. 1551. Since that the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, for these African Provinces; and made an usual retreat for Pyrras, who infest these Seas, and do much mischief to the Coasts of Sicily, Italy, and others of the Christian Countries.

3. The Province of TUNIS, lying Westward to that of Tripolis, taketh up so much of this Kingdom, as anciently contained the Province of Byzacena; and so much of the Roman Africk, as lieth on the East of the River called Gadilbarbar, the Hipponiter Lacus of the ancient Writers. The Country anciently so fruitful, that it yielded usually an increase of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, besides the testimony of approved Authors, the wonderful, if not prodigious Ears of Corn, which before we heard of, may serve sufficiently. Now indigent, and so unprovided of all Grain for the use of their Families, that they are fain to furnish themselves of other places: the people not daring to manure or sow their Land, for fear of the Arabians, who ever and anon fall into these parts, and spoil what they meet with.

Places of most note in it, in the elder times, 1. Adrumetum, or Adrumytus, now called Machomet, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena; by consequence, in the times of Christianity, and Archbishops See: walled and repaired by the Emperour Justinian, and by his Command called Justiniana. 2. Zama, the incamping place of Annibal, before his battle with Scipio. 3. Nadagara, memorable for the great battle betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage; not parallel'd since their own times, nor in those before them. In which the great Controversie between those Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day fell unto the Romans: For though Annibal shewed his singular judgment in ordering his Souldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in Horse, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage, constrained to fight in a place of disadvantage, he could do no marvels: The Romans, with the loss of no more than 1500 of their own men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians in the Fight and Chase. 4. Salera, the first place took by Scipio, after the landing of his Army. 5. Utica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greatest Ships; much spoke of in the Wars of Carthage, and and memorable for the death of Cato (hence surnamed Utican) who here slew himself, for fear of falling into the hands of Cæsar. It is now called Biserta. 6. Byzacium, seated in a liberal and fruitful soil, as was shewn before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7. Rufinum, made by Cæsar the feat of his War in Africa, against the Sons and Faction of Pompey; as memorable in the times succeeding, for being the Episcopal See of St. Fulgentius. 8. Thyrtus, remarkable for the Tragedy of the Gordiani: Of which the Father in this City was saluted Emperour by the Soldiers, in hatred to Maximinus then their Emperour, whose Procurator they had slain in a tumult: but his party being discomfited by Capellianus, whom Maximinus sent against him, and his Son killed in the defeat; but upon the hearing of the News, he here hanged himself. 9. Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held out longest for the Mercenaries, in their desperate Rebellion against the Carthaginians; by which the Estate of that great City was in danger of ruin, at the end of the first Punic War. 10. Carthage, once the Lady and Mistress of Africa, situate in the bottom of a safe and capacious Bay, the entrances whereof were very strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, environed with the Sea, except upon one side only, where joyned unto the Land by a narrow Isthmus, about two miles and an half in breadth, in compass 24 miles, but measuring by the outward Wall, it was 45. For without the Wall of the City it self there were three Walls more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults under ground of 30 foot deep; wherein they had place for 300 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horses, and all their Provender, and Lodging in those out-streets for the Riders of the said Horses, and for 20000 Foot besides, which never came within the City to annoy or pester it. On the South-side stood the Castle called Byssa, which took up two miles and an half in compass: First built by Dido, on that ground which the obtained of the Libyans, when he got leave to buy only so much Land of them, as she could compass round about with an Oxes Hide. In that, the sumptuous Temple of their ancient Deities, Juno, Apollo, Æsculapius, Belus. On the West side a standing Pool made of the Sea-water, let into it by so narrow a passage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a stately Arsenal, with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the Foundation and Affairs of this mighty City we have spoke already. The Government of it hit by Kings those absolute enough at first, afterwards limited by the Senate; and finally made merely titular by the power of the people: which unproportionable mixture is much condemned by Aristotle, in the 2. of his Politicks. Their Territories, before the second Punic War, when they were at the greatest, extended on the Sea-coasts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syria to the Streights, and unto the River Iberus, for the space of 2000 miles in length: their Revenues answerable, and readily brought in, by reason of their infinite Trading. Which made the Roman People think themselves unsafe, whilst this City stood. Relolved on the destruction of it, they sent against it L. Martius, and M. Manlius, their two Consuls, with a puissant Army: to whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the preservation of the City it self, which was faithfully promised. But when they had withal given up the Sons of their Principal men, to be sent to Rome for Pledges of their future Loyalty; they were told, that a City consisted not in Walls, but in Laws and Government. These, with the Corporation, should remain as formerly; the Town to be removed ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was resolved to abide the utmost: but they wanted necessities for resistance. That want supplied for want of Iron to make Arms with Gold and Silver; the Houses pulled down to furnish them with Timber to build a Navy; the noble Ladies cutting off the Hair of their Heads, to make Ropes and Cordage, 25000 Women lifted to defend the Walls. But the fatal moment being come, a second Scipio is sent thither to dispatch the Work; by whom at last the Town was taken; and for 17 days together consumed with fire: The Queen and multitudes of the People burning themselves in the Temple of Æsculapius, because they would not fall into the hands of the Romans, reedified by Julius Cæsar, and made a Colony, it recovered some part of her former lustre; but so, that her chief glory was rather to be fought for in her ancient, than her present Fortunes. Populi Romani Colonia, olim Imperii ejus pertinax amula, & priorum excidium rerum, quam ope presentium clarior, was her Character in the times of Pomponius Mela. But in the last estate, accounted for the Metropolis of the Dioecesis of Africa, the Residence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Bishops under him in that one Province wherein Carthage stood. Destroyed in the succeeding time by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it revived again, and had the reputation of a City of no mean importance, till the year 1270; at what time being forced by the French, under Lewis the 9th. and thereupon deserted by its old Inhabitants, it began to languish, and was at last reduced to nothing but a few scattered Houses, not above five and twenty Shops, one Temple; all the rest a ruine, So truly said the ancient Poet:

Sic patet exemplis Oppida posse mori.

*Thus by Examples do we see,
That Towns may die as well as we.*

Of chief note at the present, 1. Tunis, supposed to be the Themisa, or Thumisa of Strabo; of small account till the last destruction of Carthage, by whose fall it rose. Situate not far from the Ruines of that famous City, in compass above five miles, and in that compass said to contain 10000 households. Of great Traffick, and well frequented by the Merchants of foreign Nations: chiefly from Genoa and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the Sieges and Successes of two of our English Princes; that, namely, of King Edward the First, in his Fathers time; and that of Henry the Fourth, then but Earl of Darby: by both which (though the last served only under the Command of the French) the City was compelled to a Comptition; Lewis the 9th. commonly called S. Lewis, dying at the first Siege of it. 2. Gabretta, a strong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a demy-Island, divided from the main Land by two narrow passages, but so that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extreme difficulty, by Charles the 5th. An. 1535. together with the Turkish Navy riding in the Lake salt by it; but again recovered by the Turks about 40 years after, An. 1574. 3. Cairoan, built by Hussein who first conquered Africa for the Saracens, in a sandy Desert, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36 from any of the Sea, to secure himself from any invasion, which the commodiousness of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the first Founder of it, with an admirable Temple raised on Pillars of Marble: who placed also in it a Colledge of Priests, and made it the chief Residence of his Posterity for the space of 170 years, who reigned here under the great Caliphs as the Sultans of Africa. Destroyed stroyed by the Arabians, in the 424 year of their Hegira, but regained from them by the King of Morocco, and still of such esteem amongst these Mahometans, that their chief men are brought hither to be buried from all parts of the Country, hoping by the Prayers of those Priests to find a shorter way to Heaven, than in other places.

4. More Westward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, so called from Constantina the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hippunites, now named Guadilharbar, to Constantine a Mountain bordering on Bugia, which I conceive to be the same with Mons Audus in Ptolomy. The soil hereof said to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of Fruits, and great store of Butter. Rubricatus, by Orosius called Ordalio, now Ludag, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Tabraca, on the East; and 2. Hippo Regius, on the Western bank of Rubricatus: both Roman Colonies, but this last most famous, in being the Episcopal See of renowned St. Augustine. 3. Bona, the birth-place of that Father, built by the Romans about a hundred miles from the Sea; but situate in a large Plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25 in breadth: so Rich and Fertile, that the Town flourisheth to this day; adorned with a sumptuous Mosque, and never without the Company of Merchants coming from Genoa, Tunis, and the Isle of Zerby, for their Fruits and Butter. 4. Thuburnica, another Colony of the Romans. 5. Sicca Veneria, another Town of the same nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6. Culena, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moors now called Cucutina, but Constantina by the Latins; and most Nations else, now the chief City of this Province, situate near a Mountain of the same name, near the edge of Bugia. An ancient City, but containing still 8000 Families, many sumptuous Buildings; amongst which a large Temple, two Colledges, and three or four Monasteries; frequently visited by the Merchants, every Trade having here its peculiar Street; their chief Commodities, Wool, Cloth, Silks, Oyl, and some sorts of Fruits, which they exchange for Dates, or Slaves, who are here good Merchandise. The City for the most part fenced about with high craggy Rocks; and where those want, with strong walls, of a great height, and most exquisite workmanship, declaring the antiquity of it. A further Argument whereof may be a fair Triumphal Arch not far from the City, and some Hot Baths, after the manner of the Romans.

5. Most Westward lieth the Province of BUGIA, extended from Mount Constantine to the River Ampsaga, now called Chollo, or Sef-Gemar: which with so much of Constantina, as lieth on the West side of Rubricatus, made up that Province which the Romans called by the name of Numidia. The length hereof 150 miles on the Mediterranean, the breadth not above half so much. Narrower than Mauritania, as is said by Pliny; Sed diuior & magis culta, but the richer of the two, and the better peopled. The Country of a fat soil, plentiful both in Fruits and Corn, but most fit for Pasturage, to which the people were so addicted, that many of them cared not for building Houses, (instead whereof they used the Hold of a Ship with the Keel turned upwards) but removed from one place to another, as their Pastures failed them. From thence called Nomades by the Grecians, nomades, signifying to feed or graze. The people of good metal, swift of Foot, and well skilled in Horsemanship: but better in the Onset, and to give a Charge, than in standing to it; such as the wild Arabians are now said to be.

Chief Towns hereof (besides Thuburnica, Culena, Bona, Hippo, spoken of before, belonging to Numidia, though not to Bugia) 1. Birgi, built by the Romans on the side of a lofty Mountain looking into the Sea; by some conceived to have been the Thebucca of Ptolomy, now the chief City of this Province; adorned with many sumptuous Mosques, some Monasteries and Colledges for Students in the Law of Mahomet, and many fair Hospitals for relief of the Poor; fenced also with a strong Castle. Secured by the strength whereof, and growing rich by the fruitfulness of the situation, the Citizens began to grow proud and wanton, working much mischief to the Spaniards by their Gallies, which they had at Sea; till taught more modestly by Peter of Navarre a Spanish Captain, An. 1508, by whom the Town was taken, and the people plundered. 2. Chollo, upon the Sea-side, the Chollops Magna (as I take it) of Ptolomy, reported for a wealthy City. 3. Nicaur, seated towards Mount Atlas in a pleasant and delightful Country: which though interspersed with many Hills, yet being those Hills are clothed with Woods, yield them good store of Goats and Horses, and feed the Vallies with fresh Springs, which do issue from them; they rather add than detract any thing from the pleasures of it. 4. Madura, by some called Madurus, the birth-place of Apuleius. 5. Tunadromum, another of the Roman Colonies. 6. Cirta, or Cirta Julia, the Metropolis of Numidia, when a Roman Province, and formerly the Seat-Royal of Syphax King of the Masessyls, within whose Country it was reckoned in former times, though afterwards laid unto this Province. Situate near the mouth of the River Ampsaga, and memorable for the Tragedy of Sophonisba, the Daughter of Ajdrubal of Carthage; a Lady of most exquisite beauty, and yet carried more Charms in her Tongue than in her Eyes. Espoused first unto Masiniissa King of the Numidians, but after, upon the Reason of State, married unto Syphax; who being took Prisoner by his Rival, and brought to Cirta, the Lady upon hopes of liberty and honour both, bestowed her self on her first Lover; but Scipio fearing lest that marriage might withdraw Masiniissa from the Roman party, caused the Lady to be seized on; which Masiniissa not being otherwise able to prevent or remedy, sent her a Cup of Poyson, which she drank, and died.

Of these Numidians there is much mention in the Stories of Rome and Carthage; employed by this last City in all their Wars, both in Spain, Italy, and Sicily. Siding at last with Scipio against that State, they did good Service to the Romans in the weakening and destruction of that City, whose fall they did not long survive: first conquered in the War of Jugurth; after the death of Juba, made a Roman Province. Their Kings, as far as I can trace the succession of them, follow in this Order.

The Kings of the NUMIDIANS.

1. Gala, the Father of Masniſſa.
2. Deſaleer, the Brother of Gala; according to the Law of the Country, which gave the Crown unto the Brother, not the Son of the former King, (like the Law of Tanijtry in Ireland) ſucceeded Gala.
3. N. N. Son of Deſaleer, in the abſence of Masniſſa, then ſerving under the Carthaginians in the Wars of Spain, poſſeſſed himſelf of the Throne: ſlain not long after by a Rebel.
4. Masniſſa, Son of Gala, recovered the Kingdom of his Father; but again outed by Syphax and the Carthaginians, betwixt whom and Masniſſa, touching Sophoniba, there was deadly feud. Aided by Scipio and the Romans, with whom aſſociated againſt Carthage, he not only recovered his own Kingdom, but was gratified with the greateſt part of that which belonged to Syphax. A profeſſed Enemy to Carthage, (the final ruine whereof he lived to ſee) till the time of his death, being then ninety years of Age.
5. Miciſſa, the Son of Masniſſa, of whom nothing memorable.
6. Jugurth, the Son of Maſtanabalin, one of the brethren of Miciſſa, having wickedly made away the two Sons of Miciſſa, uſurped the Kingdom, and manifeſtly withſtood the Romans, whole attempts ſometimes by force, ſometimes by ſubtilty, but chiefly by money and bribes, he overthrew and made fruſtrate: Ex ſuit in Jugurtha (faith Florus) quod poſt Annibalem timeretur. At laſt being broken by Metellus, vanquiſhed by Marius, and by Bocchus delivered into the hands of Sylla, he was by Marius led in Triumph to Rome. In this Triumph was carried 3700 pound weight in Gold; in Silver-wedges, 5775 pounds weight; and in ready Coin, 28900 Crowns: it being the cuſtom of the Romans in their Triumphs, to have carried before them all the Riches and Money, which they had brought out of the conquered Countries, to put into the common Treafury.
7. Hiempſal, Son of Bocchus King of Mauritania, gratified for his Fathers treachery in betraying Jugurth, with the Kingdom of Numidia; Relieved Marius in his exile.
8. Hiarbas, another of the Maurian faction, preferred to the Numidian Crown, but vanquiſhed and deprived by Pompey, at that time one of Sylla's Captains.
9. Hiempſal II. preferred by Pompey to this Kingdom.
10. Juba, the Son of Hiempſal the ſecond, who ſiding with Pompey againſt Cæſar in the Civil Wars, gave a great Overthrow to Curio, one of Cæſar's Lieutenants; Curio himſelf ſlain, his whole Army routed, ſuch as were taken Priſoners murdered in cold Blood. But being diſcomited by Cæſar, after Pompey's death, Numidia was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

Thus by the Fall of Carthage, and the death of Juba, came the whole Provinces of Africa Propria, and Numidia (containing the now Kingdom of Tunis) into the power of the Romans. Of which, the Nations of moſt note were the Nigritimi, on the Eaſtern parts of the Mediterranean; the Machini, near the leſſer Syrtis; the Libia- Phenices, and Medini, bordering upon Carthage; the Jonii, Navatre, and Ceretiſi, taking up all the Sea-coaſts of Numidia. Such as inhabited more Southwards on the back of theſe, not ſo much conſiderable: None of them to be ſtaid upon, but the Libya-Phenices, a mixt People of the old Libyans, and the neighbouring Egyptians. The memory of all of them fo deſaced by the violent inundation of the Arabians, that there is ſcarce any tract, or footſteps of them in all the Country. When conquered by the Saracens, they were at firſt ſubject to the Caliph, or Sultan of Cairoan: after the ſpoil whereof by the Arabians, ſubdued by Abdul Mumen King of Morocco, and by him added to that Kingdom. In the diſtractions of that State, made a peculiar Kingdom by ſome one of the Relicks of the Stock of the Almohads, who took unto himſelf the Title of King of Tunis, that City being his chief Seat. By him tranſmitted unto his Poſterity, till the days of our Grand-Fathers; when Muleaſſer, one of the youngelt Sons of Sultan Mahomet, having firſt murdered Maimon his eldeſt Brother, and put out the eyes of twenty of the reſt, uſurped the Sovereignty. Roſetta, the only one of thoſe Princes who eſcaped this Maſſacre, upheld a while by the Arabians, and by them deſerted, was feign to put himſelf into the hand of Barbaroſſa, King of Algiers, and Admiral of the Turkiſh Navy; by whom he was carried to Conſtantinople, and ſo preſented to Solyman, who under colour of reſtoring him to the Throne of his Fathers, conquered that Kingdom for himſelf; outed thereof not long after by Charles the Fifth, appearing in favour of Muleaſſer, An. 1535. But the Tyrant did not long enjoy his Ill-gotten Sovereignty, when his eyes were alſo put out by his own Son Amyda, and ſo committed to cloſe Priſon: Nor did Amyda enjoy it long, diſpoſſeſſed by Abdamelech his Fathers brother. To Abdamelech Mahomet his Son ſucceeded; who being a Child, and his Affairs ill governed by his Tutors, and other Miniſters of State, gave opportunity to Amyda to regain the Kingdom. During which broils the Turks again recovered footing, poſſeſſed themſelves of a great part of the Country, and forced Amyda into exile, who flying to Don John of Auſtria, then newly victorious at Lepanto, invited him to the Conqueſt of Tunis, but he got little by the bargain; for Don John having ſubdued the Kingdom, conferred the ſame on Mahomet the Brother of Amyda, and carried Amyda in bonds to the Iſle of Sicily, where he after died. Nor did Mahomet enjoy it long; for the next year the Turks beſieged and took the City of Tunis, with the ſtrong Fort of Galezza, with all the other Forts and Holds of that Kingdom, made ever ſince a Province of the Turkiſh Empire; the poor King being carried priſoner to Conſtantinople at the end of the War, which was in the year 1574. and the laſt of Selimus the Second.

2. TREMESEN, or ALGIERS,

The Kingdom of TREMESEN is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Amsaga, (now called Major) by which parted from the Kingdom of Tunis on the Weſt, with the Kingdom of Fefſe and Morocco, from which ſeparated by the River of Malutha, or Malva. So called from Tremesen, or Teluſine, the chief City of it. Called alſo the Kingdom of Algiers, from the City ſo named, ſometimes the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

In

In the flouriſh of the Roman Empire, it had the name of Mauritania Ceſarienſis: Mauritania, becauſe of the Kingdom of Juba King of Mauritania, of which more anon; Ceſarienſis, from Ceſarea the chief City of it, as that ſo called in honour of Auguſtus Ceſar, on whom the King hereof depended. More anciently the Kingdom of the Maſeſſyli, one of the moſt powerful Nations in all this tract, over whom reigned Syphax before-mentioned, called therefore by Strabo Maſeſſilia, with good propriety; and corruptedly, Maſſyilia.

The Kingdom extended in length from Eaſt to Weſt, for the ſpace of 380 miles, but of breadth not answerable; is generally of the ſame nature (as to the Soil and Air) with the reſt of Barbary: ſufficiently fruitful towards the Sea, more barren and uncomfortable in Southern parts. But meanly peopled, by reaſon of the continual ſpoils made by the Arabians, who poſſeſs the Deſerts; and the Cities of it much waſted by continual Wars. Nor have the People any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of theſe Africans alſo.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Gnagya, inconveniently ſeated, as paying their accuſtomed Tributes to the King of Tremesen, their natural Prince; and contribution to the Arabians, who are here ſo numerous and powerful, that the Kings themſelves of this ſmall Kingdom were ſain to buy their peace of them at exceſſive rates. 2. Tigedent, ſometimes famous, and abounding with men of learning; now almoſt forſaken, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of theſe Arabians. 3. Tebocrit, inhabited for the moſt part by Weavers. 4. Breſch, the Inhabitants whereof uſe to paint a black Croſs on their Cheek, and another on the Palm of their hands: the reaſon of which Cuſtom they are ignorant of, but ſome conceive it to be a remembrance of their Chriſtianity. 5. Ned-Roma, built, as the people do pretend, by the ancient Romans, as an Epitome, or Abridgement of that mighty City, to which it is ſaid to have ſome reſemblance; and that imported by the name, which ſignifieth in their Language, Like to Rome, Perhaps the ſame which Prology calleth Novum Oppidum, or the New-Town, then a Roman Colony. 6. Batha, once a great City, ſince decayed by Wars. 7. Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, ſaid to contain no fewer than 10000 Families. Powerful at Sea, and much infeſting with their Gallies the Coaſts of Spain; till taken from Ferdinand the Catholick by Peter of Navarr, An. 1506. ſince which time peopled and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards: In vain beſieged by the ſaid Turks, An. 1562. 8. Maſalquivier, a fair and ſpacious Haven on the ſame Sea alſo, and taken by the ſaid Peter of Navarr about the ſame time. 9. Hareſgol, in former times of much eſteem amongſt the Moors; but being deſtroyed by the King, or Sultan of Cairoan, it bequeathed its greatneſs unto Tremesen, which after grew into renown. 10. Tremesen, once adomed with many beautiful Mosques, and five ſumptuous Colledges, curiouſly wrought with Mosaick work. So populous, that there were reckoned in it 16000 Families; and ſo well fortified, that it held out ſeven years againſt Joſeph the great King of Fefſe; nor taken after that, though they were very much weakened by Abulthaſen, or Albobaen his Son and Succellor, under a ſiege of 30 Months. By thoſe, and the ſucceeding Troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in ſtrength and beauty. More ancient, 11. Siga, an African City, and a Roman Colony; the retiring place of Syphax and Bocchus, ſometimes Kings of this Country. 12. Aſenaria, another Colony of the Romans. 13. Jol, the Seat-Royal of King Bocchus, after ſuch time as this Country was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth: called afterwards Ceſarea, in honour of Auguſtus Ceſar, whole Feudataries the Kings hereof were then accounted; or as ſome ſay, in honour of Claudius Ceſar; by whom made a Colony: the Metropolis of it alſo when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Ceſarienſis. Situate in, or near the place where Oran now ſtands, which ſeemeth to have riſen out of the ruins of it. 14. Salde, a Roman Colony alſo, out of whole ruins roſe Algiers. 15. Algiers, by the Arabians called Gezair, now the chief City of this Kingdom, ſituate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven, to it; but neither great, nor ſafe from the North-winds, which do much annoy it. The buildings very beautiful; the publick Inns, Baſes and Mosques, exceeding ſumptuous; every Trade having a ſeveral place, or Street by it ſelf. But that which is the greateſt grace of it, is the ſituation of the Houſes ſtanding in even ſtreets one above another, upon the riſing of a ſteep Hill; ſo that the Windows of one Street, or row of houſing do all along over-look the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a moſt pleaſant Proſpect. A City not ſo large, as ſtrong; and not ſo ſtrong, as famous. Famous for being the receptacle and recreating place of the Turkiſh Pirates who domineer ſo infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great damage of the Merchants of all Nations that frequent thoſe Seas. Famous alſo for the Shipwrack which Charles the Fifth here ſuffered who beſieged this Town, loſt in the Haven of it at one Tempeſt, beſides an infinite number of Karvals and ſmall Boats, divers ſtrong Gallies, 140 Ships, a great many excellent pieces of Ordnance; ſuch a number of gallant Horſes, that in Spain the race of Horſes for Service had like to have been loſt for ever; and above half his Men. It long enjoyed the benefit of proprietary Princes, (but Homagers, or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremesen.) till ſuch time as Selimer and Mahomet, falling out, made the firſt, and that an irreparable Breach in the Government. So Selimer, to ſtrengthen his ſide, implored the aid of Hairaccius Babaroſſa, a noble Pirate; who taking his beſt advantage, ſlew the diſjointed Brethren, and ſetled himſelf in the Kingdom: which he had ſcarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Babaroſſa his Brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Bugia, and was ſo renewed for Martial prowels, that Solyman the Magnificent made him Lord High-Admiral of his Fleet: Which Office, when to the prejudice of Chriſtianity he had fortunately and for long time undergone, he died lamented, and made the Turk the Heir of his Kingdom; the Kingdom of Tremesen being made ſubject to the Turk much about that time. 16. Teuan, and 17. Sargel, ſituate Weſtward of Algiers; Towns of Trade and Pyrac.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpeditani, Taladſiti, Tbaluſiti, Malchubii, Maccurebi, Chitue, and others of as little note; the moſt predominant Nation being the Maſeſſyli, over whom (and in that over all the reſt) reigned Syphax, ſpoken of before, unfortunately famous for his tragical love to Sophoniba: For whole ſake, ſiding with the Carthaginians againſt the Romans, he was vanquiſhed and ſent Priſoner to Rome. His Kingdom given to Masniſſa King of the Numidiens, continued in his Line till the death of Jugurth, and then beſtowed upon the Kings of Mauritania; part of whole Kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperor Claudius. Won from the Romans by the Vandals, and then by the Saracens; it followed the fortunes of theſe laſt, while they ſtood and flouriſhed: But growing into many Diſtractions, and every Sultan, or Provincial Governour ſhifting for himſelf, it became a Kingdom, under the ſtile and title of the Kingdom of Tremesen. The Majesty of it much impaired by Abulthaſen, or Albobaen King of Fefſe, who brought it not long after under his Com.

Command. Recovering after some short time its former liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and so continued till the time of Abuchemen: who incurring the hatred of his People, because by his supine neglect the Spaniards had surpris'd and taken Oran and Masaguir, their two best Havens, made an easy passage for his Brother Abuzeit to the Regal Diadem. Abuzeit scarce well settled lost it to Hairadine Barbarossa, An. 1515. and he to Charles the Fifth, by whom Abuchemen was restored, becoming Homager and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his Successour Abdulla, weary of the Spanish Servitude, put himself under the protection of Solyman the Magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his decease, he left the possession of his Kingdom also: ever since subject to the Turks: whose Beglerbeg or Supreme Officer for these African Provinces, reside for the most part in Algiers, and hath 4000 Timariots under his Command.

3. FESSE, and MOROCCO.

These Kingdoms I have joyned in title, because united for the most part in the story and affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Estate under the Xeriffs of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of History, though of a different consideration in the way of Chorography.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly so called; divided anciently into Tingitana and Stitensis; Cæsariensis being naturally a Numidian Region, the Masæsyli and the rest of the Inhabitants of it, of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accounted any part thereof, till the death of Jugurth, when given to Bocchus King, hereof, in regard of his Treason, for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, whom that name was first given; the word Tania signifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britannia, Lusitania, Aquitania, and perhaps some others; and the name of Mauri given them am or maur which signifies amongst other things obscure or black, by reason of the darkness of their Complexion. Accompted in their times an hardy, but a bloody people; careless of life, fearless of death; implacable if once offended, their thirst of Revenge not to be quenched but by Blood. Mauri sunt genus hominum sùapte natura cedis avidissimam, nihilque non facile audens, & desperatis similis, contemptu, viz. mortis & periculorum. A Character given of them in Herodians time, and it holds good still: notwithstanding the intermixture of Goths and Saracens incorporated into the same Nation with them, and passing by the same name in the Writers of the middle time. Post hæc Mauri totam Hispaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam, &c. Dominio suo manciparunt, as my Author hath it; where by Moors we are to understand the Saracens, which came out of Africk.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1. Atlas Minor, so called, to difference it from the greater Mountain of that name, from which it is seven degrees more North, but shooteth, as that doth, with a Point or Promontory into the main Atlantic Ocean, on the South of Salla. 2. Durdus extended also into Cæsariensis. 3. Dur. 4. Phœra, of which little memorable. Rivers of most note, 1. Sala. 2. Salur. 3. Zilia. 4. Phuth. 5. Dur. 6. Cusa; all falling into the Atlantic: The last the same, as I conjecture, which our Modern Writers call Ommirabili. And for the rest, we must find amongst them, 1. Sisfelmol. 2. Tenst. 3. Niffir, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, were the Metagonites near the Straits, giving name unto Metagonitis an enjoining Promontory, the Succosi, Verbice, Nelliberes, Vacinate, Voli; and on the East-side the Mauri: These last participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Mauri: The Etymology as before. Their descent originally from Phut, the Son of Cham: whose memory preserved here in the River Phut. To that, the coming of the Canaanites, of the same extraction, served but as an Accessory. From those two Fountains sprang the whole Nation of the Mauri. Governed by Kings: the most considerable of which, when first known to the Romans, was that Bocchus, who betrayed Jugurth his Friend and Son-in-law, into the hands of the Romans: gratified for that Treachery with the Country of the Masæsyli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hiempsal one of his Sons was, not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole estates of Bocchus, Syphax, and Masfinissa, united by this means in the person of Juba, one of his Posterity, the most potent Prince of all these parts: who falling in the African War against Julius Cæsar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Crispus Sulpicius being made the first Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Ampisagus, he gave to Bocchus and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but defended of the old Regal Family. Bogud unluckily taking part with Mark Antony against Augustus, was by Bocchus, who declared for the other side, dispossessed of his party, that which now makes the Kingdom of Fesse in which confirmed for his good Service, by the conquering Emperour. Juba, the Son of the former Juba, grown famous for his eminent learning, was of a Prisoner made a Prince: invested after the death of Bocchus in all the Dominions of his Father, except Numidia: and by the bounty of Augustus, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the Marriage of Selene, Daughter of Anthony and Cleopatra. After whose death, and the death of Ptolemy their Son, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the Patrimony of the Roman Empire: divided into two Provinces, viz. Cæsariensis, betwixt the two Rivers Malva and Ampisaga, now the Kingdom of Tremesen; and Tingitana, from the River Malva to the Western Ocean. This last divided into Tingitana and Stitensis, (the River now called Ommirabili being the boundary betwixt them) by the Emperour Constantine who leaving Stitensis to the Diocesis of Africk, laid Tingitana (why, I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens, they became Members of those Empires; in the declining of the last, divided into the two Kingdoms of Fesse and Morocco, to the Description and History whereof, we now proceed.

3. MOROCCO.

The Kingdom of MOROCCO hath on the East, the River Malva, by which parted from Tremesen; on the West, the Atlantic Ocean; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, the Kingdom of Fesse: so called from Morocco, the chief City of it; in former times known by the name of Mauritania Stitensis, from Stitphir, in those times the principal City, as Procopius telleth us.

The Country said to be fruitful of all things necessary to life, pleasing to the sight, and sweet to smell: to particularly, well stored with Grain and Pulse, plentiful of Oyl, Honey, and Sugar, liberally furnished with Dates, Grapes, Figs, Apples, Pears, and all sorts of Fruits; exceedingly exceedingly well stocked with Cattel, but with Goats especially; whose skins afford a very excellent kind of Leather, and of their fleece materials for the finest Chamlets, which are here made in most of their Cities. The whole Country divided commonly into these seven parts, viz. 1. Guzzula. 2. Sus. 3. Morocco specially so called. 4. Hea. 5. Haçora. 6. Ducala, and 7. Tedler.

1. GUZZULA, the most Southern Province of this Kingdom, hath on the East, some part of Tremesen; on the West, Sus or Susa, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains called Ida; on the South, Mount Atlas; and on the North, part of the Territory of Morocco, and the rest of Susa. The Country rich in Mines of Brasse, Iron and other Metals, of which are made many Uensils for domestic uses, exported hence into other places.

The People Barbarous and rude, not easily acknowledging subjection to the Kings of Morocco, and at continual Wars amongst themselves, except only for two months in the year: which being the time of their public Marts, and then much visited with Strangers from other Countreys, they lay aside their private quarrels, and cheerfully entertain such Merchants as repair unto them. Walled Towns here are not any, but some very great Villages: the chief whereof, 1. Guzzula, on the Northern bank of the River Sus, whence the name of the Province. 2. Tagrifa, not far off, but on the other side of the water, towards the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Tedza, inclining towards the borders of Morocco. Of these nothing memorable.

2. West of Guzzula, lieth the Province of SUS or SUSA, so called from the River Sus, (with which well watered) or giving name to it. Rich in Gold-Mines, the cause of continual Wars amongst the people: well stored with Sugar-Canes, which the inhabitants know neither how to boil nor purify; and on the Sea-shores, furnished with great plenty of Amber, bought by the Portugals of the people at an easie rate. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Cape D'Aguer, on a Promontory so called; a place of such importance to the Portugals, that the taking of it by Mahomet then King of Sus (after of Morocco also) made them quit all the Forts which they had in this Country. 2. Ta-gavist, a rich and wealthy Town; the greatest in the Province, and situate in a large Plain near the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Tenst, situate in a spacious Plain also, but on the Banks of the River Sus: divided into three parts, each a mile from the other: which joyned together, make the exact figure of a Triangle. 4. Messa or Massa, seated at the influx of the said River on the Promontory called Cape Gilan; three Towns in one; not much the better for the Sea, and but ill befriended by the Land, as seated in a barren and unpleasing soil; remarkable for a fair Temple, the Beams and Rafters of which are made of the bones of Whales, which usually are left dead on the shore. 5. Taradant, a large Town, built by the Africans, before the conquest of this Country by the Goths or Saracens: the Residence of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Fesse, when the Lords of this Kingdom; but more enriched of late by the Merchants of France and England, who have here a Staple for their Sugars. By this Commerce, the people made more civil than in other parts of this Province: the whole number of them thought to amount to 3000 Families. 6. Tedza, more within the Land, bigger than Taradant, but less wealthy: the chief Ornament of it being a fair Mahometan Temple, liberally furnished with Priests and Readers of that Law, at the common charge. Not far from hence the Hill Abchisa, where it snoweth at all seasons of the year, and yet the people go extrem thin in the sharpest Winter. Nothing else memorable of this Province, but that a little before the Xeriff made himself King of Morocco, it had the title of a Kingdom; and gave the title of King to Mahomet the second Xeriff, made King of Taradant, or Sus, before he dispossessed his Brother of the Crown of Morocco.

3. Northward of Sus, lieth the Province of MO or ROCCO, specially so called, the most fruitful and best peopled part of Barbary; not much unlike to Lombardy in wealth and pleasures; the very Hills thereof as fruitful as the Vallies in other places. To which fertility of the soil, the Rivers, 1. Tenst, and 2. Affinnad, give no small advantages, though much defaced by frequent incursions of the Portugals, who have extremely spoiled this Country. Places of most observation in it, 1. Delgumaba, built upon a very high Mountain, and environed with many other Hills; at the foot whereof the Fountain of Affinnad. 2. Elgiumba, a small, but ancient Town, on the River Siffesa. 3. Tenst, a small Town upon Affinnad. 4. Imizizim, situate on a Rock; spacious and seated near the entrance of a narrow way leading into Guzzula. 5. Tenezze, an old Town but very well fortified. 6. Agnet, upon the River Tenst, all ruined except the Fort, and some scattered houses: formerly second unto none but Morocco (from which distant 24 miles) the Hills and Vallies about it adorned with pleasant Gardens, fruitful Vineyards, a fair River, and Fields so fertile, that they yield a fifty-fold increase. 7. Sestina, where they have snow at all times of the year. 8. Tennella, an Heretical Town, differing in opinion from the rest of the Mahometan Sects, and so well-grounded in their Tenets, that they challenge all their Opposites to a Disputation. 9. Hantera, very full of Jews. 10. Morocco, the principal of this Province, and of all the Kingdom, situate in or near the place where once stood the Bocanum Hæmorum of Ptolemy. Once reckoned amongst the greatest Cities of the World, at what time it was said to contain 100000 Families: since so defaced and wasted by the depredations of the Arabians, and the removal of the Sea-Royal to Fesse, when that Kingdom was in the Ascendant, that it is hardly a third part so great as formerly. The Founder of it Joseph, surnamed Tefsinu, the second King of the House of the Almoravides; but much enlarged and beautified by Abdul-Mumen, one of his successors. The principal Buildings in it, are the Church and the Castle: the Church or Mosque, one of the greatest in the World, adorned with many sumptuous Pillars brought out of Spain, when the Moors had the possession of that Country; and beautified with a stately Steeple, in compass at the bottom an hundred yards, and of so great height, that the Hills of Azazi (one of the branches of the lesser Atlas) being 150 miles distant, may be thence easily discerned: the Castle very large and strong, on a Tower whereof stands three Globes made of pure Gold, weighing 130000 Barbary Ducats: which divers Kings have gone about to take down, and convert into money, but all defisted in regard of some cross accident or other which befell them in it; inasmuch that the common people think them to be guarded with Spirits.

4. North of Morocco, on the further side of Tenst and Affinnad, is the Province of HEA: rough, Mountainous and Woody, yet watered with many pleasant Rills, and would be plentiful enough in all commodities, if the Industry of the people were not wanting to it. A sort of people little better than merely barbarous, without all Arijs, either Ingenious or Mechanick; except some Chirurgion, whom they keep to circumcise their Children; and some few Teachers of their Law, which can hardly read. Their Food a Papp, made of Barley-meal, which instead of Spoons, they claw with their Fingers; the Ground they eat on, serving for Table, Stools and Napkins.

Napkins. At endless feud with one another, yet so kind to Strangers, that in one of their chief Towns, called Tedneth, the Gentlemen used to call lots who should entertain them. A Town of good esteem in former time, situate in a large plain on the River Tessit; but in the year 1514, almost wholly abandoned, upon a rumor, that the Arabians had a purpose to fell it to the Portugals, 2. Teculeth, seated on a good Port, and once very well traded, there being in it at that time 1000 Families, some Hospitals, and a beautiful Mosque; in the year 1514, destroyed by the Portugals, 3. Tenent, a Sea-Town in the hands of the Portugals, 4. Elmuriden, a strong piece, as the name importeth, the word signifying the Disciples Fort, so called, because a certain Heretic in the Law of Mahomet (whereof this Kingdom yields good plenty) retired hither with his Disciples; fortified it, and defended it against the King of Morocco, 5. Iguilinguigul, seated on the top of all, and fortified by the Country-people (or old African Moors) against the Arabians, 6. Tefelme, beautified with a pretty Haven, but not capable of any great shipping, 7. Tagelst, a den of Thieves and Cut-Throats, 8. Tesjedelt, as courteous and civil, as the other barbarous; At the Gates whereof a Guard is set for entertainment of Strangers; whom, if they have no acquaintance there, they are to provide of Accommodation in some Gentlemans house, where it costs them nothing but thanks, and some kind acknowledgment.

5. Northwards of Hea, stands the Province of D V-CALA, bounded on the West, with the main Atlantic; and on the North, with the River Ommirobili, by which parted from the Kingdom of Fesse. Of three days journey long, about two in breadth; thrusting into the Ocean with a craggy Promontory, which some of the Antients called Ulagium, others the Promontory of the Sun, but by the Christians of Europe called the Cape of Cantins, by the Moors, Gebelebudic. Populous enough, the quality of the men considered, ignorant both of Letters and all good manners: Yet not so populous as it hath been in former times, much of the Country being abandoned for fear of the Portugals, who have taken all their best Towns on the Sea-coasts, and destroyed the rest. Amongst these, 1. Azafi, at the foot of the Hills so called; surprised by the Portugals, under colour of making a Storehouse for their Merchandise, 2. Azame, seated at the mouth of the River Ommirobili, the furthest Town of this Kingdom towards that of Fesse, the people whereof were extremely addicted unto Sodomy, till subdued by the Portuguese, 3. Elmedina, once the Metropolis of this Province; but now for fear of those Invaders, in a manner desolated, 4. Conte, of the foundation of the Gobers, 5. Tic, built by the old African Moors, but possessed by the Portugals, 6. Subeit, 7. Tencroscot, 8. Centpus, 9. Terga, 10. Culabuan; all sacked and ruined by the same people, when they took Azamor (the Key of this Province) which was in the year 1513. At which time it is said, that Mahomet King of Fesse passing through this Province with an Army, to repress these insolencies, at every Altar (whereof here are many in the Roads) kneeled, and said unto this effect: Lord, thou knowest that the cause of my coming into this wild place, is only to free this people of Duccala from the rebellious and wicked Arabians, and their cruel Enemies the Christians, which purpose, if thou dost not approve of, let the punishment fall upon my Person, but not upon my Followers, who deserve it not. With greater piety than could be looked for from a blind Mahometan.

6. Eastward of Duccala, along the banks of Ommirobili, lieth the Province of HAS CORA, a fruitful Country, intermixt of rich Fields and pleasant Gardens; furnished with most sorts of choicest fruits; and amongst others, Grapes of such extraordinary greatness, that they are said to be as big as a Pullets Egg. Good store of Honey it hath also, and some Mines of Iron: Inhabited by a more civil people than any of the rest, and consequently more deserving to rich a soil. Places of most importance in it, 1. Ezo, an old town, situate on a lofty Mountain, 2. Elvinina, of a later erection, 3. Alendine, conquered for the King of Fesse by a Merchant, whose Paramour the Prince or Governour hercof had taken from him: Situate in a pleasant, but little valley, but begirt with Hills, and well inhabited by Gentlemen, Merchants, and Artificers, 4. Tagodast, on the top of an Hill, environed with four others of equal height.

7. More East, betwixt Hafcora and the River Malvi, is the Province of TEDLES, bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Tremesen; and on the North, with that of Fesse, from which last parted by the River Servi which on the North-east border of it meets with Ommirobili. The whole Province in form Triangular, of no great either length or breadth, but sufficiently fruitful, and well inhabited for the bigness. Some Towns it hath, and those not meanly populous for so small a Province; the chief whereof, 1. Tesza, built by the old African Moors, and beautified with many Mahometan Mosques; the Walls of which made of a kind of Marble, which they here call Tesza, whence the name of the Town, 2. Efza, seated on the River Ommirobili, where it receiveth that of Deyme; which rising out of Atlas Minor, and passing by Tesza last mentioned, doth here lose its name, 3. Chybitte, renowned for the stout resistance, which it hath made from time to time against those of Fesse, 4. Ethiad, abounding in all sorts of Victual.

These Provinces make up the Kingdom of Morocco: infested miserably while it remained subject to the Kings of Fesse, by the Portugals on the one side, and the wild Arabians on the other. Concerning which last people we are to know, that when the Saracens conquered Africk, they contented themselves with the Command, and left unto the Natives the possession of it, forbidding the Arabians (with whose course of life they were well acquainted) to pass over Nilus. Elcain, the last of the Successors of Hucha in the Kingdom of Cairoan, having subdued the rest of Africk, and added it unto his Estate, passed forwards into Egypt, which he had conquered also; assuming to himself the title of Caliph: But in his absence, the Lieutenant, whom he left in Africk, rebelled against him; and acknowledging the Caliph of Bagdet for his lawful Lord, received of him for his good Service, the Kingdom of Africa. Elcain, thus disposed of Africk, despairing to recover his lost Estate, and yet not willing that it should be useful unto his enemies, licensed the Arabians for a Ducat a man, to pass over the Nile with their Tents and Families. On which agreement, almost halfe the Tribes of Arabia Deserta, and many of Arabia Felix, went into Africa; where they sacked Tripolis, Cairoan, and the rest of the principal Cities: tyrannizing over all Barbary, till restrained at last by Joseph the Founder of Morocco, (of whom more hereafter.) Since which time, though they lost their unlimited Empire, yet they still swarm like Locusts over all the Country, and neither apply themselves to Tillage, or building Houses, or any civil course of life; nor suffer those to live in quiet, who would otherwise manure and improve the Country. The rest of the Story of these Kingdoms we shall have anon, when we have taken Survey of the Kingdom of Fesse.

4. FESSE.

4. FESSE.

The Kingdom of FESSE is bounded on the South, with the Realm of Morocco; on the North, with part of the Atlantic and Mediterranean; on the East, with Malva, parting it from the Kingdom of Tremesen; and on the West, with the Atlantic wholly.

It takes this name from Fesse, the chief City of it. Known to the ancients by the name of Mauritania Tingitana, so called from the City of Tingis (now Tanger) then of greatest note. Called also Hispania Transfretana, Spain on the other side of the Sea, because a part of that Dioecsis: and by some (Pliny, amongst others) Bogudiana, from Bogud one of the Kings hercof, to whom given by Cesar; by others Ampelusia, from its abundance of Vines. The Inhabitants of it, by the Spaniards, now called Alarbes.

The Country of good temperature in regard of the Air, if not in some places of the coldest; but very unequally disposed of in respect of the Earth; here being in it many Desarts and large Forests, not well inhabited; but intermixt with many rich and delightful Fields. So that taking the climate in the gross, it may be said to be a rich and flourishing Country, hardly inferior unto any. The particularities of which are to be considered in the Characters of the several Provinces, into which it now stands divided, that is to say, 1. Temesna, 2. Fesse, specially so called, 3. Elchaw, or Chaw, 4. Garet, 5. Afgara, 6. Errisse, and 7. Habat.

1. TEMESNA hath on the South, the River Ommirobili; on the West, the Ocean; extended in length from West to East 80 miles, and in breadth 70. A Champaign Country, very level; and once so populous, that it contained 40 Cities, and 300 Castles; most of them ruined by the Wars, and the wild Arabians, the greater destroyer of the two. The principal of those remaining, 1. Teyeger, near the River Ommirobili, once of greater note, but now inhabited only by poor people, and a few Smiths compelled to live there for the making of Iron Instruments to manure the Land, 2. Thagia, on the course of the said River; much visited by those of Fesse, for the Sepulchre of an holy Prophet, who was there interred; the Fessans going thither in Pilgrimage with such numbers of Men, Women, and Children, that their Tents seem sufficient to lodge an Army, 3. Adendum, more towards the Sea, but on a small River called Gurila; well walled, and fenced on one side by a Lake or Pool, 4. Amisa, on the shore of the Atlantic, once of great Trade, and well frequented, both by the English and the Portugals, by which last destroyed, 5. Munfor, destroyed in like manner by the wild Arabians, 6. Nichouda, situate in so fertile and rich a soil, that the Inhabitants would have given a Camels burden of Corn for a pair of Shoes. Nothing now left of it but one Steeple, and a piece of the Wall, 7. Rabut, or Rabut, built by Munfor, or Almunfor, a King of Morocco, near the mouth of the River Burgrug; and by him made one of the best peopled Towns in Africk; built after the model of Morocco, but now so wasted that there are not in it above 500 Families; most of the ground within the Walls being turned into Meadows, Vineyards, and Gardens, 8. Fanzara on the River Suba, the Subur of Protolmy, falling not far off into the other, 9. Mobmora, in the same tract also, once possessed by the Spaniards; near which the Portugals received a great defeat by the King of Fesse, for want of good intelligence betwixt them and the Castilians, 10. Salla, the Sala of Protolmy, by the Inhabitants called Zale, or ordinary Maps by mistaking, Cale; at the mouth of the River Rebato, which the ancient Writers called Sala, as they named the Town, Beautified by King Almansor (who is here interred) with a stately Palace, a goodly Hospital, a fair Temple, and a Hall of Marble, cut in Mosaic works; intended for the burial-place of his Posterity. A Town much traded formerly by the Christian Merchants of England, Flanders, Genoa, and the Gulf of Venice. Took by the Spaniards, An. 1287. and within ten days lost again; and of late times made a nest of Pirates, as dangerous to those which sailed in the Ocean, as the Pirates of Algiers to the Mediterranean. Whole insolencies the King of Morocco not able to suppress for want of shipping, desired the aid of his Majesty Charles, King of Great Britain; by whom the Town being blocked up by Sea, and besieged to the Landward by the King of Morocco, it was at last compelled to yield; the works thereof dismantled, the Pirates executed, and 300 Christian Captives sent unto his Majesty, to be by him restored to their former liberty; to the great honour of his Majesty, and the English Nation, An. 1632.

As for the Fortunes of this Province, they have been somewhat different from the rest of this Kingdom: trained by a factious Prophet to revolt from the King of Fesse and Morocco, whose estate they very much endangered; sending an Army of 50000 men to the Gates of Morocco. But being discomfited by Joseph, surnamed Telephus, he followed them into their own Country, which he wasted with great cruelty for ten months together; consuming above a Million of them, and leaving the Province to the mercy of Wolves and Lions. Repopled afterwards by Almansor with Arabian Colonies: Given about fifty years after that, by the Princes of the Marine Family, to more civil Inhabitants; by whom the Arabians were expelled, and the Province consequently reduced into some good order.

2. Westward of Temesna lieth the Province of FESSE, properly and specially so called. Extended in length from the River Burgrug to the River Inavis, for the space of 100 miles. A very fruitful Province, well stored with Cattel, and exceeding populous; the Villages hereof as big as the better sort of Towns in other places; but contrary to the custom of other Countries, better inhabited on the Hills than among the Vallies; the people making choice of the Mountains for their habitation, as places of Defence and Safety, but husbanding the Vallies which lie nearest to them. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Marcamed, on the River Inavis, in a goodly Plain, but in a manner all ruined, except the Wall, 2. Gualisti, memorable for the Sepulchre of Idris, the first Founder of Fesse, 3. Petra Rossa, where they have some Lions so tame, that they will gather up bones in the Streets like Dogs, without hurting any body, 4. Agla, where they have brought their Lions to so strange a cowardice, that they will run away at the voice of a Child; whence a Brachadecchio is called proverbially a Lion of Agla, 5. Pharao, by reason of the name, thought by the vulgar to be founded by some King of Egypt; but the Latine Inscriptions therein found, declare it to have been some work of the ancient Romans, 6. Maquille, of more antiquity than note, 7. Fesse, the Metropolis of this Province, and the chief of the Kingdom, supposed to be the Volubilis of Protolmy, but much enlarged and beautified by some new Accessions. Situate for the most part upon little Hills, and watered by a pleasant and gentle River (derived by Aqueducts and Conducts, into all parts of the City) which they now call the River of Fesse, conceived by some learned men to be that which was anciently called Phuth, from Phut the first Planter of the African Nations. A City so beautiful and well seated, as if Nature and Art had plaid the Waxons, and brought this forth as the fruit of their Dalliance. The Founder, or enlarger of it, one of the Race of the false Prophet Mahomet, his name Idris, who built on the East-side of the River that on the West-side, being the Work of one of his Sons: both so increasing, that at last they were joined together. To these the Suburbs being added, have made a third. The whole called Fesse, from Fiz, an Arabic word signifying Gold; whereof great quantity was found, when they digged the Foundations. Divided into three parts by the River, all of which contain 28000 households, and 700 Mosques, or Saracenic Temples: the chief of which is Carné, or Cayven, being a mile and a half in compass. It hath 31 Gates, great and high; the Roof 150 yards long, and 80 broad: round about, divers Porches, containing 40 yards in length, and 30 in breadth; under which, the publick store-houses of the Town. About the Walls are Pulpits of divers forts, wherein the Masters of their Law read unto the people such things as they think to pertain to their Salvation. The Revenue hereof is 200 Ducats a day of the old Rents; for so it was, An. 1526. when Leo Afer wrote. The Merchants have here a Court, or Exchange, inclosed with a strong Wall, with 12 Gates, and 15 Streets. There is also a Colledge called Amardoc, a most curious and delicate Building. It hath three Cloysters of admirable beauty, supported with eight square Pillars of divers colours; the Roof curiously carved, and the Arches of Mosaque work, of Gold and Azure. The Gates of Brass, fair wrought: and the doors of the private Chambers of inlaid work. This Colledge did cost the Founder, King Abuchenen, or Abu Henen 380000 Crowns. Here are finally laid to be in it many Hospitals, little inferior to the Colleged in building and beauty, all very liberally endowed; and about an hundred Hot Baths well built, with four Halls to each, and certain Galleries without, where they put off their Cloaths when they go to bathe themselves: and besides these 200 Inns, built three stories high, each of them having 120 Chambers in it, with Galleries before all the doors for their Guests to walk in.

3. Eastward of the Territory of Fesse, lieth the Province of CHAUS, extended in length from the River Gurgunt, or Gurgigant, by which parted from Tremesen and Fesse, to the borders of Tremesen, for the space of 190 miles, and 170 miles in breadth. So that it is thought to contain one third part of the whole Kingdom: but meanly populous for the bigness, the Country being poor and barren, and the Inhabitants fierce and warlike; more given to prosecute their quarrels, than to Trade, or Tillage. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Ham Lishan, a Town built in the more Mountainous parts of the Country, by the old Africans. Famous for the Temple of an Idol here worshipped; to which at certain times men and women resorted in the night; where, after their devotions ended, and the Candles put out, every man lay with the woman he first touched; the extract platform of the Family of Love, if all be true which is told us of them; and anciently, but falsely, charged on the Primitive Christians. 2. Tezzer, adorned with three Colleged, many Baths and Hospitals, and some beautiful Temples: one of them larger, though not fairer than that of Fesse; in both Towns men of the same Trade have a Street by themselves, for greatness, wealth, and numbers of people; esteemed the third City of this Kingdom. 3. Dubda, an ancient Town, but not much observable. 4. Turri, seated on the top of an Hill, in the midst of an Plain, but compassed about with Deserts. 5. Beni Jeseiten, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greatest bravery and wealth consisteth: the women here wearing Iron-Rings for Ornaments to their Ears and Fingers. 6. Tezerigi, subject to the Arabians. 7. Adagiz, the most Eastern Town of all the Region; situate in a Peninsula made by the confluence of Mahuse and Mahus. In this Country is the head of the River Subur, which rising out of a great Lake in the Woods of the Mountain Seliga, and receiving many lesser waters, with a large and Navigable stream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northwards of Chaus lieth the Region called GARET, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean; and reaching East and West, from the River Mahus, where it bordereth on Tremesen, to that of Nochor, where it toucheth on Errif and Afcara. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth but twenty. The soil in most places dry and desert, like the Sands of Numidia: especially all along the banks of the Mahus; near unto which from the Mediterranean to Chaus, it is wholly Desart and unpeopled, not well inhabited in the most fruitful parts of it, being full of Mountains; the worse for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, possessed of 1. Chefisa, and 2. Medela, two chief Towns hereof. 3. Pennon de Velez, by some called Velez de Gomer, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains; built by the Africans or Goths; but now in the possession of the Spaniards also. 4. Jafferin, situate on the Sea also, founded by the Mahometans of the Marine Family. 5. Tezzora, standing on an Hill, to which there is but one passage only.

5. Westward of Garet lieth ASCARA, extended from thence unto the Ocean: Shut up on the South-East-side with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaron, and Gomara, out of which last runneth the River Lucus, called Lix by Ptolomy. The Air hereof very temperate, and the soil as fertile; supplying with the over-plus of its Commodities the Mountainous parts of Fesse, and the Deserts of Garet. Once full of Towns, till ruined and destroyed by the wars. A Monument whereof, 1. Gimba, built by the ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditch. 2. Larache, in Latine Larissa, the Lix of Ptolomy, situate at the mouth of the Lix or Lucus, and furnished with a good Port, but of difficult entrance; garrisoned when possessed by the Moors with 300 light Horse, and 300 Harcabussiers; but better fortified than before, since possessed by the Spaniards, into whose hands it was put by Muley-Sheik King of Morocco and Fesse, when wrought by Muley Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the Civil Wars betwixt them. 3. Cusar Eleabir, given by Almanser to a poor Fisher, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his Cottage, when he lost his Company in hunting: Adorned with many Temples, one Colledge of Students, and a stately Hospital.

6. On the North of Afcara is the Province of EL-HABAT, or HABAT, coasting along the Atlantic Ocean to the mouth of the Streits, in length 100 miles, about 80 in breadth. The Country very plentiful of all manner of necessaries, and very well peopled; the Mountains which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times replenished with many Cities, both of the Foundation of the Goths, Romans and old African Moors, now much diminished by the Wars. Those of most note, 1. Azagen, the Inhabitants whereof by an ancient privilege granted by the King of Fesse, were licensed to drink wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a Mountain near the River Guarga, about 35 Leagues from Fesse; and garrisoned with 400 Horse for fear of the Portugals, who sometimes make their excursions thither. 2. Bafra, once a walled Town, and the walls still standing, but very little or no Town in them. 3. Homa, sometimes well peopled, but now little inhabited, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Portugals, who command that Coast. 4. Banirendo, in a manner deserted for the same reason. 5. Alcazar, to distinguish it from another of this name, called Alcazar Guer, taken together with Arzilla and Tangier by Alfonso the fifth of Portugal, Anno 1470. Nigh to which Town the three Kings, Kings, Sebastian of Portugal, Mahomet and Abdelmelech, Competitors for this Kingdom were slain in a day. There was also slain at the same time, the great English Rebel Stuckley, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, Anno 1570. Where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church; by whom appointed for the Conquest of Ireland, and for that end furnished with 800 Souldiers paid by the King of Spain; and by his Holiness created Marquis of Leinster, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viscount Marragh, and Baron of Ross. Thus fortified, he began his Journey towards Ireland, Anno 1578. but hearing of these Wars, and desirous to make a party in them, he lost all his honour with his life. 6. Arzilla, a Sea-Town, 70 miles distant from the Streits, now possessed by the Portugals. 7. Tanger, a great Town, and very ancient, distant from the Streits about 30 miles, belonging to the Portugals also. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Canaanites, and by them built at their first coming thither, when they fled from the Sword of Yosubus testified by the two Pillars erected near this City, which before we spoke of: and from that name caused all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingitana. Made afterwards a Colony by the Emperour Claudius, who named it Traductus Julia; but the old name prevailed, and out-lived the new. Near to this Town, it is said, that Hercules overcame Anteus, a monstrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was an high Mountain called Abyla, opposite to which in the Coast of Spain, was another called Calpe, on which the said Hercules placed his so famous Pillars. 8. Septa, or Seuta, situate on, or near that Mountain, unfortunately memorable for giving the title of an Earl to Julian, who first brought the Saracens into Spain; beautified in the following times with many Temples, Colleged, and Learned men: taken by the Portugals with the help of the English, An. 1415. and now in the possession of the King of Spain. The only Town of all the Estates of Portugal, which in the late revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. 9. Julia Constantia, so called, and made a Roman Colony by Augustus Caesar. 10. Laxus, a Roman Colony of the plantation of Claudius, in old times said to have been the Court or Palace of the Giant Anteus. Not far from whence (that Anteus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the habitation of Geryon, as proper a Gentleman as himself, in a small Island of the Streits, called Geryonis Insula, and by some Erythia.

7. Eastward of Habat is the Province of ERRIF, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joyneth to Habat, as far as to the River Nochor, (supposed to be the Melechab of the Ancient Writers) by which parted from Garet: A Mountainous and cold Country in respect of the rest of Barbary, full of Woods and Forrests; but plentiful enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives; and not without some herds of Goats, though otherwise not well stored with Cattel. In length 140 miles, in breadth 40 only; inhabited by a race of valiant men, but excessive Drunkards. The Towns hereof not many, though full of Villages: The chief of which, 1. Mazagon, near unto the Streits; a very strong Town, and of great importance, but possessed by the Portugals; in vain besieged by Abdalla the first, with an Army of 200000 men, An. 1562. 2. Mexenime, seated on a Mountain. 3. Beni Ters, of like situation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Professors of the Mahometan Law, who here publicly taught it, as in an University; the Inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all exactions. Destroyed together with the Library of it, by some wicked Tyrant, An. 1509. the books therein being valued at 4000 Ducats. 4. Terga, 5. Togassa, 6. Gebbe; of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of these two Kingdoms, we must next look upon them also in the general story, from the time of the Saracenic conquest; first let unto this Country by the Treason of Julian, and for a while subject to the great Caliph, or Successor of Mahomet; afterwards to the King, or Caliph, of Cairo, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, these Provinces with the rest were afflicted by them till the rising of the Kingdom of Fes; begun in the person of Idris, of the blood of Mahomet, by Hali, and his Daughter Fatima, commonly called the Family of Alawes; who persecuted by the opposite Faction, fled into Mauritania; where he grew into such reputation, that in short time he got both Swords into his hands. Dying about the 185 year of the Hegira, he left his power unto his Son, of the same name with his Father, the first Founder of Fesse. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the water, one of his Sons (but his name I find not) built another City, which in time grew into emulation with it; and railing by that means a faction in the house of Idris, which occasioned the subversion of the Kingdom of Fesse, after it had continued in the Family of the Alawes, for the space of 270 years. The estate hereof first weakened by Abu Tefin, or Tesifen, of the house of the Almoravides, or Lautunes, and so weakened, that he thereby gave an opportunity to Yosub Aben Tefin, or Telephine, his Son and Successor, then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the City of Morocco, to suppress that Family: Who killing the Princes of that Line, and 30000 of their Subjects, brake down the Walls which parted the two Cities from one another, united them by Bridges, and so made them one. Drawn into Spain by the diffension of the Saracens there amongst themselves, he added all which they held in that Kingdom unto his Dominions, held by his Successors, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: the Catalogue of which Princes, called the House or Family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almohades is this which followeth.

The Kings, or Miramomolims of MOROCCO.

A. Ch.

1068

1. Tefin, Tesifen, or Telephine, the first of the Almoravides that reigned in Africk.
2. Yosub, surnamed Tefinus, the Son of Tefin, founded Morocco, subdued the Kingdom of Fesse; and added the Estate of the Moors in Spain unto his Dominions, An. 1091.
3. Hali, the Son of Yosub.
4. Albo-Hali, the Son of Hali, supposed to be the Publisher of the works now extant in the name of Avicenna, compiled at his command by some of the most learned Arabian Doctors; vanquished and slain by

5. Addelmon, or Abdel-Mumen, the first of the Almohades; of obscure Parentage, but raised to so great power by the practices of Almohade, a juggling Prophet of those times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the Kingdom of Almoravides both in Spain, and Africk, An. 1150. to which he also added the Realm of Tunis and Cairo.

6. Joseph II. or Aben Joseph, the Son of Abdelmon.
7. Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, surnamed Almansor, a puissant and prudent Prince, of whom much before: Son of Joseph II.
8. Mahomet, surnamed Enasir, or the Green, the Brother of Almansor. Discomfited by the Christians of Spain, at the Battel of Sierra Morena, An. 1214. lost his Dominions, there being slain in this Battel 200000 of the *Moor*s, as some Writers say; who add; that the Spaniards for two days together burnt no other Fewel but the Pikes, Lances, and Arrows of their slaughtered Enemies, yet could not consume the one half of them.
9. Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Enasir, by his Son Buxaf: slain at the Siege of Tremezzir, a Castle of Tremesen, which was held against him.
10. Almoracada, a Kinsman of Caid Arrax, outed of his Estate, and slain by Budebuz, of the same house of the Almoracides.
11. Budebuz, the last of the house of the Almoracides, settled in his estate by the aid and valour of Jacob Aben-Joseph the new King of Fesse: but dealing faithlessly and ungratefully with him, he was warred on by the said Jacob Ben-Joseph, vanquished and slain in battel; the sovereignty by that means translated unto those of the Marine Family, An. 1270. or thereabouts.

But before I do proceed further with this Marine Family, I must again look back upon Mahomet Enasir, whom I conceive (the computation of the time being to agreeable) to be the Admiralus Marmelius mentioned by Matthew Paris, to whom our King John, An. 1214. is said to have sent such a degenerate and unchristian Embassy. Which strange name of Admiralus Marmelius, was by that good Writer unhappily stumbled at instead of Miramolim (which also is corrupted from Anir Elmunenim, that is to say, Principes Fidelium.) An Attribute which the great Kings of the *Saracen-Moor*s did much affect, and retained it long time amongst them. The Story this, King John being overlaid by his Barons Wars, and the invasions of the French, sent Embassadors to this great Prince (then ruling over a great part of Spain and Barbary) for aid against them; offering to hold his Kingdom of him, and to receive withall the Law of Mahomet. The Moor exceedingly offended at it, told the Embassadors, that he had lately read the Book of Paul's Epistles; which he liked so well, that were he now to choose a Religion, he would have embraced Christianity before any other: But every man (saith he) ought to die in his own Religion; the greatest thing which he disliked in that Apostle, being (as he said) the changing of the Faith in which he was born. This said, he called unto him Robert of London Clerk, one of the Embassadors (a man ill chose for such an Errand, if the tale be true,) of whom he demanded the Form of the English Government, the situation and wealth of the Country, the manners of the People, the life and person of the King: in which being satisfied, he grew into such a dislike of that King, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. This is the substance of the story in Matthew Paris: But you must know he was a Monk, to which brood of men King John was held for a mortal Enemy, and therefore this Relation not to pass for Gospel.

But whatsoever opinion King John might have of the power of this King to whom 'tis possible enough he might send for aid, certain it is, that he was grown so low in his Reputation, after the loss of that great Battel in Sierra Morena, that not only the *Spanish Moor*s withdrew their Obedience from him (as a Prince unable to support them, but those of Africk did revolt also from the Crown of Morocco (extremely weakened by that blow) after his decease. For Gomara saith Aben Zein of the house of Abdalla, seized upon Tremesen, in the time of Caid Arrax his Successor; as Bucar Aben Merin of the noble Marine Family (descended from a Christian stock) did the like at Fez. Settled in his estate by the vanquishment of Almoracada the Miramolim, he left it to Hija his Son, under the Governance and protection of a Brother of his called Jacob Ben-Joseph. But the young Prince dying shortly after, left his new Kingdom to his Uncle: who aiding Budebuz (before mentioned) dispossessed Almoracada of the Realm of Morocco: and afterwards having just cause of quarrel against this Budebuz, invaded his dominions, overcame and slew him; and once again transferred the Imperial Seat from Morocco to Fez. In him began the Empire of the Marine Family, who held their Residence in Fez, as the first Seat of their Power; Morocco being governed by an under-King, the rest of the Provinces of that Kingdom Cantoned into several States; the Sea-coasts in some tract of time being gained by the Portugals. And in his Line (but with great confusions) the Royal Dignity remained till the year 1500, and somewhat after. Three only were of note in the course of business, that is to say, 1. Jacob Ben-Joseph, the Advancer of the Marine Family to the Realm of Morocco; the Establisher thereof in that of Fesse; and of great power and influence in the affairs of the *Moor*s in Spain, where he held Algazir and Tariffe, Towns of great importance: slain treacherously by one of his familiar Friends, at the siege of Tremesen. 2. Aben Joseph the second, a younger Son of the first Joseph (the issue of Bucalo his elder Brother being quite extinct) succeeded after Abortane, the sixth of the Marine Family in the Throne of his Father; and had added thereunto the Realm of Tremesen, if not diverted by the revolt of Alboali his eldest Son, continually in Arms against him. 3. Alboacen, the Son of this Aben Joseph, and the eighth of the Marine Family, who after a siege of 30 months took the City of Tremesen, and with that the Kingdom. But not so fortunate in his Wars against the Christian Kings of Spain; against whom he led an Army of 400000 Foot, and 70000 Horse, with all other necessaries: but vanquished by the two Kings of Castile and Portugal, with far lesser Forces; (their Army consisting but of 25000 Foot, and 14000 Horse) at the River of Salado, not far from Tariffe, An. 1340. Deposed soon after his return by his Son Alboacen, who lost all which his Father and the first of the Aben-Josephs had gained in Spain; their Empire after this declining even Africk it felt: the Kingdom of Tremesen, and the greatest part of the now Kingdom of Tunis, withdrawing themselves from their obedience in the East parts of Barbary, as the Portugals prevailed upon them in the West. The Kingdom of the Marines thus approaching near its fatal Period, it fortune about the year 1568, that Mahomet Ben-Amet, a Native of Dara, in the farther Numidia or Biledulgerid, pretending a Descent from their Prophet Mahomet, caused himself to be called Xeriff, the name by which the Kindred and Successors of that Impostor use to call themselves; and being a poor Hermite only (with which Mounebanky and the high opinion of their Sanctity, this people have from time to time been extremely fooled) plotted to make his Sons the chief Princes of Mauritania. To this end he sent them in Pilgrimage to Meccha, whence they returned with such an opinion of Sanctity, that Mahomet King of Fesse, made Amet the second of them Governour of the famous famous Colledge of Amadivach; the youngest called Mahomet, Tutor to his Children; the eldest named Abdel, staying at home with his Father, to expect the issues; slain afterwards in the War undertaken by the other two against the Portugals. In those days the Portugals grievously infested the Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; to repress whose insolencies, Mahomet and Amet obtained Commission, though much opposed therein by Muley the Kings Brother, who told him how unsafe to trust to an armed hypocrite assuring him, that if they once came unto any power (which under colour of Religion they might quickly raise) it would not be ealie to suppress them. But this good counsel was rejected, and the War went forward. Furnished with an Army, they discomfited Lopes Barriga, Commander of the Portugal Forces under King Emanuel; compell that King to abandon all his footing there; they subdued Ducala, Sus, and Hea, three Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; enter that City; payson the tributary King, and salute Amet King thereof by the name of the Xeriff of Morocco, investing Mahomet the other Brother in the Kingdom of Sus. In the career of their Successes died the King of Fesse; and Amet his Successor, an improvident young Prince, confirming his Quondam Tutors in their new Estates, conditioned they should hold of him as the Lord in chief, and pay him the accustomed Tributes.

The Xeriffs of MOROCCO.

- A.C. 1. Amet denied both Tribute and Superiority to the King of Fez, whom he overthrew in a set Field; and was after vanquished and dispossessed of his Kingdom, (upon some quarrel breaking out) by his Brother Mahomet.
- 1544 2. Mahomet King of Sus, having got the Kingdom of Morocco, united Fesse unto it also by the vanquishment of Amet the King thereof; slain after all his Victories by the Turks of his Guard.
- 1557 3. Abdalla, the Son of Mahomet.
- 1572 4. Abdalla II. Son of the former, had twelve Brothers, of which he slew ten, Hamet being spared by reason of his supposed simplicity, and Abdelmelech escaping to the Turks.
5. Mahomet II. Son of Abdalla the Second, expelled by Abdelmelech and the Turks, fled to Sebastian King of Portugal, who together with the two Competitors were slain in one day at the battel of Alcazar Guer, Anno 1578.
- 1578 6. Hamet II. the Brother of Abdalla the 2d. who added parts of Libya and Numidia to the Realm of Morocco, not absolutely subdued before.
- 1603 7. Muley Sheek, the eldest Son of Hamet, opposed in his succession by Esefer and Sidan, his two younger Brethren, in which war he died; as did also Esefer his Brother. From whom Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sheek had regained Morocco.
- 1607 8. Sidan the third Son of Hamet, immediately on the death of his Father, caused himself to be proclaimed King of Fez (where he was with his Father when he died) and having won

Morocco from Abdalla, the Son of Muley Sheek, became Master of that Kingdom also. Stripped afterwards of Fesse and Morocco both, by the opposite Factions, distressed by Hamet Ben Abdela a Religious Hermit, who hoped to get all for himself; and aided by Side Hean one of like hypocrisy, who seemed to aim but at a Limb of that great Estate, by whose assistance he was once more possessed of Morocco. These tumults on the Land being pacified in long tract of time, and the Country brought to some degree of peace and quietness, (though never absolutely reduced under his Command, as in former times;) a Rabble of Pirats nest themselves in Salla, a Port-Town of the Realm of Fesse; creating thence great mischief to him both by Sea and Land; and not to him only, but to all the Merchants of other Countreys, whose business led them towards those Seas. Unable to suppress them for want of Shipping, he craved Aid of King Charles of England: by whose assistance he became Master of the Port, destroyed the Pirats, and sent three hundred Christian Captives for a present to his Sacred Majesty, An. 1632. Nor staid he here; but aiming at the general good of Trade, and Mankind, he sent a Letter to his Majesty to lend him the like Aid against those of Algiers, who did as much infect the Mediterranean, as the Pirats of Salla did the Ocean. The tenor of which Letter, as favouring of more piety than could be possibly expected from a Mahometan, and much conducing to the honour of his Sacred Majesty, I have here subjoined.

The

The Letter of the King of MOROCCO to the King of ENGLAND.

When these our Letters shall be so happy as to come to your Majesty's sight, I wish the Spirit of the righteous God may so direct your mind, that you may joyfully embrace the Message of God, and your own Reward amongst men. The Royal power allotted to us makes us common Servants to our Creator; then, of those People whom we govern: So that observing the duties we owe to God, we deliver Blessings to the World, in providing for the Publick good of our States, we magnify the honour of God, like the Celestial Bodies, which though they have much vegetation, yet serve only to the Benefit of the World. It is, the excellency of our Office, to be Instrument, whereby happiness is delivered unto the Nations. Pardon me Sir, This is not to instruct, (for I know I speak to one of a more clear and quick sight than my self) but I speak this, because God hath pleased to grant me a happy Victory over some part of those rebellious Pyrats, that have so long molested the peaceful Trade of Europe; and hath presented further occasion to root out the Generation of those who have been so pernicious to the good of our Nations: I mean, since it hath pleased God to be so auspicious, to our beginnings in the Conquest of Salla, that we might join and proceed in hope of like success in the war against Tunis, Algiers, and other places (Dens and Receptacles for the innumerable Villanies of those who abhor Rule and Government.) Herein whilst we interrupt the corruption of malignant Spirits of the World, we shall glorify the great God, and perform a Duty that will shine as glorious as the Sun and Moon, which all the Earth may see and reverence: A work that shall ascend as sweet as the perfume of the most precious Odours, in the Nightrils of the Lord; A work grateful and happy to man. A work whose memory shall be revered so long, as there shall be any that delight to hear the Actions of Heroick and magnanimous Spirits; that shall last as long, as there be any remaining amongst men that love and honour the piety and virtue of Noble minds. This Action I here willingly present to you, whose piety and virtues equal the greatness of your power, that we, who are Servants, to the Great and Mighty, GOD, may hand in hand triumph in the glory which this Action presents unto us. Now because the Islands which you govern, have been ever famous for the unconquered strength of their Shipping, I have sent this my trusty Servant and Ambassador, to know whether in your Princely wisdom you shall think fit to assist me with such Forces by Sea, as shall be answerable to those I provide by Land: which if you please to grant, I doubt not but the Lord of Hosts will protect and assist those that fight in so glorious a Cause. Nor ought you to think this strange, that I, who much reverence the Peace and accord of Nations, should exhort to a War. Your great Prophet CHRIST JESUS was the Lion of the Tribe of JUDAH, as well as the Lord and Giver of Peace: which may signify unto you, that he which is a lover and maintainer of Peace, must always appear with the terror of his Sword, and wading through Seas of blood, must arrive to Tranquillity. This made JAMES your Father, of glorious memory, so happily renowned amongst all Nations.

It was the most noble fame of your Princely virtues, which resounds to the utmost corners of the Earth, that persuaded me to invite you to partake of that blessing, wherein I boast my self most happy. I wish God may heap the Riches of his Blessing on you, increase your happiness with your days, and hereafter perpetuate the greatness of your Name in Ages.

Such was the Letter of that King; whose motion in all probability might have took effect, had not the Troubles, which not long after brake out in Scotland, put off the design. And therefore laying by the thoughts of his future purposes, let us take a view of the Revenues and Forces of this mighty Empire; before the late distractions made it less considerable. And first for the Revenues of it, the Sheriffs are the absolute Lords of the whole Estate, and of his Subjects Goods and Bodies. The tenth and first Fruits of all sorts of Fruits, Corn and Cattel, he demands of course; though many times contented in the name of the first fruits, with one in twenty. The fifth part of a Ducat he receiveth for every Acre of Land throughout his Dominions; the other four parts for every Fire, and as much for every Head, whether Male or Female, which is above fifteen years of age. In Merchandize he receiveth of every Native two in the hundred, of an Alien ten; and hath a large Impott also upon every Mill. When any of his greater officers or Judges die, he is sole Heir of all their Goods; and yet advanceth great sums by the sale of those Offices. And in the levying of such Taxes as are extraordinary, he useth to demand more than he means to take; that the People finding him content to abate somewhat of his Due, may think themselves to be fairly dealt with.

As for their Forces, it is evident in matter of Fact, that Abdulla the first, at the siege of Mazagon, a Town held by the Portugals, An. 1562. had no less then 200000 men; and that Abdel-Melech at the Battal of Alcazar Guez, against King Sebastian, had 40000 Horse, and 80000 Foot, besides Voluntaries, and wild Arabians; it being supposed that he might have raised 30000 Horse more (notwithstanding the strong part which was made against him) had he thought it necessary. It is said also that Abdulla kept in constant pay 60000 Horse of which 15000 were quartered in the Realm of SUE, 25000 in Morocco, and the other 20000 in the Kingdom of Fesse: out of which he called 5000 of the best and ablest for the guard of his person, well mounted, and as richly furnished. Besides these he hath bodies of Horse in continual readiness, maintained according to the manner of the Turkey Timariots: and by Penions given amongst the Chiefs of the Arabians, who live like Outlaws in the Mountains, and up and down in the Skirts of this Countrey, is furnished at his need with Supplies from them. Well stored with Ammunition also, there being 46 Quintals of Gunpowder laid up monthly in his famous Arsenal at Morocco: and yet not able to stay long (not above 3 months) upon any action, in regard that all his Souldiers live on his daily allowance; which maketh them, when his Provisions are consumed, to dissolve and scatter.

The

The ISLES of BARBART.

THE ISLES of BARBART, which make up the fifth and last part thereof, are situate near the African shores of the Mediterranean, aligned by Ptolomy to the Province of Africa Propria. In number sixteen: 1. Hydros, 2. Calatbe, 3. Draconis, now called Chelbi, 4. Aegymus, by Strabo called Aegynarus, and now Guetta, 5. Larunsa, now Mollum, 6. Lapedusa, now Lampedusa, 7. Mesyrus, 8. Pontia, 9. Gaia; all of little note. 10. Insula Glauconis, with a City of the same name in it, now called Goza, and subject to the Knights of Malta. 11. Ethusa, by some called Aegusa, and consequently mistaken for Aegater, which lieth near Sicily. Of more note are the five that follow: Viz.

1. COSTRA, now called Pantalaria, equally distant from Affrick and the Isle of Sicily, 60 miles from each. In length about thirty miles, and in breadth not above ten: Mountainous for the most part, and a full of black kind of Stone; the soil not very proper for Corn, and void of Rivers; but plentiful of Figs, Melons, and Cotton-Wool; well stored with Kine and Oxen, but without Horses. The people poor; by Religion Christians, and subject to the King of Spain: very good Swimmers of both Sexes, and in their speech and habit coming near the Moors. It hath a Town in it of the same name with the Island, situate on the Sea-side in the Northern part of it; defended with a very strong Castle.

2. CERCINA, now with little difference called Carthana, situate near the Coast of Affrick, at the entrance (as it were) of the lesser Syris: in length twenty five miles, in breadth half as much, but in some places not above five. Exceeding fruitful in old times, able to furnish (as they did) the wants of Caesar and his Army, when he warred in Affrick; Magno frumenti numero Cercine invento, naues onerarias, quarum ibi satis magna copia, complet, atque in castra ad Casarem misit, are the words of the History. It hath a Town of the same name. Of no great note in way of Story, but for an handsome piece of Wit here shewed by Annibal; who flying from Carthage, met here some Merchants of that City, who had there some shipping in the Haven; and standing in some doubt, left by their discovery of his flight, he might be pursued, pretended a Sacrifice to Hercules the Tyrian Deity, to which he invited all the Sailors, and borrowed all their Sails to set up a Tent for their Entertainment; which having got into his hands, and leaving them asleep, he made on for Affra; secure enough not to be pursued, until out of danger.

3. LOTOPHAGITIS, now called Zerby, and by some Gerbe, is situate in the bottom of the Bay of Tripolis, divided from the Main Land by a narrow Ford. The Island full of Bogs and Marishes, without other Water, and in the midst of it somewhat hilly; indifferently fruitful, yielding Dates, Olives, Barley, Mill, and the like Commodities; inhabited by 30000 men, dwelling in low Cottages, and but simply apparelled: at had in it anciently two Cities, 1. Meninx, which sometimes gave name unto the Island, called Meninx by some elder Writers. 2. Gerrapolis, both now destroyed: instead whereof there is now one of more note than the rest, called by the same name with the Island, and fortified with a very strong Castle. Subject unto the Turks, but governed by a poor King of its own. Both Fort and Island taken by the Christian Fleet, in the year 1559. for the King of Spain, to whom Caravanus the King thereof did submit himself conditioning to pay the yearly Tribute of 6000 Crowns; one Camel, four Ostriches, four Sparrow-Hawks, and four Faulcons. But the Christians were scarce warm in their new possession, when besieged in the Castle by Piali Bassa, to whom after some extremities they were fain to yield; there perishing in this unfortunate Action, by Sword, Famine, and Sicknes, 15000 Christians.

4. GAULOS, or GAUDUS, by the inhabitants called Gaudica, is distant about five miles from the Isle of Malta; to the Knights whereof it doth belong: given to them by the bounty of Charles the Fifth. The Island 30 miles in compass, well watered, and very fruitful: so great an Enemy to Serpents, and all venomous Creatures, that they neither breed here, nor will live here, brought from other places. The People Christians; but they speak the same Language with the neighbouring Saraceni. The chief Town is of the same name with the Island, beautified with a capacious Haven, lying betwixt the West and South, and strongly fortified. Cruelly pillaged by the Turkey in the year 1551. who carried hence 3000 Souls into endless Thraldom.

5. MALTA, the chief of the African Islands, lieth betwixt Tripolis in Barbary, and the Isle of Sicily, distant from this last about 60 miles, and from the other 180. In circuit about 60 miles, in length 20, and in breadth 12: Situate in the beginning of the fourth Climate, and eighth Parallel; so that the longest day in Summer is but 14 hours.

Anciently it was called Melite, and by that name cureth not only in Ptolomy and other Writers, but also in the Book of the Acts, in the Story of St. Paul's Shipwrack; this being the place where he and all his company were cast on Land; in memory whereof was built a little Chapel in the place of his Landing. So called most probably, ἀπὸ τοῦ μέλιτος, from the abundance of Horney which it yielded in former times; Cicero charging it on Verres, that he came home loaded with 400 measures of Honey, and store of Melitenian Raiments; Jam non quero unde 400 amphoras mellis habueris, unde tantum Melitenium Vestium, saith that famous Orator. The joining of which two together, declare that he had robbed the same place for both; this Island being a near Neighbour of Sicily, which Verres governed then as Prator. Nor is it strange, that an Island of the Coast of Affrick, and using for the most part the Phœnician or Punick Language, should borrow its Appellation from the Greek; many of that Nation coming hither from the Isle of Sicily, and inhabiting here; and the whole Island sometimes subject to the power of Sicilian Greeks, though for the most part under the command of the State of Carthage.

It is situate wholly on a Rock, being not above three foot deep in earth; by consequence of no great fertility, the want of which is supplied with the plenty of Sicily. Yet have they here no small store of Pomegranates, Citrons, Oranges, Melons, and other excellent Fruits, both for taste and colour. They have also great abundance of Cotton-Wool (Gossypium the Latins call it) which they sow as we do our Corn; the growth and ordering of which Wool, hath been shewn already, when we were in Syria. For the commodity of this Wool, and the Cloth made of it, the Romans had this Island in great esteem, thinking themselves happy when they gained it from the Carthaginians.

The natural Inhabitants of it are said to be churlish and uncivil; of the African Language and complexion, but followers of the Church of Rome, the Religion whereof these Knights are sworn to defend. The Women fair, but hating company, and going covered. The whole number of both Sexes, supposed to be 20000, possessed of 50 Villages, and four Cities. Places of note, 1. Malta, so called by the name of the Island, in the middle of which it is situated; built on an hill, but counted of no great importance, the strength and safety of the Island lying in the defence of the Shores and Havens. 2. St. Hermes, a strong Castle at the point of a long Languet, or tongue of Rock, thrusting out betwixt the two best Havens, both which it notably defendeth. Took by the Turks, Anno 1565. but at no cheaper rate than 2000 shot of Cannon, and the loss of 10000 of their men. 3. Valette, situate on the same Languet, not far from the Castle of S. Hermes, (or rather lying close unto it) extended the whole breadth of the said Languet, from the one Sea to the other; and so commanding both the Havens. Built since the departure of the Turks, impregnable, fortified, and called thus by the name of Valette the Great Master, who so gallantly repulsed their Fury. In this Town the Great Master hath his Palace, and the Knights their several Alberges or Seminaries; all very fair and handsome Buildings. 4. Burgo, a little Town or City on another Languet, lying in the Eastern Haven; at the extremity of which Promontory in a demy Island stands the strong Castle of S. St. Angelo, built on a Rock, opposite to Valette, on the other side of the Haven, and found impregnable by the Turks; who in vain besieged it. 5. Moka, a small City, and better deserving the name of a Town, situate in another Promontory on the South of the other, defended on the West-side by a strong Platform, at the point of the Foreland; and on the East-side, by the impregnable Castle of S. Michael; in vain assaulted by the Turks, who on their ill success at the Siege herof, gave over the Enterprize, and failed home.

The People of this Island originally were a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with some Greek Plantations, coming hither out of Sicily, as before was said. For the most part dependant on the Fortunes of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till subdued by the Saracens: by the Spaniards taken from the Moors, and by Charles the Fifth given to the Knights of Rhodes, not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, An. 1522. These Knights are in number 1000; of whom 500 are always to be resident in the Island. The other 500 are dispersed through Christendom, at their several Seminaries in France, Spain, Italy, and Germany; and at any Summons, are to make their personal appearance. These Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number seven, viz. one of France in general, one of Auvergne, one of Provence, one of Castille, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany; over every one of which, they have a Grand Prior, who in the Country where he liveth, is of great reputation. An eighth Seminary they had in England, till the suppression of it by Henry the Eighth; yet they have some one or other, to whom they give the title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the original and riches of these Knights, we have spoken when we were in Palestine; now a word or two only of their places, and the Election of their Great Master. None are admitted into the Order, but such as can bring a Testimony of their Gentry for six Descents: and when the Ceremonies of their admission (which are many) are performed, they swear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiors, to live upon the Revenues of their Order only, and withall, to live chastly. Of these there be 16 of great Authority, Counsellors of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Crosses; out of whom the Officers of their order, as the Marshal, the Admiral, the Chancellor, &c. are chosen: and who, together with the Master, punish such as are convict of any Crime, 1. By degrading him. 2. By strangling him. And 3. By throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Master is dead, they suffer no Vessel to go out of this Island till another be Elected, lest the Pope should intrude on their Election; which is performed in this manner: The several Seminaries nominate two Knights and two also are nominated for the English: these 16 from amongst themselves chose eight; these eight choose a Knight, a Priest, and a Frier-servant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Crosses, elect the Great Master. The Great Master being thus chosen, is styled (though but a Frier) The most Illustrious and most Reverend Prince, The Lord Frier N. N. Great Master of the Hospital of S. John of Jerusalem, Prince of Malta, Gaulles, and Goza. Far different I assure you, from that of the first Masters of this Order, who called themselves only Servants to the poor Servitors of the Hospital of Jerusalem; or that of the Master of the Templers, who was only entitled, The humble Minister of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Island is conceived to yield to the Great Master the yearly Rent of 1000 Ducats, the greatest part whereof ariseth out of Cotton-wool: besides which, he hath towards the maintaining of his Estate, the tenth part of the prizes which are won from the Turks; and certain thousands of Crowns yearly out of the Treasury of the Order, which is great and rich; and one of the best Commanderies in every Nation. And for the securing of the Seas and securing of their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Souldiers, and to carry 16 pieces of Ordnance, with which they make Excursions many times to the Coasts of Greece.

And so much for BARBARY.

MOUNT

MOUNT ATLAS.

Now hides the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with Ice o'er-grown.

OF LIBYA INTERIOR.

LIBYA INTERIOR is bounded on the North, with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary and Cyrenaica; on the East, with Libya Marmarica, interposed betwixt it and Egypt, and part of Æthiopia Superior, or the Habassine Empire; on the South with Æthiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Negroes; and on the West with the main Atlantick Ocean.

The reason of the name we have seen before, given to this Country in regard of its contiguity and resemblance to the other Libya; or else because descended from the Children of Lebshim, by which that Country was first planted. For of King Lybs, or Queen Libya (the Daughter of Epaphus, and Cæstropa) and other like fictions of the Greeks, I shall take no notice. Distinguished from the other by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main Land of Africa, the other being partly a Maritime Country.

Of the nature of the Soil and people we shall speak anon, when we come to take a view of its several parts. Look we now on it as it stood in the time of the Romans: when, though not so well travelled, or discovered, as in these last times: yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and situation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns, than any of our late Writers have presented to us. The Rivers of most note, 1. Salathus, 2. Chusarius, 3. Opbiadus, 4. Noius, 5. Massa, 6. Sabius, 7. Dardanus, 8. Stachiris, and 9. Mathisalus; all of them paying tribute to the Western or Atlantick Ocean. Mountains of most note, 1. Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salatus, 2. Sagapola, which gives being to the River Sobus, 3. Rysadus, from whence Stachiris, 4. the Mountain called Dorum Cinnus (of which more anon) whence Mathisalus, and Mount Capus, out of which Dardanus have their first Originals. Then there are, 5. Mount Ufurgala, and 6. Mount Gigiris, from the first of which the River Bagradas; and from the last that of Cynypus do derive their waters: and passing through the breaches of Atlas (of which these Mountains seem to be some dismembered Limbs) cross the whole breadth of the Roman Africa, to make themselves a way to the Mediterranean. Besides these, more within the Land, we find the famous Rivers of Gir and Niger: of which the first maketh the two great Lakes of Nubia and Chelindus: the second those as great, or greater, called Nigritia, and the Lake of Libya. Which makes me wonder by the way, that in a Country so well watered as this seems to be, our Modern Writers should complain of such want of water: as if there were neither Spring, nor River, nor Pond, nor Lake, nor any thing to moisten and refresh the Earth, but the dews of Heaven, or some Pits of salt and brackish water not worth the tasting. Ptolemy must either be mistaken, which I hardly think; or our late Travellers not so punctual in their observations, which I rather credit: or else the Rivers which were here in the time of my Author, in this ariditatem vastitatis disperduntur, must be dried

IN our way from Barbary to Libya Interior, we must pass over Mount Atlas, a ridge of Hills of exceeding great height, and of no small length. So high, that the top, or Summit of it is above the Clouds, at least so high, that the eye of man is not able to discern the top of it. Extat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen Atlas, (saith Herodotus) ita sublimis, ut ad illius verticem oculi mortalium pervenire non possunt. Yet notwithstanding, it is always covered with Snow in the heats of Summer. Difficult of ascent, by reason of the sharp and craggy precipices, which occur in many places of it; the rest were plainer and more even, of such wondrous steepness, that the precipices of the Rocks seem the safer way. Full of thick Woods, and yielding to the Countrys on the North side of it, the greatest part of the Rivers which refresh and moisten them: and where it bordereth on the proper, or Roman Africa, of such self-fertility, that it affordeth excellent fruits of its natural growth, not planted, grafted, or inoculated by the hand of man. The beginning of it on the shores of the Western Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantick Ocean; in the 26 Degree and 30 Minutes of the Northern Latitude: and passing on directly Eastward, draw near unto the Borders of Egypt, part of Marmarica, or the Roman Libya, only interposing. It is now called Archisa, and Montes Clari: And took the name of Atlas, from Atlas King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; famed by the Poets to be turned into this Hill by Perseus, and the head of Medusa. Of the Daughters of this King, their golden Fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Hesperides, we have spoke already, though some remove the place of their habitation more into the West (then by us disposed of) and others into certain Islands of the Western Ocean, which we shall meet withal hereafter. He was said to have been a man of such wondrous height, that the Heavens rested on his Shoulders; of which, when weary, he discharged his burden on the Shoulders of Hercules; the ground of the fiction is either taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof seemeth to touch the Sky; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Astronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets; in which Knowledge he instructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentick description of it, take it thus from Virgil:

--- Jamq; volans apicem & latera ardua cernis
Atlantis duri, Cælum qui vertice fulcit;
Atlantis, cælum assidue cui nubibus atris
Piniferum caput, & vento pulsatur & imbri.
Nix humeros infusa tegit, tum flamina mento
Precipitant senis, & glacie riget horrida barba.

Which may be Englished in these words:

Then flying, he the top and sides descends
Of Atlas, whose proud head supports the Skies;
Atlas, whose Piny head with Clouds inclosed,
Is to the storms of Wind and Rains exposed;

up and swallowed in these sandy Defarts, as Magnus telleth us; or finally there hath happened some later conflagration than that of Phaeton, to which the want of water may be better attributed than it was to his. Of which thus the Poet:

*Hinc facta est Libya, raptis humoribus æstu, Arida. — Which Geo. Sander thus rendreth;
A Sandy Defart Libya then became,
Her full veins emptied by the thirty flame.*

Places of note and name in those elder times, 1. Saltus, on the River so named, 2. Bagaxi, 3. Jarzibba, and 4. Babiba, all honoured with the name of Cities. 5. Gamar, 6. Gira, and Nigira, the Metropoles of their several Nations. Then there were two Havens of some good esteem, the one called Magnus Portus, the other Portus Periphus, betwixt 43 other Towns and Cities (twelve of these on the banks of the River Niger) whose names and situation do occur in Ptolemy, which shews the Countrey not to be so uninhabitable and void of people, as was pretended by some other (but less diligent) Writers.

Nations of most note in it in the former times, were 1. the Gentii, on the back of Mauritania, a resolute and unconquered people, Genus insuperabile bello, as we find in Virgil; 2. the Garamantes, dwelling South of Cyrenaica, and giving name to a large and spacious Territory, called Valis Garamantica, supposed to be the most remote Nation towards the South, as the Indians were towards the East; whence we have ultra Garamantas & Indos, in another Poet. 3. the Pyrribæi, an Ethiopic Nation, on the South of the River Gir; 4. the Nigritæ, originally Ethiopi also; inhabiting on the North of the River Niger; 5. the Odranguli, of the same original extraction, possessing the Country between the Mountains Capha and Thala; 6. the Perosfiri, dwelling near the Hills called Deorum Curvus; 7. the Meinaci, at the foot of Mount Thala; 8. the Nabæi, on the West of Valis Garamantica; 9. the Derbici, dwelling on the West of the Hill Aranga; and 10. the Psylli, placed by Ptolemy amongst the Inhabitants of Cyrene: but so near the Borders of this Country, and so far from the Civilities of those Nations which converted either with Rome or Carthage; that they may more properly be thought to belong to this. Of a Nature so venomous, that they could poison a Snake. Inasmuch, that when their Wives were delivered, they would throw their Children amongst a Bed of Serpents, supposing that child to be born of an adulterate bed, the very smell of whose Body would not drive away a whole brood of the like poisonous Vermine. Others there were of less note, which that Author calleth Minores Gentes; many in number, of small fame, and therefore not material to be here inserted; those of most note, the Affricanes, (whom some Authors call the Gampsaphantes) honoured with the Attribute of Geni Magna, the greatest as it seems of those lesser Nations. None of them of much note in the way of story, except they were these Libyans, which are so famous in Herodotus for an expedition they made against the South-Wind. For when this Wind blowing abroad the Hills and Defarts of Sand, had dried up those many pools and waters they had among them; they to revenge this injury, by common consent armed themselves, and went to fight against him. But they took not the South-Wind unprepared. For he murthered up his forces, and encountered them wit such a brave volley of Sand, that he overcame and slew them all. A better Friend was the North-Wind to the Citizens of Rhegium in Italy, and better was he rewarded for it: for having scattered a mighty Fleet, which Dionysius prepared against them, he was by the Corn on Council made free of their City. That part of Cæsar was which was managed here, we shall hereafter meet with on another occasion.

Thus having took a view of the state of this Country, as it stood of old; we will next look upon it in its present condition; as comprehending the whole Provinces of 1. Biledulgerid or Numidia, 2. Libya Deserta, or Sarraz; and 3. a great part of that Country which is now called Terra Nigritarum. But because the greatest part of this last Country is to come under another Account; we will here only take the two first into consideration.

1. NUMIDIA.

NUMIDIA, is bounded on the East, with Egypt; on the West, with the Atlantic Ocean; on the North, with Mount Atlas, which parteth it from Barbary and Cyrene; on the South, with Libya Deserta.

It was thus first called by John Leo, an African Writer, to whose description of all Africa we are much beholding; because of that resemblance which the people of it have to the old Numidians; which is after the custom of the Nomades, living without Houses, under their Wagons and Carts, as Lucan telleth of them, thus:

*Nulla domus, plangitris habitant, migrare per arva
Mor, atque errantes circumcellare Penates.*

They dwell in Wains not Houses; and do stray Through Fields, and with them lead their Gods each way.

And worthily may they owe their Names to them, from whom they borrow so much of their Nature: for the People to this day spend their lives in hunting, and stay but three or four days in a place, as long as the grass will serve the Camels. This is the cause why this Country is so ill peopled, the Towns so small in themselves, and so remote from others. An example hereof is Tesser, a great City in their esteem, which yet containeth but 400 households, and hath no neighbours within 300 miles of it.

The Country aboundeth with Dates, whence it is called Dattylorum regio, and in the Arabick Biledulgerid, which signifieth also a Date-Region. These Dates (to speak properly) the fruit of the Palm-Trees, usually growing in hot Countries, of which some are male, some female; the first bringing forth only flowers, the other fruit: and yet the male so beneficial to the increase of the Dates, that unless a flowered bough of the male be ingrafted into the female, the Dates never prove good, in case they bear any Dates at all, as before was noted. This fruit is the chief diet of the people; but this sweet Meat hath fow Sauce, for it commonly rotteth their Teeth betimes. As for the Stones of these Dates, they feed their Goats with them, whereby they grow fat, and yield store of Milk. The Air hercof, of so sound a nature, that if a man be troubled with the French Disease, he shall there, without any course of Physick find a present Remedy.

The natural Inhabitants of this Country are said to be a base and vile people, Thieves, Murderers, Treacherous, and ignorant of all things; feeding most commonly on Dates, Barley, and Carrion; accounting Bread a Diet for their Festival days. But the Arabians, who are intermingled with them, in most part of the Country, affirmed to be (comparatively with the Natives) ingenious, liberal, and civil. The Garments of these Numidians, of the coarsest Cloth, so short, that they cover not half the Body: the richer sort, distinguished by a Jacket of Blue Cotton with wide Sleeves. Their Steeds are Camels, which they ride on without stirrup, or so much as a saddle; a leather, thrust through through an hole made in the nose of the Camel, serves them for a Bridle; and to save the charge of Spurs, they make use of a goad. Their Religion, Mahometism, to which converted (Christianity having once had some footing here) in the year 710, the Azanaghi and other people of those parts then subdued by the Saracens: who held them for a Nation of so little reckoning, that no man of account amongst them would defend so low as to be their Prince; but left them to be ruled as in former times, by the Chiefs or Heads of their several Clans.

The chief River which is left, hath the name of Dara, and possibly enough may be the Dardanus of Ptolemy. The rest which are mentioned in that Author, rising out of Mount Atlas, and falling headly this way, finding these barren Wildernesses to afford them the readiest Channels, are trained along by the allurements of the Sands; and are either swallowed up in great Lakes; or being too liberal to the thirty Sands in their way to the Sea, die at the last for thirst in the midst of the Deserts.

The Principal of their Provinces (if capable of a distinction into better and worse) 1. DARA; more cultivated than the rest, because of the River running thorough it, whence it hath its name: 250 miles in length; indifferently fruitful, where the River doth overflow and water it; and of so different a nature from all the rest, that here the country people have some scattered Villages, the better sort their several Castles. 2. PESCARA, so called from the chief Town of it: exceedingly infested with Scorpions, the sting whereof is present death. 3. FLIGHTIG, so called from the chief Town also, inhabited by an industrious and witty people (in respect of the rest) some of which betake themselves to Merchandize; some to the study of their Law, which they study at Fess, and grow rich upon it. 4. TEGORARIN, a large Region, and well inhabited, better than any except Dara; as having in it 50 Castles or Gentlemens Houses, and 100 Villages. The People wealthy, in regard of the great Trade which they drive with the Negroes; and pretty good Husbands in manuring their land, on which they are forced to lay much soil; and will therefore let some of it Rent free to strangers, reserving only the dung of themselves and their Cattel. 5. BILEDULGERID, specially so called, abundantly fruitful in Dates, whence it had the name; but destitute of Corn, by reason of the extrem driness of the soil: and yet hath in it many Towns of good name among them. Of less note, 6. Tesser, 7. Segelmess, 8. Zeb, 9. Tebelberi, and 10. Fessen, so called from the chiefest of their Towns and Villages.

Towns of most note both now and in former times, besides those spoken of before, 1. Timugedir, in the Province of Dara, the birth-place of Mahomet Ben Amer and his three Sons, the Founders of the Xeriffan Empire. 2. Taflette, in the said Province, to which place Mahomet the second of these Sons, and second King of Morocco, of that family, confined his elder Brother Amer, having took him prisoner, Anno 1544. 3. Tesser, a great Town of 400 houses, but so poorly neighboured, that there is no other inhabited place within 300 miles of it; but of that before. 4. Techort, the Inhabitants whereof are very courteous to strangers, whom they entertain at free cost; and choose rather to marry their daughters to them, than to any of the Natives. 5. Eboacab, the most Eastern Town in all this Country, distant about 100 miles from the Borders of Egypt. 6. Debris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for the Wells or Fountains of the Sun: The Water whereof being lukewarm at the Sun rising, cooled more and more till noon, and was then very cold, and so continued until midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter; as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hottest when that was furthest off, and cold when nearest. 7. Mafube, seated on a Rock, garisoned by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Marius in the prosecution of that War. 8. Cusfa, the chief City of all this Tract, said to be built by Hercules; but questionable of very great strength; anguibus arenisque vallata, made inaccessible (saith the Historian) by the thick Sands, and multitude of Serpents which were harboured in them; but easily forced by Marius in his wars with Jugurth, and utterly destroyed by Cæsar in his war against Juba.

It seems by this, that those people neighbouring Mount Atlas, were much at the disposal of the Kings of Mauritania, in the times foregoing, and so they have been also in these latter times. For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of wisdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saracens had not long possessed themselves of those parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698; but within twelve years (An. 710.) they subdued this Country, and planted their Religion in it, though not themselves. Nor was Amer, the first Xeriffe of Morocco, warm in that estate, when he thought it best for him to secure himself in it by the conquest of this: to whose Successors, the Chiefs of the Tribes hereof render some acknowledgments.

2. LIBYA DESERTA.

LIBYA DESERTA, is bounded on the North with Numidia, or Biledulgerid towards the South, with the Land of Negroes wholly; and on the West with Gulata, another Province of these Negroes, interposed betwixt it and the Atlantic.

The reason of the name of Libya we have had before. To which Deserta was added upon very good reasons, as well to difference it from the other Libya, a Province of Egypt, as to express the barren and sandy condition of it: in which respect by the Arabians called Sarra, signifying in their language a rude and uninhabitable Desert, as this Country is. So truly such, that men may travel in it eight days together without finding Water, or seeing any tree, and no grass at all. The water which they have is drawn out of Pits, exceeding brackish; and many times those Pits so covered with the Sands, that men die for thirst: the Merchants therefore carrying their water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, and drink a water which they wring out of their guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as these Deserts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Fess and Tremesen, trading to Agades and Tombutum, in the Land of Negroes.

The People differ not much from the Numidians in shape or qualities; but if a worse quality, it must be the Libyan. They did once worship a God called Pasaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then set at liberty, to say these words, viz. Pasaphon is a great God; which the simple people hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine honours. Converted at last to the Christian Faith, they remained a while in the profession of the Gospel: exterminated by the Saracens, about the year 710, who having added Numidia or Biledulgerid to their former conquests, planted their Superstitions in this Country also.

This Country is divided (as others into Provinces) into five great Deserts, to which those of less note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the Borders of Gulata, (interposed betwixt it and the Atlantic Ocean) and extending Eastward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza; having on the South, Gulata and Tombutum in the Land of Negroes; so destitute of water, that there is one pit only at the end end of each hundred mile, brackish and unwholesome and in the Desarts of Azoad and Araan, which are parts of this, but one in a 150 or 200 miles riding.

2. ZUENZICA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eastward, to the Desart of Targa: bounded on the North with Sigelmef and Tebelbay, Numidian Provinces; and on the South, with the Desart and Ghiber and Giber. So void of water, (especially in that part thereof which is called Gogiden) that in Nine days Travel there is not so much as one drop to be seen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended Eastward to the Desart of Ighidi, and reaching from Tegerarin in the North, to the Desart of Agadez in the South, the best conditioned part of all this Country, well watered, of a temperate Air, and a Soil reasonably fruitful. In length from North to South 300 miles, and liberally stored with Manna, which they gather into little Vessels, and carry to Agadez to sell. Mingled in water, or with Pottage, it is very cooling; and drank of in their Feasts, as a special dainty.

4. LEMBTA, extendeth from the Desarts of Ighidi, unto that of Bordea.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of these two there is little to be said in several, but that this last was lately discovered by one Humar, a guide to a Caravan of Merchants; who blinded with the Sands, wandered out of his way, and causing Sand to be given him at every twenty miles end, found by the smell at last that they begun to draw nigh some inhabited place; and told them, of it forty miles before they came to it.

Cities of Note we hope for none, where we find no

Water. Of such as go for Cities here, the most considerable, 1. Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, resembling Marble; which the Inhabitants, being twenty days distant from any habitation, and consequently many times in danger to die for famine, exchange for Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutum, who come hither for it. Much troubled with the South-Wind, which doth so drive the Sands upon them, that it causeth many of them to lose their sight. 2. Huaden, or Haden, a known resting place, and a great refreshment to the Merchant in the midst of these Desarts. 3. Guargata, on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot Water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building, and inhabited by a wealthy people. 4. Toberaum, of little note, but that it serveth for a Stage or halting-place to the weary Traveller. Of which kind there are said to be others at the extremities or ends of each several Desart; the Havens of such men as sail in those Sandy Seas; but not else observable.

Not is there much, if any thing observable of them in the way of Story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerors, either Greek or Roman, much of the Country possessed by Arabian Colonies, (men fit enough to plant in such barbarous Nations) at such time as the Saracens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Country since, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their several Clans or Families, who as they know no Law themselves, so do the people shew as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions, differing but little from brute Beasts, more than in shape and speech.

And so much for LIBYA INTERIOR.

TERRA NIGRITARUM.

TERRA NIGRITARUM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the East, with Aethiopia Superior; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with Libya Deserta; and on the South, with the Aethiopic Ocean, and part of Aethiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigritae, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolemy, and they so named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

The Country very hot by reason of its situation under the Torrid Zone; yet very well-inhabited, full of people, and in some places always green: well watered; and exceeding fruitful, specially in those parts which lie within the compass of the overflowings of the River Niger, and on the further side of the River Sangha: abundantly well stored both with Corn, Cattel, and Garden-ware for the use of their Kitchens; well Wooded; and those Woods well furnished with Elephants and other Beasts, both wild and tame. Their greatest wants (but such a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-Trees; few of which they have; and those they have, bear one kind of fruit only, which is like the Chestnut, but somewhat bitterer. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greatest welfare consisting in the overflowings of Niger; as that of Egypt in the Inundations of Nile. In some parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver; very fine and pure: so that had not the Portugals affected the honour of discovering New Worlds, as much as Wealth, they might have made as rich a Factory here, as at the Indies.

The Inhabitants, till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the most part so rude and barbarous, that they seem to want that use of Reason which is peculiar unto man; of little Wit, and destitute of all Arts and Sciences; prone to Luxury, and for the greatest part Idolaters, though not without some small admixture of Mahometans. When the Portugals first sailed into these Coasts, the People hereof took the Ships for great Birds with white Wings; and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were casually painted on the Beaks of the Ships, were the Eyes by which they saw how to direct themselves in their course. Guns seemed to them, for their hideous noise, to be work of the Devil; and for Bag-pipes, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had been permitted to feel them, would they be persuaded but that they were the work of Gods own hand. The very Nobles (if so noble a name may without offence be given to such blockish people) are so dull and stupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to Civil Society: and yet so reverent of their King, that when they are in his presence, they never look him in the face, but sit flat on their buttocks, with their elbows on their knee, and their hands on their faces. They use to anoint their hair with the fat of Fishes, which makes them stink more wretchedly than they would do otherwise. Of Complexion they are for the most part Cole-black, whence the name of Negroes; but on the South-side of the River Senaga, they are only Tawny: the Blacks so much in love with their own complexion, that they use to paint the Devil White; which I find thus verified:

*The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
Never extended to th' Atlantick Main;
Wherein the Black Prince keeps his residence,
Attended by his Jetty-coloured Train:
Who in their Native Beauty most delight,
And in contempt do paint the Devil White.*

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the first, as others the Descendants of Cham: Afterwards it is said, that they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occasion of it I do not where find) in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the last, Christianity prevailed in some Kingdoms of it. In the year 973. Mahometism began to get ground amongst them, by the diligence and zeal of some of the Preachers of that Law: the first who were seduced that way, being those of Melli: after which Tombuto, and then Gualata, were infected with the same poison also. In the end, all the rest of this Country followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, some part of Nubia, and the Coasts of the Atlantick Ocean which continue in their ancient Gentilism; Christianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if still there remaining) and some few Garrisons belonging to the Crown of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, so are they also of several Languages: those of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutum, Melli, and Gingoni, speaking the Language called Sungai; the Gubero, Canoner, Chafene, and Gangreter, &c. that called Guber: Gualata, a language of its own; and those of Nubia, once resembling the Arabick, Chaldean and Egyptian.

Mountains of most note in it, in the former times, were those of 1. Arvalter, and 2. Arangu, and 3. that called Deorum Curru; this last supposed to be the same which is now called Punta de Lopes Gonsales, but that more probably, which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Promontory, thrusting itself into the Sea; discerned afar off by the Sailer and the Country people, as well by reason of his height, reaching to the Clouds, as the continual Lightnings and Thunders which do issue thence.

Rivers of most note, besides Nile, which watereth it on the East, 1. Senaga, or Canaga, which riseth out of the Lake of Guaga, supposed to be the same which Ptolemy calleth Lacus Cheloniadem. And if so, then must this be the River Gir, of which he saith, that having fallen into that Lake, and there swallowed up, it thence produced another River, whose name he telleth not; little inferior unto Nilus, for the length of its course, the variety of strange Creatures which are bred therein, or the distinction which it maketh in the face of this Country; the people on the one side of it being Black, on the other Tawny; the soil on the one side very barren, on the other fruitful. In the end, having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantick by two great Outlets. 2. Niger, a River better known to Ptolemy by name than nature; now found to have its rise from a great Lake, within two degrees of the Aequinoctialis, whence running Northwards for a time, he hideth himself under ground for the space of 60 miles together: when rising up again, and making a great Lake called the Lake of Borneo, he bendeth his course directly Westward; and taking in many less Channels, he reareth the Earth into many Islands, and at last falleth into the Sea: Of as long course, and the same wondrous nature, as the River Nile. For from the fifteenth day of June it over-floweth all the adjacent fields, the space of 40 days together; and in so many more, recolletheth his Waters into their proper Channels: the whole Country being indebted to these inundations for its fertility, which otherwise could be but small, since the driness of the Soil can afford no exhalations, whereby Clouds may be generated, and the Earth refreshed with moistures, or revived with dews.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Ptolemy, 1. Nigira, the Metropolis of the Country, 2. Panagra, 3. Milachath, 4. Ahygath, 5. Thumondacana, 6. Sulme, and others, to the number of 17 in all; situate all along the course of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the situation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the ancient Towns and people being quite defaced, we must look upon it now as it standeth divided at this time into several kingdoms, 25 at the least in all, (some say many more) the chief of which are these that follow.

1. ORA ANTEROSA, a large Tract of Ground on the Western Ocean, extended from Cape Blance to the River Carnaga, sandy and barren, but reasonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hereof called Azanbays, were accounted formerly very rude and barbarous; much civilized since the Portugals and other Christian Nations began to trade there; of middle stature, complexioned between black and ash-colour; great liars, very treacherous, poor, and parsimonious; very patient in extremities both of heat and hunger. The chief Towns, 1. Porto de Dio (we may call it Gods Port) and 2. Porto del Risatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occasionally by the Portuguese, at their first coming thither. 3. Arguin, a strong Fortrefs of the Portugals, situate on or near the Promontory now called Cape Blance; and giving name unto some Islands, five or six in number, lying near unto it, called the Isles of Arguin; inhabited by a barbarous people, named the Azanbays, but of no great note. These Coasts discovered first by the Portugals, Anno 1452, under the Conduct of Prince Henry, Son of John the first, or by his encouragement and directions.

2. GUALATA, distant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Oran Anterosa being interposed) is but a small Country, though a Kingdom; containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with some Territories of ground and petty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitful only in Dates, Mill, and Pulse; but of these two last no great abundance. The Inhabitants Coal-Black, hospitable towards Strangers to their power, but poor and miserable, without Laws, settled form of Government, Gentry and Judges.

3. AGADEZ, bordering on Targa, one of the five Desarts of Libya; the people of it generally given to grazing; their Houses made of green Boughs, which upon every change of Pasture they carry with them. So that we are to look for few Towns among them, but these movable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the most part by Merchant Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremesen. The Town well walled, the Houses of a better building than the Country promitteth; the people people of this Tract, spoken of by Ptolomy: the great Lake, anciently called Nubæ Palus, being hence denominated. A distinct people from those of the same name, dwelling on the shores of the Red-Sea, near unto Sinus Aualiter, who from the horrenous of their stature passed in account for Pygmies: Nûba Tuy-pa-lis, saith Hesychius an old Grammarian: these being a strong and potent Nation, and well skilled in Wars. Inasmuch, as Cyriacus once a King hereof, understanding of some pressures laid upon the Christians of Egypt, is said to have raised 100000 Horse for their aid and succour; but by the persuasions of the Patriarch of Alexandria, went back uncought with. For at that time the Country was wholly Christian, and had been so from the very days of the Apollis; but are now fallen off again to their former Idolatry, or become Mahometans, for want of Ministers to instruct them. It is recorded by Alvarus, the Writer of the Ethiopic History, that at his being in the Court of the Abassine Emperour, there came Ambassadors out of Nubia to intreat a supply of Pastors to instruct their Nation, and repair Christianity amongst them; but were unchristianly rejected.

Here is a Poyson in this Country, of which the tenth part of a Grain will dispatch a man in a quarter of an hour, and is sold for ten Ducats an ounce; the Custom for which unto the King, is as much as the price unto the Merchant. But for this one ill Commodity they have many good; that is to say, Corn, Sugar, Civet, Sanders, Ivory, all in great abundance; some store of Gold, and other Metals. The Country naturally sandy, but well refreshed with Lakes and Rivers which do much enrich it; inasmuch as the people generally are very wealthy, and manage a great Trade with the Merchants of Caire and Egypt. Their chief City is called Dangala, large and well frequented; said to contain no fewer than 10000 Families, but their Houses built of nothing but Thatch and Mortar. In other parts, especially towards the River Nilus, they have many Villages, few or none of them worth the naming.

There are many other Kingdoms in this Land of Nubia, besides these in Guinea, but of lesser note; as, 15. BITO. 20. TEMIANO. 21. ZEG ZEG. 22. ZANFARA. 23. GOTHAN. 24. MEDRA. 25. DAUM. Of which there is nothing to be spoken, but of their Poverty or Riches, Blessings or Curses, common to them with the rest of these Nations, and therefore I purposely omit them.

The Country, or a great part of it, was anciently accounted part of Libya Interior, inhabited besides the Nubæ and Nigritæ spoken of before, by the Nabatæ dwelling about the Hill Aruater, the Aronæ, near the Hill Arangus, the Agargine, Xylines, and Alchalines, Ethiopic Nations. Not much considerable in the business of former times; not much discovered (not very perfectly at this day) till the year 973. at what time certain Mahometan Preachers, out of a superstitious zeal to propagate their Sect, first opened the way into these Countries: the people then living like brute beasts, without King, Law, or any form of Government, scarce knowing how to sow their Lands, clad in the skins of as very beasts as themselves, and challenging no propriety in Wives or Children. First conquered by Joseph King of Morocco, of the race of the Almohades; and after that by the Five Nations of Libya Deserta, who divided them into fifteen parts, every one of those Five Nations possessing three of them. One of the Kings of these Libyans, named Soni Heli, being slain by Abuaci Ischia, General of his Forces, and the rest terrified with that blow, Anno 1526. the Negroes once again recovered their long lost liberty, and instituted divers Kings of their own. Amongst them, Ischia was most deservedly made King of Tombutum, who managing his Affairs so well, that he conquered the Kings of Guber, Agadez, Cano, Melli, Zanfara, Zegzeg, Ghenæa, Gamben, and Cajena, which he made his tributaries. So that his Successors are now the greatest of those five Kings who have the supreme power over all the rest. The other four, 1. the King of Mandinga, lording it over the Realm of Benin, Giolofi, and the Kings of Guinea; 2. the King of Borneo, the only one that is defended of the Libyan Race, in greatness of command next to him of Tombuto; 3. the King of Gualata, whose Kingdom is confined within that one Province, but therein absolute and supreme; and 4. the King of Goaga, Paramount over all the rest of these Provinces.

But because the greatest power is in the hands of the King of Tombuto, who possibly enough may in short time bring all the rest under his command, we will take a more particular view of his Estate affirmed to be the richest Prince in these parts of Affrick, and to have many Plates and Scepters of Gold, some of which weigh 1300 pound weight. When any of his Subjects do appear before him they kneel on both their knees, and bowing their heads unto the ground, cast sand over their shoulders and upon their head, going forward still upon their knees. His Court he keeps in a royal manner, continually guarded with 3000 Horse, but with many more Foot, all armed with Bows and empoysoned Arrows. To the Jews a very bitter Enemy, whom he admitteth not to trade in his Kingdoms, and confiscateth the goods of all such of his Subjects as hold traffick with them. Zealous of the Mahometan Law; and liberal in stipends to the Doctors and Professors of it. Of greater power than any other beyond Atlas, but the Habassine Emperour. And though Amet the Xeriffe of Morocco, in the year 1589. had some hand upon him, and conquered a great part of this Kingdom, even as far as Gago, extending his Empire six months Journey, by Camels, beyond Morocco, yet it held not long: this King again recovering what was taken from him; and being since that time in as eminent power, as ever in any times before.

And so much for TERRA NIGRITARUM,

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red Sea, and the Sinus Barbaricus; on the West with Libya Interior, the Realm of Nubia, in the land of the Negroes, and part of the Kingdom of Congo in the other Ethiopia; on the North with Egypt, and Libya Maritima, and on the South with the Mountains of the Moon, by which parted from the main body of Ethiopia Inferior.

It was first called Etheria, and afterwards Atlantia, as Pliny telleth us. In the end, the Grecians gave it the name of Ethiopia, from the Greek words Ætho, signifying to burn, and Æ, a Countenance; because the violent heats of the Sun had so scorched the Countenances of the Inhabitants. The additions of Sub Ægypto, Superior and Inferior, serve only to distinguish it from the other Ethiopia, which lyeth further off from Egypt, on the outside of this. It is called also Regnum Abyssinorum, from the Abassini, or Abyssini; a people of Arabia Felix; who passing over the Red Sea, (not above seven miles broad in the narrowest place) came and settled here. And in the Scripture it is filled by the name of Ludim, from Lud the son of Misraim, who first planted it, as hath been proved by many strong and concluded Arguments in our General Preface.

It is situate on both sides of the Æquinoctial, extending from the South Parallel of seven Degrees, where it meeteth with some part of the other Ethiopia, to the Northern end of the Isle of Meroe, situate under the fifth Parallel on the North of that Circle. And though by this account it fall short of the dimensions assigned by some, who extend it from one Tropic unto the other; yet is it of a very great length, no less than 1500 miles; the breadth about half as much, the whole circumference amounting to 4300 miles. Yet so, that all this vast Tract of ground, is not to be understood of that part of the Country which is under the command of the Abassine Emperour, commonly but mistakingly called Prefter John; but of the whole Country of Ethiopia, as before limited and extended, containing besides his Estate, the Kingdom of Adel and Adeæ, and the provinces of Quilos and Melundis which two last are now reckoned as parts of Ethiopia Inferior. The Isle of Meroe in the North is possessed by Mahometans, the most bitter Enemies of this King: all on the West of Nilus, betwixt it and the South-east of Nubia, inhabited by the Anzichi, an Idolatrous and man-eating Nation, subject to a great Prince of their own; and all the Coasts of the Red-Sea, as well within the Streights of Babel Mandel, as without, except the port of Erocco only, enjoyed by Arabians and Moors, who do acknowledge no subjection unto his Commands but are under the Kings of Adel and Adeæ, before mentioned.

But taking in the largest signification and extent hereof (according unto which we must here describe it) it comprehendeth the three Countreys called anciently Ethiopia Sub Ægypto, Trogloditica, and Regio Cinnamomifera.

Of these, the two last are by some reckoned but as parts of the first; though certainly the Troglodites were a different Nation from the Ethiopiens. For past all doubt, the Troglodites were originally an Arabian People, so called quia reclusas subeunt, from their living in Caves and Dens, in which respect their part of this Country had the name of Arabia Trogloditica, in Diogorides, and some others of ancient Writers. Of these it is affirmed by Pomponius Mela, that they were not the Masters of any wealth, and that their speech was rather a gnashing of the teeth, than any articulate and intelligible Pronunciation. Nullarum opum Domini sunt Trogloditæ, frident magis quam loquuntur. As for their houses, they were (saith he) no better than Caves, and their food than Serpents. With whom concurrerth Pliny also for their dwelling in Caves, and consequently for the reason of the name, laying positively, Trogloditæ speluncas excavant, Called for the same reason in the holy Scripture, 2. Chron. 12. 3. by the name of Succethi, the word Succoth (whence that name derived) not only signifying in the Hebrew, Tents, or Tabernacles, but Caves and Dens; and so translated Psal. 10. v. 9. and Job 38. v. 40. As for that part hereof which was called Regio Cinnamomifera, taking up the southern parts in the time of Ptolomy, it took that name from the abundance of Cinnamon, which was then growing it; now not a tree of it to be found in all this Country, as the Portugals, who have looked narrowly for it, have affirmed unto us. Shipped at Mosylon, a noted Emporie, placed by Ptolomy in the ninth degree of Northern Latitude; it was thence transported into Egypt, and other Countreys as is said by Pliny, Portus Mosyllitus quo Cinnamomum devehitur: the Spice in some Authors being called Mosylon, by the name of the Town. Δείκνυσι δὲ τὸ ἀρχαῖον Μουσῶν, τὸ ἀπὸ Μοσύλου πόλεως. Of Cinnamon the best is that which is called Mosylon, because brought from the City of that name in Ethiopia, saith Siméon Sethi in his Tract de de Facilitatibus Ciborum. As for this Cinnamon (I note this only by the way) it is the inner bark of a Tree as big as an Olive, with Leaves like Bay-leaves: the drying of which maketh it roll together, and every three years is renewed, and stripped off again. Some think it came first from the Sine or the Country which the Romans called Sinarum Regio, the Moderns China; and that it was so called, quasi Sine Anomum the Anomum of the Sina; Anomum being the name of a sweet perfume growing in Assyria and Armenia. But then it should be written Sinamomum, and not Cinnamomum: yet to give the greater credit to the former opinion, they of Ormus called Bar-Chine, or the wood of China. But of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Ethiopia itself; The people of it in old times were said to have been great Astrologers, the first ordainers also of sacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were also noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longest and strongest Bows of any Nation: the Persian Bow (though those the greatest of all Asia) being only three cubits long but these of Ethiopia four. Uppunt etiam Ethiopes quatuor Cubi- torum arcibus, as we read in Strabo; the like is said also by Herodotus and Diodorus. Their Arrows small, but strong, for the most part poisoned: Æthiopum geminata venenis vulnera, as we find in Claudian; and for that inhumanity very much grieved. But not to spend our time too much upon these particulars, Pliny reciteth two strange things of this Country: 1. That the air and Ground are so parching hot, that the people not only dare not go out of doors without shoes, but that they roast their meat also by setting it in the Sun. 2. That there is a Lake whose waters are thrice a day; and thrice a night, exceeding salt and unpleasing; but at all others times most sweet and delicate to the Palate.

This Country being as big as Germany, France, and Italy laid together, is but meanly populous, the distemperature of the Climate, and the dry barrenness of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cause Africk is by Strabo compared to a Leopard's skin, the distance of whose Spots sheweth the dispersedness of the Towns and habitations in those torrid Countreys. A country scarce in Wheat, but sufficiently plentiful in Rice, Barly, Beans, Pease, and the like; they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all sorts, and infinite herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally, there is no Country under Heaven fitter for increase of Plants, and Living Creatures, if industry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are destitute of many necessary things, which otherwise the natural commodities of the Country would supply them with. For they have here great store of Flax, but make no Cloth; plenty of Vines, yet make no Wine, except it be to serve the Palaces of the King and Patriarch; abundance of Sugar-Cane, and mines of Iron, but know not how to make use of either unto any advantage. Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels or trenches, to drive their waters to the rest of the land which want them; those Rivers almost choaked with Fishes, their Woods crammed with Venison, which they trouble not themselves to catch.

By this we may conjecture somewhat of the people also, Lazy and given unto their ease, ill clothed and not much better housed; extremely inclined to Barbarism, destitute of all learnings; not to be credited unless they swear by the life of their Emperours; they hate a Smith equally with the Devil: their colour is generally Oliver-tawny, excepting only their King himself, who is always of a white complexion; a wonderful prerogative, if true. This blackness of their bodies, by the Poet attributed to the burning of the world by Phaeton.

*Sanguine tum credunt in corpora summa vocato,
Æthiopum populos nigrum traxisse colorem.*

Which may be Englished thus.

Their blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part,
The Æthiopians grew so black and swart.

But the true cause hereof, whatsoever it be; may perhaps be looked upon hereafter, when we come to America.

The Christian Faith was first made known in this Country, by the Eunuch of Queen Candace, who was baptized by Philip the Evangelist, and one of the Seven; more generally embraced by the pains and preaching of St. Matthew the Apostle hereof, but not totally propagated over all this Empire, till the reign of Abraham, Anno 470. who in his life entituled himself the Defender and Propagator of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his death was generally honoured as a Saint. Suppressed in part by the coming in of the Abassine and other Arabians, it was again revived and more universally received than in former times, in the reign of David King of the Axumite Æthiopians: who in a War against Dunnaus King of the Homerites in Arabia Felix solemnly vowed to the God of the Christians to become one of his Followers, if he got the victory: and so accordingly he did, sending his Ambassadors to the Emperour Justinian, for some Bishops and other learned men to instruct his people. The particulars of those Opinions wherewith they have since corrupted the purity of the true Religion, I find thus registred. 1. They use to circumcise their Children, both males and females; 2. They baptise the males 40, and the females 18 days after their circumcision; 3. After the receipt of the Sacrament, they are not to spit till Sun-set; 4. They profess but one Nature, and one Will in CHRIST; 5. They accept only the three first General Councils; 6. Their Priests live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg; 7. They baptise themselves every Epiphany day in Lakes and Ponds, because that day they suppose Christ to have been baptized by John in Jordan; 8. They eat not of those Beasts, which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean; 9. They keep the Saturday or Jewish Sabbath, equally solemn with the Lords Day; 10. They administer the Eucharist to Infants presently after Baptism; 11. They teach, that the Reasonable soul of man is derived from their parents by seminal Propagation; 12. That Infants dying unbaptized, are sanctified in the womb, by virtue of the Eucharist received by the Mother after her Conception. And finally, they shew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they say, by the Apostles at Hierusalem for that purpose, the Contents whereof they observe most solemnly. These are the most material points in which they differ from the Tendries of the Catholic Church. And there are other Points in which they differ only from the Church of Rome, as viz. 1. Admiring in both kinds; 2. Without either Elevation, or Reservation; 3. Rejecting massie Images; and 4. Extreme Unction; 5. Allowing the first marriages to their Priests and Bishops; and 6. In renouncing all relation to the Church of Rome; who to the business of these Churches is a very stranger, and so hath been from the very first foundation of them. For it appears by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabic, and translated into Latine by Pisanus, that the Patriarch (or Abuna, as they called him) of these Abassine Churches, was in those times subordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacy by the Fathers, which were there assembled, and constantly ever since approved and practised by these Churches; in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembered before their own. To this Patriarch, by an ancient privilege belongeth the seventh place in the Sessions of all General Councils; the Archbishop of Seleucia (or Babylon) only interpoling betwixt him and the Patriarch of Hierusalem. Elected by the Abassine Monks of St. Antonies Order remaining in Hierusalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whose jurisdiction he must always be) he is sent into this Country to take his charge: where in some points of Civil nature, he hath equal privilege with the Emperour himself; and in Spiritual, hath the sole power of excommunicating an obstinate sinner. All other Ecclesiastical Dignities, from the Bishoprick to the lowest Benefice, are conferred by the Emperour only.

The principal Mountains of it in the former time, had the names of 1. Prinotus, 2. Isus, 3. Monodactylus, 4. Gaurus, and 5. Mont Satyrorum, all of them in that part which was called Trogloditica: 6. Garbale, 7. Elephas, and 8. Mafte, in the Isle of Meroe: the rest of the Country flat and level, or the hills not eminent. Rivers of most note, 1. Astapus (now Albani) arising out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barceua, 2. Astaborus, now

Tacasse;

Tacasse; Both falling into the River Nilus, 3. Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whose Spring unprofitably sought for in the elder times, is now said to be out of the Lake Zembris: in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Æquator; whence passing through spacious Deserts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms he at last entrench into this. Here in some places struggling amongst broken Rocks, and less free passages, he falleth with such a wonderful noise into the Vallies beneath, that a Colony planted by the Persians near one of these Cataracts, (so they call those huge falls of his) were so dulled and deafened with the noise, that they were faine to abandon their habitations. Nor doth it only dull and deafen the neighbouring people, but the very hills do seem to tremble at the noise it maketh. Of which thus the Poet,

Cuncta tremunt indix, et multo murmure montis, Spumens invictis albescentibus annis.

Which may be Englished in these words;

The noise the Mountains shakes, who roar for spite
To see th' unvanquish'd Waves cloath'd all in white.

Of the Cataracts here are two most noted: the one called Cataractes Major, in the borders of this Country towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Phile, and Pseleis, Æthiopian Cities; the other called Cataractes Minor, not far from Elephantia a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syene the last City of that Country towards this. So turbulent is this River amongst the Hills. And yet as terrible as these Falls are supposed to be, one may divers times see the Country people in a little Boat not able to contain above two persons, to venture down them without fear; appearing after they have been long tossed in the water, a great distance off, as if they had been shot out of an Engine. Nor is he of such quick passage in the open Countreys, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are faine to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels to receive his waters, which if not curbed and lessened by such ways as these, might by some sudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in respect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for a long time to the Abassine Emperours, an annual tribute. Which when the Great Turk, supposing it a needless charge, had once denied: this people, by the command of their Emperour, did open their Sluces, and brake down the Dams; whereby the water fell so violently and so fast into Egypt, that the Turk was not only glad to continue tribute, but to give them great sums of money to make up their works. But others say, that this acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptian Kings, not so much for keeping up the waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Abassine Emperours should divert the Stream, and so deprive that Country of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are also said to be some Lakes of that poisonous nature, that whosoever drinketh of them doth either immediately fall mad, or else is troubled for long time with continual drowsiness. Of which thus Quid:

Æthiopique Lacus, quos siquis faucibus hausit, Aut stirit, aut passim mirum gravitate sopore.

Which may be paraphrased in these words:

Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whosoever drinks, his thirst to slake,
Either grows mad, or doth his soul oppress
With an unheeded drowsiness.

To look upon the State as it stood in the former times, we find in it besides the Lakes and Rivers before mentioned, three capacious Bays; that is to say, 1. Sinus Adulicus, 2. Sinus Aualites, and 3. Sinus Barbaricus; the two last neighboured by the new Countreys of Adel and Melinde. Havens of note and Rodes for shipping, there were five in all, viz. 1. Babus, or the deep Haven; 2. Dioscorum Portus, or the Haven of Cytor and Polites; 3. Theon Sotum, or the Haven of the Sauvior-Gods; 4. Portus Evangeliorum, Gosfel-Port, or the Port of Good News; and 5. Serapionis, the Port of Serapion, with a Promontory of the same name adjoining to it. For other Promontories, which in so long a tract of Sea must needs be many; the Principal were, 1. Bafum, 2. Mnemium, 3. Dimeiris, 4. Aphis, 5. Ara Ameris, 6. Colobon, 7. the Potnontory of Saturn, 8. Mosylon, with a noted Emporty of the same name; 9. Aromata, near another well frequented Emporty of the same name also; and 10. that of Naticorum. Then for the Towns of greatest Trading, besides those last mentioned, we have, 1. Aualites, 2. Malao, 3. Mundi, 4. Cabe, and 5. Acane in the Bay of Aualites; 6. Opone, in the Bay of Barbaria, 7. Esfina, on the South of the Æquinoctial. Then for their Cities, we have amongst many others, the names of 1. Epithorius, by Protony called Ptolemais Ferratum, 2. Adulis, and 3. Aualites, giving names unto their several Bays; 4. Rapta, the Metropolis of that part of this Country which was called Barbaria, lying along the shores of the Sinus Barbaricus; which as it taketh name from the River Raptus, upon which it is situated, so they do both agree in communicating it to the Promontory called Raptum; 5. Meroe, the chief City of the Isle so called; 6. Sabath in the Bay of Adulis, which possibly might be some Colony of the Sabeans, in Arabia Felix; 7. Coloe, by Pliny, called Tolen, not far from the great Lake so named 8. Cambyses, by Protony, called Cambyses Ararium, from some treasures laid up here by Cambyses the Persian, in his invasion of this Country. 9. Axum, the chief City of the Axumites, a most potent people of these parts, and the Seat Royal of the old Æthiopian Kings, 10. Napata, as Protony; but by most others called Tanape; of old the residence of the Æthiopian Emperours, sacked and ruined by Petronius, President of Egypt. For when Candace (the Predecessor, I believe, of her whose Eunuch was baptized by Philip) had ransacked and wasted Egypt with Fire and Sword; Petronius Lieutenant to Augustus, drove them home, harried the whole Country, put this City to the spoil; and to prevent the like inroads, fortified the Frontiers of his Province. 11. Phile, upon the borders of Egypt, Garrisoned by the Romans till the time of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned. Of some of these, and others not here mentioned, we may have opportunity to speak more hereafter, in the survey of some of these particular Provinces, into which this Country stands divided at this present time.

And for the Provinces comprehended at this time within the bounds and limits of this Æthiopia, as before laid down, they are said to make up 70 Kingdoms, most of them subject to the Abassine Emperour. The Principal of which are, 1. Guagere, 2. Tigremion, 3. Angote, 4. Amma, 5. Damur, 6. Gosjami, 7. Bagamadrum, 8. Barnagassum, 9. Adel, 10. Adea, 11. Dansali, 12. Dobus, 13. Fatagar, 14. Xoa, 15. Burus. Concerning which I must premise, that I find the Relations of them to be very imperfect, many times disagreeing, sometimes false: So that I must profess myself to be less satisfied in the description of this Country, than in any of the rest which have gone before; Such as it is, I here present it to the Reader.

I. GUAGERE.

GUAGERE containeth only the Island of Meroc, an Island of much note and fame among the Ancients; made by the confluences of Nilus and Ataborus, the two chief Rivers of this Country. The length hereof 350 miles, the breadth 125, abundantly plentiful of Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, Ivory, Precious Stones, and an excellent kind of Mineral Salt. Well stored with most sorts of Beasts, both tame and wild, and of the last sort with Lyons, Leopards, Rhinoceros, Elephants, and Dragons.

The people are of the same nature and complexion with the rest: Mahometans by Religion, and the professed Enemies of the Abassine Emperour against whom they do not only defend themselves, by the advantages and benefit of their situation; but confederating with the Turks and Arabians, fall many times with great Forces into his Dominions. It is said by Pliny of the Inhabitants of this Island, that twice a year, viz. when the Sun is in the 16 degree of Taurus, and the 14 of Leo, they have the Sun so perpendicular above their heads, that he casts no shadow. More anciently memorable for their long lives, than their great exploits, attaining ordinarily to 123 years of Age; and therefore called Macerobii by the old Greek Writers. The women said to be of such great breasts in the former times, that they did suckle their children over their shoulders (as some women are now said to do near the Cape of Good Hope): the Dug being bigger than the Child. Of which thus Juvenal,

In Meroc crasse majorem Infante mamillam.

In Meroc the Mothers Pap
Is bigger than the child in lap.

The Principal Cities hereof. 1. Meroc, which gave that name unto the Island, but took the fame from Meroc, a sister of Cambyses King of Persia, or as Eusebius faith, from Merida, the mother of Chenephris, a King of Egypt. Josephus telleth us, that in former times it had been called by the name of Sabason authority of whose mistake it hath been made the Regal City of that Queen of Sheba (the Queen of Egypt, and Æthiopia, as Joseph calleth her) who came to Solomon. An opinion so received amongst these Islanders, that the name of Meroc being laid by, they have restored the name of Saba to this City, as of greater eminence. The City said by some to contain about 5000 houses, great and sumptuous; the streets thereof to be large and spacious, with Galleries on each side before the doors of their houses, where men walk safe from all extremities of heat, or rain. Beautified with four chief Gates, (besides others of inferior note) built of Alabaster and Jasper, wrought with Antick works: the doors belonging to those Gates of Cedar, curiously wrought; the ways which lead unto them, for the space of two leagues, beset with Palms, Orange trees, Cedars, Cypresses, and others no less useful both for shade and fruit. In the place where the four streets going from the Gates, do cross each other, a goodly Arch erected upon stately Pillars, fairly wrought and gilded, with the Statue of St. Matthew made of brass, but gilded, on the top thereof. Such it is said to be by some. Others think there is no such City; it may be not so beautiful, as some have made it. The other Towns of note and name in it, in former times, 2. Sacolebe. 3. Darom Vicus. 4. Efer, of which we have little but the name.

This Island was once a peculiar Kingdom; he being chosen for their King, who excelled the rest in strength; person, or in stock of Cattle; but those Kings so subject to their Priests, that by a Messenger, or Herald, they were sentenced by them unto death, and others advanced unto the Throne. And thus it stood till one of the more provident Kings, forcing the Temple with his Armed Soldiers, slew all these Priests; and freed himself and his successors from so great a slavery. Afterwards made a Province of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; honoured for the most part with the Seat of those Kings, and memorable in those times for the Table of the Sun: which was a place near the City of Meroc, always furnished with variety of roasted meat, set there by night at the charge and command of the King (much taken as it seemeth with this costly vanity) and eaten in the day time by all that would; called therefore the Table of the Sun, because ascribed unto his bounty by the ignorant people. In the declining of this Kingdom, occasioned by the inundation of the Saracens and other Arabians, this Island was seized on by that people, and hath been ever since kept by them together with the rest of the Countrey, lying betwixt it and Egypt, in which are contained, as some write, the Kingdoms of Damot, Sua, and Jaculum, anciently belonging to this Empire, now dismembered from it: not much observable, but for being a thoroughfare to great troupes of Pilgrims, which every Lent pass by them out of the Abassine Dominions, to the Sepulchre and other like places in and near Jerusalem.

2. TIGREMAN.

TIGREMAN, hath on the North, Guagere and the River Marabo, by which last parted from Barnagasso; on the South, the Realm of Angote; on the West, Nilus. On the East it is said to extend to the Red-Sea; but the Sea-parts thereof possessed by the Turks, and the adjoining Coast by the Moor and Arabians; the In-land parts promiscuously inhabited, especially more towards the Sea, by Christians and Ethiops. Divided into many inferior Regions, the principal whereof, 1. Sabian, 2. Torrater, 3. Balgada, so called perhaps from the chief Towns of them, and 4. Tigrai, the most large and ample of all these subordinate Provinces containing in it 17 great Tracts under so many Lieutenants, which rule all affairs both of Peace and War. The people black of colour, deformed of shape, in condition miserable, of conditions wicked. Some Rivers they have, but dried up in Summer; yet so, that with a little digging they find water in them. Their chief City Caxumo, or Cassumo, supposed to be the same which Ptolomy calleth Auxume; Stephanus, Axonites; Procopius, Auxomide: by all of them esteemed the Metropolitan City of Æthiopia, and the Seat Royal of their Kings. In witness whereof are many ancient buildings yet remaining, some Pillars which resemble the Egyptian Obelisks, admirable for their height and workmanship: 60 foot high and full of Charyades, or Letters engraven on them, which now none can read. The Æthiopian Auxumites, the most potent Nation of this Countrey, had their name from hence more probably conceived to be the regal Seat of Candace, (mentioned in the Acts) than any other in the Kingdoms and still affirmed to be honoured with the Court of their Emperours. Others I know have fixed his Court in Beimalechi, but I know not in what part to find it: some in a Royal Palace near the lake of Zemba, built in the year 1570. by some European Architects sent hither by Francis Duke of Flource: and many will allow him no fixed Seat at all, but tell us that he moveth with his Tents in a Royal Progress from one place to another: which wandring Court, or moving City, is said to be no less than ten miles in compass, when the

Pavilions

Pavilions which belong to it, are disposed of into Rank and Order.

This Kingdom is governed by a Prince of its own, but one who is an Homager and Tributary to the Abassine Emperour; to whom he payeth yearly 2000 Horses of the best Arabian breed, infinite quantities of Silks, great store of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Gold; but the determinate proportion I have no where met with.

3. ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North with Tigremoon, on the West with Nilus, on the South with the Kingdom of Amara, on the East with Danacly, and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of Hills and Valleys, both extremely fertile, productive of the choicest Fruits, and great Herds of Cattle. The people eat but once in 24 hours, and for the most part make that Meal in the night; their diet raw Venison, or smoked Beef: the Money most in use amongst them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which custom of using Salt, Pepper, and the like, instead of money, was in former times amongst most people the only barter, or way of exchange. So in Homar, Gladius Golden Armor was valued at an 100 Kine, and Diomedes Armor at 10 only. Afterward in Justice Commutative, it was deemed convenient to have some common Judge, or valuation of the equality or inequality of goods: the Invention of which, the Jews attributed to Cain; the Grecians to Hermiodice the Wife of Midar; the Romans to Jannus. It is called Nummus, or numus from num, because it was ordained by the Law: Pecunia, either because in elder times the chief of their wealth consisted in Cattle, as now among the Irish; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was stamped on it: and Moneta, à monendo, as Suidas faith, because when the Romans stood in need of money, Juno monabat, Juno admonished them that they should use Justice, and there should be no want of money. To this Goddess, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worshipped it in the figure of a Woman, holding a pair of Scales in one hand, and Coronopia in the other: by the Poet called Regina Pecunia, and not unjustly, the greatness of her power considered.

But to return again to Angote, I find not much spoken of the Country in the way of story; nor meet I with the names of any of their Towns, or Cities; unless that 1. Angote it self, as also 2. Abugana, 3. Gimmanura, two of the principal Provinces of it, may possibly be so called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4. AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North Angote; on the South Damus; on the West, it stretcheth towards the Nile; and on the East, bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Country very plain and Champaign, little swelled with Hills, sufficiently fruitful, and well stored with all sorts of Cattle. The chief City of it called Amara, by the name of the Province, situate in the midst of the Empire, and though not much distant from the Equator, if not plainly under it, yet blessed with such a temperate Air, such a fruitful Soil, such ravishing pleasures of all sorts, that some have taken (but mistaken) it for the place of Paradise: So strangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and Humane Industry have joined their helps together to enrich and beautify it.

But that which is the greatest Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, situate in a large and delightful Plain: the bottom of the Hill in Circuit 90 miles, and a days journey high; the Rock so smooth and even (but lesser and lesser towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly polished: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the light; so easie of ascent, that one may ride up with great pleasure, and in the midst of the Ascent a spacious Hall, as it were to rest in: the top it self is a large Plain, 20 leagues in circuit, compassed with an high wall, to the end that neither man nor beast fall down upon any chance; beautified towards the South with a rising Hill, out of which issueth a sweet Spring, which watering the several Palaces and Cardens of it, uniteth it self into a Lake for the use of Cattle: the Plain enriched with all sorts, both of fruit and grain; adorned with two magnificent Monasteries, in each of which are found 1500 Knights of the Order of S. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger Sons of the Emperour are continually inclosed, to avoid Sedition. They enjoy there whatsoever is fit for delight, or Princely Education; and from hence some one of them, who is most hopeful, or best liked, is again brought out, if the Emperour die Son-less, to be made Successor. This Mountain hath but one ascent up, as before was said, which is impenetrably fortified; and was destitute to this use, Anno 460. or thereabouts, by the Emperour Abraham Philip, advised hereunto, as he gave out, by an Heavenly Vision. In one of these Palaces is a famous Library, wherein are said to be many Books, which with us are either in part or totally lost; as the Oracles of Enoch, with the Mysteries which escaped the Flood, being by him ingraven on Pillars; the whole Works of Livy, and others. Which being heretofore translated by the Saracens into the Arabic Tongue (when having plundered all the most famous Libraries of the East and West, they burnt the Originals, out of a Plot to make that Language as Renowned, and as generally studied, as the Greek or Latine) are said by some good fortune to be here preserved.

5. DAMUT.

DAMUT hath on the North Amara, on the West Bugamedrum, on the South Gouamy; and on the East, the great Lake of Barena, and some part of Zanguebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Exterior. The Country plentifully furnished with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits, and living Creatures of all sorts. For none more famed than for their Slaves, sold in great numbers into Arabia, Egypt, Persia, India; and much elicited by them who buy them, for their abilities in War, dexterity in business, but specially for their fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this cause placed in Offices of great Trust and Power, by many of the Eastern Princes; who using a tyrannical form of Government, and not daring to trust the Sword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto places of Court, or Council, do for the most part arm these Slaves, and trust them also with the Conduct of their chief Affairs. A trust, in which they never falsified, or failed in a true discharge, but when presuming on their power, and those advantages which so great a Trust and Power had presented to them, they got into their hands the Kingdom of Bengala, and kept it many years in a Succession of the Abassine Slaves, wherewith they still made up their numbers, till outed not long since by the Great Mongul.

The Oxen of this Country are said to be near as great as Elephants; their Horns so large, that they serve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either Wine or water. Here is also said to be a kind of Unicorn, very fierce and wild, fashioned like an Horse, but no bigger than an Ass; but we must think these Unicorns to be but Rhinoceros, or else we shall very much mistake the truth of the matter. And for the

the people (to go them both over once again) they are for the most part Gentiles; some Christians intermixt amongst them, who have sundry Monasteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the Principality of Couche, said to have more Gold in it than all Pern; a Mountain all of Gold, if the Fryers say true. The people Gentiles, but the Prince not long since gained to the Christian Faith; into which he was baptized by the Abbot or chief Governour of the Monastery on the Hill Amara: Gradenus the Emperour being his Godfather, by whom named Andrew. And here they have an Hill of great height, and very difficult ascent; from the top whereof they use to cast headlong such of the Nobility, as by the Emperours sentence are condemned to die. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom, or their Principality, I am not able to resolve, unless, 1. Damut, and 2. Couche may be two, and the two most eminent, as giving name to those Estates.

6. GOIAMY.

GOIAMY hath on the North Damut; on the West Bagamadrum; on the South and East, some Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Country in the North parts full of Deserts and Rocky Mountains, in the residue plentifully furnished with all things necessary. Great store of Gold they find, but droesse, the people not knowing how to refine and purifie it; or loth here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way, for fear of drawing the Turks and Arabians to partake of the Booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers, or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the Hills with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall, making a noise, not much inferior to a clap of Thunder: and amongst other Lakes, two of special note, which for their greatness seem to be Seas; in which, as some report, Mermades and Tyrions, or Men-fishes use to shew themselves; and out of which it is thought by others, that the Fountains of Nilus do arise; and both true alike. But past all doubt the Abassines themselves are of this Opinion; and therefore in the title of Negaze, (to they call their Emperour) he is termed King of Goiamy, with this addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nilus. Deceived alike in their Opinion touching this particular, the Springs or Fountains of that River being further South: though possibly having lost himself in these vast Lakes, and issuing hence into a more contracted Channel, he may be said to have a second birth from hence, though not the first. And these I take to be the Lakes which were discovered by the Romans in the time of Nero. Who following the delign of some other great Potentates, Sesigbris, Cambyses, Alexander, and Philadelphus, in discovering the true Original of this famous River, employed the Continuans in that service; who aided in it by the then King of the Æthiopian, are said to have come at last unto certain great Marishes (most probably the lower and sedge parts of these Lakes now mentioned) of whose extent the Inhabitants themselves were ignorant, not possible to be discovered any further, the Weeds having to overgrown the water, that there was no further passage to be made by Boat, and less by wading.

Betwixt this Country and Damut, which we last passed thorow, is said to be a Province of Amazons, warlike and fierce, and very expert at the Bow; whose Queen knoweth no man, and by the rest honoured as a Goddess. These, they say, were first instituted by the Queen of Saba; as true, as that which some have added of the Phoenix visible in this Country; of Griffons, and of Fowls so big, that they make a shadow like a Cloud. Which strange reports I have here added, to supply the defect of Towns and Cities, of which I meet not with so much as the naked names, as undiscovered places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monsters.

7. BAGAMEDRUM.

BAGAMEDRUM, or SAGAMEDRUM, (for I find both names) lieth on the West of Goiamy, betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nilus: and keeping all along the course of that River, as far as Gugere, or Meroe, encountereth with the Southern point of Barnagasso; some do extend it also beyond that Island, but making the whole length thereof but 600 miles, do confute themselves. The greatest Province of this Empire it may probably be, Ceteris hujus Æthiopie amplissimum, as they say it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it must be 1500 miles, not 600 only.

The Country plentiful in Mines of the purest Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by fire, which makes it run like long rods, or ropes of Metal. And yet as large and as wealthy as they say it is, I am more to seek for Towns and rich Cities in it, than in the Deserts of Libya, or the sands of Arabia. Merchants and Travellers for the most part go no further than the Sea-coasts of the Country, or which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the In-lands; and of the Natives, such as have travelled abroad in other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant men, know little more of their own Empire than the place they lived in: Or probably their best Cities not containing above 2000 houses, few of them so many, and those patched up of Thatch, Dirt and Hurdles, (unless some of the Nobility, or Wealthier Merchants are provided better) they may have no greater reason to speak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of such forry places, as are indeed not worth the naming. Which I conceive to be the true condition of most, or all the In-land Towns in this large Estate.

8. BARNAGASSO.

BARNAGASSO, or BARNAGASSUM, hath on the West Gugere, or the Ile of Meroe; on the Southwest, as some say, a point of Bagamadrum; on the South, Dangali and Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it stretcheth towards Egypt; the Kingdoms of Jasculud and Sua, possessed by the Mahometans, being interposed.

The Country very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well stored with pleasant Rivulets, besides the Neighbourhood of the Red-Sea on the one side, Nile and Abanbi on the other. Remarkable for a Mountain in the Western part of it, which being spacious in the beginning, growth strait by little and little, and then enlargeth it self again to a League in Circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, a Monastery, and two very large Cisterns, with a piece of ground able to entertain and keep 500 men. To be ascended one way only, and that but to a certain mark; to which being come, they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets to the top of all; not to be took by force, by reason of the impossibility of ascent; not by long Siege, or any extremity of Famine, in regard it yields provision enough to maintain it self. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province against Turks and *Moor*s.

It containeth besides Barnagasso it self, the two Provinces of Canfila, and Dafile; though rather subject to the Governour or Vice-Roy of it, than parts and members of the same. Towns of most moment in the whole, 1. Beros, or Barna, conceived by some to be the Colony of Protony, the Residence of the Vice-Roy, situate on a pleasant and fishful River. 2. Zameta, honoured sometimes also with the Vice-Roy's presence; but rather as a retiring place in times of leisure, than a Town of strength. 3. Suachen, situate in an Island of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richest Cities of the Eastern parts, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, secured by Nature from all storms, of smooth Tides, sure Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great Ships of Burden. Situate in a little Island, the whole circumference whereof it taketh up; inasmuch that Vessels of all sorts, both within the Haven, and without, do usually unlade themselves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the Ship-beaks serve for Bridges. A wealthy and well-traded Town, both by Sea and Land, to which from the more In-land parts of the Abassine Empire, the Mountains open a safe passage for the carriage and re-carriage of their Commodities. Taken by the Turks long since, with all the rest of the Country lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, or Bassa; whom in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abassia; as if by the possession of this final part of the Empire, they would entitle the Grand Seigneur unto all the rest. The Town conceived by some to be that which Protony calleth Ostium Sebasticum, or rather Sebasticum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Protonis Perarum, or the Epithieris, as Pliny calleth it, of the Ancient Writers. And some again will have it to be the Suache of Pliny, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodites (who are called Snechei in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whose part of the Country it is seated, and to which name it hath some resemblance. 4. Bisam, not far from Erocco, remarkable for a Monastery situate on the top of a high Rock, environed with dreadful Precipices upon every side; in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectory: this being the chief of six others in this Province of Barnagasso, the furthest not above 30 miles distant. For maintenance of whom, and a great number of poor Children which they daily feed, besides the Tithes of all the Mountain in which it standeth (fruitful and rich, and at least 30 Miles in compass) they have many good Farms at the Foot of the said Mountain, and an hundred small villages appertaining to them, out of which they raise yearly great provision of Corn, and above 2000 head of Cattel; their Revenues out of Tigremson being reckoned in: A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hospitality, in regard their Novices, or young Monks are sent abroad to earn their living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the Husbandry of the House: the Elder only being found at the charge of the Monastery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5. Erocco, another noted Port on the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia, to which a passage openeth through the Straits of the Mountains, as it doth to Suachen, conceived to be the Adula of Protony, the Addition of Pliny, now in possession of the Turks, or at their command. 6. Santar, 7. Gabel, 8. Laccari, and 9. Abarach; these four last in the Province of Dafila. This Country at the present, and for long time past, is subject both to the great Neguz, or the Prestigious of Æthiopia, and the Grand Seigneur of the Turks; naturally subject to the one, and tributary to the other. Governed by a King of their own, whom they call Barnagassus, by the name of his Province, a Vassal and an Homager to the Æthiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly Tribute of 150 of the best breed of Horses, besides some quantities of Silk, and some other Commodities: but so ill-neighbour'd by the Turks, that he is fain to pay also to the Beglerbeg or Bassa resident at Suachen, 1000 ounces of Gold yearly for a Composition. For the Turks having by the Conquest of Egypt made themselves Masters of those Countries towards Æthiopia, which formerly were allied to, or con-derate with the Mameluck Sultans; within short time (viz. An. 1558), possessed themselves also of the Town of Suachen, and the parts adjoining; made it the residence of one of their Beglerbegs or Bassas, and gave him the title of Beglerbeg of Abassia, as before was said: forgot by the industrious Collector of the Turkish History, in his enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Bassas of Africa. To this they added not long after, all the rest of the Sea-Coasts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after some short breathing made a further inroad; in which they did so wait the Country, that in the end they compelled the Barnagassian (not being aided by the Neguz) to this composition.

9. DANGALI, and 10. DOBAZ.

SOUTH and South-East of Barnagasso, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI and DOBAZ; that of Dangali bordering on the Red-Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahometani, or Arabian Moors, both in continual enmity with the Abassine Emperours, and both of like nature, in regard of the soil and people.

DANGALI hath on the North, Barnagasso; on the South, some part of the Kingdom of Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the West, Dobaz before-mentioned. It taketh up some part of the Arabick Bay, within the Straits of Babel-Mandel; and without those Straits, the greatest part of that spacious Bay, which anciently was called Sinus Aualticus, as far as to the Promontory then called Mosylon, (neighbour'd by a noted Empory of the same name) now the Cape of Dicono; near unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf, and suddenly straiteneth it self again; so as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve leagues broad. And in this Channel are five or six Islands, which hinder the passage; so as Sailers must have good experience to avoid the Rocks which lie near those Islands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Bebul or Babel, which gives name to the Straits of Babel-Mandel, a narrow Frieth, opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian or Indian Ocean. 2. Vella, a well frequented Port, conceived to be the same which Strabo calleth Anipbila; not found by that name in Protony. 3. Zagnani, and 4. Zama, in a Province of this Kingdom called Lacca. 5. Docono, near the Cape so called, and therefore probably the Mosylon of the ancient Writers. 6. Dangali, not far from the Sea-side, which gives name to the Kingdom. Nothing else memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles, as in Nilus.

On the South-West of Dangali lieth the Realm of DOBAZ, extended on the West to the borders of Angote. The Country large, containing twelve, or as some say, 24 several Prefectures. Of so good Pasturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater size than in other places, and those for number not easily matched in all this Empire. The people such professed Enemies of the Christian Faith, that they suffer not any man to marry, till he hath killed 12 Christians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Neguz; but it is only when they list: so far from being Contributories towards the support of his Estate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their Towns, 1. Dobaz, which gave name to the whole Kingdom. 2. Bally, upon the same River on which Dobaz standeth, but more near the head.

11. ADEL.

ADEL is bounded on the North with some parts Dangali, and the Red-Sea; on the South, with Adea; on the East, with the Red-Sea; and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the East, with Fatigar: extended on the Sea-Coast from the Cape of Docono, to the Cape of Guardafiu, conceived most probably to be the Aromata of Ptolomy, a noted Promontory in his time.

The Country plentiful of Fleth, Honey, Wax, Corn, Gold, and Ivory; great flocks of Sheep, and many of those Sheep of such burdesome Fleeces, that their tails weigh 25 pounds. Some Kine they have, which have horns like a Stag: others but one horn only, and that in the forehead, about a foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The people inhabiting on the Sea-Coasts are of Arabian Parentage, and of the Mahometan Religion: those towards the Inland Countries, of the old Æthiopic Race, and wholly Gentile.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Zeila, a noted Port-Town, situate in or near the place where Ptolomy placeth Avallies: stored with variety of Merchandise, and yielding some representation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being Lime and Stone; materials not much used amongst them in these latter times. Of great both beauty and esteem, till the year 1516, when sacked and burnt by the Portugals, before that time the most noted Empory of all Æthiopia for the Indian Trade. 2. Barbora, seated on the same Sea-Coast, well frequented by Merchants, and possibly may be the Mundi or Malao of Ptolomy; neighboured by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Fellex. 3. Mette, another of the Sea-Towns near the Cape of Guardafiu, supposed to be the Aemie of the Ancient Writers. 4. Affam, 5. Selir, and 6. Bidar, on the Sea-Coasts also. 7. Arar, the principal of the Kingdom; more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Country, formerly a member of the Æthiopian Empire, is of late grown to so great strength and reputation, that the Kings hereof have freed themselves from all signs of subjection to that Crown, and think themselves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this reputation and power by Gradogma, or Gradameh, who reigned here in the year 1540: by whom Claudius the Neguz was so overland, and his Country so destroyed by continual Incursions, that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himself into the heart of his Estates, and crave Aid of the Portugals. And though by their assistance, and the help of their Shot, he was twice victorious; yet in the third battel he was vanquished, and in the fourth, Anno 1559, slain upon the place. This King accounted for a Saint by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual Wars against the Christians, did so establish the Affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it so well settled unto his Successors, that the Abassine Emperours hath ever since left it out of his Titles; though many other of those small Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial Stile, in which he hath as little power as he hath in this: It is said also, That in the battel wherein Claudius was slain, and his Army routed, consisting of 60000 Foot, 4000 Horse of his own Subjects; besides the Portugals, the King of Adel got into his possession the greatest mass of Corn and Treasure that was ever seen. A Victory obtained as well by Policy as Force: the Abassine being seldom fought with, or their Country wasted and depopulated by the Kings of Adel, till by the strict observance of their Lenten Fast, they were grown so weak, that they were not able to discharge their domestick businesses, and therefore most unable to resist a prevailing Enemy.

12. ADEA.

ADEA, or ABEX, as some call it, bath on the North the Kingdom of Adel; on the South and West, some parts of the Abassine Empire; on the East, the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafiu, where it joyneth with Adel, along the greatest part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the reason of which name hereafter.

The Country plentifully fertile, shaded with Woods and spacious Forrefts, and those Woods liberally furnished both with Fruits and Cattel; the Champagne Country not less fruitful in Wheat, Barley, and other necessaries, besides a great store of Horses. The people of an Olive-colour, in some places more inclined to black: not clothed, but from the Girdle downward; nor very well armed in the time of War, but with poisoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original Extraction, whose language they retain with some little difference in pronunciation.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Adea, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, because of the old residence of the Kings. 2. Carfuir, upon the Sea-Coast, sometimes called Opone, then a noted Empory, and situate near the Promontory called Zingis extrema. 3. Azam, and 4. Zazelle, supposed to be the Essina and Tonica of the Ancient Writers. 5. Magadazo, a petit Kingdom of it self; a wealthy and well traded Town, situate in a fruitful and delightful soil, and neighboured by a safe and capacious Haven: much traded by the Portugals, who bring from Adere in Arabia Felix, and Cambasia in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian Commodities; which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abassine Slaves, which last they value as the chiefest Merchandise which this Country yieldeth. First built by some Arabian Moors, who flying from the King of Laza their Mortal Enemy, under the Conduct of seven Brethren, came into these parts, where they founded this City, and that of Brava in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was said; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-Coasts of both Æthiopia's, as far as to the Cape Des Corrientes, which is somewhat to the South of the Tropick of Capricorn. The Kings hereof in former times Vassals to the Abassine Emperour, to whom they paid a yearly tribute; this Kingdom still remaining amongst his Titles: but since the taking of Magadazo, made so obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals, that the Estate of the Abassine in it is but merely titular.

13. FATIGAR, and 14. XO A.

FATIGAR hath on the East Adel, and some part of Adea; on the West, the little Realm of Xoa; on the South, Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Country Champagne, sufficiently fruitful of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furnished with pleasant and delicious Fruits. Most memorable for a Lake of twelve miles in compass, on the top of a Mountain, well stored with Fish; from whence and from the rest of the Mountain issue many Rivers, which much enrich the Vallies and Fields adjoining. The chief Town hereof (if any one be better than another) I conceive to be Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or so called from it.

Westward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XO A, bordering West on Amara; Southward upon Damut; furnished with great store of Corn and Cattel, but not much much beautified with Towns of any consideration: Nothing observable in the History or description of it, but that together with Fatigar, and others of the Mid-land Provinces, it hath continued constant in obedience to the Abassine Emperours, notwithstanding all those misadventures which have hapned to that Empire in these latter dayes.

15. BARUS.

ON the South-East of Adea, lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eastward to some part of Sinus Barbaricus; and touching at the Western Point, upon that of Fatigar. The soyl and people much of the same condition with the rest of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Christians for the generality in the Mid-land parts. Those Christians subject (as the rest) to the Abassine Emperour; but he hath neither place of strength or consideration in all the Country; those of most note, 1. Brava, once a Free Town, and governed after the manner of a Commonwealth, by twelve Aldermen or Common-Counsellors, descended from the Seven Arabian Brethren, by whom first built; the Founders of Magadazo also, as before was said. But now, together with 2. Fate, and 3. Gogia, all upon the Sea, made subject to the Portugals; by whom taken under the Conduct of Tristram de Cugna.

Besides these, there are many other Kingdoms mustered in the Stile Imperial, (the swelling vanity whereof, we shall see anon) but of so little observation in the course of business, and so obscure in the esteem of such as have spoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to find their names: and having found their names, to bid you not to seek for more; there being nothing else in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the Body aggregated of those several Members, it was first planted, as is noted and proved elsewhere, by Ludim the Son of Mizraim, and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture hath the name of Ludim. A Nation not much taken notice of in the first Ages of time, but by an Error of Josephus: who giving too much credit to some Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the reputation of the Jews to the highest pitch, telleth us a story, how the Æthiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moser; the City of Meroe besieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his hands by Tharbis, the Daughter of the King, who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the City was married to him. All this not only questioned, but rejected by discerning men, as a Jewish Fable, that hath no ground to stand upon in true Antiquity. With little better fortune, and as little truth do the Æthiopians tell the story of their own Original. By whom we are informed, that Chus the Son of Cham, first reigned in this Æthiopia; to whom succeeded his Son Regna, and next after, Dedan; that from the death of Dedan, till the reign of Aruch (the certain time whereof they tell not) the people lived in Caves and holes digged under the ground; as did the Troglodites, an ancient Nation of this Country, in the times long after: that Arach first built the City of Aruma, and by that Pattern taught them the use of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend, is the story of Maqueda a Queen hereof, and fourth from Aruch; whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Testaments, for the Royal Visit which he bestowed upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with Child by Solomon when she was in his Court, she was delivered of a Son, whom the caused to be called Melech, or Melilech; and at the age of 20 years, to be sent to his Father. By whom instructed in the Law, and circumcised, and called by the name of David; he was returned into his Country, with Azarius the Son of Zadok the Priest; who had stolen the two Tables of the Law, and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen reigned the Empire to her Son. His Successors afterwards called David, till Indion (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace, returning home, baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the substance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Gospel.) That Chus planted in Arabia, hath been shewn already, as also what absurdities must needs arise from supposing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore most probable it is, that this Country was first peopled by the Children of Ludim, as before was said. To whom the Abassine coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added; and in some tract of time be of such great power as to put their name upon the Country. For that the Abassine were originally an Arabian people, appears by Stephanus, one of the old Chorographers, who out of Uranius (an ancient Author than himself) hath told us this, Ἀραβία ἵερὸν Ἀεθίοποι. Another Stephanus, and he a very ancient Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath, as he thinks, decided the Controversie, by making Sheba the Son of Chus, the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Sheba the Son of Regna, the Father of the Æthiopians; and for this cause hath fitted us with this pretty Criticism, that Sheba when it is written with Samech, must be rendered Æthiopia; and Arabia; when writ with Shin. But this by no means will be found to agree the controversy; it being evidently clear, that both Sheba the Son of Chus, and Sheba the Son of Regna, were originally settled in Arabia, as hath there been shewn; though I deny not, but that some of the posterity of Chus in those elder times, (before the coming over of the Abassine Nations) might either out of too much Populosity, or desire of Change, cross over the Arabian Gulf, and take up such part of this Country as the Ludims had not fully peopled, with whom conjunct at last, both in name and government. And for Maqueda (supposing that to be her name) she was doubtless Queen of the Sabeans in Arabia Felix; not of the Æthiopians in the waste of Africa. For besides the longcomeliness of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel; it is very probable, that the Son of Solomon by this Lady, would never have suffered Egypt to have lain iniquier, whilst Sesae the King thereof made war upon Reboam, the Son of Solomon also, and so by consequence his half Brother. But to leave these uncertain Fables, the first action of moment which we meet with in unquestioned Story, touching these Æthiopians, is that which hapned betwixt them and Cambyses the Persian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Persia, conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Æthiopia unto Egypt also. Upon this resolution he sent Embassadors to that King, to search into the passages of his Country, and discover his strengths; and by them sent a Tun of Wine, some Bracelets, a Purple Habit, and a Box of sweet Ointments, to present him with. Which Presents being tendered to him, he looked upon the Unguent and the Purple Robe, as too slight and effeminate; the Bracelets he conceived to be Bonds, or Fetters, and openly laugh'd at them, as too weak to hold in a Prisoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleased, and sorrowed that his Country yielded no such Liquor. But understanding well enough what his Visit aimed at, he gave the Embassadors at their parting (amongst other Gifts) an Æthiopian Bow of great length and strength; requiring them to tell their Master, That until every Persian could bend that Bow (the Æthiopian Bows being a foot longer than the Persian, as before was noted) it would be no safe warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cause to thank the Gods for giving the Æthiopians to contented minds, as not to think of conquering their Neighbour Kingdoms, Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vast Mountains, we find them not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans meddled with them, had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen here, during the Empire of Augustus: who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governour of that Province, brought to such conformity, that he was fain to sue for peace, and to purchase it with the loss of some part of her Country. To keep them quiet for the future, Ptolemy an Æthiopian City, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garrison by the Romans, and the Seat of their Deputy for these parts: held by them till the Empire of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned, because the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthiopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire: inasmuch as Justinian sent unto Heliothius, as Junius his Successor did unto Arcturus, the then Kings of this Country: to crave their brotherly assistance against the Perfians.

Of their Conversion to the Faith in the Reign of a second Candace, (unless as Pliny thinketh, Candace was the general Name of all their Queens) we have spoken already. To which the Æthiopians add, that after the baptizing of their first Philip (the Son of that Candace) by the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperours succeeding had the name of Philip; till the Religious life of John, a Contemporary of the Emperour Constantine, honoured as a Saint after his decease, made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John, prefixed that of Presbyter, because (as they affirm) he executeth as well the Sacerdotal as the Regal Office: Rex idem hominum, Divinus Sacerdos, the very Animus of the Poet. And this is commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Priest John, and his Estate, the Empire of Priest John, with no truth at all. Others more probably conceive, that this vulgar name of Priest John, is but a corruption, or mistaken for Pretegianni or Precious John, and that the word Prete (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no less. And yet I more incline to those, who finding that the word Pretegianni signifieth an Apostle, in the Persian Tongue; and Pretegianni an Apostolical man; do thereupon infer, that the title of Padescha Pretegianni, an Apostolical King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxy of his Belief. Which not being understood by some, instead of Pretegianni, they have made Priest John, in Latin Presbyter Johannes: as by a like mistake, one Pregent, or Pregian, (as the French pronounce it) Commander of some Gallies under Lewis the XII. was by the English of those times called Prior John. Pretegianni then, not Priest John, is his proper adjunct: contractedly, but commonly called the Prete, by the Modern French, who usually leave out before a Consonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, than it is at the present, shrewdly impaired of late times by the Turks and Arabians: Of which the first have taken from him all his Country, from the Isle of Meroe unto Egypt, with all the Sea-coasts of Barnagasso; the latter as much encroaching on them, on the rest of the Maritime parts of his Dominions. But from none have they suffered more than the Kings of Adel, who have divers times laid waste their Country, discomfited some of them in the open Field, and in the year 1558, slain their King in battle: not cured of those wounds to this very day. For Adam, who succeeded Claudius that was slain in battle, was so far from being able to revenge the death of his Predecessor, that being suspected to incline to Mahometanism, he was defeated by the under-King of Barnagasso. Since which time they have so languished by intestine dissensions, that though Alexander the Third (if there were ever such a King, which I find much doubted) is said to have settled his affairs by the aid of the Portugals, and that some strange successes have been since reported of a later Emperour: yet the truth is, that the Estate hereof hath been so imbroiled in Civil Wars, and so many of their Emperours successively murdered, that the power and reputation of it is exceedingly weakened, and the Country made a prey to impudant Enemies. For in the year 1603, the Emperour Melch Gadda, who succeeded in the Throne by the deposition and imprisonment of his Predecessor, (under colour of Baltardy) was not long after slain by one Zezelegent: and James, or Jacob, advanced unto the Empire: James not long after vanquished, and slain in the fields of Guera, by one Saxinosus (contracted by some called Saxinus) his three Sons being forced to fly to provide for safety. What became of the two Eldest, I have no where found. The youngest, called Zaga Christos, after many hazardous wandrings and accidents, arrived at last into Italy, and thence he came to Paris, Anno 1638, where he was entertained in the quality of a Prince, but without hope of being restored to the Throne of his Fathers; for Saxinosus, or Saxinus, immediately upon the victory, had possessed himself of the whole Empire; though for a time so terribly disquieted with Treasons and Conspiracies, that in the year 1607, he was fain to sue for aid to the King of Spain, and tender a submission of the Abassine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the spirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not so easily be laid down, (though there followed a long calm between) but that it brake out again within few years after (that is to say, about the year 1628,) more violently than it did before: a powerful Rebel starting up, who followed by an Army of 50000, had questionless dispossessed the Prete of his whole Dominions, if not prevented and discomfited beyond expectation. For it happened, that one Vermelle, a Frenchman, a Jeweller by Trade, but exercised in the wars of Holland, understanding that the Abassine Emperors was much delighted with the Rarities and Jewels of France, found means to convey himself into the Court, where understanding the great danger which that great Emperour was in, and the ignorance as well of the good Subjects, as of the Rebels, in the Arts of War, he got leave to have the disciplining or training of 80000 men, with which small Army, he utterly discomfited and routed that vast body of Rebels, and was thereupon deservedly made Commander in Chief of all the Forces of the Empire. This is the last News of any certainty that hath come from thence: (it being Anno 1634, in which that Victory was obtained) but that there hath been a report of some new Commotions, Anno 1648, the particulars and truth whereof, must be sought elsewhere.

Yet notwithstanding these disasters, these later Emperours have still preserved their Majesty among their Subjects whom they hold in Servitude enough, though they keep not such a distance as in former Ages, when the Prete was honoured as a God, and used to shew himself but thrice in a year, viz. on Christmas, Easter, and Holyrood-day: by which retiredness it was thought that he made his presence more acceptable; some holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majesty of a King, than to make himself too common an object for the eye of the Vulgar. The like kind of state was once kept by those Kings of France of the first Merovingian line; who withdrawing themselves from all publick affairs, used only to shew themselves (as we have already said) on May-day. A greater retiredness than this, was that which Velleday Queen of the Teniteri, (a people of the Rhine) is reported by Tacitus to have used; for when the rest of the Germans then in Arms, sent Ambassadors to her to inform her of their Victory against the Romans, they were prohibited either to speak to her, or to see her; Arcebanus aspectu, quo venerationis plus inest. Such a keeping of State the Politick Prince Tiberius used, when the German Legions mutined; for he deigned not himself himself to see them pacified, but sent his Son; the reason was, quia majestati major è longinqva reverentia. And no doubt, the same keeping of distance swayed much with him, when he forsook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propension to follow his unnatural pleasures the more securely, together with his deformities on his face, had also their powers upon his resolution.

The Title of this great and mighty Emperour, (but neither so great or mighty in power as title) runneth thus: N. N. Supremus of his Kingdoms, and the beloved of GOD, the Pillar of Faith, sprung from the Stock of Judah, the Son of David, the Son of Solomon, the Son of the Column of Sion, the Son of the Seed of Jacob, the Son of the hand of Mary, the Son of Nahu after the flesh, the Son of St. Peter and Paul after the Spirit; Emperour of the Higher and Lesser Æthiopia, and of the most mighty Kingdoms, Dominions and Countreys of Xoa, Goa, Caffares, Fatigar, Angoto, Balig-nazo, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the fountains of Nile, Amara, Bangamedron, Ambca, Vangucum, Tigre-maon, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Barnagassum; and Lord of all the Regions under the Confines of Egypt.

It seemeth by this Title, that these Æthiopian Emperours, however the truth of Story goeth, conceive themselves to be sprung from Solomon and Maqueda, (or Nizaula, as Joseph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by some reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the same with those of the Tribe of Judah, which are a Lyon Rampant in a Field Or: and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah, shall overcome. But Bana, an expert Herald, giveth this Prince no such Coat-Armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a Cross Portate Mars, charged with a Crucifix Sol, between two Scourges of the Second. And yet not altogether to discredit the old Tradition so generally received amongst them; it may be probable enough, that when the Abassins came into Æthiopia, some of the Sabeans their next Neighbours, came along for company, and amongst them some of the Royal Race of the Queen of Sheba; with some of which, by reason of their great Nobility, some of the Abassine Emperours might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impossibility, but that Solomon (considering his course of life) might get a Son upon the body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus descended.

As for the Government of these Emperours, it is absolutely Regal, or to say better, perfectly Despoticall: the people being treated by them more like Slaves than Subjects; taking away Seigniories, and giving them unto whom he pleaseth, the deprived party not daring to express the least discontent. By them so revered, that it was anciently a custom, if the King were blind, or lame, or maimed, for the Subject to inflict on his own body the like impression: still had in so much honour by the greatest Subject, that at his bare name they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their fingers; and reverence his Paulion as they pass by, though he be not in it. He on the other side seldom appeareth to his Subjects, but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a piece of Wachet-Lassata, which he lifteth up and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revenue, some of our late Observers speak nothing but wonders. Some say his Empire reacheth from the Red-Sea to the Atlantick Ocean, and from one Tropick to the other: Some, that he is of so great Riches, that he is able to purchase a moiety of all the world, if it were to be sold; others, that he is able to raise for any present service a Million of Men. And he himself is said to have offered to the Portugals one million of Money, and another of Men, if they would employ it in a war against the Infidels. But notwithstanding these great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be such a Miracle as some of these reports have made him. For they that speak most knowingly of his Revenue, affirm, that the ordinary expenses of his Court and Army, being discharged, he coffereth up but three Millions of Crowns per annum; which is no great matter: and upon extraordinary emergencies of War and Trouble, will be easily waited, or brought into a narrower compass. And yet to make up this Revenue, besides the Crown-Lands, or Domain Imperial, he layeth some Tax or other upon every house, receiveth the Tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines; and levieth on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaseth to chuse, so it be not that in which the Lords themselves inhabit.

This, though it be no great Intrado, considering the large extent of his Dominions, and Form of his Government; yet it is greater in proportion than his Forces are. For notwithstanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag of raising a Million of Men for present service; it is well known, that he was never able to advance half that number in his greatest necessity; and amongst those whom he can raise, there are but few who can deserve the name of Soldiers. For the People being poor and beggarly, and brought up in a servile and base condition, are naturally destitute of that courage and alacrity of spirit which should be in men professing Arms, or fit for Noble Undertakings, and are besides, on certain Jealousies of State, so diffused from War, that they know not how to use their Weapons, when there is occasion. So that for my part, I consider him as a weak and impuissant Prince, of no authority or influence out of his Dominions; nor able to defend himself from the continual Incurfions of his Neighbours (some of them mean and petit Princes) which lie nearest to him. Landlocked on every side from Traffick and Commerce with the Seas; incroached upon Northward by the Turks; confronted on the West by the King of Borneo, who possesseth not a tenth part of the Land of Negroes; on the East, continually bearded and baffled by the King of Adel, sometimes a Vassal of his own; and on the South with the Galle, a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waste before them wheresoever they come; and finally in the later time by his own Subjects. Injuries not to be endured, had he power to help it.

But the chief stay of this Estate, is an Order of Knights, entituled by the name of St. Anthony, to which every Father that is of the degree of a Gentleman, is to destinate one of his Sons, if he have above two, but not the eldest, and out of these they call about 12000 Horse, which are to be the standing Guard of the Emperour's person: their Oath is, To defend the Frontiers of the Empire, to preserve Religion, and to make head against the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbots of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara, where they have two Monasteries, as well for the training up of these Knights in the time of their youth, as their retirement when grown old, and discharged from service.

The Arms of this Empire we have seen before.

And so much for ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulph of Arabia, to the Southern Ocean) on the West, with the Æthiopic Ocean; on the North with Terra Nigritarum, and the Higher Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Corner, with the Main Ocean, parting it from the Southern undiscovered Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reason before delivered; Inferior was added for distinction sake, because somewhat of a lower situation than the other is. By Ptolomy called Æthiopia Interior, because lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge, than the nearer did: and by late Writers, for the contrary reason, called Æthiopia Exterior, because situate without and beyond the other.

It comprehendeth all Ptolomy's Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia sub Ægypto, and all those Lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Country so little discovered in those elder times, that we find mention only of some eminent Mounts, as 1. Ganchib, 2. Lon, 3. Zephia, 4. Barditis, 5. Mofchi; one only Region known by name, called Agisimbæ, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a large extent. The People not distinguished here as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but only by their kind of diet; some of them being called Ambrophagi, from their eating of men; and others Ichthyophagi, from their living on fish. Of these, the first inhabited on the Eastern shores, near the Bay of Barbaria; the principal of which had the name of Rapti: the last on the shores of the Western Ocean, near Magnus Sinus, or the Great Bay; called also from their Western situation, by the name of Hesperii. Nothing else told us of these parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Fens of Nilus were occasioned by the great abundance of Snow, which fell from the Mountains of the Moon: and that in many parts hereof, there were Rhinoceros, Tygers, Elephants, but these last all white.

Such was the face of this Country in those elder days. The Character of it at the present, generally and in brief, is thus given by Aubanus, viz. That it is Mountainous in the West, Sandy in the midst, and Desert towards the East. But for the several qualities of the soil and people, being of very different tempers; we shall give the better description of them in their several Inclusions, then as presented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills and Rivers of most reckoning in it; the principal of their Mountains are, 1. those called Cantaberæ in the Province of Angola; 2. Lanne Montis, formerly accounted for the boundary of both Æthiopia's, now found to belong to this alone. A Chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropick of Capricorn; full of sharp Rocks, of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous and savage people: the Vallies underneath of so great a depth, that they seem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Country is the Lake of Zembre, so much renowned for giving birth to the greatest Rivers of the World; though it self but 50 miles in compass. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1. Nilus, which passing through some part of this Country, and traversing the whole length of the Arabian and Egyptian Empires, endeth its long course in the Mediterranean. 2. Zaire, the greatest of all Africa, but unknown to the Ancients, which running Westward through the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the lesser Streams of 1. Vamba, 2. Barbela, 3. Coanza, 4. Lelunda, makes many Islands in his way, and at the last by a mouth of 28 miles widens, disgorgeth his full stomach in the Western Ocean. 3. Cuama, which making his passage towards the East, and much increased by the addition of six great Rivers, after a long course of 700 miles (in all which it is Navigable) loseth it self in the Indian or Arabian Ocean; and 4. Flavius Spiritus Sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghost, which shaping a course opposite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in conclusion in the Southern Seas. It is divided most properly into these four parts, that is to say, 1. Zanguebar, 2. Monomotapa, 3. Cafraia, 4. Manicongo. Some also add the Country of Anan, subdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. But these we have ascribed with better reason to the other Æthiopia, within the Bounds whereof they are wholly situate.

1. ZANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR, is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, or the Indian Ocean, on the West with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia; on the North with the Higher Æthiopia only; on the South with Monomotapa. The reason of the name I find not.

It containeth in it the great Province of Agisimbæ, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior, and in so much of the other also as lieth on the South of the River Raptus; now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. The Country on both sides of that River, known in old times by the name of Barbaria, giveth to a large adjoining Bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus, and was much famed in those Elder Times for the best sort of Myrrh: the Myrrha Trogloditica, and Myrrha Barbarica, or Barbarica, being used for the same by some of the Ancients, because the Troglodites; and the people of this Barbaria joyned on one another. Here was also in those Elder Times a good Race of Ginger, of which faith Dioscorides, Μακρὰ καὶ ὀκτώμηρος ἡ ῥίζα βαρβαρική. That it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbaria. Where by the way, the Scholiasts upon that Author, and Pliny in the 12. Book, have been much mistaken; of which the first takes this Barbaria or Barbaria for some part of the Indies; the other thinketh, that the Myrrha of these parts had the name of Barbæra, from the drossiness and coarseness of it, as if so called led only because unrefined. The principal Town hereof called Raptia, by the name of the River, seated not far from the Sea; and by reason of the great Trade of it, esteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolomy. A noted Promontory of the same name was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called; The Country is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflowed with unruly Rivers; and withall so full of Woods and Forests, that for want of passage for the wind, the Air is generally (as in all Fenny Countries of the like obstruction) exceeding pestilent. The People of Complexion black, and of curled hair; Mashometans on the Sea-Coasts; in the Inland-parts Idolaters; extremely given to Witchcraft and Divinations. Naked above the Waste, and beneath covered only with the skins of Beasts, or some such mingled colour stuff, as the Scythians Plad. The Moors which dwell on the Sea-coasts, use to adventure on the Seas in little Vessels, sowed together with leathern thongs, and calked with Gum; having no other Sails in them than the leaves of Palm-trees. Boats of as slight making as those used anciently by the Britans, whereof thus the Poet:

*Primum cana salix, madefacta vimine parvam
Texitur in puppim; caesque induta juvenco
Velloris patiens, tumidum superenatat Annem.*

Which I find thus rendred to my hand:

The moistned Oser of the hoary Willow
Is woven first into a little Boat;
Then cloath'd in Bullocks Hides; upon the Billow
Of a proud River lightly doth it float.

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to say, 1. Melinde, 2. Bombaza, 3. Quiloa, 4. Mofambique, 5. Sofala, all along the Coasts, 6. Muenbembe, 7. Corova, 8. Calen, 9. Anzaga, 10. Monzato, 11. Badin, 12. Mombra, 13. Mombizo, 14. Embro, and 15. Macao, more within the Land. Of the nine last, not being perfectly discovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we shall now be silent. But the first lix lying upon the Shores, or near it, and consequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventures, shall be surveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom, on the South of the Realm of Adea, in the Higher Æthiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci; so named from Melinde, the chief City of it, well walled, and seated in a fruitful and delightful Soil; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Fleth, Limons, Citrons, and most sorts of Fruits; but not well furnished with Corn, the greatest part whereof is brought out of Cambata, a Province of India. The Houses built of Lime and Stone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-Coasts of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; those of the Inlands, which are of the original Natives, for the most part Heathens. Most of them of an Olive-colour, but inclining to white; the Women generally, of as white complexions as in other places; but they have some black people also: and all of them more civil in their habit, course of life, and entertainment in their houses, than the rest of this Country. Great Friends unto the Portugals, and befriended by them, ever since the kind entertainment which they gave unto Vafques de Gama, whom they furnished with Pilots to direct in his way to India, when first discovered by that people, Anno 1497.

2. MOMBZA is the name of another of these petit Kingdoms, of the same nature for the temper of the soil and people that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief City of it, situate from Melinde about 70 miles, in a little Island of 12 miles compass; but of good influence on some part of the Continent also. The Isle and City said to have some resemblance unto the Rhodes. The Town about a league in circuit, environed with a Wall, and fortified with a Castle; the streets thereof very narrow, but well built, most of the Houses being Brick, and the Mosques capacious. The King hereof a Mabomeian, as are most of his Subjects, and a bitter Enemy of the Christians. For which cause, and upon some discourtesies received from them, the Town was taken by Vafques de Gama, Anno 1500, but abandoned again by reason of the unhealthy Air, not well agreeing with the constitution of the Portugals. Afterwards, having taken in Alibeg, and five Turkish Gallies, the better to enable themselves against the Portugals; the Town was taken and ruined by Thomas de Catigno, sent thither Anno 1589, by the Portugall Vice-Roy residing in Goa, there being taken at that time (besides the spoil of the City) all the Turkish Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many lesser Pieces of Ordnance. Such of the Turks and Citizens as escaped the slaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themselves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Inbians, a man-eating people, who had before besieged the City; and gathering up such gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King, and as many of the principal Citizens as they could get into their hands. 2. Appaza, the second Town of note, was taken by the Portugals about two years after.

3. QUILOA lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Country rich and pleasant, the Inhabitants for the most part of Arabian Ancestry; of complexion near unto a white; their Women comely, sumptuous in Attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their houses, which are generally well built, and richly furnished. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whose honour they are very tender) the people of this Quiloa are said to have a strange custom amongst them, more to be mentioned for the rarity than the decency of it: which is the sowing up of the private passages of Nature in their Female Children, leaving only a small vent for their Urine. Thus sowed, they keep them carefully at home, till they come to be married. And the that is by her Husband found to want this sign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kind of ignominy sent back to her Parents, and by them as disgracefully received.

It took his name from Quiloa, the chief Town thereof, situate in a little Island, but near the shore, from which parted by a narrow Fyrd, opposite to the mouth of the River Coava, by some called Quiloa. First built in the 400 year of the Higira, by Ali, the Son of Sultan Hishben, who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, because their Mothers were Persians, and his an Abyssinia, sought new Adventures in these parts, and bought the Island. His Successors grown rich and powerful by the trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land: and so adorned Quiloa, the chief Town of their Kingdom, that for sumptuous and magnificent buildings, there were few like it in those parts. Proud of their many good Successes, they provoked the Portugals, by whom under the conduct of Vafques de Gama, Anno 1500, the City it self was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave some Fortresses erected by them in convenient places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a quarrel with Abraham, then the King of this Country; whom in the year 1505, they deposed from his Kingdom and placed another in his Throne, under the colour of not paying paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians rose in Arms, displaced their new King, demolished their Fortifications, and sent them to learn better moderation in their prosperous Fortunes, An. 1509. The business coming after to a composition, the Quiloan covenanted for the yearly Tribute of 1500 Marks of Gold paid unto the Portugals, to live in Peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble.

4. MOSAMBIQUE lieth on the South of Quilna. So called of Mofambique the chief City of it, situate in a little Island, the principal of three; opposite all of them to the mouth of the River Moghincatu: and bordering on the Promontory of old called Prassiam, spoken of by Ptolomy, and by him made the furthest known place of all this Coast. In the Island there are said to be Sheep, whose tails are 25 pound weight, as in other places of these Countries, and some parts of Syria; Hens, black in Feathers, Fleth and Bone; and if foddren, make the water as black as Ink, but yet sweeter in taste than any other. Of Pork good store, the more, because the people are for the most part of the Law of Mabomet, by which all Hog-meat is forbidden. The In-land parts more barren, but very populous: so ignorant and rude when the Portugals first came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they sold fifteen Kine, and then fell out among themselves, who should have the Bell. The Town conveniently seated on a large and capacious Haven, and fortified with a very strong Castle, in the hand of the Portugals; who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, use to call in here, and fit themselves with all things necessary to pursue their Voyage. A town of so great wealth and trading, that the Captain of the Castle in the time of his Government (which continueth only for three years) is said to lay up 300000 Ducats for his lawful Gains, out of the Gold that cometh from Sofala: a Gain so great, that at the end of his three years, he is to serve for three years more at some place or other of the East-Indies, at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal, and then permitted to return into his native Country. Such of that Nation as are suffered to inhabit here, are enjoined to be married, to the end the Island should be well peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwise perhaps might have few else in it but the Garrison-Souldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants.

5. SOFALA lieth in the South of Mofambique, from which parted by the River Cuama, the greatest River of those parts, and thence extended to the Mountains which they call Manica, by which separated from Monomotapa: So called from Sofala, the chief City of it, situate in a little Island (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoining. Both Town and Island subject unto the power of the Portugals; who have a Fort, the better to secure the Factory by them here erected, one of the richest in the World; the People bringing in hither great quantity of Gold, of which they have most plentiful Mines, which they exchange with them for their Cloth and other Commodities. It is supposed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yearly. The supposition so agreeable to all other circumstances, that little question need be made of the truth hereof. Insomuch as this Country for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by some thought to be that Land of Ophir to which Solomon sent: And of this Opinion Oxelius in his Theaurus was the first Author; but in my mind, upon no probable conjectures, and against very strong presumption. For first, Ophir the son of Jathan, of whom mention is made Gen. 29. vers. 10. and from whom the Land of Ophir, in all likelihood took its name, is in the next verse said to have planted in the East; whereas this Sofala is situate South-west from Chaldea, in which the confusion of Tongues, and dispersing of the people began. And secondly, it is impossible for the Navy of Solomon, which lay at Ezion-Geber, in the Bay of Arabia, to have spent three years in coming hither and returning; which we find to have been the usual time of finishing the Voyage to Ophir, 1 Kings 10. Ophir then is some part of India; but whether it were the Island of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan, or one of the Molucces, or the Land of Malaca, called by the Ancients Aurea Chersonesus, I dare not determine; considering what worthy men maintain these several Opinions.

6. MOENHEMAGE, or MONOEMUG, the only In-land Province of any note, hath on the East Mombaza and Quilna; on the West, the famous River Nilus; on the North, some part of the Dominions of the Abassine Emperors; on the South, Mofambique. The Country very plentiful of Mines of Gold, yet the people use it not for Money; but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks and Taffares, with which they use to cloth themselves from the Girdle downwards. In stead of Money they make use of Red Counters, much resembling glass. Governed by a King of their own, who holds confederacy with the Kings of Mombaza and Quilna, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are also subject a wild and cruel people, called Agag, inhabiting on the Lake Zemba, and the Banks of the Nilus; dispersed about the fields in their homely cottages, black, Cannibals, and of an horrible aspect; more horrible than otherwise they would be, by drawing lines upon their Cheeks with an Iron-Instrument, and forcing their Eye-lids to turn backwards. By the assistance of this people, the King of Moenhemage hath hitherto preserved his Estate against the King of Monomotapa: and they themselves by some of their own Leaders did so distress the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a small Island, where he hardly escaped a violent and untimely death, most of his people being starved. Of which more hereafter.

Touching the rest of these Provinces, we can say but little; and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the most part from one another, both in speech and behaviour; each Village under a several King, and each in continual quarrel with its next Neighbours; whom if they overcome, they eat. At leisure times they live by hunting, and the flesh of Elephants. And amongst these, but more upon the borders of the Abassine Empire, I place the Galle; a Nationless Nation as it were, without house or dwelling, without Law or Government; as barbarous and horrid as the Agag (whom some call Jagge or Giacqui) are affirmed to be, who watching their advantages, and joyned together in some Arts of doing mischief, have made of late such Desolations in the Countries of the Prester-John.

2. MONO-

2. MONOMOTAPA.

MONOMOTAPA, BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all these names it is called) is bounded on the North, with the River Cuama, by which and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar; on the West, and South; by the River of the Holy-Ghost, by which separated from Casraria; and on the East, by the main Ocean. So that it is almost an Island; said to contain in compass 750 Spanish leagues or 3250 Italian miles.

The Air hereof is said to be very temperate, and the Country very good and pleasant, yet full of Forrefts. Well watered, besides the two great Rivers before mentioned, with the Streams of 1. Panami, 2. Luanga, 3. Aruga, 4. Mangeano, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their sands. By means whereof it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great store of Pasturage; on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beasts very large and great, such store of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reason, but to make Merchandise of their Teeth: their Gold-Mines great and small, reckoned to 3000; some in the hills of Magnice, others in the Province of Mutua and Boro, the places where the Mines are, known without further art in the discovery of them, by the dryness and barrenness of the soil; as if Nature could not hoord up gold in her spacious bosom, but the must needs be barren of all good works.

The People are of mean stature, and black complexions; but strong and active, courageous, and of such footman-ship, that they out-run Horses. Their apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make or buy from some other place: their Diet Fleth, Milk, Rice, Mill, and an Oyl called Susman. Their Religion, Paganism for the most part; yet they worship not Idols, but believe in one God only, which they call Mazimo; and seem not much averse from the Christian Faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They punish nothing more severely than Witchcraft, Adultery, and Theft: and in the punishment of Delinquents they use no Prisons, but execute them as soon as apprehended; which is the reason that the Vulgar have no doors to their houses, that being a privilege for the Nobles. They may have as many wives as they will, but the first the principal, and her Children only to be heirs: the women here very much respected (as a second England) the Emperor himself, if he meeteth any of them in the streets, he giveth them the way. Not to be married, till their Mensura or Natural purgations testify their ability for conception; and therefore they solemnize the first Flux thereof with a liberal Feast.

Provinces of most note in it, and adjoining to it, but reckoned as Members of his Empire, are.

1. Mutua, rich in Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Boroghi; who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropic, have in the winter such deep snows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not speedily down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy Ghost, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corrineter (Caput Convrentium in the Latines) wealthy in fat pastures, and great herds of Cattel; more in her unexhaustible Mines of Gold. Mines memorable for a large, and in those times an impregnable Fortrefs, built formerly by some forcin Prince to secure the Mines; built of square stone, and every stone of marvellous greatness, without any sign of cement or other mortar; the walls hereof 25 spans thick, but the height not answerable; over the Gate certain characters written, which the most learned of the Moors could never read. Perhaps the work of some of the Ethiopian or Abassine Emperours, when their power and Empire was at the highest. By the Inhabitants who conceive it to be a work beyond humane power, it is thought to have been built by Devils: but by those who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, ascribed to Solomon, though situate 510 miles more Westward than Sofala, by their own account. The Air here very cold, by reason of the sharp blasts coming from the Pole-Amarctic; so much the colder, in that they have no wood, or other fuel, but what they make themselves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BOTO, and 4. QUITICUI, both furnished with Gold also in their Mines and Rivers, but not so pure as that of Torra and Mutua; yet such as serves their turn so well, as to spoil all industry: the people here being very careless in providing necessaries, which they presume the Moors (I mean the Arabian Moors) will bring them in exchange hereof.

5. INHABAN, governed by a King of its own, but Vassal and Tributary to the Emperour of Monomotapa, the King whereof in the year 1560. was Christened by Gonsalvo Silveria a Spanish Jesuite, by the name of Constantine; his Queen baptized by the name of Mary: but I find nothing of the further progress of Christianity. Touching 6. Matana, 7. Melemba, 8. Buinbebe, 9. Berteca, and 10. Brugul, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their names.

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages; the houses being here so thin, that from the border of Sofala to the Fort of Torra, being 50 miles, as before is said, there is no sign of any building either old or new. The principal of those that be, 1. Tangum in the Province of Inhaban, and the Seat-royal of those Kings; memorable for the baptism of the King and Queen, which was there performed, 2. Simbua, supposed to be so called from the Agisymba of Ptolomy, the chief Town of the Province of Torra, or Banet; distant from Sofala one and twenty days journey, and neighboured by the remains or ruins of the old Fortrefs before described. 3. Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperour makes his usual residence; giving this name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himself, whom they call Bonomotaxa or Monomotapata, the word in their language signifying a King or Emperour.

The King hereof accounted one of the greatest of Africa, hath under his command, besides the Provinces described, some part of Casraria. Of great Riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which so abundantly supply all the Royal occasions, that he exacteth no kind of Tribute from his Subjects, but some certain days service in his Works; and from his Nobles Gifts and Presents, without which none of them are to come before him. His Forces great, the multitudes of men considered; but weak for want of skill to train them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for modern service; the Arms they most use being only Darts and Targets. For which cause, (and in regard the people of the subject Kingdoms are so prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hostages of their Fathers Loyalty) he wagemt mercenary Souldiers of other Nations, whom he distributeth abroad in his several Provinces: and amongst these it is affirmed, that he hath a strong Battalion of Amazons, a Warlike Race of Women, who inhabit about the Lake of Zemba, and the out-skirts of of Zanzibar, compared by some for their fidelity and Prowess, to the Turkish Janizaries. And yet not trusting wholly to the faith of these Mercenaries, it is said that he keeps 200 Majors for the Guard of his person. Much revered by his Subjects, by whom he is served upon the knee; and when he cougheth or drinketh, all those that are about him make such a shout, that the Town rings of it. In one particular they differ from most Nations else, which is, That such as are admitted into his presence, are bound to sit down, in token of reverence; to stand before him, being a sign of the greatest Dignity which can be ascribed unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Christianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560. the King heretofore was baptized by Gonsalvo the Jesuit, by the name of Sebastian, that being the name of the King of Portugal then reigning. But afterwards on the suggestions of some Arabians then in great place about him, having caused the Jesuite to be slain, he was warned upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 men, under the conduct of Francisco Barreto; to whom he offered very honourable amends for the injury done: But Barreto having in hope swallowed all the Gold in the Country, would not admit of any peaceable agreement; but referred the business to a battle; in which being overcome himself, and his whole Forces not long after consumed by sickness, the hopes of Christianity, and the Portugals interest in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. CAFRARIA.

CAFRARIA is bounded on the East with Rio di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; on the South and West with the main Ocean; on the North, extended to some parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Cafra, which in the Arabian tongue signifieth an Heretic; a name by them given to Christians, Heathens, and those of their own Religion also, which differ in Opinion from them; but given to this Region by some late Writers, because destitute of another name.

The Country for so much of it as hath been discovered, is said to be full of great Herds of Cattel, and flocks of Sheep, abundance of Deer, Antelope, Baboons, Foxes, Hares, Ostriches, Pelicans, Herons, Geese, Ducks, Pheasants, Partridges; in a word all things necessary for the life of man, were it somewhat better stored with Corn. Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally stored with Woods and Forests: the Hills thereof intermixt with grassie Vallies, that pity 'tis so beautiful and rich a Country should be inhabited by so barbarous and rude a people, who being utterly unprovided of Towns and Houses, live in Woods like Beasts. Of colour black, thick lips, flat noses, long shaped heads, and most monstrous ears, extended far beneath their shoulders, by hanging in them Iron-chains, Glafs, Bullets, Bells, and such ponderous bangles. These ornaments common to both Sexes, who also use (for their greater beauty) most hideously to slash themselves in all parts of their bodies, even their very bellies; as if no lace could better fort with their naked skins; with which only, except some flap of an Hide or other leather to hide their privities, they are here apparelled.

Their best habits for the most part are the Hides of Beasts, undressed, unfashioned, just as they tear them from the flesh; but when they cloath themselves with Sheep-skins, they have so much wit as to wear their fleece next to their bodies in cold weather, which at other times they expose (with no small pride and glory) to the open view. Their voice so inarticulate, that it is hard to be distinguished into words and syllables; which being compared with that brutishness, which commonly appeareth in all their actions, makes it hard to say, whether the people generally may be thought to be men in the skins of beasts, or beasts created in the likeness and shape of men. But they make a greater use of their Cattle, than for Garments only, their raw flesh serving them for food, and the Guts for Ornament, which hang about their Necks uncleaned, and with all the filth in them, in as great a bravery as Ropes of Pearl, or Chains of Gold in more civil Countreys. Gold here so vilified, that they exchange it gladly for Brags, or Iron, and that not only quantity for quantity, and weight for weight, but in such senseless disproportion, as rendereth Brags and Iron the more excellent metals.

But amongst all the several Nations which inhabit this most flourishing Country, none are more barbarous than those whom they call the Imbians, dwelling not far from the Cape of good Hope; tall, square, and strong, addicted always to War and Rapine, and feeding on the flesh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying Friends, whose death they hasten for the Shambles; and the Skulls of whom they use for their drinking Cups. Their Weapons poisoned Arrows, and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they always carry Fire before them, menacing thereby to roast or boil all such as they overcome. Their King (if such a sacred Name become such an impious Monster) they account for Lord of all the Earth; as the Portugals of all the Seas; and he with the old Giant-like Arrogance, not only threatneth the destruction of Men, but shooteth his poisoned arrows against Heaven it self, as often as the rain or heat offends him. In the year 1589. about 80000 of them made an incursion into Zanzibar, laid desolate all the Country as far as Mombaza, which City they besieged, sacked and devoured the people of it; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our description of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, scarce so much as Houses; and those so mean, that they deserve not to be so called: except it be some sheds on the Sea-fides, for the use of Saylor. Of most note in it, is Soldania, a large and capacious Road, about fifteen or sixteen Leagues on the North-West from the Cape of Good Hope; not so much noted for the buildings adjoining to it (if there be any such) as the bay it self; environed on all sides with a pleasant Country, enriched with variety of Herbs, not only pleasing to the sense, but very Medicinal for many diseases, especially for those that are troubled with the Scorbute (or Scurvy, as we use to call it,) the Hills adjoining stored with great multitudes of Cattel, both Sheep and Cows, though less in size than those in these Northern parts; great helps unto our Sea-men in their Eastern Voyages; for here such as are to say towards the Indies, use to take in fresh water, and make provision of things necessary for so long a Voyage. I have heard that some of our English ships in their return from the East-Indies, seized on two Savages, living near this Bay, whom they brought on Ship-board, with an intent to carry them into England, to the end that having learned the English tongue, we might be more particularly informed by them of the Estate and Affairs of this Country. One of these who was called Goore, being brought to London, (for the other died upon the way) was dieted and clothed according to the English fashion, gratified also with Brags, Rings, Beads and such other things, by which they thought they might most gain upon him to affect the change of his condition. But home is home, though it be but homely, as the saying is. For this poor wretch having learned so much English as to bemoan his own misfortunes, would throw himself upon the ground, and cry out with great anguish and vexation of spirit, Goore home go, Soldania go, Goore home.

home go; out of which quietness of humour, when they could not get him, they sent him back in the next Ships which were bound for the Indies. After which time, as oft as he saw any Ship with English Colours, he would joyfully make towards the Bay with Guts and Garbage hanging about his neck (as their custom is) and readily perform all good offices towards them; yet so, that it was found withal, that by discovering to the Natives how low esteem the English had of Brags and Iron, they thenceforth raised the value of those richer Metals, which formerly they had parted with for such sorry trifles, as have been spoken of before.

But that which is of most consideration in all this Country, is the Cape it self; discovered by the Portugals, under the Conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their first Indian undertakings; by whom, for the continual Tempests which he found about it, was first called Tormentosa. But afterwards the Portugals having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a prosperous voyage, they caused it to be called Cabo di Buena Esperanza, or the Cape of good Hope: Vasques di Gama, the first discoverer of this way to the wealth of India, being then their Admiral, Anno 1497. It consisteth of three great points of headlands, of which that which is nearest us, is the Cape of good Hope: the middlemost hath the name of Cabo Falso, because mistaken for the other, by some of the Portugals, returning homewards; the third called Cabo della Guglia or the Cape of Needles, by reason of those sharp points which shoot towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape, is a large and pleasing Plain, adorned with great variety of flowers, and covered with a Carpet of grass: it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large prospect over the Sea on all sides. The Sea here is very rough and tempestuous, and hath to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkind: whereupon a Spanish Captain being forevexed with a storm, expostulated with GOD, why he suffered his good Catibolick to endure such torments; and permitted the English Hereticks, and Blasphemers, to pass so easily.

The Country is not subjected to any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their several Clans; nor find I hitherto that either Portugals or Spaniards, have took possession of any one part of it, in the name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the best title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom possession was taken of it in the Reign of King James, by one Captain Fitz-Herbert, who called the Ascent unto the Table, King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his beget any good title, or whether the title of a Country lying so far off be worth the owning, I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and Statesmen.

4. MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South with Cafiraria, and the Mountains of the Moon; on the West with the Æthiopic, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North with the Realm of Bain, and other parts of the Land of the Negroes; and on the East with Zanzibar, and some part of the Abassine Empire. So called from Congo or Manicongo, the principal of those many Kingdoms which are united in this Name.

The Air heretofore so temperate, that their Winter is like the Autumn in Rome; inasmuch as the people do not use to change their garments, or to make more fire then than at other times: the tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the nights so equal to the days, that for the greatest part of the year there is little difference; the Country being situate under the Æquator, though more of it on the North than the South thereof. Not over-hot nor withstanding in the heats of Summer, by reason of the cool winds which then blow continually; and the great dews, which falling in the night make some compensation for the extrem fervour of the day. The soil so exceeding fruitful in the production of herbs, plants, fruits, and such store of Pasturage; that they have here great herds of Cattel, large flocks of Sheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares and Conies; Elephants of that bigness, that their teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of so vast a bulk, that they will eat a whole Deer at once; not to say any thing of their Fowl, both wild and tame, which they have here in great abundance.

The people of mean stature, black of complexion, thick lips, and having the apple of the eye of divers colours, which makes them ghastly to behold; strong and long-lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the most part Heathens, some worshipping the Sun and Moon, others the Earth, as the Mother and Nurse of all things; and some again, wild Beasts and Serpents. So populous, that without any sensible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is supposed that they sell 28000 Slaves to the Portugals yearly: by whom they are sent into Brasil, there to work in the Mines and Sugar-houses. The Christian faith admitted in some few of their Provinces, but specially in that of Congo; where first preached, in the reign of John the II. King of Portugal, An. 1490, by Gonzalvo de Sesa; who having converted and baptized the Kings Uncle, and one of his Sons, prevailed so far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects, did embrace the Gospel. Received there by the people with such infinite joy, that when their first Bishop came to live amongst them, they caused the ways from the Sea-side to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered to him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chickens, Kids, Partridges, Fish, Venison, and other necessaries, to testify their rejoicings in that happy change. And though many of the Subjects, in the other Provinces were baptized accordingly, and for a time embraced the Faith; yet after some small trial of it they relapsed to their former Heathenisms, either unable, or not willing to conform to so strict a Rule.

Principal Rivers of this Country. 1. Bengo, 2. Cazanza, 3. Dande, 4. Barbela, 5. Ambrezi, 6. Loza, 7. Zaire. This last the greatest of them all, if not of all Africk also: Of which, though we have spoke already, we shall add this here, That it falleth into Æthiopic Sea with so great a violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen sometimes, the waters of it do retain their natural sweetness; not intermingled nor corrupted with the salt Sea-waters. Nor can the people say above five miles against the stream, by reason of the Cataracts, or huge falls which it hath from the Mountains; more terrible and turbulent than those of Nile. And for the Mountains of most note, they are, 1. Sierra compida, or the long Mountain; 2. Monte Crystal, or the Crystalline Mountain, so called from the abundance of Crystal, which is found therein, 3. Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of excellent height; 4. Montes Sal-Nitri, so called from the abounding in that kind of Mineral; and 5. the Mountains of Cabambe, rich Mines of Silver.

It containeth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general muster in the title Imperial; wherein their King, calleth himself King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Samdi, Bangi, Bati, Pemba, Abundi, Matani, Zusima, Angola, and Cacango; Lord of the Congemes, Amozale, Langwelu, Anzichi, Cuchi, and Zongbi. Many of these not so well discovered, as to afford us any matter matter fit for our discourse; the principal of those that be are.

1. ANGOLA, bounded on the South with Cafra-via; on the North, with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba; on the East, with some part of Zanzibar; on the West, with the main Atlantic Ocean. The Country rich in Mines of Silver, and most excellent Copper; some store of Kine and Horses brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their tails, (the wearing whereof is held for a special ornament,) than keep for any other use: their chiefest diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shamblers; and to that dainty so affected, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would give 20 slaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture somewhat at the nature of the people, who besides this, are said to be much given to Sorcery, and divinations by the flight of Birds; Skillful in medicinal herbs and poysons, and by familiarity with the Devil, able to tell things to come. Permitted as most Pigans are, to have as many wives as they will; who with the rest of the women, whether maids, or widows, use at the first sight of every New-Moon to turn up their bare bums in defiance of her, as the cause of their troublesome purgations.

In this country are the Mountains called Cantabaries rich in Mines of Silver; but those Mines not suffered to be digged, for fear of drawing from unnecessary war upon them: so that they use Glasse beads for money, and therewith also to adorn the persons of greatest eminence. Their principal City called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal residence of their Kings; but not else observable.

This Country was first discovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Diego Can, Anno 1486. the King hereof at that time Vassal unto him of Congo, and so continued till that King did embrace the Gospel: whereupon they revolted from him, and have since subsisted of themselves without such dependance. At first they held good correspondence with the Portugals, and allowed them free Traffic in their Dominions: But after their revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals were in league, they put to death as many as they found in Cabazza, An. 1578. under colour of some pretended treason. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governour of these parts for the King of Portugal, arming such people as he had, with two Gallies and some other Vessels passed up the River of Coanza, waiting the Country on both sides. Against whom the King of Angola raised an Army of a Million of men (as some Writers tell us;) but amongst those multitudes of men, there were few Souldiers, that an handful of the Portugals, aided with some of the Forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, An. 1582. Since that, the Trade with Portugal was revived again, and the King hereof hath expressed some good affections unto Christianity; sending unto the King of Congo for some Priests to instruct him in it, but obtained them not; the state of Religion in that Kingdom being then declining. The Portugals having thus gotten the upper hand, built, or repaired a strong Fort, situate near a convenient Bay, by which they did not only secure their Trade, but command a great part of the Country, till dispossessed thereof by the treachery and falshood of the Hollanders, An. 1640. or thereabouts: For the Portugals having withdrawn themselves from the Crown of Spain, a Cessation from all Hostility, with them was proclaimed in Holland, and not long after a firm peace made between the Nations; in the Articles whereof it was conditioned, that this peace should not begin in the East-India, till the end of the year, nor in Brasil, till the end of half a year from the making thereof. Which being obtained, they gave order to their Fleets and Forces which were abroad, to make themselves Masters of any thing then belonging to the Portugal, which they could lay hold on, who following these instructions, and Anchoring near the Fort of Angola, were by the Portugals received with joy into the Castles as their special friends, which presently they possessed themselves of, turning the poor Portugals in a very weak Bark to seek new adventures. But of this more hereafter in the Isle of St. Thomas.

To this King belong also the two Provinces of Mutana, and Quisoma, though both used in the titles of the King of Congo; of which the first lying towards the Sea, is said to be of a wholesome air, and a fertile soil; outwardly furnished with fruits, and inwardly with mines of Crysal and other metals; but not very rich, for want of some convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Lunda, was once governed after the manner of a Common-wealth; but tributary at that time to the King of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke by reason of the aid they had given the Portugals in their wars against him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Coanza, by which parted from Angola; on the North, the River Ambrize, by which divided from Songo; on the East, Pemba; on the West, the Æthiopic, or Atlantic Ocean. The Country rich in Mines of Silver, well stored with Beasts and Birds, as well tame as wild. Amongst the Birds, Parrots both green and grey, and many which are taught to sing; not much inferior for their music to the birds of Canaries. Amongst the Beasts of most note, is that called the Zebra, shaped like a Mule; but from the ridge of the back to the belly so streaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and those streaks so naturally set in such even proportion, as yieldeth to the eye a most pleasing object. But wild, and of so swift a foot, that velox ut Zebra, to be as swift as a Zebra, is grown into a Proverb amongst the Portugals. The men so strong, that it is said of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Ox, or strike a slave quite thorow the middle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a Vessel of wine, weighing 325 pound weight, containing the fourth part of a busand hold it so till it be quite drawn out. It containeth in it many Signories, most of them called by the names of their principal Towns. The chief of which, 1. S. Paul, situate on the Sea-side, opposite to the Isle of Loanda; inhabited for the most part by Portugal Families. 2. Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is situate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Loje and Ambrize.

3. PEMBA hath on the West, Bamba; on the East, the Lake Zombre, and the River Barbela; on the North, Batta; and on the South, Angola. Esteemed to be the richest and most pleasant Country of all Manicongo; the Fields in all parts thereof beset with Palm-trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are always green. The water of so good a nature, that it never hurteth any that drink of it: the Air exceeding wholesome, and the earth as fruitful; productive of all sorts of grain, but specially of that which they call Luco, in form like mustard-seed, but bigger, which they grind in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferior to Wheat. The people much reclaimed from their ancient Barbarism since the coming of the Portugals thither; whom they imitate both in behaviour and apparel. So well skilled in the virtues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Physician, Chirurgion, and Apothecary. Anciently clothed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers; retained till by by the Villagers and poorer sort, in some part of the Country. Their chief City formerly had the name of Banza, so called, because the Kings Court (as the word doth signify,) but since the receiving of the Gospel it is called S. Saviour: distant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (since it became Christian) with a Bishops See, and a fair Cathedral, in which are 28 Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments accomulably belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it self situate on the side of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a spacious Plain, two Dutch miles in compass, full of Villages, Burroughs, and scattered houses; which are thought to have 100000 persons, most of them Portugals, and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the West and South, Pemba; on the East, the Mountains of the San, and those called Salnitron on the North, Pango. Of the Soil and People there is nothing singular to be said, but that the Inhabitants hereof are more Military, and better furnished for the Wars than the rest of these Provinces: necessitated therunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and savage people, dwelling about the spurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jaggers or Gisacchi. These naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Sierra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous part of this Region, under the Conduct of one Eleme, where they are since grown into a people, and become a terror to their Neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans flesh, which they prefer before that of Beesves or Mutton; not yet so qualified by the change of their Country, as to build houses, sow or plant, or to breed up Cattel; finding it the easier life, to maintain themselves by the labour and spoil of others. And which is yet most strange of all, though they have each of them many Wives, ten or twenty a piece, yet they have no Children, but strangle them as soon as born, lest they should be an hindrance to their often wanderings. But as Pliny once said of the Esseni, Gens eterna est in qua nemo nascitur; so we may also say of these, that they do not want succession, though they breed no children: selecting out of their Captives and stolen Children, some of either Sex, (but neither steal nor take them captive, under twenty years old) to the Seminary (as it were) of a new posterity. Against these Monsters those of Batta are armed continually, not otherwise able to defend themselves, their Wives and Children, from their hands and teeth: inasmuch as this one Province, though none of the biggest, is able to raise 70000 men, well armed, and fit for any service. The principal of their Town is Batta, which gives name to the Province situate on the Banks of the River Lelanda, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy, who is always of the Blood Royal, honoured sometimes with sitting at the Kings own Table, which none else may do; and of so great authority in all Consultations, that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO, is bounded on the South with Batta; on the East, extended to the Mountains of the San, which close up this Country; on the North with Sunda; and on the West, with parts of Pemba, and Sango. Of the people, little singular, of the Country lcss. Neighbourhood on the North-East towards Sierra de Crysal, with the Languelungi, supposed by some to be the Æthiopes Hesperii, (spoken of by Protolmy); a barbarous Nation, but of so considerable power, that they are found amongst the rest in the Stile Imperial. This once a Kingdom of it self not subject till of late times to Kings of Congo. The chief Town of it called Pango, is seated on the Western Bank of the River Barbele, the ordinary residence of the Viceroy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6. SUNDA, is bounded on the South with Batta; on the North with the great River Zaire; on the East with Barbele; and on the West with part of Songo. The Country rich in several Metals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron before any other, because it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives, and Armour; well furnished also with Mirrons, Sablers, and other Furs of great esteem among Foreign Merchants. This is the best Region of this Kingdom, not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire; nor much more in length. Their chief City hath the name of Sunda, which it communiceth to the whole.

7. SONGO, is bounded on the East with Batta and Anzichana; on the West with the Æthiopic, or Atlantic Ocean; on the North with the Kingdom of Loanga; and on the South with the River Ambrize, by which parted from the Realm of Bamba. It lieth on both sides of the great River Zaire, which is here so turbulent and broad, and so full of Islands, that the one part of it hath little or no commerce with the other. The chief Town hereof called Songo, gives this name to the Country; in which is nothing singular for the Soil or People.

8. ANZICHANA, hath on the West, part of Songo and Loango; extended thence unto the East, as far almost as the Lake of Zembre; on the North, some part of the Land of Negroes; on the South, the Zaire. So called from the Anziqui, the Inhabitants of it: The cruellest Cannibals in the World; for they do not only eat their Enemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that they may be sure not to want these Dainties, they have Shamblers of mans flesh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous withal, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when fold joyn't by joyn't, than if fold alive; they will cut them out, and sell them so upon the Shamblers. Yet with these barbarous qualities they have many good. Affirmed to be so cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will discharge 28 Arrows (for so many do their Quivers hold) before the first of them falls to the ground: and of so great fidelity to their Masters, and to those which trust them, that they will rather chuse to be killed, then either to abuse their trust, or betray their Masters: for that cause more esteemed by the Portugals, than their other Slaves. And for the same, and that only, worthy of so good a Country; said to be rich in Mines of Copper, and very plentiful of Sanders both red and gray, which tempered with Vinegar, is found by the Portugals to be a certain remedy against the Pox; as the smoke thereof against the Head-ache. Towns they have none, or none at least of any reckoning, which deserve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the East Anzichana; on the West the Æthiopic or Atlantic Ocean; on the North Benin, one of the Realms of Guinea, in the Land of Negroes; and on the South, the Province of Songo, from which parted by the River Loango, whence it hath its name. The Country very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitful, and more stored with Elephants, than any other of these parts; stretching in length 200 miles within the Land, and for the most part very well watered. The Inhabitants whom they call Bramaers, by Religion Heathens, but of old accustomed (as the Anziqui and others of these barbarous Africans) unto Circumcision. Governed by a King of their own, once subject to the King of Congo; but of late time, both he and the King of the Anziqui (for they are also under the command of one Soveraign Prince) have freed themselves from that subjection; though till the King of Congo be called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mani Lounga. Their Towns of note, 1. Penga, the Haven to the west. 2. Mouramba, 30 Leagues more Northwards, and within the Land; the inhabitants of which Towns being more civil than the rest, apparel themselves with the leaves of Palm-Trees; but not so well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree, as the more civilized people of the Realms of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleansed and purged, draw a fine long thread, of which they make Velvets, Damasks, Sattins, Taffataes, Sarcenets, and the like fine Stuffs.

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom seated on the Continent, let us next look upon the Islands. The principal of which LOANDA, situate over against the Town of S. Paul, in the province of Bamba, said to be first made out of the sands of the Ocean, and the mire of Comanza, cast into an heap, and at last made into an Island. Now beautified with a very fair Haven, of the same name with the Island, possessed by the Portugals. The Island destitute of Rivers, but so well furnished with waters, that every where within less than half a yard digging, they find sweet and good Waters, so contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be salt and brackish; when it floweth towards the Island, then most fresh and sweet. But most remarkable is this Island for the Cockle-fishing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, take up together with the sands, in baskets, and part them from the sand, as they lye on the shore; the shells of which being naturally distinguished into divers colours, serve over all the Kingdom of Congo, instead of money; which is a matter of such moment unto this King, that he entertains a Government in the Island for no other reason, but to take care about this fishing.

Besides this, there are many Islands in the River of Zaire, now subject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars against them: fighting in Boats which they made of the bodies of a Tree, by them called Liconde. The Tree so big, that two or three men or more are not able to fathom it: inasmuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largest of them, able to contain 200 men. Upon the shores of these Islands, and in other of their Bays and Creeks, they have so great numbers of Anchovies, that in Winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of these several Members, and of the rest expressed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo: so called from Congo the chief Province, but now distinguished from the rest by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or of better fortune, than any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and name unto them. Discovered by the Portugals, under Diego Chan, An. 1486, at what time these Kings were at the greatest: called by their Subjects Mani Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the word Mani, signifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated since to the Kingdom also. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath since happened in this Kingdom, may best be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CONGO.

1486. 1. John, not called till converted to the Faith of Christ; and then Baptized by this name, in honour of John the Second King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whose Reign this discovery and Conversion hapned.
2. Alphonso, eldest Son of John, zealous in the advancement of the Christian Faith, and for that opposed by Panfe Aquitine his younger Brother: whom with a very small Army, zealously invoking the assistance of Jesús, he is said to have vanquished. A Prince, who during his long Reign of 50 years did seriously promote the Gospel, and caused all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown: and Churches to be built, and furnished in convenient places.
3. Pedro, the Son of Alphonso, in whose time was founded the Colledge of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Croffe, in the Town of S. Saviours.
4. Francisco the Son of Pedro, who reigned not long.
5. Diego, or Jamer, one of the Kinsmen of Francisco, in whose time Religion growing into discredit, by the scandalous lives of some of the Secular Clergy; John the Third, King of Portugal, sent four Jesuits thither; who are said to have converted in five months 5000 persons, and to build three Churches.

6. Henry, the brother of Diego, after a sharp War touching the Succession, in which were slain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Priests, at last succeeded: not long after slain in battle against the Anziques.

7. Alvarez, the Son of Henry, forced by the Jaggies or Giaccis to abandon Congo, and betake himself, together with the Portugal Priests, to an Island of the River Zaire: where he continued, till restored to his Crown by the Aid of Sebastian King of Portugal, after by Famine he had lost almost all his company.

8. Alvarez II. Son of Alvarez the first, who much solicited Sebastian and Henry Kings of Portugal, to send him a new supply of preachers: the old store being wasted in the Islands of Zaire.

9. Alvarez III. Son to Alvarez the Second, not being born in Lawful Wedlock, was opposed by one of his Sisters and a younger Brother, both of Lawful birth; whom he overthrew, Anno 1587. and in the place of the Victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revenues of these Kings of Congo, I am able to say nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great Power and Riches. His Riches visible by the great Treasures which he draweth from the Mines of Silver Silver, and of other Metals in his Kingdom; from the Trade of Cockle-shells, the only Money of his Realm, which he keeps wholly to himself; the great gain which he makes by Slaves, and from Elephants Teeth; the Presents which he hath in way of Tribute from the King of Angola. And though it be not easy to say what he layeth up yearly, because he hath not his Revenue in Coin, as most Princes have; yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furnished with all things as any Monarch in Africk.

As for his Forces, they consist most in the multitudes of his Subjects; which were they well armed and used to the Wars, would make him formidable to the rest of the African Princes. And though he hath no Garrisons or Towns of War, but must trust, if once invaded, unto Cavalries of Bones; yet he doth rest secure enough from all fear of danger, except out of Europe; being able to raise against his Rebels, or any of his invading Neighbours, 400000 men out of Bamba only, all armed according to their manner, and 70000 men at least, well exercised in Wars against the Jaggies, from the Province of Batta; besides what may be drawn from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five Swords meeting in Bate Sol: which Coat was taken by Alphonso, the second King in this Catalogue, because in the Battle which he fought against Panfe Aquitine, he and his Souldiers saw (or supposed they saw) such a number of shining Swords hanging in the Air, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And so much for ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

O F

The ISLES of AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Isles of AFRICK, we must observe another course than that which we have taken in Europe and Asia: these Islands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the command of any great Prince in Africk, in the account of whose Estates they might be considered; but being all of them independent and sui juris, and therefore to be handled by themselves apart. In our Chorography of which and the stories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to travel, beginning first with those that lie in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, and so proceeding by the Cape of Good Hope, through the main Atlantic Ocean, to the Straits of Hercules: that from thence we may have the shorter passage into America, and there adieu à tout Monsieur conclude our journey. These then we will consider either joyn't, or separate, as delivered to us by the names of 1. The Æthiopick Islands. 2. Socotara. 3. Madagascar. 4. Mobelia. 5. Mauritius. 6. St. Hellens. 7. Ascension. 8. St. Thomas. 9. The Princes Island. 10. The Island of Annobon. 11. The Gorgades, or Islands of Cape Verde. 12. The Canaries, or the Fortunate Islands. 13. Madera. 14. The Island of Holy Port, and 15. The HESPERIDES; of all which, the four first only are dispersed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, all the rest scattered up and down in the main Atlantic, on this side of the famous Promontory, called the Cape of Good Hope.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS.

THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS, so called because they lie upon the Coast of Æthiopia Superior, together with all those which lie on the further side of the Cape of Good Hope, or scattered, or dispersed in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, (for by those names these mighty Oriental Seas are most commonly known) of which we have spoke more at large when we were in Arabia, and therefore shall say nothing here which concerns the same, but for the Islands of those Seas, such as we comprehend here under the name and notion of Æthiopick Islands, which were only known unto the Ancients, they are more in number than in weight: some of them situate within the Straits of the Red Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia: others without those Straits, in the open Ocean.

1. Of those within the Straits, not reckoning such as lie upon the shores of Arabia Felix, of which we have already spoken; there is 1. Astare, or Astrata, now called Caiussa. 2. Ara Palladis, so called from some Altar of that Goddess which was there erected. 3. Gypseris, by Pliny called Cypris, but Cypsius in Justinians Code, renowned in former time for its plenty of metals. 4. Macaria, or the Fortunate Islands, so called from the fertility and pleasures of it. 5. Orneon, or the Isle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein. 6. Daphnis, by Ptolemy called Daphnine, opposite to a famous Port-Town of the same name in the Continent. 7. Bacchus, so called from Bacchus, unto whom consecrated. 8. Anti-Bacchus, so named, because opposite to it. 9. Acantine, supposed by some to be now called Angbotina. 10. Insula Diodori, conceived by the Learned to be the same which is now called Babel Mandel, and given name unto the Straits, or entrance of the Bay of Arabia now called the Straits of Babel Mandel. 11. Isidis Insula, memorable for a Temple dedicated to the Goddess Isis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Isidis; the same which is now called Pasqua, as Bel-Forst thinketh. 12. Mundi, an Island in the Bay of Avalites, opposite to a noted Empory of the same name on the shores of that Bay. Besides all which, we find in Ptolemy two Islands by the name of Thrsitides; two more, called Chelomitides, or Chabrate, two others passing by the name of Gomado; together with the Isles of Myron, Pau, and that called Insula Magorum: which make up one and twenty in all, but of no note or observation in the course of business, or the conduct of humane affairs.

Those of most Note in the open Ocean, which still preserve the name of the Red Sea, and is sometimes called the more from the great extent that is given formerly to the main Atlantick, than that some parts of the Mediterranean should be called Mare Siculum, Sardoum, Tyrrhenum, Creticum, according to the shores of those several places which it passeth by; which having said in general of the Sea it self, according to our method in other places, we next proceed unto the rest of the African Islands, which we named before, but could not meet with but in this Sea, and this side of Africa.

6. St. HELENS, and 7. the Isles of ASCENSION.

AND the first Isle we meet with in this side of Africa is, 6. the Isle of St. Helens, situate on the West of the Cape of Good Hope, and in the 16 degree of the Southernly latitude, no other Island interposing betwixt Madagascar and it, except those of Don Alvarez, and of Tristram de Aungna, near the Cape it self; but of so little note, as not worth the naming. The Island very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with so steep an ascent, that the Mariners have amongst them a merry saying, that a man may chosse whether he will break his heart going up, or his neck going down.

It was thus called, because discovered by the Portugals on St. Helens day; not then inhabited, nor since; the King of Spain suffering none to dwell there, because it had been an unlawful receptacle for uncivilized Goods; where by he lost exceedingly both in Power and Profit. Stored by the Portugals at the first discovery, with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as also with Figs, Limons, Oranges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly, and grow all the year long. Intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refresh themselves, and bestow their sick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Used for the same purpose by the English and Hollanders, who so domineer about the Island, that the Portugals dare not Anchor near it, or own their Property, if they see any shipping in the Rode. No buildings in it but the ruins of a little Chappel, destroyed by the Hollanders; and some fragment of a little Village begun by some Portugal Mariners, but demolished by the King of Spain.

7. North-west from hence is the Isle of Ascension, so called, because discovered on Ascension day, but not inhabited, nor any use at all made of it for ought I can find. Of the same bigness with St. Helens, 30 miles in compass, and about 700 English miles distant from it.

8. St. THOMAS, 9. The PRINCES Island, and 10. the Isle of ANNIBON.

THE Island of St. THOMAS is situate directly under the Equator, of Orbicular form, the Diameter being 60 miles, by consequence the Perimeter or compass 180, and just so many from the shore of the Realm of Congo. At the first discovery nothing but a continual Forest, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negroes; these last brought hither from the opposite Continent: with whom the Air agrees so well, that they attain generally to 110 years of Age, few of the Portugals unto fifty. The Air so vehemently hot, that it forthwith with the constitution of the Europeans.

The Country destitute of Wheat, which if sown here, turneth all to blade, and brings forth no Ear: nor will any Fruits here prosper, that have any stone in them: but so abundant in Sugar-Canes, and well stored with Sugars, that 40 Ships are hence loaded yearly with that one Commodity; for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houses, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in some 300, which belong to the Works, Six days in seven these Slaves work for their Masters, and the seventh for themselves; which they spend in sowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Provisions. Where, by the way, these Sugar-works, or Ingenios, are a late Invention; the boiling and baking of Sugar (as it is now used) not being above 200 years old; and the refining of it more new than that: first found out by a Venetian in the days of our Fathers, who is said to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his Son a Knight; who (though he was no Knight of the Post) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of boiling and refining Sugars, our Ancestors not having such luxurious Palates, sometimes made use of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but most commonly pleased themselves with Honey, more wholesome, because more natural than these forced inventions. But to proceed in the description of this Island, in the midst thereof is said to be a woody Mountain, overshadowed continually with Clouds: which so moisten the Trees that grow there in a great abundance, that from thence falleth a sufficient quantity of waters to refresh their fields, and feed their Sugar-canes, notwithstanding the extreme heat of the Climate and Air.

The Religion here allowed of, is the Christian only, first preached here by the Portugals, or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Bishop, his Title, the Bishop of St. Thomas; but his Charge extendeth also over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The Principal City of it hath the name of Pavosfan, a Colony of Portugals, consisting of 700 Families, or about that number: situate on a fine River, and a pleasant Haven: seldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheese, Hides, and other things more necessary than those Sugars for the life of Man. Took by the Hollanders in the year 1599, but again recovered, or abandoned; and since possessed again by the Hollanders, not as before by force of Arms, but by fraud and falsehood, at the same time, and by the same dishonest Arts by which they made themselves Masters of the Castle of Angola, before mentioned. And though the Portugal Ambassador presented his injurious dealing to the States of Holland, yet all the answer he could get at the present, was, that their people had done nothing but what was justified by that clause of the Article, that both sides might take and keep whatsoever they could within such a time; and though the Ambassador replied very rationally in behalf of his Country, and pressed the restitution both of this Island, and that Castle by all honest arguments, yet he could then get no reason from them: and whether they have done the Portugals any Justice since, as to those particulars, I am not able to determine.

9. THE PRINCES ISLAND, (Insula Principis in the Latine) so called, for that the Revenues of it were allotted to the Prince of Portugal; is situate in three degrees of the Northern Latitude. The Country very fruitful for the bigness of it; but not much observable, except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clerchagen, Anno 1598, abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended as is fit for a Princes Island, by a Mess of Chaplains, viz. 1. the Isles of St. Matthew. 2. St. Cross. 3. St. Paul, and 4. St. Conception.

ception: and waited on by seven servants (so many Islands near Cape Verde all in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbascone. But because the former four yield no matter of Hibitory, and these last seven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought, having said thus much of them, to have said enough.

10. South-west hereof, but on the other side of the Line, lieth the Isle of Annobon, (Insula Annoboni, as the Latines call it.) So named, because discovered upon New-years-day. Inhabited, and of very good fishing all along the Coasts of it; but that fishing made unsafe by Crocodiles, and other venomous and hurtful Creatures, which are said to be about the shores in great abundance.

11. The GORGADES, or the Isles of CAPE VERD.

11. THE GORGADES, or the Islands of Cape Verde, (Insula Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are nine in number, called by the last name, because situate over against Cape Verde (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negroes. Their Names, 1. Saint Anthony. 2. Saint Vincent. 3. Buenavista. 4. Saint Lucies. 5. Insula Salis, the Isle of Salt. 6. Del Fogo, or the Isle of Fire. 7. Saint Nicholas. 8. Maggio, or Majo. 9. Saint Jago. Some add to these a tenth, called Brava. Discovered all in the year 1440, by a Genoise called Antonio de Noli, employed therein at the charges and direction of Henry Duke of Viseu, one of the younger Sons of King John of Portugal, the first of that name. Of the most little to be said. The principal, and indeed the only ones which are now inhabited, are Majo, Del Fogo, St. Jago. 1. Majo, is of most repute for a Lake of two Leagues long; the Waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2. Del Fogo, is called from the flakes of fire which it sends forth usually; and fell so thick upon the Ship of Sir Anthony Sherley, when he took the Island, Anno 1596, that one might have writ his name in the ashes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger. 3. The principal of all, St. Jago, yet but 7 miles long: Rocky and Mountainous, but full of very pleasant Valleys, and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Ribiera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; situate on a fine River and a beautiful Haven: taken and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585, and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, Anno 1596.

The names of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almost forgotten. Given to those Islands, as supposed (but I cannot see upon what Grounds) to be the fear of the Gorgons; the proper habitation or dwelling place of Medusa and her two fair Sisters. This Medusa, said or rather fabled by the Poets to have been a Woman of great beauty; who either for suffering her body to be abused by Neptune, in one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her self before Pallas, had by the said Goddess, her hair turned into Snakes: and this property annexed unto them, That whosoever looked on her, should be turned into Stones: which quality was retained after she was slain, and beheaded by Perseus. Thus and far more fabulously the Poets. The Historians (for as some think, omnis fabula fundatur in historia) relate how this Medusa was indeed a Lady of such exceeding beauty, that all men that saw her were amazed; and of such a wife and subtle brain, that for that cause only men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by Piracy molesting the Seas of Europe, was invaded by an Army of Greeks, under the leading of Perseus, who in a single combat slew her. Perseus when he plucked off her Helmet, admiring that beauty which he had destroyed, cut off her Head, and carried it unto Greece: where the people beyond measure wondred at the rare composure of her face, and the exceeding beauty of her hair; and are therefore said to have by her head been metamorphosed into Stones. Pausanias in his Corinthiack so reports the Story.

12. THE CANARIES.

THE CANARIES are in number seven, situate over against the Coast of Libya Interior; so called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Pliny, Protolmy, and other of the ancient Writers, they were called Insula Fortunata, the Fortunate Islands: and amongst them of greatest note, for being made the fixed place of the first Meridian; removed since to St. Michaels one of the Azores. But those Ancients knew but six of them by name, and in the naming of those six do not well agree. By Pliny, whom Solinus followeth, they are said to be, 1. Ombrio, 2. Junonia Major, 3. Junonia Minor, 4. Capraria, 5. Nivaria, and 6. Canaria. By Protolmy thus reckoned. 1. Aprestus, 2. Hera, (or Junonia), 3. Plutania, 4. Casseria, 5. Canaria, and 6. Pincaria. Where we may note also to our purpose, that though these Authors disagree in all the rest of the names (Junonia being added by the Translator unto Protolmy's Hera) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one: which sheweth that one to be of eminence enough, to give the name of Canary Islands unto all the rest. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the ancients had of their fruitfulness, and other excellencies; in which respects several Countries in those times had the names of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1. Canary, 2. Palma, 3. Tenariffe, 4. Gomero, 5. Ferro, 6. Lanzarote, and 7. Fuente Ventura.

1. CANARIA, or Canaria Magna, because the biggest of the Cluster is said to be 90 miles in compass, and to contain 9000 persons: plentiful in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar-Canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which and of their Cheese, and the skins of Beasts, they raise great profit: but from nothing more than from their Wood (whereof they have very great abundance) used by the Clothier for the well-colouring of his Cloth. From hence and from the other of these Islands which bear this name, come the fine singing-Birds, called Canary-Birds; and so do also those rich Wines, (the Fruit of the Rubish-Grape transplanted) which we call Canaries. A sort of Wine, if not sophisticated and abused, which is said to fume less into the head, please the palate more, and better help the natural weakness of a cold stomach (if moderately and discreetly used) than any other Wines whatsoever. Brought hence in such abundance to supply our luxury, that no less than 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yearly into England and the Netherlands only.

2. PALMA, one of the least in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitful in Wine and Sugars, abundantly well stored with Cartel, and great plenty of Cheese; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spanish Fleets as they pass to Brasil and Pernu. This Island, together with Canary and Tenariffe, make up the Bishoprick of the Canaries. One of the Bishops whereof was that Melchior Canus, a Dominican Friar; whose works now extant in defence of the Church of Rome, shew him to have been a moderate and learned man, and Master of a perfect Ciceroan stile. The residue of the Islands are of the Diocesis of Maderæ.

3. TENARIFFE, somewhat less than the Grand Canary, but of the same fertility and condition with it, is most remarkable for a Mountain of 90 leagues at Sea, in a fair clear day. Some reckon it 15 miles high, others 15 leagues, and some advance it to 60 miles, but with little credit. With truth enough most of our Travellers and Geographers hold it to be the highest in the whole world. The Form Pyramidal, in shape agreeing to those Prodigies of Art and Wonder, the Egyptian Pyramids. The top whereof ending in a sharp point, called the Pike of Tenariffe, is said to be seldom without Snow; and therefore probably conceived to be the Nivaria of Pliny.

4. HIERO, or FERRI Insula, so called from the Iron Mines therein, is by some thought to be the Plutania, by others the Aproetus of Ptolomy; and some again more probably the Ombrio of Pliny, if this and Ptolomies Plutania be not one and the same, as for my part I think they be. And it might possibly have those names in the Greek and Latine, because it hath in it no fresh waters but what they do receive in showers, and preserve in Cisterns: it being added by later Writers (which the Ancients knew not) that these showers do daily fall upon them from the leaves of a Tree, which always covered with a Cloud doth distill these waters; preserved in a large Cistern underneath the Tree, for the use of Man and Beast throughout the Island.

5. GOMERA, now as civil and well cultivated as any of the rest, was the most barbarous of all, when first discovered: it being here and here only, the ordinary sign and evidence of their Hospitality, to let their friends lie with their wives, and receive theirs in testimony of reciprocal kindness: for which cause here, as in some places of the Indies, the Sister's Son did use accustomably to inherit.

6. LANSAROTE, the first of those Islands which was made subject to the Crown of Castile, discovered by some adventurous Biscains, An. 1393, by whom spoiled and pillaged, and the poor King and Queen thereof, and 170 of their Subjects of better quality brought away Prisoners into Spain. On this discovery the Kings of Castile challenged a propriety in all these Islands; of which more anon. In this of Lansarote there was an Episcopal See erected by Pope Martin the fifth, removed unto the Isle of Canary in the time of Ferdinand the Catholic.

7. FUERTE VENTURA, of the same nature with the rest, supposed to be the Capraria of Pliny, and the Casperia of Ptolomy; but not else observable. Near unto these, but not within the name and notion of the Fortunate or Canary Isles, are certain others of less note; that is to say, 1. Gratiosa. 2. St. Clara. 3. Roca. 4. Lobos. 5. Alegreco; and 6. Inferno, small and of no account, nor yielding any matter of observation.

The knowledge of these Islands being lost with the Roman Empire, they lay concealed and undiscovered till the year 1330, or thereabouts, when an English, or as some say, a French Ship, distressed by tempest, did in that misfortune fall upon them. Notice whereof being given in the Court of Portugal, in the Reign of King Alphonso the Fourth, Lewis de Ordo was designated for the Conquest of them. Who being repulsed at Gomera, Anno 1334, gave the enterprize over, though on this ground the Portugals build their first claim unto these Islands. But the news spreading by degrees to the Court of Rome, Clement the sixth thought fit to make a grant of them to Prince Lewis of Spain, Son of Alphonso de la Cerde the right heir of Castile, by the old name of the Fortunate Islands; and to assist him in the Conquest, caused Lewis of Souldiers to be made both in France and Italy. Which coming to the Ears of the English Ambassadors in the Pope's Court, they feared that some transport had been made of the British Islands, (than which they thought that none could better deserve the name of the Fortunate Islands) and in all haste dispatched a Post to the Court of England, for the preventing of the danger.

The people at the time of this first discovery, were so rude and ignorant, that they did eat their flesh raw for want of fire; and tilled, or rather turned up the Earth with the Horns of Oxen for want of Ploughs, or Tools of Iron, their Beards they shaved with a sharp Flint, and committed the care of their children to the nursing of Goats. To kill a beast was conceived to be the basest office that could be possibly put upon them, and therefore commonly imposed on Prisoners and condemned persons; who being thus made the common Slaughter-men, were to live separate from the rest. Their Government by Kings in each Island one; whom at their deaths, they set up naked in a Cave, propped against the Wall with a Staff in his hand, and a Vessel of Milk fast by him, the better to enable him for his Journey to the other World, and leaving him in the Grave with these solemn words, Deposuit in peace, O thou blessed Soul. The like Funeral they bestowed also on the chief of their Nobles. Yet was not the Government in those times so purely Regal, but that they had a Common Council (as it were) out of all the Islands, consisting of 130 persons: who did not only direct in Civil matters, but in Sacred also, prescribing to the people both their Faith and Worship; and for their pains were privileged with the first nights lodging with every Bride, which the Husband was to offer to some one of them.

But to return unto the Story, nothing being done by Lewis de la Cerde, in pursuance of the Pope's Donation, it happened in the year 1393, that some Adventurers of Biscay, setting out certain Ships from Sevil to seek their Fortunes at Sea, fell amongst these Islands. And having pillaged Lansarote, as before was said, and observed the number, greatness, and situation of all the rest, returned into Spain with great store of Wax, Hides, and other Commodities, with which those Islands did abound: extremely welcome to King Henry, who then reigned in Castile, and did intend from that time forwards to possess himself of them. By Katharine one of the Daughters of John Duke of Lancaster, the Dowager of this King Henry, during the minority of John the Second, the conquest of them was committed to John de Betancourt, an adventurous French-man, (conditioned he should hold them under the Sovereignty of the Crown of Castile) by whom four of the Islands were subdued, though he himself perished in the Action, Anno 1417. Young Betancourt the Son, not able to subdue Canary, to which most of the Islanders had retired, fortified himself as well as he could in the Isle of Lansarote, and took unto himself the Title of King; which he left not long after to one Menaut; in whose time the Islands under his command command received the Gospel, and had a See Episcopal in the Isle of Lansarote. But this new King making money by the sale of his Subjects, (as well of the new Christians, as the old Idolaters) complaint was made of him in the Court of Castile; and Pedro Barvade Campos with three Ships of War is sent against him: with whom unable to contend, with the good leave and liking of the King of Castile, he sold his interest in these Islands to one Fernando Peres a Knight of Sevil, who by the wealth and power of that City made good his purchase, and left it unto his Successors. But we must know, that the Posterity of this Peres enjoyed the four lesser Islands only; Canary it self, Tenariffe, and the Isle of Palms, being under the command of their own Kings. And so continued till the reign of Ferdinand the Catholic, who in the year 1483, under the conduct of Alphonso de Mexico, and Pedro de Vera, two noble Captains, became Master of them; and translated the Episcopal See from Lansarote to the great Canary. So that although the Portugals claim these Islands in right of the first discovery, yet the possession hath gone always with the Crown of Castile. Divided at the present into two Estates, (but the one subordinate to the other) Gomera, Lansarote, and Hierro, being in the hands of some private Subjects; those which belong unto the Crown, being Canaria, Palma, Tenariffe, and Fuerte Ventura, are said to yield yearly to the King 50000 Ducats; the Seat of Justice being fixed in the Isle of Canaria, unto which all the rest resort as they have occasion.

13. MADERA, and ### 14. HOLT-PORT.

13. MADERA, the greatest Island of the Atlantic, is situate in the Latitude of 32. over against the Cape of Cantin in Morocco; in compass 140 Miles, some add 20 more. So called of the Wilderness of Trees there growing, when first discovered; the Portugals naming that Madera, which the Latines call Materia, and we English Timber: with which the Isle was so overgrown, that the best way to clear it and make it habitable, was by consuming them with fire; which raged so horribly for the time, that the people employed in it were fain to go far into the Sea to refresh themselves. But the Husbandry was well bestowed, the Athes making so good compost to enrich the Soil, (as burning the Turf of barren Lands, and ploughing the Ashes of it, on some grounds with us) that at the first it yielded sixty-fold increase. And though the first virtue of that experiment be long since decayed, yet still it yieldeth thirty-fold in most places of it; fruitful withal of a kind of Plant used in dying Clothes, which is hence called Mader; and of Sugar-canes in such a wonderful manner, that for a time the filths of the Sugars herein made amounted yearly to 60000 Arrobes; now not half so much. The Isle wonderfully fruitful also of Honey, Wax, rich Fruits, and the choicest Wines; the Slips whereof were brought from Candy, bringing forth here more Grapes than Leaves, and Clusters of two, three, and four spans long. The Hills well stored with Goats, the Plains with numerous Herds of Cattle; the Woods with Peacocks, Thrushes, Pigeons: these last so ignorant of the injury which Man might do them, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would suffer themselves to be taken up; but now have wit enough to keep out of danger.

The whole Island in all parts well watered, having besides many pleasant Springs, eight handsome Rivulets, wherewith the Earth refreshed and moistened, yields the sweeter Herbage; which otherwise by reason of the heat of the Air (never very cool) might not be so nourishing.

The chief City of it hath the name of Fouchal, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of Justice: known to the Romans by the name of Junonia, or Ansolala, as many learned men conceive, and again forgotten; it was of later times discovered by one Macban, an English man, who was cast upon it by a tempest, An. 1344, who burying there his wife, or some other woman which he had in his company, writ on her Tomb his name, and coming thither, with the cause thereof, which gave the Portugals occasion to look further after it. Desolate, and unpeopled at the first discovery, now exceeding populous: and of no small advantage to the Crown of Portugal, to which first united, An. 1420, under the conduct of Prince Henry before mentioned.

14. INSULA PORTUS-SANCTI, or the Isle of HOLT-PORT, is distant from Madera about 40 miles; neighbouring the Coasts of Mauritania Tingitana, and therefore probably conceived to be the Cerne of Ptolomy. So called, because discovered by some Portugal Mariners (by the direction and encouragement of the said P. Henry) on Allhallows day, An. 1428. Desolate and uninhabited at the first discovery, but now very well peopled. In compass about 15 miles; well stored with Corn and Fruits, great shoals of Fish upon their shores, plenty enough of Bees and Goats; but such abundance of Conies (bred of one Doe Cony brought thither when great with young) that the Inhabitants were no less pestered with them in these later times, than the Baleares were of old; inasmuch that they were out of hope to withstand the mischief, or repair the damages sustained by them. A little Island not far off, bredeth nothing else.

The chief Town of it Porto Santo, or Holy-Port, seated on a convenient Rode, but a sorry Haven, was taken by Sir Amias Preston, in our Wars with Spain, An. 1596, but being sacked and spoiled, was again abandoned. In former times called Cerne, as before was said, and reckoned for the most remote Colony which the Carthaginians or Phoenicians had in the Western Ocean; beyond which they conceived the Sea to be unnavigable, (proved otherwise by Hanno's voyage) choaked with mud and weeds. Called therefore Cerne ultima (Ethiopian populus alit ultima Cerne) by Festus Rustus, and others of the Ancient Writers.

15. THE HESPERIDES.

THE HESPERIDES, by Pliny and Pomponius Mela, are said to be two in number, situate in the Atlantic Seas, but we find not where. Much memorized and chanted by the ancient Poets, for giving a safe and pleasant habitation to the Daughters of Atlas (which they call by the name of Hesperides also;) the curious Gardens by them planted, and the Golden Apples of it which were kept by the Dragon, and took hence by Hercules. But the Historians remove these Gardens out of the Sea, into the main Land of Africk, and fix them in Cyrene, where already spoken of. Which notwithstanding, it is granted that there were anciently some Islands in the Atlantic Ocean, noted by this name, and said to be exceeding fruitful of their own accord; and therefore probably the same which Plutarch in the life of Serapion calleth Insule Atlanticæ, and describes them thus: Αἱ δὲ τῶν ἐν τῇ περὶ τὴν Σικανίαν ὁρίαν, &c. "They are (saith he) two Islands parted by a narrow Strait of the Sea, distant from the main Land of Africk 10000 furlongs, (which in our account cometh to 1250 miles) called also the "Isles

PART II.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY

AMERICA,

AND ALL THE Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Islands of it.

Of AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and last part of the World, is bounded on the East with the Atlantick Ocean and the Verigian Seas, by which parted from Europe and Africa, which Seas the Mariners call Mare del Noordo; on the West, with the Pacifick Ocean, by the Mariners called Mare del Zur, which divides it from Asia; on the South, with some part of Terra Australis Incognita, from which separated by a long but narrow Streight, called the Streights of Magellan: the North bounds, of it hitherto not so well discovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Island or Continent.

It is called by some, and that most aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New, for the Late Discovery; and World, for the vast greatness of it. The most usual, and yet somewhat the more improper name, is that of America; because Americus Vesputius, an adventurous Florentine, discovered a great part of the Continent of it. But since the first light he had to find out those Parts came from the Directions and Example of Columbus, who first led the way; and that Sebastian Cabot touched at many places which Americus Vesputius never saw, it might as properly have been called Columbiana, Sebastiana, or Cabotina.

The most improper name of all, and yet not much less used than that of America, is the West-Indies: West, in regard of the Western situation of it from these parts of Europe; and Indies, either as mistook for some part of India, at the first Discovery, or else because the Seamen use to call all Countries, if remote and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on conjectural Presumptions, than demonstrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Discoveries. Their Reasons drawn, 1. From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the Ancient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of these parts of the World which are opposite to us. But unto this it may be answered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongst the Ancients was by Supposition, at the best by Demonstration only, & not in fact; thus, that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known; 2. It is said that Hanno, a Noble Carthaginian, discovered a great Island in the Western Ocean, and after a long Voyage returned home again, not wanting Sea-room, but Vicuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous Voyage, (which some conceive to be Hanno himself) inform us that he sailed not West-wards.

wards, but more towards the South: and therefore this Great Island, whatever it was, (whether Madaga, or some one of the Fortunate Islands, (wherein it not) could not be America. 3. It is alledged that Plato in his Timæus speaks of a great Island of the Atlantic Ocean, Libyam & Africam aequant; (as out of him Tertullian hath it) as big as Libya and Africa, properly so called: which he confesseth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore possibly never extant but in some mens fancies. 4. That Aristotle in the Book de Mundo (if that Book be his) speaks of an Island very fruitful, and full of Navigable Rivers, discovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be planted upon pain of death. Which Island being affirmed by that Author to be Multorum dierum itinere a Gadibus remota, hath made some men conceive it to be this America, or some of the great Islands of it. As if it might not as well be one of the Azores, or perhaps Madera, or some other of the Islands in the Road of Hanno's Voyage. Certain I am, that one of the best Friends the Phœnicians have, who would not gladly lose such an opportunity of ennobling their performances in Navigation, (could any thing be built upon it) doth wave the whole Relation as of doubtful credit; and knoweth of no such place as is there described by that Author, whosoever he were. 5. Some have produced these Verses of Seneca, to infer a knowledge of this Country amongst the Ancients, viz.

*Venient annis serula seris,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxet, & ingens pateat Tellus,
Novosque Tiphys detegat Orbes,
Nec sit Terris ultima Thule.*

Which may be Englished in these words:

In the last days an age shall come
Wherein the all-devouring Foam
Shall lose its former bounds, and shew
Another Continent to view.
New Worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A second Tiphys shall reveal;
And frozen Thule shall no more
Be of the Earth the farthest Shore.

But this Argument can bring no necessary, nor so much as a probable inference, of any such Continent as this, then known to Seneca: the Poet in that Chorus shewing as well the continual dangers as the possible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were, more Lands discovered than those formerly known. 6. Some hold this Country to be the Land of Ophir, to which Solomon is said in the holy Scriptures to have sent for Gold. But Ezra or Geber, which is there also said to be the station where his Navy lay, was situate in the bottom of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia: whereas if he had sent this way, his shipping must have lain at Joppa, or some other Port of the Mediterranean, and from thence set forthwards through the Streights of Gibraltar, and so plainly Westward. 7. Finally in the History of Wales, writ by David Powel, it is reported that Madoc the Son of Owen Gwynedd Prince of Wales, of purpose to decline engaging in a Civil War raised in that Estate, in the year 1170. put himself to Sea, and after a long course of Navigation came into this Country: where after he had left his men, and fortified some places of advantage in it he returned home for more Supplies, which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the rest of that Nation. To which some add, that there is still some smattering of the Welsh or British tongue to be found amongst them; as that a Bird with a white head is called Pengwin, and the like: in which regard some forry States-men went about to entice Queen Elizabeth unto the Sovereignty of these Countries. Others, more wise, dissuaded from that vain Ambition, considering that Wilde-men, as well as others, might be cast upon those parts by force of Tempest, and easily implant some few words of their own among the People there inhabiting. And though I must needs say for the honour of Wales, that they have more grounds for what they say, then those which look for this New World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantick Islands of Aristotle and Plutarch, or the Discoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian: yet am I not so far convinced of the truth thereof, the use of Mariner's Compasses being not so ancient, (without which such a Voyage could not be performed) but that I may conclude with more satisfaction, that this Country was unknown to the former Ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer said once of Britannia then newly conquered by the Romans, Britannia qualis sit, qualesque progeneret, mox certiora & magis explorata dicentur; quippe jam diu clausam aperit ecce Principum maximus, (he means Claudius Cæsar) nec indomitum modo sed & incognitum ante se Gentium Victor: so may we say of America, on these late Discoveries. What kind of Country it is, and what men it produceth, we do and shall know more certainly then in former times: since those puissant Kings of Spain have laid open almost all the parts thereof, inhabited not only by unvanquished, but even unknown Nations. For God remembering the promise of his Son, that his Gospel before the end of the World should be preached to all Nations, stirred up one Christopher Colon, or Columbus, born at Norwy, in the Seignoury of Genoa, to be the Instrument for finding out those parts of the World, to which the found of the Gospel had not yet arrived. Who being a man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not persuade himself (the motion of the Sun considered) but that there was another World to which that Glorious Planet did impart both his Light and Heat, when he went from us. This World he purposed to seek after, and opening his design to the State of Genoa, Anno 1486, was by them rejected. On his repulse, he sent his Brother Bartholomew to King Henry the Seventh of England; who in his way happened unfortunately into the hands of Pirates, by them detained a long while, but at last enlarged. As soon as he was set at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England; where his Proposition found such a cheerful entertainment at the hands of the King, that Christopher Columbus was sent for to come thither also. But GOD had otherwise disposed his rich purchase. For Christopher, not knowing of his Brothers imprisonment, nor hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his Service to have been neglected; and thereupon made his desire known at the Court of Castile: where, after many delays, and six years attendance on the business, he was at last furnished with three Ships only, and those not for Conquest, but Discovery. With this small strength he failed on the main Ocean, more then 60 days, yet could see no Land, so that the discontented Spaniards began to mutiny; & partly out of scorn to be under the Command of Stranger, partly desirous to return, would not go a foot forwards. Just at that time it happened that Columbus did discern the Clouds to carry a clearer colour than they did before: and probably conceiving that this clearness proceeded from some high habitable place, restrained the time of their expectation within the compass of three days, passing his word to return again, if they did not see Land within that time. Towards the end of the third day, one of the Company, called Rodrigo de Triane (he deserves to have his name recorded, being no otherwise rewarded for such joyful News) descried Fire, an evident Argument that they they drew near unto some Shore. The place discovered was an Island on the Coast of Florida, by the Natives called Guananami; by Columbus S. Saviour; now counted one of the Lucas. Landing his men, and causing a Tree to be cut down, he made a Cross thereof, which he erected near the place where he came on Land; and by that Ceremony took possession of this NEW WORLD for the Kings of Spain, Octob. 11. Anno 1492. Afterwards he discovered and took possession of Hispaniola, and with much Treasure and Content returned towards Spain. Preferred for this good Service by the Kings themselves, first to be Admiral of the Indies, and afterwards to a Coat of Arms with this Inscription, For Castile and Leon Columbus hath gotten a NEW WORLD; and in conclusion unto the Title of Duke De la Vega, in the Isle of Jamaica. News of this fortunate Discovery being sent to Pope Alexander VI. by the Kings of Castile, he very liberally bestowed upon them all those Countreys which they already had, or should afterwards discover in the Western World; advising them to use their Diligence and Endeavours for converting those People to the Faith: which was done accordingly. For the next year Columbus being furnished with 18 Ships for more Discoveries, and his Brother Bartholomew made Governour of the Countreys discovered by him, they took along with them one Beyl, a Benedictine Monk, as the Popes Vicar-General, accompanied with the learned Clerks which were to be Assistants to him in the converting of that People to the Christian Faith. In this second Voyage, he discovered the Islands of Cuba and Jamaica, and built the Town of Isabella (afterwards better known by the name of Domingo) in Hispaniola: from whence, for some Severities used against the mutinous Spaniards, he was sent Prisoner into Castile, but very honourably entertained, and absolved from all the Crimes imputed to him. In the year 1497, he began his third Voyage, in which he discovered the Countreys of Paria and Cumaná, on the firm Land, with the Islands of Cubagua and Margarita, with many other Islands, Capes, and Provinces, which shall be touched upon particularly in their several places. In the year 1500 he began his fourth and last Voyage, in the course whereof, coming to Hispaniola, he was unworthily denied entrance into the City of Domingo, by Nicolas de Ovendo, the then Governour of it: after which, scouring along the Seacoasts as far as Nombre de Dios, but adding little to the fortune of his former Discoveries, he returned back to Cuba and Jamaica, and from thence to Spain, where about six years after (that is to say, Anno 1506.) he departed this Life, and was honourably interred at Sevil, where to this day remaineth this Epitaph on his Tomb, bald in it self, and otherwise exceeding short of so great a Merit. Of which I must tell you by the way, that the Philip whom the Versifier (I do not say the Poet) called Philippus Hispanus, should rather have been called Philippus Austriacus, or Philippus Burgundus, as being meant of that Philip of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, who had then married Joan, sole Daughter and Heir of the King of Spain, and after the death of Isabella succeeded in the Realm of Castile: or else the Epitaph must be written long after his death, and meant of Philip the II. Son of Charles the Fifth, who was not born until the year 1527, and came not to the Crown above twenty years after. Now for this Epitaph, such as it is, it is this that followeth:

*Christophorus genuit quem Genoa clara Columbus,
(Nuncius percussus quo nescio) primus in altum
Descendens, Relatus; Solem versisque cadentem
Directo cursu, nostro battens addita Mundo Littora detexit, Hispano partitura Philippo;
Addenda hinc aliis plura & majora relinquens.*

Which may be Englished in these Words:

*I Christopher Columbus, whom the Land
Of Genoa first brought forth, first took in hand;
I know not by what Deity incited,
To scour the Western Seas, and was delighted
To seek for Countreys never known before.
Crown'd with Success, I first descri'd the Shore
Of the NEW WORLD, then destin'd to sustain
The future Yoke of Philip Lord of Spain.
And yet I greater matters left behind,
For men of more Means, and a Braver Mind.*

Dying he left two Sons behind him: of which the youngest, called Ferdinand, died unmarried; the eldest, called Diego, succeeded his Father in the Admiralty of the Indies; and the Dukedom of Vega, and married Mary of Toledo, Daughter of Ferdinand Duke of Alva; but having (as it seemeth) no Issue by her, he spent the greatest part of his Estate in founding the Library at Sevil, spoken of before, which he furnished with 12000 Volumes, and endowed with a liberal Revenue to maintain the same. But though his Family be extinct, yet his Fame shall live, renowned to all Posterities, as the first Discoverer of this New World, and consequently the greatest and most fortunate Advancer of the Spanish Monarchy; though in his life time so maligned by most part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla, being sent into those parts for redress of Grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him Prisoner into Spain. Nor did they only stick after his death to deprive him of the honour of this Discovery, (attributing it to I know not what Spaniard, whose Charts & Descriptions he had seen) but in his life would often say that it was a matter of no such difficulty to have found these Countreys; and that if he had not done it when he did, some body else might have done it for him. Whose peevishness he confuted by this model Artifice, desiring some of them, who insolently enough had contended with him touching this Discovery, to make an Egg stand firmly upon one of its ends. Which when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently brushing one end of it made it stand upright; letting them see without any farther reprehension, how easy it was to do that thing which we see another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was seconded by John Cabot a Venetian, the Father of Sebastian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the Seventh of England, who in the year 1497, discovered all the North-East Coasts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South, to Newfound-Land, and Terra di Labrador in the North, causing the Royalests to turn Homagers to that King, and the Crown of England. Next after him succeeded Americus Vesputius, an adventurous Florentine, employed therein by Emmanuel King of Portugal, Anno 1501, on a design, of finding out a nearer way to the Moluccas than by the Cape of good Hope; who though he passed not farther than the Cape of S. Augustine in Brazil, without so much as having a sight of the Great River de la Plata, which walseth the South parts of that Country; yet from him (to the great Injury and Neglect of the first Discoverers) the Continent or Main Land of this Country hath the name of America; by which it is still known, and most commonly called. Followed herein by divers private Adventurers and Undertakers out of all parts of Europe bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellanus was the first that compassed the whole World, and found the South passage, called Fretum Magellanicum to this day: followed herein by Drake and Cavendish of England; Frobisher and Davis attempted a Discovery of the North-west passage: Willoughby and Burroughs of the North-east.

east. So that, according to that elegant saying of the learned Verulam in his Advancement of Learning, this Great Building, the World, had never through-Lights made in it, till these our days: by which, as almost all parts of Learning, so in especial this of Navigation, and by consequence of Cosmography also, hath obtained an incredible Proficiency in these later times.

For in the Infancy and first Ages of the World, (pardon me, I beseech you, this short but not unprofitable Digression) men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign Merchandise, nor inquisitive after the Lives and Fortunes of their Neighbours; or in the Language of the Poet,

Nondum caesa suis, peregrinum ut viseret Orbem, Montibus, in liquidis Pinus, descenderat undas.

The Pine left not the Hills on which it stood,
To seek strange Lands, or rove upon the Flood.

But when the Providence of God had instructed Noah how to build the Ark, for the preservation of himself and his Children from the general Deluge, the Posterity which descended from him, had thereby a pattern for the making of Ships and other Vessels (perfected in more length of time) whereby to make the Waters passable, and maintain a necessary intercourse betwixt Nation and Nation. 'Tis true, the Heathen Writers, which knew not Noah, attribute the invention of Shipping to sundry men, according to such Informations or Traditions as they had received: Strabo to Minos King of Crete; Diodorus Siculus to Neptune, who was therefore called the God of the Seas; and Tibullus to the people of Tyre, (a Town indeed of great Wealth and Traffick, and the most famous Empory of the elder times) saying,

Prima Ratem ventis credere docti Tyrus.

The Tyrians first the Art did find
To make ships travel with the Wind.

And questionless the Tyrians, and the rest of the Phœnicians, enjoying a large Sea coast, and many safe and capacious Havens, being in these times most strong at Sea, and making so many fortunate Navigations into most parts of the then known World, might give the Poet some good colour for his affirmation. From the Phœnicians, the Egyptians (their next Neighbours) might derive the Art of Navigation; though being an ingenious people, they did add much to it. For whereas the first Vessels were either made of the body of some great Tree, made hollow by the Art of Man, or else of divers Rods or Twigs fashioned into a Boat, and covered with the Skins of Beasts, (which we have spoken of before, when we were in Sanguenar, and which are still in use amongst these Americans) the Phœnicians brought them first into strength and form: but the Egyptians added Decks unto them. By Danaus King of Egypt, when he fled from his Brother Ramses, the use of Shipping was first brought amongst the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow Seas, but on Beams or Rafter-ties tied to one another. Nave primus ab Egypto Danaus advenit; ante enim Ratibus navigabatur, as it is in Pliny: where we may see the true and genuine difference betwixt Ratis and Navis, though now both be used indifferently for all sorts of Shipping. Amongst the Grecians, those of Crete were the ablest Sea-men; which gave occasion to Aristotle, to call Crete the Lady of the Sea; and to Strabo, to make Minos the Inventor of Ships. In following times the Carthaginians, being a Colony of Tyre, were most considerable in this kind, and by the benefit of their Shipping much distressed the Romans. But so it happened (as all things do and must concur to Gods publick purposes in the alteration of Estates) that a Tempest separating a Quinquereme, or Gally of five banks of Oars, from the rest of the Carthaginian Fleet, cast it on the Shore of Italy; by which accident the Romans learning the Art of Ship-wrights, soon became Masters of the Sea. That France and Spain were taught the use of Shipping by the Greeks and Phœnicians, is a thing past questioning; Marcellus in the one being a Pœcean, and Gades in the other a Tyrian Colony. As for the Belgians and the Britains, it is probable that they first learnt it of the Romans, (though formerly they had some way to transport themselves from one shore to the other) for Cæsar telleth us of the Belge, Ad vos Mercatores minimè commentant, that they were not at all visited by foreign Merchants. And the same Cæsar found the Seas betwixt France and Britain so ill furnished with Vessels, that he was fain to make Ships to transport his Army: Singulari militum studio circiter sexcentis & duodeviginti Naves inveniunt, as his own words are.

Having thus brought Navigation to the greatest height which it had in those days; let us look back again on the Inventors of particular Vessels, and the Tackle unto them belonging. That the Phœnicians first invented open Vessels, and the Egyptians Ships with Decks, hath been said before: and unto them also is referred the Invention of Gallies, with two Banks of Oars upon a side; which kind of Vessels grew so large in the course of time, that Protony Philopater is said to have made a Gally of Fifty Banks. Great Ships of Burthen called Circers, we owe to the Cypriots; Cock-boats, or Skiffs, (Scaphis) to the Illyrians, or Liburnians; Brigantines, (Celoces) to the Rhodians; and Frigots or light Barks, (Lembos) unto the Cyrenians. The Phæstii, and Pamphylii (which we may render Men of War) were the Invention of the Pamphylians, and the Inhabitants of Phæstia, a Town of Lycia, in Asia Minor. As for Tackle, the Bæotians invented the Oar; Dædalus, and his Son Icarus, the Masts and Sails: Which gave occasion to the Poets to feign, that flying out of Crete, they made Wings to their Bodies; and that Icarus soaring too high, melted the Wax which fastened his Wings unto his Shoulders, and thereby perished: the truth being, that presuming too much on this new invention, he ran himself upon a Rock, and was cast away. For Hippagines, Vessels for transporting of Horfes, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for Grappling-hooks, to Anacharsis; for Anchors, to the Tuscans; and for the Rudder, Helm, or Art of Steering, to Tiphys, the chief Pilot in the famous Argo, who noting that a Kite when she flew, guided her whole Body by her Tail, effected that in the devices of Art, which he had observed in the Works of Nature. By these helps some great Voyages were performed in the elder times; the greatest of those of Jafon, Ulysses, and Alexander, with the Fleets of Solomon and the Egyptian Kings. Of these, Jafon and his Companions sailed in the Ship called Argo, though the Euxine Sea, and part of the Mediterranean; Ulysses, through the Mediterranean only; small Galleys, if compared with the Ocean. Alexander's Journey, so famous, and accounted then so hazardous, was but sailing down the River Indus, and four hundred furlongs into the Ocean. And for the Fleets of Solomon, and the Kings of Egypt, it is very apparent that they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the Shore-side: otherwise it had been impossible to have consumed three whole years in going from Ezion-Geber into India, and returning again; which was the usual times of these Voyages, as appeareth in 1 Kings, 10. 22. After the fall of the Roman Monarchy, the most potent States by Sea in the Mediterranean were the Genoese and Venetians, in the Ocean the English and the the Hanse-Towns, neither of which ever attempted any great Discoveries.

But in the year 1300, one Flavio of Malpigi in the Realm of Naples found out the Compass, or Pyxis Nautica, consisting of 8 Winds only, the four principal, and four collateral: and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected this excellent Invention, adding 24 other subordinate Winds or points. By means of this excellent Instrument, and withal by the good success of Columbus, the Portugals Eastwards, the Spaniards Westwards, and the Englishs Northwards, have made many glorious and fortunate Expeditions: which had been utterly impossible to have been performed, and had been foolishly undertaken when that Help was wanting. I know there hath been much pains taken by some Learned men to prove the use of the Mariner's Compass to be far more ancient than is now commonly pretended. Fuller, a very learned and industrious man, but better skilled in the Hebrew Tongue than the Philology of the Greek and Latine, will have it known to Solomon, and by him taught unto the Tyrians and Phœnicians, (the most famous Sea-men of old times: but he brings no Argument of weight to make good the cause. Nor is it possible that such an Excellent Invention, so beneficial to the common Good of all Mankind, should have been forgotten and discontinued for the space of more than 2000 years, if ever the Tyrians and Phœnicians had been Masters of it; who could not possibly conceal it (had they been so minded) from the common Mariners, or they not have communicated it for Gain, or desire of Glory, to the Greeks and Romans, under whom successively they lived. As little moment do I find in some other Arguments; as that the Lapis Heraclius of the ancient Writers, or the Persia of Plinius, should be by them intended of the Mariner's Compass. For plainly the Vesforia of Plinius is no other than that piece of Tackle which our Mariners now call the Bolin; by which they use to turn their Sails, and fit them to the change of every Wind. And so much doth appear by the Poet himself, in the Comedy which he calls Mercator, saying, Hinc ventus nunc secundus est, cape modo Vesforiam. So called from Vesfo, to turn often, or from Vesfum, the first Supine of Verto: whence Velum vertere is a common phrase amongst the Latines, used for the shifting of the Sail as the Wind doth vary. As for the Load-stone, it is called indeed Heraclius Lapis, Heraclius lapis by the Greeks; not because Heraclius Tyrius whom the Phœnicians invocated when they were at Sea, had first found out the Virtue of it, as our Fuller thinketh, but because first found near Heraclia, a City of Lydia, Kéκλιος ἡ ὅτις ἀπὸ Ἡρακλείας ἢ ἐν Λυδίᾳ πόλιν, saith Hesychius, the old Grammarian. Called for the same reason Magnet, by the Writers both Greek and Latine; because first found in the Territory of Magnesia, a City of Lydia also, whereof Heraclia was a part. So Suidas telleth us of the Greeks, Ἡρακλείου λίθου ἢ μαγνητίου ἀνιδεύς, ὡς καὶ τὸ Ἡρακλείου ἢ μαγνητίου ἴδ. Heraclium Lapidem quidam Magnetem reddiderunt, quia Heraclia pars est Magnesiæ. Called for the very same reason Lydius Lapis also, but by them known only as a Touchstone. Thus old Lucretius for the Latines,

Quem Magneta vocant patrio de nomine Grai, Magnetum quia sit patriis definitus ortus.

Which Stone the Greeks do Magnet name,
Because it from Magnesia came.

But I have rambl'd farther than I did intend, drawn by the virtue of the Load-stone too much out of my way. It is time now to return again into America, where the Spaniards at their first arrival found the People without all manner of Apparel, nought skilled in Agriculture, making theft Bread either of a Plant called Mais, or a kind of Root called Juca: a Root wherein is a venomous Liquor, not inferior to the most deadly Poysons; but having first squeezed out this Juice, and after dried and prepared the Root, they made their Bread of it. They worshipped the Devilish Spirits, whom they called Zemes; in remembrance of whom they kept certain Images made of Cotton-wool, like our Childrens Babies; to which they did great Reverence, as supposing the Spirit of the Zemes to be in them: and to blind them the more, the Devil would cause these Puppets to seem to move, and to make a noise. They stood also in so great fear of them, that they durst not displease them: for if their wills were not fulfilled, the Devil straight executed vengeance upon some of their Children; so holding this infatuated People in perpetual Thralldom. So ignorant they were of all things which they had not seen, that they thought the Christians to be Immortal: wondering exceedingly at the Sails, Masts, and Tacklings of their Ships; themselves knowing no Ships or other Vessels, but huge Troughs made of some great-bodied Tree. But this opinion of the Christians Immortality (in the sense they meant it) did not long continue, for having taken some of them, they held their heads under the Water till they had quite choaked them; by which they knew them to be mortal, like other men. Quite destitute of all good Learning, they reckoned their time by a confused Observation of the course of the Moon: and strangely admired to see the Spaniards know the Health and Affairs of one another, only by reading of a Letter. Of a plain and honest nature, for the most part, they were found to be; loving and kind in their Entertainments, and apt to do good Offices, both private and publick, according to their Understandings: encouraged thereunto by an opinion which they had, that beyond some certain Hill (but they knew not where) those which lived honestly and justly, or offered up their Lives in defence of their Country, should find a place of everlasting Peace and Happiness. So natural is the knowledge of the Souls Immortality, and of some Ubi for the future Reception of it, that we find some Tract or other of it in most barbarous Nations. And as for Gold and Silver, which the new-come Christians so adored, they esteemed them no otherwise than as dross: though many times they adorned themselves therewith for the colour's sake; as they did also with Shells, Feathers, and the like fine Gew-gaws.

Of Complexion most of these Americans were reasonably fair and clear, little inclining unto Blackness: notwithstanding that a great part of this Country lieth under the same parallel with Aethiopia, Libya, and the Land of Negroes. So that the extraordinary heat of the Sun is not (as some imagine) the Cause of that Blackness, though accidentally it may turn the Skin into such a Colour; as we seen in many Country-Lasses, even in colder Climates, whose Faces are continually exposed to the Sun and Weather. Others, more wise in their own Conceits, (but in no bodies else) will have the natural Seed of the Africans to be black of Colour; contrary both to Sense and Reason, Experience and true natural Philosophy being both against it. And some will have this Blackness laid as a Curse on Cham, (from whose posterity the African Nations do derive themselves) because, forsooth, he had carnal knowledge of his Wife when they were in the Ark: a Fancy as ridiculous as the other false. So that we must refer it wholly to Gods secret pleasure; though possibly enough the Curse of God on Cham and on his posterity (though for some cause unknown to us) hath an Influence on it.

Touch.

Touching the Original of this People, it is most probable that they descend from the Tartars; for which there are some Arguments of special weight. For first, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe; as having no remainders of the Arts, Learning and Civilities of it. And secondly, that they came not from Africa; in regard they have no Black-men amongst them, except some few which dwell on the Sea-Coasts over against Guinea in the Land of the Negroes, from whence they are supposed to have been brought hither by some Tempest or other. Thirdly, that they have not the least token or shew of the Arts and Industry of China, India, or any civil Region on that side of Asia. The Affirmative Arguments prove first, That they came from Asia; next in particular from Tartary. That they came out of Asia, is more than manifest, in that the West side of the Country towards Asia, is far more populous than the East towards Europe: of which there can be no other reason assigned, than that these parts were first inhabited, and that from hence the rest was peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this People, and the particularities thereof, their Incivility and barbarous qualities, tell us that they are most like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the West-side of America, if it be not Continent with Tartary, is yet disjoined by a very small Streight, as may be perceived in all our Maps and Charts, as also in the Description of these Countreys: so that there is thence into these Countreys a very quick and easie passage. And fourthly, The People of Quivira, which of all the Provinces of America is the nearest unto Tartary, are said to follow, in the whole course of their Life, the Seasons and best pasturing of their Cattel, just like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes: an evident Argument of their Original Descent.

But from what Root soever they did first descend, certain it is, that they had settled here many Ages since, and overlaid all the parts and quarters of this spacious Continent; there being no place which the Spaniards, or any other Adventurers, found desolate or waste, and without Inhabitants. But their numbers are much diminished since these late Discoveries; the Spaniards behaving themselves most inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked People, killing them up like Sheep appointed to the Slaughter, or otherwise consuming them in their Mines and Works of Drudgery. And had not Charles the Fifth ordained with most Christian Prudence, that the Natives should not be compelled to work in the Mines against their will, but that the Spaniards should provide themselves of Slaves elsewhere; the Natives in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Christianity and the Gospel. For so exceeding barbarous and bloody were they at their first coming thither, that Hathory, a Nobleman amongst them, being persuaded to embrace the Christian Faith, demanded first what he should get by being of that Religion? and was answered, That he should get Heaven and the Joys thereof. Then would he know what place was destinate to such as died unbaptized; and was answered, That they went to Hell, and the Torments of it. Finally, asking unto which of these two places the Spaniards went, and being told they went to Heaven, he renounced his Baptism: protesting that he would rather go to Hell with the Unbaptized, than to live in Heaven with so cruel a people. The rest were driven unto the Font, like so many Horses to the watering place, and received into the Church of Christ without any Instruction: insomuch that one old Friar (as himself confessed to Charles the Fifth) had Christened 70000 of them, and another of that rank 300000; never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Christian Faith, or points of Religious Conversation, (except it were to be obedient to their Pastors and Teachers.) Yet here I must confess, (for I am loth to defraud any man of his due) there hath been made a great Improvement of Christianity: the number of Christians in this Countrey being thought by some learned men of the Church of Rome, to equal all those of the Latine Churches in Europe. And though perhaps constrained at first unto it as a new Religion, and of a stricter Rule than that which before they had; yet by long time and Education it is now grown more plausible and familiar to them. The Church hereof is governed by the four Archbishops of, 1. Mexico, 2. Lima, 3. S. Foy, and 4. Dominico, who have under them 25 Suffragan Bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When this New World came first acquainted with the Old, Isabel Queen of Castile would not permit any of her Husband Ferdinando's Subjects to be planted here, viz. Andragonians or Valentians, but licensed the Castilians, Andalusians, Biscainers, and the rest of her own people onely, envying the Wealth hereof to the rest. When he was dead, Ferdinando licensed generally all the Spaniards, excluding onely the Portugals. But so rich a Prize could not so warily be fenced, but that the Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low-Country-men have laid in their own Barns part of the Spaniard's Harvest; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of so wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any Rival or Competitor the possession (I cannot say the Love) of a Countrey so abundantly fruitful. For though some of the Kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East-Indies as their Mistress onely, in whose favour they could patiently enough endure a Rival; but esteemed America as their Wife, in whose love they could not brook a Competitor without a foul dishonour: yet by his leave (or without it rather) some of his Neighbours have made bold with his Wife in these later times, though in the affections of his Mistress they have greater Interest. But these Attempts of the English and Hollanders have been an occasion of great strength to the whole Countrey. For whereas in our first wars with Spain, in Queen Elizabeth's time, our private Adventurers found the Sea-coasts almost naked of Defence, and thereupon made many a rich and prosperous Voyage to these parts: the Spaniards, upon sight of that weakness and disadvantage, so strongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the Reign of that Queen we were not able to accomplish that with great and Publick Forces, which before had been performed by small and Private. Which caused our Captains and adventurers, failing oftentimes in their Designs upon the Continent, to make up their Market on the Seas, in the return of Spanish Navies, as they yet do.

This New World is very plentiful of Spices, Fruits, and such Creatures which the Old World never knew; stocked with such store of Kine and Bulls, (brought hither out of Europe since the first Discovery) that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly for their Tallow and Hides onely; blest with such abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines more Gold than Earth: a Metal which the Americans, not regarding it, greedily exchanged for Hammers, Knives, Axes, and the like Tools of Iron: for before they were wont to make their Canoes or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of Fire. Other particularities shall be specified in the particular Descriptions of the several Countreys. I shall now onely take a brief View of such of their Beasts and Fowls, as either this Old World did not know, or knew not in such shapes and qualities as are there presented. Their Lions less in greatness than those in Africa, are said to be of colour gray, and so nimble as to climb Trees: their

Dogs

Dogs snouted like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logicians call Proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark; their Hogs with Talons sharp as Razors, and the Navil of their Bodies on the Ridge of their Backs: their Stags and Deer without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not onely profitable, as with us, for Food and Raiment, but accustomed to the carrying of Burthens, some of 150 pound weight. Amongst such strong Beasts as this Old World knew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whose name I find not) whose fore-part resembleth a Fox, the hinder-part an Ape, except the Feet onely, which are like a Man's: beneath her Belly a receptacle like a Purse, where she keeps her young, till they be able to shift for themselves; never coming thence but when they suck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a barbed Horse, seeming to be armed all over, and that with artificial (rather than natural) Plates, which do shut and open. The Vicugna resembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable: of the Fleeces whereof they make Rugz, Coverings, and Stuffs; and in the Belly find the Bezor, sometimes two or three, a sovereign Antidote against Poisons and venomous Difeases. A kind of Hare, resembling a Want in his Feet, and a Cat in his Tail; under whose Chin nature hath fastned a little Bag, which the hath also taught him to use as a Store-house; for in this, having filled his belly, he preserveth the remnant of his Provision. The Pigritia, a little Beast, (not so named for nought) which in fourteen days cannot go so far as a man may easily throw a stone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in such variety of Colours, that the Indians will perfectly represent in Feathers whatsoever they see drawn with Pencils: insomuch as a Figure of S. Francis made of Feathers was presented to Pope Sixtus Quintus; whose Eye could not discern them to be natural Colours, but thought them Pencil-work, till he made trial with his Fingers. One called the Tomino, of all colours, so little, that it seems no bigger than a Bee or Butter-fly, the mouth thereof no bigger than the eye of a Needle, yet yielding not to the Nightingale in the sweetness of its Note and Melick; the Bird and Nest, put into Gold-Scales not weighing above 24 Grains, yet beautified with Feathers of so many colours, especially in the Neck and Breast, that the Indians make great use of them in their Feather-pictures. Others as big as these are little. The Condors of such strength and greatness, that they will fall upon a Sheep or a Calf, open it and eat it. Like Miracles of Nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto natural History than to this Discourse; and many medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the consideration of the Learned Herbalists. I am too much a Fool to be a Physician, and therefore will not deal in such things as are out of my Element. Yet somewhat of this kind we may chance to meet with in the Description and Survey of the several Provinces into which this New World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninsulas; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana, from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, supposed (for the most Northern parts of it are not yet discovered) to contain 13000 miles in compass. That towards the South hath the name of Peruana, from the great Countrey of Peru; the Circumnavigation whereof is reckoned to 17000 Italian miles. The Isthmus which joyneth these two together is very long, but narrow; in some places not above 12 miles from Sea to Sea; in many not above seventeen. By the Spaniards it is called the Streight of Darien, from a River of that name in Peruana, near unto the Isthmus; and is so small a Ligament for so great a Body, that some have thought of turning these two Peninsulas into perfect Islands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable Chanel through this small Isthmus, so to shorten their common Voyages to China and the Moluccas. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly, because if he should employ the Americans in the work, he should lose those few of them which his people have suffered to live; partly, because the Slaves which they yearly buy cut of Africa do but suffice for the Mines and Sugar-houses; but principally, lest the passage by the Cap: of good Hope being left, those Seas might become a receptacle of Pirates. Which doubtless was a very prudent and politic consideration. Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Sagittia King of Egypt, Darius of Persia, one of the Ptolomies, and a late capricious Portugal had the like Plot, to make a passage from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean. So had Cesar, Caligula, and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Corinthian Isthmus. Another of the same nature had Charles the Great, to let the Rhene into the Danow: the like had Lucius Verus, to joyn the Rhene and the Rhose: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicanor also, King of Syria, intended to have made a Chanel from the Caspian to the Euxine Sea, an infinite Project. But neither he nor any of the rest could finish these works: God, it seemeth, being not pleased at such proud and haughty Enterprises. And yet perhaps the want of Treasure hath not been the least cause why the like Projects have not proceeded: besides the dreadful Noises and Apparitions, which (as we have already said) continually affrighted the Workmen.

Not less observable than this great, but unsuccessful, Design of cutting a passage through the Isthmus, from one Sea to the other, was that notable, but like successful Attempt of John Oxenham, an adventurous Englishman, in a passage over it by Land. This man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, arriving in a small Bark, with 70 of his Companions, a little above Nombre di Dios, the chiefest Town of all the Isthmus, drew his Ship on Land, covered it with Boughs, and marched over the Land with his Company, guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinnace, entered the South-Sea, went to the Isle of Pearls, where he stayed ten days; intercepted in two Spanish Ships (who feared no Enemy on that side) 60000 pound weight of Gold, 200000 pound weight in bars of Silver, and returned in safety to the Land. And though by the mutiny of some of his own Company, he neither returned into his own Countrey, nor unto his Ship: yet it is an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other, and by the Spanish Writers recorded with much admiration.

But to return to the Division of this Countrey, and the two main parts thereof which this Streight uniteth, Mexicana, or the Northern Peninsula, may be most properly divided into the Continent, and Islands; the Continent again into the several Provinces of 1. Estiland, 2. Nova Francia, 3. Virginia, 4. Florida, 5. California, 6. Nova Galicia, 7. Nova Hispania, 8. Guatemala; each of them branched into many Subdivisions and lesser Territories. Peruana, or the Southern Peninsula, taking in some part of the Isthmus, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of 1. Castilla, Arica, 2. Nova Granada, 3. Peru, 4. Chile, 5. Rareguy, 6. Brasil, 7. Guiana, and 8. Paita; with their several Members, Parts, and particular Regions. The Islands, which belong to both, dispersed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mar del Sur, where there is not any one of note but 1. Those called Las Ladrones, and 2. The Islands of Solomon; or in the Northern Ocean, or Mar del Norte, reduced reduced unto, 3. the Cariber, 4. Porto Rico, 5. Hispantola, 6. Cuba, and 7. Jamaica, in the Survey of which particulars we will begin with those which lie on the North-east of this great Continent, not possessed by the Spaniards; and passing through the plantations of such other Nations as have any footing in the same, come by degrees to the Estates of the King of Spain, that we may lay them all together without interruption: beginning with Estotiland, the most Northern part; and that which (as some say) was discovered first.

ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend those Regions of Mexicana which lie most towards the North and East, hath on the East the main Ocean: on the South, Canada, or Nova Francia; on the West, some unknown Tract not yet discovered; and on the North, a Bay or Inlet of the Sea, called Hudson's Streights, and called so from Henry Hudson an Englishman, who by this way endeavoured to find out a more commodious and quick passage to Cathay and China than had been formerly discovered. It comprehends, 1. Estotiland, specially so called, 2. Terra Corterialis, 3. New-found Land, and 4. the Isles of Bacalaos.

1. And first ESTOTILAND, specially so called, is the most Northern Region on the Eastside of America, lying betwixt Hudson's Streights on the North, and Terra Corterialis on the South. The Soil sufficiently enriched with natural Endowments, is said to have in it Mines of Gold, and other Metals: but I doubt it lieth too much North for Gold, whatsoever it may do for Brasse and Iron. The people rude and void of goodness; naked, notwithstanding the extreme cold of the Country; nor having either the wit, or the care, to cover their Bodies with the skins of those Beasts which they kill by Hunting, though their bellies teach them to keep life by the flesh thereof: said by the first Discoverers to sow Corn, to make Beer, or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own, with which they traded into Greenland; as also to have many Cities and Castles, some Temples consecrated to their Idols, where they first sacrificed Men, and after eat them. The Language which they speak is expressed in Characters of their own; but some knowledge of the Latin Tongue there hath been amongst them, and Latine Books in the Library of one of their Kings, understood by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Country by the first Discoverers, who were certain Fishermen of Freeze-land, cast by a Tempest on this Coast about the year 1350. Six of them only got on Land, where all died save one; who after a long wandering from one Prince's Court to another, found means to return into his own Country: the King whereof, called Zichmni, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the further Discovery and Conquest of it. Animated therunto by the opinion of the Count of Arundel, and Prince Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of France, who desired to see the Fashions of the World, and to have a Ship at their own Charges, and giving the State of Brittain their Letters Northward, with an Intrecommis of England and Wales; sent him by Tempest on this Island, Anno 1380, they were kindly welcomed by the King, who newly prosperous in a War against those of Normandy, who had been so well, that he gave him a Command in his Navy, and under his good conduct won many Islands, discovered Greenland, and provided for the Conquest of Estotiland also. But Nicola in the mean time dying, the business was pursued by his Brother Antonio, the King in person making one in the Undertaking: who liked the Country so well, being once possessed of it, that he built a City in it, and there determining to spend the rest of his days, sent back Antonio unto Freeze-land, with the most of his people.

This is the substance of the Story of the first Discovery, published long since by one Francisco Marcellino, out of the Letters of the Zeni: which had they been considered of as they might have been, we had not so long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the world. But whether it were that their Reports were esteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Discovery; there was nothing done in pursuance of it: Zichmni never going back to his own Country, and Freeze-land not long after conquered by the Kings of Normandy. So that the knowledge of it was quite lost again, till these later days. Said, in the Letters of the Zeni, to be well stored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds, which they found there for their refreshing; the Haven where they landed to be called Cape Trin: the people to be of small Stature, fearful, and to hide themselves in Caves at the sight of the Freeze-landers: that there was a Mountain always burning, or casting smoke; together with a certain Spring, whence issued a water as black as Pitch; but no such Cities, Forts, and Temples, as the Fishermen spake of. The Country West from Freeze-land 1000 miles.

To give you the Face of it as it stands at the present, it is said to be well cultivated, fruitful of all Necessaries for the life of Man, and rich in Metals, but extreme cold; watered with four Rivers, which rising out of an high Mountain in the midst of the Country, disperse themselves over all parts of it. The people said to be more ingenious, of better judgments, and more skilled in most Mechanick Arts, than the rest of the Americans were at the first Discovery; which argueth some more Civil people to have been formerly amongst them. Their Garments of the skins of Beasts, or Sea-Calves, with which also they covered the out-side of their Boats, to keep out the water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whether the name of Cape Trin be still remaining, I am not able to discover; this Country lying still for the most part hidden in a Northern Mist. All we can say is, that some English names have been imposed of late on some Capes and Promontories lying on the Northern Shores hereof towards Hudson's Streights, by Hudjon and such others of the English Nation who pursued that Enterprise. Of which sort are Prince Henry's Foreland, towards the East, almost most at the entries of those Streights; and then proceeding towards the West, Cape Charler, King's Foreland; and last of all Cape Walsingham, at the end thereof, where these Streights open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudson's Bay. But of these more particularly in another place, where we endeavour the Discovery of such parts of the World as are as yet unknown, and so within the compass of a Terra Incognita.

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North Estotiland; on the South Canada, or New-France. So called from Caspar Corterialis; who in the year 1500 left his name unto it. It is called also Terra di Laboradoro, both from the pains required of the Husbandman, and the great Recompence which it gives him: in the same sense as Campania in the Realm of Naples is named Terra di Lavoro. By the French, who succeeded in the possession hereof after the Spaniard had forsok it, it was called New-Bretagne, with reference to Bretagne in France, their own natural Country.

The people at the first coming of Corterialis were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, swift of Foot, and very good Archers: their clothing of Beasts-skins; their Habitations Caves, or some lofty Cottages, their Religion Paganism, or none; their Directions South-saying. Not so forgetful of the Law which Nature had planted in them, as not to know the necessary use of Marriage; but extremely jealous. Better conditioned at the present than in former times, by their near neighbourhood to the French, and Commerce with Foreigners: affirmed to be very well disposed, to feed most generally on Fish, and to adorn themselves with Bracelets of Brasse, or Silver. Their chief Towns, 1. Bryst, 2. Santa Maria, 3. Cabo Marzo, of which little memorable.

The Country first discovered by Sebastian Cabot, the Son of John Cabot, before mentioned: who in the year 1497, at the Charges and Encouragement of King Henry 7. setting sail from Bristol, first made the Discovery of these parts as far as to the Latitude of 67 and an half, (which brings Estotiland within the compass also of his Discoveries.) The Land which he first saw he called Prima Vista; an Island lying before it he called S. John's, because discovered on the day of S. John Baptist. They found upon the Country plenty of White Bears, Stags greater than ours. Scut-fishes of a Yard long, and such sort of Cod-fish (which the Inhabitants called Bacalaos) that their multitudes sometimes stayed his Ships: hence the occasion of their name. Returning home, he found great preparations for War in Scotland; so that nothing else was done in this Discovery by the English Nation. But three years after, Caspar Corterialis a Portuguese, setting sail from Lisbon, fell upon these parts of Cabot's Discoveries, which since bear his name: from whence he brought the piece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanship, left there most probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of; drowned in the Sea, or slain by the Savages on the Land as was his Brother Michael in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French having planted in Canada, or Nova Francia, cast an eye upon it, who gave the name of Bryst to a Town hereof, (according to the name of a noted Port in Little Bretagne;) but whether they settled any Colony in it, or only did resort unto it in the way of Trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEW-FOUND-LAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latines call it) is a great Island, lying on the South of Corterialis, from which parted by a Frith, or Streight, called Golfe des Casteaux. So called from the late discovery of it, when discovered first, though it be some scores of years ago: as Wicham's College in Oxford hath the name of New Colledge, though founded divers years past; because it was the Newest when that Name was given.

The dimensions of the Country I have no where met with. But for the quality hereof, it is said to be better inhabited in the North-parts, than in the South; though the South the fitter of the two for Habitation. Furnished upon the Sea-coasts with abundance of Cod-fish, as also with Herrings, Salmon, Thornbacks, Smelts, Oysters, and Mussels with Pearls in them. Within the Land a goodly Country, naturally beautified with Roses, sown with Pease, planted with stately Trees, and otherwise diversified both for pleasure and profit: the Air hereof never very extreme, more temperate in the depth of Winter than with us in England, the Brooks being never so frozen over, that the Ice is able to bear a Dog; and those little Frosts but seldom holding three nights together. The people of reasonable Stature, full-eyed, broad-faced, but beardless, their Faces coloured with Oker; their Houses, Poles set round meeting together in the top, and covered over with skins, an Hearth, or Fire-place in the midst: their Boats of Bark, twenty foot long, and four in breadth, not weighing above 100 pounds weight; every of which will carry four men, and is by them carried to all the places of their Removes.

Places of most importance in it, are the several Havens (of which it is conceived to have more and more commodious, than any one Island of the World for the business of it): not beautified with Towns or Buildings, but yielding very safe stations to the greatest Ships. The chief whereof, 1. Remosa, or Roignesse, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Raz, the South-east Angle of the Island: of much resort for Fishing, from several Countries. 2. Portus Formosus, or Fair-Haven, three Miles North of the other; capable of great Ships, and bearing into the main Land above 40 Miles: situate in the Latitude of 40, and 40 minutes. 3. Thornbay, by the Portuguese named Enfada Grande. 4. Trinity Bay, on the North of Cape S. Francis, by the Portuguese called Babiade de la Concepcion: a large Bay, five miles broad in the narrowest place; yet safe withal, and of very good Anchorage. 5. Bona Vista, the name of a Port and Promontory. 6. White-Bay, or Bay-Blanch, (as the French call it) safe and capacious, on the North of the Promontory of S. John. Betwixt which and Cape de Grat, on the North-east Angle of the Island, is no Port of Note. Then on the South-side of the Island, and the West of Cape de Raz, is 7. Port Trespasser, 8. Port Presenza, and 9. Port des Bistours (or the Biscains Haven;) and on the West-side, having doubled the Cape de Raye, in the South-west Angle of the Island, there is 10. S. George's Bay: all of them safe, capacious, and of great resort.

4. Before the Island, at the distance of 25 Leagues from Cape de Raye, lieth a long bank or ridge of Ground, extended in length many hundred Leagues, in breadth 24 Leagues where broadest, in other places but sixteen: and all about it certain Islands, which Cabot by one common name called BACALAOES, (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitude of Cod-fish (by the Natives called Bacalaos) which swarmed hereabouts so numerous, that they hindered the passage of his Ships, as before was noted, and lay in such Shoals upon the Coasts, that the Bears caught them with their Claws, and drew them on Land. The Government at that time by Kings, before whom the people in the most formal expressions of Duty and Reverence used to rub their Noes, or stroke their Foreheads: which if the King observed, or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had so adored him, he turned his Head to his left Shoulder, as a mark of Favour.

The first Discoverers of this Country (but not known then then to be an Island) were the two Cabots, John and his Son Sebastian, employed herein by Henry the 7. 1497. as before was noted. The business being laid aside at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Eliot, two of Bristol; who taking a more perfect view of it than was took by the Cabots, ascribed to themselves the Discovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the Enterprize: which was done Anno 1527, but with ill success. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Britans of France had resorted to it, and changed the names which by the English had been given to the Bays and Promontories. But the English would not so relinquish their Pretensions to the Premier Seisin. And therefore in the year 1583, Sir Humphry Gilbert took possession of it in the name of the Queen of England, interdicted all other Nations the use of Fishing, and intended to have settled there an English Colony. But being wrecked in his return, the sending of the Colony was discontinued till the year 1608, when undertook by John Gay a Merchant of Bristol, who most successfully performed it; the Colony so prospering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turnips, Coleworts, of their own sowing, some probability of Metals, a certainty of Sables, Musks, and other precious Commodities, besides their Fishing; though that the great occasion of their settling there, Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fish all about the Coasts, that ordinarily our men take 200 or 300 of them within four hours space, which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe.

CANADA.

CANADA is bounded on the North with Cortierialis; on the South, with New England; on the East, with the Main Ocean: the Countreys lying on the West either not yet discovered, or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greatest, not of this Province only, but of all this Peninsula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiscovered parts of this Northern Tract: sometimes enlarged into great Lakes, and presently reduced to a narrower Channel, with many great Windings and Reaches in it. Having embosomed almost all the rest of the Rivers of this Country, it emptieth it self into the Great Bay of St. Lawrence, over against the Isle of Assumption, being at the Mouth 40 Leagues in breadth, and 150 Fathom deep.

It is also called Nova Francia, from the French, who following the Tract of Cabot and Cortierialis, made a further Discovery of these parts, and planted several Colonies in them. The Business first undertaken by Jaques Cartier, Anno 1534, received here gladly by the Natives with Singing, Dancing, and expressing much sign of Joy: pursued by Monsieur Roberval, sent thither in the year 1542, by King Francis the first, not only to discover the Country, but to plant some part of it, who built there a fair Fortrefs for his greater safety, followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their several times.

The nature of the Soil, and People, we shall best discover in the several parts of it, each differing from one another, and so not easily conformed to a general Character. Look we now only on the principal Rivers of the whole. 1. Canada, of which before. 2. Pemegouet, or Norumbegue, as some call it, of which more hereafter. 3. Quimbique, falling into the Ocean as the others do. 4. Rio S. John, ending its course in a large Bay called, Bay Francoise interposed betwixt Nova Scotia and the rest of this Country. 5. Les Trois Rivières, which rising far North, and passing through two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada. 6. Saguenay, of the same Original, Course, and Fall. A River of so strong a Current, that it suffereth not the Sea to flow up its Channel: so deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards, and having received many lesser streams, loseth it self at last, where the other doth.

It containeth in it several Regions. 1. Nova Francia specially so called. 2. Nova Scotia. 3. Norumbegue, and 4. the Ister adjoining.

1. NOVA FRANCIA specially so named is situate on the South of Cortierialis, and on the North of the great River of Canada, towards the East; but on both sides of it, in the Western and more In-land parts. The Country is naturally full of Stags, Bears, Hares, Martens and Foxes, whose flesh the people did eat raw, (still more civilized) having first dried it either in the smoke or Sun as they do their fish. They have also store of Conies, Fowl and Fish great plenty: one Fish more memorable than the rest, which they call Adobul, whose Body and Head is like that of a Grey-hound. But their greatest Jewels are their Chains of Esurgnie; a Shell-fish of the whitest colour, excellent for the fanching of Bloud: which they fashion into Beads and Bracelets, and so wear, or sell them. Not very plentiful of Fruits, or fit for Tillage, yet it breedeth some Corn, of of Pulse good plenty. The Air more cold then in other Countreys of like height, partly by reason of the greatness of the River, which being wholly of fresh Water; and so large with all chilleth the Air on both sides of it; partly because of the abundance of Ice, and those hills of Snow which the North-wind passeth over in the way to this Countrey.

The People, when the French first discovered them, were very rude and barbarous: few of them furnished with Houses, but removing from one place to another, as their Food decayed; and carrying all their Goods with them (a thing easily done) upon these removes. Such as lived towards the Sea, or the greater Rivers, somewhat better housed: For in the day-time they fish in their Boats, which they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them upside down, sleep under them. As ill apparelled as housed; for they went all naked, except a little piece of skin before their Privities. Some of them had their heads quite shaven, excepting one Bull's hair on the top top of the Crown, which they suffered to grow to the length of an Horses Tail, tied up with Leather-strings in a knot. Each man allowed his two or three Wives apiece; and they so constant to their Husband, that they never marry after his death, but keep themselves continually in a mourning habit, a Vizard, as it were, made of Grease and Coal-dust, which they spread over all their bodies. The women labour more than the men, both in fishing and husbandry, digging the ground instead of ploughing, with certain pieces of wood, where they sow their Maize, (a Plant of which they make their Bread in most parts of America). Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are most of them at this day; the French and others which have planted in these Northern parts having added little more unto Christianity, than by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they dyed they went immediately to the Stars; from thence conveyed to certain green and pleasant fields, full of flowers and fruits. Plain Evidence that they believed the Immortality of the Soul, and that there was some place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1. Hochelaga, round in figure, compassed about with three Course of timber Ramparts, one within the other; sharp at the top, about two Rods high, with one Gate only to give entrance, and that well fortified (in their kind) with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50 great houses, in the midst of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their fire on. Situate far within the Land, about six or seven Leagues from the banks of the River Canada, in the most pleasant part of the Country; and therefore made the seat of their King, whom they highly revered and carried him on their shoulders sitting on a Carpet of skins. 2. Stadae, or Stadacore, and 3. Quebecque, which the French call S. Croix, on the course of the same River also; this last a Colony of the French. 4. Tadonjac, a safe but small Haven, not capable of above 20 ships, at the mouth of Sagujna. 5. Franco-Roy, a Castle built by Monsieur Roberval, when he came first into this Countrey. 6. S. Lewis, designed for a French Colony by Monsieur de Champlain, Anno 1611, but never came to great effect: yet so much Champlain got by the undertaking, that he left his name to a great Lake of this Country (full of little Islands) in the Lands of the Uroquis, inhabiting on the South of the River Canada, into which it emptieth it self at the last.

2. NOVA SCOTIA, containeth that part of the Countreys of Canada, or Nova Francia, which the French call Acadie, or Cadie, (being a Peninsula or Demy-Islands) with so much of the main land as lieth between the River Canada, and the large Bay called Bay-Francoise, from the River of S. Croix upon the West, to the Isle of Assumption on the East. So called by King James, in the Grant of these Countreys to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charles, for his approved fidelity, most deservedly created Earl of Sterling. The Letters-Patents of which Donation bear date Anno 1621. What time the French having been ousted of their holds here by Sir Sam. Argal, Governour of Virginia, had abandoned the South-parts of Canada, and betook themselves more into the North, and the higher parts of the Course of that River. And in pursuance of this Grant, the said Sir William Alexander in the year 1622, sent a Colony hither: and having procured a New Map to be made of the Country, caused the Peninsula, lying on this side of the Bay Francoise, to be called Nova Caledonia, that on the North thereof, to be called Nova Alexandria, giving new names also unto most of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accomplishment of which business, he obtained also a Patent for advancing a certain number of persons to the hereditary dignity of Baronets, or Knights of Nova Scotia; as we call them commonly, distinguished from others by a Ribbon of Orange Tawny, the money raised upon which Patent was to be wholly employed towards this Plantation. But being unable with those helps (as certainly Plantations are of too great burthen for a private person) or willing to employ his money to more profit, he sold Port-Royal to the French, and after discontinued his endeavours in it.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Port-Royal, in Acadie or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay-Francoise; once made a Colony of the French, by Monsieur de Monts, Anno 1604, continued with much difficulty till the year 1613, when destroyed by Sir Sam. Argal, then Governour of the English Plantations in Virginia, by reason that the Jesuits, whose neighbourhood he liked not of, had begun to nest there. Sold since again unto the French, as before is said, by whom still possessed. 2. St. Luke Bay, by the French called Port au Monton. 3. Gaspé, a noted Port in New-Alexandria, opposite to the Isle of Assumption. 4. Gachepe, on a fair Bay in the same Coast also.

3. NORUMBEGUA hath on the North-East Nova Scotia; on the South-West, Virginia. The air is of a good temper, the soil fruitful, and the people indifferently civil: all of them, as well men as women, painting their faces. The men are much affected to hunting, and therefore never give their daughters to any, unless he be well skill'd in that game also. The Women are here very chaste, and so well love their husbands, that if at any time they chance to be slain, the widows will neither marry, nor eat flesh, till the death of their husbands be revenged. They both dance much; and for more nimbleness, sometimes stark naked. The Sea upon the Coasts so shallow and so full of Sands, that it is very ill sailing all along these shores. The Towns or habitations rather, so differently called by the French, Portugals, and Spaniards, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet most have formerly agreed upon Norumbegue, or Arampe, as the Natives call it: said to be a large, populous and well-built Town, and to be situate on a fair and capacious River of the same name also. But later observations tell us there is no such matter; that the River which the first Relations did intend is called Pemegouet, neither large nor pleasant; and that the place by them meant is called Aggencia, so far from being a fair City, that there are only a few Sheds or Cabins, covered with the barks of Trees or the Skins of Beasts. Howsoever I have let it stand on the first reports, it being possible enough that Town might fall into decay, deserted on the coming of so many several Pretenders, and that the Sheds or Cabins which the last men speak of may be only the remainders of it.

4. Adjoining to these Countreys of Canada, are several Islands not joyned in any common name, but yet deserving some consideration in this place and time. The principal whereof, 1. NATISCOTEC, called the Isle of Assumption, situate in the very mouth of the River, was first discovered by Jaques Cartier, Anno 1534, in length 35 leagues, seven or eight in breadth. The Island very plain and level, of a fruitful Soil, beautified with Trees of several sorts, replenished with great plenty both of Fowl and Fish, and furnished with convenient Roads, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabited, for ought I can find. 2. RAMAEA, a frie of little Islands in the great Gulf of S. Lawrence on the South of Natiscotec, first found out or frequented by the Citizens of S. Mala in Bretaigne, Anno 1590, of great resort for the Morse-fishing, used upon the Coasts, which is here so painful, that a French Bark in a very little time killed 1500 of them. These Morses (take this by the way) are a kind a kind of Sea-Horfe, or Sea Oxen; with two Teeth of a foot long growing downwards out of the upper Jaw, fold dearer than Ivory, because esteemed a sovereign Antidote against poisons. They have also four Feet, no Ears, the Horns about half an ell in length; the skin, when dressed, twice as thick as that of a Bull; their flesh, when young, as sweet and tender as Veal. So fat and unctuous, that with the bellies of five of them, there is made usually an Hogs-Head of Train oil, as good as that of the Whale. 3. B. R. I. O. N., a small Island on the South of the Ramee about two leagues in length, and as many in breadth; of a rich soil, fat pasturage, well shaded with tall and lofty Trees; and neighboured by a smaller Island called Isle Blanche, of the like fertility. 4. B. R. I. O. N., (Insula Britonum) so named from Jacques Briton a French-man, in the time of Francis the first, called also the Island of S. Lawrence, is situate on the South-East of the Isle of Brion: in form triangular, in compass about 80 leagues; pleasant and fruitful, though for the most part swell'd with Hills. Destitute of Rivers, but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well stored with shell-fish; and in the midst thereof a great Lake full of little Islands: the Woods replenished with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a Bird called Penguin. Inhabited by the Natives only, though the Portugals did sometimes endeavour a Plantation in it; but finding the air too cold for them, they again deserted it. The chief Haven is by the English called New-Port; by the French Port aux Anglois, from the great resort of the English to it, in regard of their fishing. 5. ISLE DE SABLE, by the French so called from the Sands which lie thick about it, distant from the British Isle about 30 leagues to the South; 15 leagues in compass, but more long then broad, and of unsafe landing. The planting of it, in regard of the safety of the place, attempted twice by the French and once by the Portugals; but without success. 6. Others of less note, as Menego, and Les Isles des Oiseaux, I pass over purposely, there being nothing, or but little, to be spoken of them.

So it appears by this account, that though the French have given the name of Nova Francia, to all these Countreys; yet they never had the honour of the first discovery, wherein the English and Portuguese had precedence of them: nor are possessed of any considerable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large share; the English Masters of the best Ports, and all the Islands of the Countrey in the hands of the Savages. Of these some great and powerful Nations over-lay the rest. The chief whereof are the Troquois on the North-East of Norumbega, neighboured by the Ochataignins, the Albamaquins, and the Nebierines, the Soniquois, and Etebimins of Accadi, and New Alexandria; the Montagners, and the Antogovantans, on the banks of the Canada. All of them stout and hardy people, false of their words, treacherous in their practices, and merciless in their revenges. So well acquainted with the Factions and divisions of Europe, that they know how to make use of one Nation against another; and by that means to keep themselves in their first estate, without being subject to any. So that the footing which the English, French, or Scots have obtained amongst them, serves rather to secure themselves in the way of their Trading then to entitle them unto any possession and command in the Countrey: the French being shut up in a few weak Forts on the North of the Canada; the Scots pretending only to a Bay or two in the South of Accadie; and the English being only Tenants at the will of the Natives, for such convenience of fishing as they have in the adjoining Islands.

VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North Canada; on the South, Florida; on the East, Mare del Noort; or the Western boundaries not known, or not well discovered. So called in honour of Queen Elizabeth, that Virgin Monarch; when discovered (to any purpose) by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1584. By the natural Inhabitants called Apalchen, from a Town of that name, one of the chief in all the Countrey.

The Inland parts hereof are mountainous and barren, full of thick Woods, a Receptacle for wild Beasts, and wilder Savages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitful; as will appear by the Survey of its several Provinces; premising first, that Virginia in the full latitude thereof extendeth from the 34 degree, where it joins with Florida, unto the 44, where it quartereth on Norumbega.

The first Discovery hereof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, Anno 1497, did first entitle the Crown of England to this Countrey. The Design after seconded by Mr. Hare, bringing thence certain of the petit Kings or Princes hereof, who did Homage to King Henry the 8. then sitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Westminster: but no thing farther done in pursuance of it. And though John Verazzani a noble Florentine, at the encouragement and charge of King Francis the first, Anno 1524, discovered more of the Countrey then Cabot did; yet the French too much in love with the pleasures of France, or intangled in Civil wars amongst themselves, looked no farther after it: Inasmuch that the Countrey lying thus neglected, was re-discovered, by the charges and direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1584, who sending Master Philip Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow upon this employment, did by them take possession of it in Queen Elizabeth's name; in honour of whom he caused it to be called Virginia. The next year he sent hither a Colony, under the conduct of the noble Sir Richard Greenville, who not supplied with necessaries for their subsistence, returned home again. In the year 1587, a second Colony is sent hither, but as successless as the first: the business being undertaken only on a private Purse, not owned as the Interest of the State; or of publick moment, till the year 1606. In the mean time the North parts of this Countrey being more perfectly discovered by Captain Bartholomew Gosnold, Anno 1602. and the the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to say, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into these three parts; 1. New England, 2. Norumbegium, 3. Virginia, strictly and specially so called. To which the Isles of the Bermudaz shall come in for a fourth.

NEW ENGLAND hath on the North-East Norumbega, and on the South-West, Norumbegium. So called by the Adventurers by whom first planted, not so much because opposite to Nova Albion, as some men conceive, as an intimation of the like adjuncts of distinction given by the French and Spaniards to Nova Francia, Nova Hispania, Nova Galicia, Nova Granada, and the like.

The Countrey situate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41 and 44, equally distant from the Arctick Circle and the Tropick of Cancer; by consequence, naturally of the same degree of heat with France or Italy. But by reason of the thick mists which arise from the Seas adjoining, those heats so moderated, that the Air is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an English body. The Soil not only fruitful of such Commodities as grow there naturally, but also of all sorts of Grain which were brought from England. Great store of Woods and Trees, both for fruit and building; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of Salt and Fish upon the Shores; and as for Turkeys, Partridges, Swans, Geese, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeons, such a full variety, as serves not only for necessity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of most note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many sorts of Fish, some Amber, Flax, Linnen, Iron, Pitch, Masts, Cables, Timber fit for Shipping: in a word, whatsoever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might at better rates, and with far less trouble be supplied from hence; at least if we believe the Relations of it, published in the year 1622.

The people for the most part well enough disposed, if not roughly handled; hospitable and more civil than the rest of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in matters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremonies of the English, at their first settling there, Anno 1608. they would use to say, that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Yanto was an evil Spirit, which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worshipped him for fear. Which notwithstanding, I find not any great increase of Christianity among the Natives: our English Undertakers thinking it sufficient, if they and their houses serve the Lord, without caring what became of the Souls of the wretched people, which hitherto have sate in darkness and the shadow of death, notwithstanding those New Lights which have shined amongst them. And as for those New-comers which have planted there, all English, though some immediately out of Holland; I cannot better tell you of what strain they were, than in the words of John de Laet, Novi Orbis lib. 3. cap. 8. where he observeth, Primoshocse Colones, uti ex illis qui postea accesserunt, potissimum aut omnino fuisse ex eorum hominum Secta, quos in Angliam Breuissimas & Puritanos vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium superiorem annis se receperunt, & hinc ad focios sunt profecti. They were (saith he) either for the most part, or altogether, of that Sect which in England are called Brownists or Puritans; many of which had formerly betaken themselves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to join with their Brethren in New-England.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Tameset, where our men found Oysters of nine Inches long. 2. Nansick, a River of the Tamemines, one of the chief Nations of this Tract. 3. Sagadahoc, of most note and deservedly too, a mile and half broad at the mouth or influx, and so upwards for the space of a dayes journey, where it maketh a large Lake three dayes journey broad, with six Islands in it; nourished with two large Channels, the one from the North-East, the other from the North-West, each of them rising from a Lake; the least of which being four dayes journey long, two broad, the other doubleth it. Of less note, 4. Apanawapark, 5. Rantassie, 6. Alphabaga, &c.

The Countrey on the Sea-side full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited, inasmuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the space of 70 miles above twenty Havens, some of them capable of 500 or 1000 sail; most of them sheltered from the fury of Winds and Sea, by the interposition of some Islands, of which about 200 lie upon that Coast. In the space of 70 miles he reckoneth 40 Villages of the Barbarous people; the chief of which are, 1. Macadauct, 2. Sagack, 3. Pemmaquid, 4. Nusconet, 5. Kennebecque, &c. all being called by the name of some Brook or water, upon which they were seated. Since added by the English, 1. S. George's Fort, the first Plantation of the English, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagadahoc, in a Demi-Island, Anno 1607. 2. New-Plimouth, seated in a large and capacious Bay; at the first building (Anno 1620.) consisting of nineteen families only, but in short time improved to an handsome Town: which as it was the first Town, so it was the first Church which was settled there, modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinson's Church in Holland, (that notorious Separatist,) and after made a pattern to the rest of these Churches: each absolute and independent in it self, without subordination unto any superiour. For my part, I behold Episcopacy as the Primitive Government of the Church of Christ. But if there were no other Pretenders to it than Presbytery and Independency, I should as soon look for the Scepter and Throne of Christ (as they please to phrase it) in the Coordination of New-England, as in the Presbyteries of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3. Briston, upon the Seaside also, but more North than Plimouth. 4. Barnstable, so called with reference to a noted Sea-town of that name in Devonshire; as 5. Boston, with like reference to as noted a Sea-port in Lincolnshire. 6. Quilpiack, on the Bay of Massachusetts, a Town of an old name, but a new Plantation.

This part of Virginia, first discovered by Captain Gosnold, Anno 1602. and the next year more perfectly surveyed by some of Bristol, was by King James Anno 1606. granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, to be planted and disposed of for the Publick: Sir John Popham, then Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, being one of the chief also in that Commission. By his encouragement, and principally at his Charge, a Colony was sent thither, Anno 1607. under the Presidency of Captain George Popham, and Raleigh Gilbert, who built the Fortrels of S. George at the mouth of Sagadahoc. But the President dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief Justice also, the Colony, despairing of good success returned home again. Successlessly again attempted Anno 1614. the Undertakers were resolved to make farther trial of their fortune; and in the year 1626. sent out eight Ships more: but it never settled into form till the year 1610. when by the building of New-Plimouth, and some encouragements sent thence to bring others on, it grew in very short time to so swift a growth, that no Plantation for the time ever went beyond it. The growth of Old Rome and New England had the like foundation; both Sanctuaries, Ad que ruina omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida confluit, as Livy telleth us of the one; referred to by such of the neighbouring Nations as longed for Innovations in Church and State:

2. NOVUM BELGIUM, or NIEU-NEDER-

DERLANT, hath on the North-east New-England; on the South-west, Virginia specially so called. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their Plantation in it Anno 1614. the Countrey being then void: and consequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxime in the Civil Laws, Quæ nullius sunt in bonis, dantur occupanti. And yet they had some better title than a bare Intrusion, having bought Hudson's Charts and Maps, and otherwise contented him for the charge and pains of his Discovery, An. 1609. of which more anon.

This part of the Countrey extended from the 38. degree and an half, to the 41. 15. of a good temperature both of Air and Soil: fruitful of those things which the Earth brought forth of its own accord; abundance of wild Grapes, Nuts, and Trees of great height and bulk for shipping; plenty of Herbage, store of Plants, the effects of nature: and where the people did their part, such increase of Maize (a plant of which they make their Bread) as shewed their care and industry to be well bestowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furnished (within their command) with Wheat and other sorts of Grains as also with Flax, Hemp, and such other Commodities as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods replenished with Deer, and the Plains with Fowl; the Rivers not inferior to any in Sturgeons, Salmons, and other the best sort of Fish which can swim in the water.

The people, though divided into many Nations, and of different Languages, are much of the same disposition with the other Savages; clad in Beasts-skins, for the most part without certain dwellings; dwelling together many Families of them under one poor roof, made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of Trees. Their Household-stuff a Tobacco-Pipe, a wooden dish, and an Hatchet made of a broad flint; their weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of Fishes. Their Religion Idolatry, or worse; their chief God the Devil, whom they worship under the name of Menetto; but with less Pomp and Ceremony than is used in Africa. Of manners, fearful and suspicious, (not without cause) wonderfully greedy of revenge; but, if well used, tractable and obedient unto their Superiours; fickle, but very faithful unto those who trust them; conceived to be inclinable to the Christian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of those who had studied Godliness more than Gain.

Rivers of note they have not many. That want is supplied by many large and capacious Bays, all along the Coast. The principal of those that be, 1. Manhattes, by some called Nassovius, but by the Dutch commonly Noordt River, which falleth into the Sea at May-port, so called by Cornelius May, the Master of a Ship of Holland, at their first Plantation: another Channel of it, which from the noise thereof they call Hell-gat, emptying it self against an Island called the Isle of Nuts. The River about 15 or 16 Fathom deep, at the mouth thereof affordeth a safe Road for shipping, but of difficult entrance. 2. Zuid River, so called, because more Southerly than the other; as fair as that, but hitherto not so well discovered.

Towns here are few either of the old or new Plantations. The natural Inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of those Tribes under one Roof, as before was said; but those Families so remote from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a scattered Village. Nor do I find, that either the Hollanders or the English (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to building: the Title of the Dutch being subject unto some disputes; and the Possession of the English not confirmed and settled. Hudson an English-man had spent some time in the Discovery of this Countrey, and given his name to one of the Rivers of it. With him the Hollanders, Anno 1609. as before is said, compounded for his Charts and Maps, and whatsoever he could challenge in the right and success of that his Voyage. But they were hardly warm in their new Habitations, when Sir Samuel Argal, Governour of Virginia specially so called, (having dispossessed the French of that part of Canada now called Nova Scotia, Anno 1613.) disputed the possession with them; alleging that Hudson under whose sale they claimed that Countrey, being an English-man, and licensed to discover those Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or dismember it (being but a part or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governour submits himself and his Plantation to his Majesty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for and under him. But a new Governour being sent from Amsterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes, but began to fortifie himself, and entitle those of Amsterdam to a just propriety. To which end he gave unto the Countrey the name of New-Netherland, conferred new Names on all the Bays and Rivers of it, and possessed himself of a little Island near that Branch of the Noordt River which themselves called Hell-gat: where he laid the foundation of a Town, called New-Amsterdam; and built a Fortresse by the name of Orange Fort, which he garrisoned, and planted with five pieces of Canon. Complaint whereof being made unto King Charles, and by him represented to the States of Holland; it was declared by the said States in a publick Instrument, that they were no ways interested in it, but that it was a private undertaking of the West-Indian Company of Amsterdam; and so referred it wholly to his Majestie's pleasure. Which being declared, a Commission was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, to plant the Southern parts thereof, which lie next Virginia, by the name of MARY-LAND: the like not long after to Sir Edmond Ployden, for planting and possessing the more Northern parts, which lie towards New-England, by the name of New Albion. And though the Hollanders did then seem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there for the Sum of 2500 l. yet taking advantage of the Troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raised their demands to a greater height, but furnished the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to use their Weapons. A most mischievous and wicked Act, not only tending to the damage and discouragement of the present Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Christians out of all these Countreys. But the best is, they were the first that smarted by it. The Savages, thus armed and trained, fell foul upon them, destroying their Farm-Houses, and forcing them to betake themselves to their Forts and Fastnesses. What hath been since done, (for the giving of new names to some of the old places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the English, I can hardly say: but I fear that little will be acted, or to little purpose, till it be made a work of more publick interest.

3. VIRGINIA, specially so called, hath on the North-East, Nieu-Nederland; on the South-west, Florida: the name restrained to this part only, since the two last Plantations, which before was common to the whole. The Countrey lieth extended from the 34. to the 38. degree of Northern Latitude: and by consequence the Air is inclined unto heats, if not refreshed and moderated by a constant gale of Eastern winds, which they call the Breeze, and the blasts driving on it from the open Seas. Diversified most pleasantly into Hills and Valleys; the Mountains clothed with woods, and the Fields with fruits. The Soil so fruitful, that an Acre of Land well ordered will return 200 Bulheis, or 25 Quarters of Corn. Said also to be rich in Veins of Allom; as also Pitch, Turpentine, flore of Cedars, Grapes, Oyl, plenty of sweet Gums, several sorts of Plants for the Dyers use, some Mines of Iron and Copper, of Timber Trees almost infinite numbers; as also great abundance of Cattle, Fish, Fowl, Fruit, and of Maize no scarcity. Some Crystal is found amongst the Mountains, on the shore some Pearls. Nothing deficient either in the Soil, or Air, for the encouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The people are but few in number for so large a Countrey, and those as different in call as in speech or manners. Some of them, whom they call Sasques-banoxi, of so vast a greatness, that in comparison of the English they seemed as Giants; clad with the Skins of Bears and Wolves in so strange a manner, that the head of the Beast hung before their Breasts instead of a Jewel: their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other side, whom they call Wigomocci, of so low a stature, that in relation to the other they appear as Pigmies. But generally they are all of tall stature, well limbed, for the most part without Beards, and the one half of the head kept shaven, clothed in loose Mantles made of the Skins of Deer, with an Apron of the same to hide their nakedness; the rest of their Bodies painted over with figures of Serpents, or of some other Creature of as horrid shape. Strong and accustomed to the cold, which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconstant, crafty, and somewhat more industrious than the rest of the Savages; but given to anger, and as greedy of revenge as any. Gods they have many, for they worship all things (and them only) which are like to hurt them; as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, &c. So that it may be said of them, as once Laetanius said of the Ancient Romans, (did not the ignorance of these poor Wretches render them excusable, and make them fitter Objects for our Prayers and Pity, than our Lecons) Dignissimi homines qui Deos suos semper habere prestant. One Devil-God above all the rest, (they call him Oge) whom they worship, as themselves confess, more for fear than love. Not yet converted from these horrible and gross Idolatries by the long Neighbourhood of the English; accused in that respect most justly by those of Rome.

No Countrey, for the bigness of it, can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers. The principal of which are 1. Powhatan, (so called by the name of the petit Royelet, whose Territory it passeth through) which having run a course of a hundred miles, and navigable all that way by smaller Vessels, is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad. 2. Apamattuck. 3. Namamund; and 4. Chikahamania; all Tributaries to Powhatan. 5. Pamunkey, fourteen miles more North than Powhatan, but of lesser note. 6. Topabanoek, navigable 130 miles. 7. Patawomek, passable by Boat 140 miles, and six or seven miles broad where it falleth into the Sea; increased by many lesser streams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well stored with Fish. 8. Pomunuxut, of a shorter Race, but a deeper Channel, than most of the former, (16 or 18 fathom deep) and of more choice of Fish than the others are.

Along the Banks of these Rivers dwell their several Tribes, scarce any one of which make up an hundred men, (that of Patawomek excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160, many not yielding above 30, and some not so many. Their habitations, not containing above ten or twelve houses apiece, but in those houses sundry particular families, are for the most part covered with the Barks of Trees; so placed, that the common Market-place standeth in the midst, at an equal distance: the houses of their Weroancees, (or the Chiefs of their Tribes) and that which serveth them for a Temple, being somewhat finer than the rest. And of these habitations, some are presented to us by the names of 1. Oananke, by the English called the Blind Town. 2. Pemoke. 3. Shycanok, laid by my Authors to be Civitas Amplia, a large City; but we must underritand him with Relation to the rest of this Countrey. 4. Chowanok. 5. Secatan. 6. Mattaken. 7. Wapomooke. 8. Pyhoknook, said to be inhabited by none but Women. 9. Chippano. 10. Muscumunge, both upon the Sea: most of them called by the name of those several Tribes which inhabit in them.

In reference to the English, and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the South-side of a large and goodly Bay for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thrusting it self a great way up into this Countrey, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before-mentioned, is by the Natives called Chesepack, and yieldeth the only safe entrance into this part of the Countrey: the Capes thereof for that cause fortified by the English; that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charles, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of most note, which have been either since built, or frequented by them: 1. Jamestown, (Jacobopolis) so named in honour of King James, on the South-side of that Bay, not far from the River Chikihumnia: first founded in the year 1606. at what time it was trenched about, and some Ordnance planted on the Works. 2. Henricstown, (Henricopolis) so named in honour of Prince Henry, the Eldest Son of King James, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 18 miles from Jamestown. 3. Daler-giff, so called, because built and planted at the charge of Sir Thomas Dale, An. 1610. 4. Bermuda, an open Burrough five miles from Henricopolis. 5. Ketaughtan, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Chesepack, very much traded by the English. 6. Wicocomoco, the chief Town of Powhatan, one of the Royalests of this Countrey; much courted by the English at their first settling here, and a long time after: a Crown being sent him by King James, with many other rich Presents, the better to sweeten and oblige him; but for all that he proved a treacherous and unfaithful Neighbour.

The sum of the affairs of this last Plantation is, that the business being resumed in the year 1606. and a Commission granted to certain Noblemen and Merchants to advance the work; they fell in hand by the Counsel and encouragement of Captain Smith, with the building of Jamestown, (having first fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. These, being almost consumed by Famine, and other miseries, were the next year recruited with 120 more, brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire having casually consumed their Houses, once again discouraged them. But the Houses being re-edified, and a Church added to the Houses, by the industry of Smith their Governour, the Colony began to flourish, and to increase in reputation among the Savages: especially having made (as they believed) a friend of Powhatan. In the year 1609, the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return, who left here 490 persons, (and of them 200 expert Souldiers) 3 Ships, 7 Boats, 24 great Guns, 300 Muskets, with Victuals and Ammunition necessary; and 39 of their Weroancees, or Petit-Kings, Tributaries and Contributors to the English. Sir Thomas Gates, and Sir George Summers sent thither with 9 Ships, and 500 men, lost a great part of their numbers in the Isle of Bermuda, the rest, not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three Ships more, An. 1610. But falling into a desperate sickness, and come home to Eng- land, he recommended the estate of the English there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furnished them with Men, Cattle, and other necessaries: after whom came Sir Thomas Gates with 300 men, and some Heads of Cattle. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Henry Earl of Southampton, the Affairs here began to settle in a prosperous way: when unexpectedly in the year 1621, the Savages falling on them (feeling no such treachery) killed 340 of their men; and had then also surprized Jamestown, if one of the Savages who had received the Christian Faith, had not discovered their intention. Since that, recovered of that Blow, it went happily forwards, and might by this time have been raised to some power and greatness, if the English by diverting on some by-Plantations, and by employing indigent and necessitous persons in so great a work, had not discouraged the design. For certainly one might say of this Plantation, as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few or none were sent unto it (except the Principals) but such as were in distress, or debt, or some way or other discontented; men never likely to advance and pursue a business of such publick Interest. Commendable howsoever in this particular, (though perhaps that commendation do belong to their Governours) that being here, they kept themselves constantly to those Forms of Worship which were established and observed in the Church of England.

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided (as was said) into several Tribes, every Tribe under the Command of their several Chiefs: which Chiefs, though many in number, and of little Power, knew well enough how to keep their State under their Subjects, and to shew it also unto Strangers. For when Pombatun was pleased to give Audience unto Captain Newport, and the rest of the English sent from Smith, they found him upon a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather, embroidered with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of Skins like an Irish Mantle: at his head and feet an handsome young woman; on each side of the Room twenty others, with their necks and shoulders painted red, and about their necks a great Chain of Beads: his principal men sitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithstanding this great state, (and great it was indeed for such petit Princes) he and the rest became so subject to the English, that in Smith's time they did not only pay their Tributes, or Contributions, but at his Command would send their Slaves and Subjects to Jamestown, to receive Correction for wrongs done to the Colony. And it is probable enough, that those of New-England, being the greater and more powerful Plantation, (as followed with the stronger zeal, and carried on by the United Purposes of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence also among the Natives, though I find it not pressed in so many particulars.

4. The Isles of BERTHOLD, many in number, (some say 400 at the least) are situate directly East from Virginia, from which they are distant 500 English miles; 3300 of the same miles from the City of London. So called from John Bermudez, a Spaniard, by whom first discovered. Called also the Summer Islands, from the Shipwreck of Sir George Summers upon that Coast; so much delighted with the sadness of the misadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to settle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatness than all the rest, to which the name is now most properly ascribed, is situate in the Latitude of 32 and 30 minutes. Well stored, when first discovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers Fruits, Mulberries, Palmiter, Cedars; as also of Silk-worms, Pearls and Amber, and such rich Commodities: of Fowl so infinite an abundance, that our men took a thousand of one sort, as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Air heretofore very sound and healthy, found by experience (the best argument in such a point) to be agreeable to the body of an English-man; yet terribly exposed to Tempests of Rain, Thunder and Lightning. For which, and for the many shipwrecks happening on the Coasts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be said to own it, the Mariners have pleased to call it the Island of Devils. The Soil affirmed to be as fertile as any; well watered, plentiful in Maize, of which they have two Harvests yearly: that which is sowed in March being cut in July; and that which is sowed in August being mowed in December. No venomous Creature to be found in all the Island, or will live brought hither. And besides these Commodities, of so safe a being, so fenced about with Rocks and Isles, that without knowledge of the passages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with such knowledge there is entrance for the greatest ships. The English have since added to these Strengths of Nature such additional helps, by Block-houses, Forts and Bulwarks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was first discovered (but rather accidentally than upon design) by John Bermudez, a Spaniard, about the year 1522. and thereupon a Proposition made in the Council of Spain, for settling a Plantation in it, as a place not to be avoided by the Spanish Fleets, in their return from the Bay of Mexico, by the Streights of Bahama. Neglected notwithstanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, sent to Virginia with some Companies of English by the Lord De la Ware, An. 1609. Who being shipwrecked on this Coast, had the opportunity to survey the Island; which he so well liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it at his coming home, Anno 1612. The first Colony was sent over under Richard More, who in three years erected eight or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordnance, Anno 1616. A new supply is sent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applied themselves to sowing Corn, setting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and planting that gainful Weed Tobacco, Anno 1619. the business is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and men of Honour being interested in it; Captain Baile sent thither with 500 men; the Isle divided into Tribes or Cantreds, to each Tribe a Burrough; the whole reduced to a settled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this, all things so succeeded, that in the year 1623. here were said to be three thousand English, ten Forts, and in those Forts fifty pieces of Ordnance; their numbers since increasing daily, both by Children born within the Island, and supplies from England.

OF FLORIDA.

FLO<sup>R</sup>IDA is bounded on the North-East with Virginia; on the East with Mare del Noords; on the South, and some part of the West, with the Gulf of Mexico; on the rest of the West, with part of New Galicia, and some Countries hitherto not discovered. Extended from the River of Palm in the 25 degree of Latitude, to Rio de Seco in the 34. which evidently speaketh it for a Country of large Dimensions.

It was first discovered by the English under the Conduct of Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1479. afterwards better searched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took possession of it in the name of that King, Anno 1527. and by him called Florida: either because he landed there upon Palm-Sunday, which the Spaniards called Pascua de Flores, or Pascha Florida; or else quia Florida erat Regio, by reason of that fresh Verdure and flourishing Estate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is said to be called Jaguas.

This Country lying parallel to Castile in Spain, is said to be of the same temper both for Air and Soil, but that is abundantly more fruitful: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage, as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize, (the natural Bread-corn of the Country; which they sow twice a year: viz. March and June), and reap in the third Month after, laying it in some publick Barns, and thence distribute it to the Necessities of particular persons. Well stored with several sorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Chestnuts, Grapes and Plums, of both excellent taste and colour: Beasts wild and tame, of all kinds which these Countries yield; and of like sorts of Fowl. The Woods and Forests full of the largest Oaks, and the loftiest Cedars; some Cypress Trees, and Bays, of a large proportion: with great plenty of that Wood, which the Inhabitants call Pavane, and the French name Sassafras, the Bark whereof is Medicinal against some Diseases; and another Tree which we call Esquine, affirmed to be a Sovereign and present Remedy for the French Disease. It is also said to be enriched with some Mines of Gold and Silver; neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards and French put a price upon them; and to have in it Emeralds of great worth and beauty, with many Turquoises and Pearls. Others report, that all the Gold and Silver which had been wrecked upon those Coasts: contrary whereunto it is said by the Natives, that in the Hills which they call Apalatei, there are found great Veins of a reddish Metal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to search into them.

The people are of an Olive colour, great stature, and well proportioned; naked, except their Privities, which they hide with the Skins of Stags: their Arms and Knees stained with divers paintings, not to be washed off; their Hair black, and hanging down as low as their Thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of Dissimulation. So stomachful; that they do naturally love War and Revenge; inasmuch that they are continually in War with one or other. They are crafty also, and very intelligent, as appeareth by the Answer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here among them, Anno 1594. For when he went to persuade the people that he was the Son of God, and came to teach them the Law: Not so, replied a Floridian; for God never had thee to kill and slay, and work all kind of mischief against us. The Women, when their Husbands are dead, use to cut off their Hair close to their Ears, and strew it on his Sepulchre, and cannot marry again till their Hair be grown long enough to cover their shoulders. *Hermaprodit*es are here also in great plenty, whom they use as Beasts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kind of drudgery. They have all a gross belief of the Souls Immortality, but are otherwise Idolaters.

Mountains this Country hath not many, as being generally plain and level; the chiefest, those called Apalatei, before-mentioned, supposed by the Inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of most note; 1. Rio Seco. 2. Rio Grande. 3. Serevabi. The two first named to be by the Spaniards, and the last by the Natives. 4. Garruna. 5. Ligeris. 6. Axona. 7. Seguana; and 8. Charente; so called by the French, according to the names of the best Rivers in France: both French and Spaniards having had severally and successively the possession of it. Here are also 9. Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers. 10. Rio de Niever, or the River of Snow: And 11. Rio de Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular description of these Rivers, their Rise, Course, and Greatness, I find not in any of my Authors. Only Mercator telleth us of a twelfth River, called Porte Riale, reckon'd the chiefest of this Country, the Mouth whereof is three miles broad; where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the West, and the other pointing to the North. Some of these Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles; a Creature dangerous alike both by Land and Water.

The Country, not so well discovered and planted hitherto, as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly distributed into several Tribes, as were all Nations of the World at their first Discovery. The principal of these they reckon the Quevenes, Marianes, Canagadi, Camoni, Avanar, and Malicones, the Susilar, Quitones, and other names not usual unto us of Europe; though these more passable than many which have gone before; mollified perhaps by the French and Spaniards, and not presented to us in their natural roughness: all governed by their Paracouff, or several Chiefs, and those at deadly Feuds and continual Wars with one another. Some have adventured on the names of particular Provinces, as Pannca, Avanar, Abardusio, Jogaxia, Apalchia, Antiba, Sannovia, Colus; but they acquaint us neither with their Site nor Bounds; except it be that Pannca lieth on the borders of Hispania Nova, beyond the large and spacious Bay of the Holy Ghost; and Colus near the Cape called Cabo de Florida. Others distinguish it by the names of the several Royalties; which varying with the change of the person, makes that division to be very variable and uncertain also. But it is generally agreed, that the Peninsula which pointeth on the Isle of Cuba hath the name of Tegesta, or Florida specially so called; the name of Florida being first given by John Ponce unto this part only, though afterwards communicated unto all the rest of this Country. A Demi-Island, stretching in length, from the South to the North 100 Leagues; in breadth, where broadest, 30 Leagues, and in some places 20 only. Well known by the Cape of Martyrs, looking into the Isle of Cuba, the River of the Holy Ghost; and three goodly Bays, the chief whereof, that intituled to S. Joseph, all opening into the Gulf of Mexico, or the Bay of New Spain. The whole invironed about, save where it is joyned unto the Continent with Bars of Sands, and scattered Islands, which serve unto it as the Out-works to some notable Fortresses.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Helens, on or near a Promontory so named, where this Country bordereth on Virginia, once fortified and possessed by the Spaniards, but not long since abandoned. 2. Fort de Charles, Ara Carolina in the Latine, built by the French upon the Banks of the River Mato, and so called in honour of Charles the Ninth, in whose time the Conquest of this Country was undertaken; but ruined by the Spaniards in the War between them. 3. Port-Royal, a well frequented Haven, on the mouth of the River of that name; but whether there be any Town now remaining, I am not able to say. More in the Land (for these lie all upon the Borders towards Virginia) Apalche, supposed to be a place of great consideration, in regard of the opinion which was had of the Wealth thereof; (but found to be a small Town, of but 40 Cottages; and therefore first attempted and took in by the Spaniards, in their Invasion of this Country under Pamphilus of Narvaez; Anno 1528. Recovered by the Natives after his departure. 5. Ante, an open Burrough, nine days journey from Apalche, where the Savages gave the Spaniards a sharp Encounter, and slew many of them; but being vanquished at the last, they forsook the Town, of it self not Tenable. 6. Ocalis, an unwall'd Town, but consisting of 600 Sheds (for I dare hardly call them Houses) the chief of the Kingdom of Aucua. 7. Osajile, the chief Seat of the King so called; and 1. Vitacubus, a Burrough of 200 Cottages, the principal of the Kingdom of Vitacubus: both taken by the Spaniards; at the same time also. 9. S. Matthews, on the Easterly shore of the Demi-Island above-mentioned, possessed and fortified by the Spaniards. 10. S. Augustines on the same shore, but more South than the other, situate at the mouth of a small River so named, fortified by the Spaniards with many a strong Castle: but for all that taken by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1585, there being found in the Fort of S. John, in which the strength of the Town consisted, 18 Bras Pieces, and 20000 Florens in ready Money, for the pay of the Garrison. Repaired afterwards more strongly than ever formerly. The Spaniards have also Garrisons in two other places of this Country, viz. S. Philip, and S. Jago; but I cannot say distinctly in what part they are.

The Government of this Country is of one kind only, though managed by several persons: the Supreme Power residing in the Chiefs of their several Tribes; at such continual Enmity with one another, that they very seldom joyn together in any Counsels wherein the publick is concerned. So that the Spaniards may affirm of the present Floridians, as the Romans did of the ancient Britains; Nec quicquam adversus validissimas gentes utilius nobis fuit, quam quod in commune non consulebant; The not communicating of their Counsels hastned on their Bondage. Yet in the Government of these Chiefs there was somewhat of the Parliamentary way used with us in Europe: For as in all matters of Concernment those Chiefs advised with their Council; so if it were a business which concerned the Publick, their Priests and others of most note for Gravity and Wisdom were admitted to the Consultation. But being severally too weak for a strong Invader, and never joyned together to defend themselves, they made themselves an easy prey to the French and Spaniards; Et sic dum singuli pugnant, universi vincuntur; by trusting to their single Forces, they were all subdued. For in the year 1512, John Ponce, a Native of Léon in Spain, setting sail with three Ships from the Island of Porto Rico, on Palm-Sunday fell on the Peninsula before described; and for that cause, or from the flourishing Verdure of it, called it Florida; but did no more than scour along upon the Coasts, and give new names to such of the Promontories and Rivers as he had discovered; and having only a slight Skirmish with some of the Savages, returned back again. The business eight years after was again revived by Vasquez de Ayllon, who setting sail from the Haven of Plata, in Hispaniola, attained unto the North-east parts of this Continent, bordering on Virginia, where he left names unto the Promontory of S. Helen, and the River of Jordan: and having treacherously enslaved some of the Natives, (whom he had invited to a Feast) prepared for a new Plantation. But his perfidiousness could not prosper: For in the year 1524, coming with his Ships upon this Coast, one of them perished on the Rocks, and 200 of his men being killed at their landing, he gave over the Enterprize: the Spaniards hitherto making no more use of these Discoveries, than wickedly to enrich themselves by stealing men, whom as wickedly they sold for Slaves. Nor had the Voyage of Pamphilus de Narvaez, Anno 1528, any better end; though undertaken with a Band of 400 Foot, and 80 Horse. For having took possession of the Country in the name of his Sovereign Charles the Fifth, finding some hopes of great Treasures to be had at Apalche, (distant above a Months Journey from the place of his Landing) he would needs march thither. In which Action, though he got that and some other Towns, yet he lost himself, few of his men returning safe into their Country, and they not knowing what became of their General. As fruitless, but more famous, was the Enterprize of Hernandez de Soto, begun in the year 1538, and continued till 1543, who with a little Army of 350 Horse, and 90 Foot, over-ran a great part of the Country, and brought many of the Petit Princes under the Command of Spain. But making only a depredatory War of it, to enrich himself, and waste the Country, without settling any Colony, or building any Fortifications in it to make good his gettings, the Action ended with his Life, which he lost by a Fever: the remnant of his Souldiers, whom the War had spared, under the Conduct of Ludovico Muscofi di Alvarado, recovering Mexico not without great difficulties.

And so the Spaniards leave the Stage, and the French enter; sent on this Voyage by Gaspard Colligni, Admiral of France, Anno 1562, under the Conduct of Ribault: who falling on that part of the Continent which lieth on the East-side of the Peninsula, gave the first Promontory which he touched at the name of Cape Francois; and after running Northward along that Coast, new-named the Rivers thereof by the names of the Seine, the Loire, the Somme, the Garonne, and others of most note in his own Country. Coming as far North as the great River of Porto Royal, he there built a little Fortress, which he called Fort-Charles, where he left 26 of his men to keep possession, and returned for France: his Soul-

Souldiers following not long after, as well as they could; destitute of Supplies from home, and not able with so small a number to command them there. The Action reinforced about two years after, under the Conduct of Landanier, who had accompanied Ribault in the former Voyage: by whom some farther progress was made in this Undertaking, and a little Town built on the Banks of the River Mato (so called by Ribault, because in that Month discovered by him) which he named Charles Fort, Ara Carolina in the Latine. But a Mutiny happening amongst his men, and some Complaints made of him in the Court of France, he was called home, and Ribault sent again to pursue the Enterprize: who entering on his Charge in August, Anno 1565, was presently set on by the Spaniards, both by Sea and Land; his Ships forced violently upon the Rocks, the New Town sacked, the Colony put unto the Sword, very few escaping; Ribault himself murdered in cold blood by the Enemy, after Faith given him for his life. It was thought that above 600 French were slain in this Action. So ended the French hopes in Florida, the King being then preparing for a new Civil War, and loth to engage himself against the Spaniards, till the year 1627, when at the charge of Dominicus Gurgius, a private person, out of an honest zeal to the honour of his Country, and to cry quittance with the Spaniards for their treacherous cruelty, it revived again. And though he found the Spaniards, after the defeat of Ribault, had repaired and fortified Ara Carolina, and raised two Castles more on the Banks of the Mato, which they had furnished with such Pieces as they took from the French, and garrisoned with 400 Souldiers; yet giving a courageous Onset, by the aid of the Savages, (to whom the name and Neighbourhood of the Spaniards was exceeding odious) he forced them all, demolished the Works, and hanged all such of the Souldiers as the Sword had spared, and so returned into France; where, instead of honour and reward for so great a service, he was in danger of losing both his Life and Fortunes, compelled to lurk among his Friends till the times were changed. The Spaniards after this, to keep some kind of possession, though not finding in it Riches answerable to their greedy desires, fortified S. Matthews, and S. Augustines, on the East-side of the Demi-Island, with the Castles of S. Philip, and S. Jago, in other parts of the Country towards the North-East; thinking himself so strong in the Gulf of Mexico, that no Foreign Forces durst appear on that side of the Country. So that it seems he plays the part of Aesop's Dog in the Manger, neither resolved to plant there himself, nor willing that any others should.

Having thus taken a Survey of the Main Land of Florida, let us next take a view of such Islands as lie dispersed up and down in the Seas adjoining; called by one general name LUCAIOS, or LUCALIAE INSULAE, many in number, but reducible to these three Heads: 1. The Tortugas. 2. The Martyres. And 3. The Lucaios specially so called.

1. The TORTUGAS are seven or eight little Islands, lying on an heap at the South-West point of the Peninsula, called the Cape of Florida, in the height of 25 Degrees; distant from the Port of Havana, in the Isle of Cuba (opposite unto which they lie) about six Leagues. Well known among the Sailors, because much avoided, or rather avoided because known; the danger of their Company making their farther Acquaintance thumbed.

2. The MARTYRES, called also the Caior, are 1 three great Rocks rather than Islands, covered with a white Sand, and full of Buthes; the middlemost of the three the greatest; situate over against the South-East Promontory of the said Peninsula, called from hence Cabeza de los Martyres; or, The Cape of Martyrs. Denominated thus by John Ponce the Spaniard, in his first Discovery of this Country, because they seemed afar off to have some resemblance to men impaled upon Stakes, as many of the Martyrs were in the Primitive times. Infamous for the many Shipwrecks which have since there happened; but of great observation amongst Sea-faring men, because they know by leaving these Rocks or Islands on the left hand of them, that they are already entered in the Straights.

3. The LUCAIOS, specially so called, lie dispersed on the East of the Peninsula, many in number, and so called from Lucaineque, the greatest and most Northern of them, situate in the 27 degree of Latitude; of more length than breadth, but hitherto known by name only. Of greater note, though not so big, is that called 2. Babams, in the middle way betwixt Lucaineque and the Peninsula; in length 13 Leagues, and eight in breadth; memorable for giving name to the violent Current interposing betwixt it and the Demi-Island, called the Straights of Babams; yet not so straight; but that they are 16 miles in breadth, though of so forcible a Course, that many times neither Wind nor Oars can prevail against it. 3. Guanabani, the most famous of all these Islands, because the first that was discovered by Columbus, being then almost out of hope of proceeding farther; who thereupon caused it to be called S. Saviour. Well shaded at that time with Trees, full of fresh Springs, and very plentiful of Cotton, now overgrown with Shrubs and Buthes. 4. Guanima, by Columbus, when first discovered, called S. Maria de Concepcion; begirt about with Rocks and Quick-sands, but otherwise of a pleasant and fruitful Soil, full of delicate Springs. Others there are, to the number of 24, or thereabouts, whose names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we find nothing of them but their very names, I shall not trouble my self with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is said, that they obeyed their King so strictly, (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from a high Rock, they performed the same; though he gave no reason but his Will. The Women of so perfect Beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forsook their own Countries to enjoy their Loves: their Shape and Beauty the more discernable, in regard not suffered to wear any thing till their Purgations; nor after that, but Nets of Cotton filled with Leaves of Herbs. But now, and long since, there are neither Men nor Women to be found in any of them; the people being long since waisted by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hispaniola, or consumed by Famine and Diseases, or otherwise made away in Prisons, and by several Torments, to the number of a Million and two hundred thousand, as some have told us. And so we pass unto the other side of those Northern Countries, opposite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the Main Land of Florida; that when we fall into the Countries now possessed by the Spaniards, we may not wander out of them till this Work be finished, except it be to take a Progress into some of the Islands, which cannot otherwise be visited, but by such a Start.

OF CALIFORNIA.

CALIFORNIA, in the large and general acception of it, containeth all those Provinces of Mexicana, which lie on the West-side of that Northern Peninsula, beyond Nova Galicia, and New Spain: though in the stricter, limited to that Province only which lieth on the other side of a long and spacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of California. But taking it in the largest sense, it hath on the West New Spain, and New Galicia, and so on to those undiscovered parts which lie farthest North, to the Straights of Anian. So witnesseth John de Laet, lib. 6. cap. 11. CALIFORNIA communiter dicitur quicquid terrarum Novæ Hispaniæ atque Galliciæ ad Occidentem obijciuntur, ad extremos Americæ Septentrionalis terminatur, & Fretum quod vulgo Anian vocant. Limited in the stricter sense and acception of it to an Island (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the West hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorography and Story of it, we must divide it into the Continent, and the Island: the Continent subdivided into the two large Provinces of 1. Quivira; and 2. Cibola; the Island into 3. California, specially so called; and 4. Nova Albion.

And first the Continent of this part which we call California, hath on the East some parts of Nova Galicia; and besides that, those vast and undiscovered Countries which lie on the West-side of Canada and Virginia, on the opposite shore: bounded on the North with the unknown parts of this Mexicana; on the North-west, with the Straights of Anian, if such Straights there be; on the West, with the Sea interposing betwixt it and the Island, called Mer Vermiglio; and on the South and South-west, with the rest of Nova Galicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Noordo. A River which rising in the 40 degree of Northern Latitude, first parteth Tiguex, a Province of Quivira, from that of New Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Galicia; and after a long course falleth into the Sea, called Mer Vermiglio, above Cimolaa, another of the Provinces of that Division. Divided, as before was said, into the two great Provinces of 1. Quivira; and 2. Cibola.

1. QUIVIRA, taking up the most Northern parts of this side of America, is said to be very plain and level; of few Trees, not many Houses, nor much stored of people; quite destitute of Fruits and Corn, and yielding nothing for Mans life but the flesh of Beasts, which they eat raw, and swallow down in great bits without any chewing. The men apparelled in Bulls skins from the head to the feet; the women, though in a cold Country, with no other Garment than their Hair, which they wear so long, that it serveth them instead of a Veil to hide their nakedness. They live in Hoords and Companies, like the Hoords of the Tatars, not having any certain dwellings, (except some chief men) but remove from one place to another, like the ancient Nomades. Near Neighbours unto Tartary, from whence (not being much distant from it) it is supposed that the Inhabitants first came, and from hence by degrees peopled all America.

The Country, being full of Herbage, breeds great store of Cattle, differing not much in bigness from those of Europe, but that they have an high Bunch betwixt their shoulders; bristled upon the back like Boars, with somewhat which resembleth the Mane in Horses, and the Beard in Goats; their Legs short, and clad with Fetlocks, their Horns short, but sharp: the whole Beast of an aspect so horrid, that an Horse will not venture near them, till well acquainted. Yet in these Beasts lie all their Riches, these being to this people, as we say with us of our Ale to Drunkards, Mear, Drink, and Cloth, and more too. For the Hides yield them Houses, or at least the covering of them; their Bones, Bodkins; their Hair, Thread; their Sinews, Ropes; their Horns, Maws and Bladders, Vessels; their Dung, Fire; their Calves-skins Budgets to draw and keep water; their Blood, Drink, and their Flesh, Meat. There is thought to be some Traffick from China, or Cathay, hither: for when Vasquez de Coronado conquered it, he saw in the farther Sea certain Ships, not of common making, which seemed to be well laden, and did bear in their Prows the figure of Pellicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Country but one of these two. I know, some place this Country more within the Land; and others are so far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it close unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coasts, upon good Authority, though I deny not but that some parts hereof may be more remote. Or else to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; that the Maritime parts being known by other names, the In-lands might retain more specially the name of Quivira, as we have seen in many other Countries before described.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, because I find mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira; the one called Seio, the other called Cicuc, and the third Tiguex, which I look upon as the Maritime parts of the same one Country, but better peopled and frequented than the Islands are, because lying in the way of Traffick. The principal Towns of which Provinces are: 1. Acu, or Auco, a small Town, but situate in a strong and defensible place, about which groweth some store of Cotton, which from the place the Natives call by the name of Auco. 2. Tiguex, on the Banks of a River so called; inhabited by a stout and courageous People; who being resolved not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when besieged by Vasquez de Coronado, after they had held out above six weeks, laid all their Household-stuff and Treasure in an heap together, which they set on fire; and taking their Wives and Children into the midst of their Ranks, made a desperate Sally on the Enemy. A Resolution worthy of a better Fortune, most of them being slain in the Fight; and the rest trod under the Horses feet, or drowned in passing over the River. Yet would not those few which were left give up the Town, till it was fired fired about their ears, and no longer Tenable: the Spaniard buying this Victory (notwithstanding the great odds of their Arms) with the loss of most of their Horses, the death of seven of their men, and the wounding of 80. 3. Cicuc, a small Burrough, but the chief of that Province, four days journey from Tiguex; from whence the whole way unto Quivira, specially so called, being 90 miles, hath in it neither Stone nor Tree, nor any Land-mark, inasmuch as the Spaniards were fain to make heaps of Cow-dung to serve for their direction in their coming back.

The first discovery of this Country is to be attributed to the diligence of Antonio de Mendoza, Vice-Roy of Mexico, who desirous to get Wealth and Honour by some new Adventures, employed in the discovery of these Northern parts Fryar Marco de Niza. By him, and by a Negro which he had for his Guide, there was some light gotten of Cibola, the next Province to this; but so disguised in lies, and wrapt up in Fictions, that that light was little more than darkness. Yet by that glimmering, Francisco Vasquez de Coronado, in the year 1540, undertook the business; and sped so well, that having made his way through Cibola, he took the Town of Tiguex, as we heard before, and laid his way open to Quivira. Moved to a farther journey by the report of the Savages, (who desired to hasten him out of their Country) telling him of the Wealth of Tatarax, who reigned in the In-land parts of Quivira, a Bearded Man (those of this Country wearing none) of a white Complexion, and one who in his Chappel worshipped a Crofs, and the Queen of Heaven; on went the Spaniards towards Quivira, and found out the Tatarax, a poor naked Prince, Master of no more Treasure than a Brazen Plate hanging on his Breast, and without any such sign of Christianity as they did expect. So frustrated of all their hopes, and having got nothing but their labour for their pains, and the Honour of a new Discovery, with the loss of many of their men, they returned to Mexico, Anno 1542. Some Fryars made bold to stay behind, but were all slain by the people of Quivira, except only one, who like Job's Messenger was left to carry news of the Murther, the Spaniards never looking into these cold Countries, where nothing else was to be gotten but Blows and Hunger.

2. CIBOLA hath on the North Quivira; on the South and South-east parts, New Galicia; from which divided by the River called Rio del Noordo, as before was said; the West-side of it washed with the Mer Vermiglio, interposed betwixt it, and the Island, or California specially so called. By the Natives it is called Zuni.

The Air hereof indifferently temperate, if not too much subject in the Winter to Frosts and Snows. The Country for the most part level, rarely swelled with Hills, but those very Rocky. No Trees that bear them any Fruit; few Trees at all, except it be a Wood of Cedars, from which abundantly supplied both with Fuel and Timber. Plenty of Maize, and small white Pease, which they make their Bread of; great store of Venison, but they kill it only for the skin: some quantities of Sheep, known for such by their Fleeces only, but otherwise as big each of them as an Horse, or Oxe, some of their Horns weighing fifty pounds. Of Lyons, Bears, and Tygers, so great a number, that they have more than enough for themselves, and could well spare them to their Neighbours.

The people generally well limbed, and tall of stature, ingenious in respect of some other Savages: and though naked except their Privities only, or covered only with a Mantle, yet those Mantles wrought in divers colours; which, with some quantity of Cotton which they have amongst them, (none of it growing in their Country) shew them to be an industrious Nation, and to maintain a course of Trade with some of their Neighbours. A farther Argument of which is those painted Skins which they have from Cicuc, or some other Country which lies towards the Ocean, my Author telling that they travel for them eight days journey towards the North: and probably enough may be some of those Commodities which the Inhabitants of the Maritime Provinces of Quivira do receive from Cathay, or China, with which they are supposed to Traffick, as before was said. Like industry is noted in the Women also, one of which will grind and knead more Maize in a day, than the Women of Mexico do in four. In other things not differing from the rest of the Savages.

This Country was first made known to the Spaniards by the Travels of Fryar Marco de Niza, employed on new Discoveries by Antonio de Mendoza, as before was said. Leaving Conlucan, the most Northern Province of Nova Galicia, he overcame a tedious Desert four days journey long; at the end of which he met some people, who told him of a pleasant Country four days journey farther, unto which he went. And staying at a place called Vacapa, he dispatched the Negro, whom he took with him for his Guide, to search towards the North, by whom he was advertised after four days absence, that he had been informed of a large and wealthy Province called Cibola, a Months journey thence; wherein were seven great Cities under the Government of one Prince, the Houses of which were built of Stone, many Stories high, the Lintels of their Doors adorned with Turquoises; with many other strange reports of their Markets, Multitudes and Riches. But neither the Fryer nor the Negro had the hap to see it; the Negro being killed on the very Borders, and the Fryer so terrified with the news, that he thought it better to return, and satisfy the Vice-Roy with some handsome Fiction, than put himself upon the danger of a farther journey. To that end he enlarged and amplified the Reports which the Negro sent him, gave to the Desarts in his way the name of the Kingdoms of Tontec, and Marata; ascribed unto this last a great City called Abaca, once well inhabited, but at that time destroyed by Wars; to the other a more civil and well-clothed People than in other places. Inflamed with which Reports, Vasquez de Coronado undertook the Action, but found the Fryer to be a Fryer; nothing of moment true in all his Relations: the Kingdom of Marata to be found only in the Fryers brains; Tontec to be nothing but a great Lake, on whose Banks had once been many Cottages now consumed by Wars. And as for the seven Cities of such Wealth and bigness, he found them to be seven poor Burroughs, all situate within the compass of four Leagues; which made up that so famous Kingdom which the Fryer dreamt of. The biggest of them held about 500 Cottages; the rest of them not above half that number. One of them, left he might be said to return without doing something, he besieged and took, but found it such an hot piece of service, that he was twice beaten down with stones as he scaled the Rampiers: but having taken it at the last, he found in it great plenty of Maize to refresh his Army, and caused the Town (consisting of 200 Houses, or thereabouts) to be called Granada, for some resemblance which it had to that City in Spain. Such as have since endeavoured the Discovery of these North-west parts, and sailed along the shores hereof on Mer Vermiglio, have added hereunto the names of some Points or Promontories, known in the Maps by the names of 1. Porto de S. Clara, not far from the Mouth of Influx of Rio del Noordo. 2. Las Plaines. 3. S. Michael. 4. Rio de Teron. 5. Laques del Oro, bordering on Quivira.

vires, and 6. Rey Coronado, on the East of that.

Between this Region and Quivira, specially so called, lieth a Country, which the said Vasquez names Tucayan, memorable for the famous River of Huenex, on the Banks whereof, for the space of 20 Leagues, stand 15 Burroughs well built, and furnished with Stoves, (if he hath not in this part of the Story out-ried the Fryer) as in other cold, but more civil Countries, against the extremities of Winter. This Region, stretching seven days journey to the River of Cienick, I reckon to belong to the North-east part of Cibola. As I do also the fruitful Valley of Aroia de Corazoner, which they passed in their way hither from Contiacan; with the Town and Territory of Chibilticla, and the Valley of Nugha Semora, or our Ladies Dale, in the South parts of it: not knowing otherwise what Province to refer them to.

Proceed we now unto the Island, the other general part of this Division, parted from Cibola and New Gallicia by a narrow Sea called Mer Vermiglio, and by some the Gulf of California; environed on all other parts by the Main Ocean. Extended in a great length from the 22 degree of Northern Latitude to the 42, but the breadth not answerable. The most Northern point herof called Cabo Blanco, of which little memorable. The most Southern, called the Cape of S. Lucas, remarkable for the great Pirve there taken from the Spaniards by Captain Cavendish, in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1587. Supposed in former times to have been joyned in the Northern parts of it, above the Latitude of 27, to the rest of the Continent; and so described in most of our later Maps, till the year 1626, and after that in the Chart or Map of John de Laet, Anno 1633. which I wonder at; himself affirming, that in many of the old Maps it was made an Island, lib. 6. cap. 11. and that he had seen a fair Map in Parchment, a very fair and ancient Draught, Que Californiam, in ingentis Insule modum, a Continente divideret, in which it was expressed for a spacious Island, lib. 6. cap. 17. The reason of the Error was, that those who first endeavoured the discovery of it, failing up the Sea of Mer Vermiglio, found it to grow narrower and narrower towards the North, till it seemed to be no bigger than some mighty River; but that of such a violent Current, that no Boat was able to pass upwards with Wind or Oar, unless haled up with Cords by the strength of men. And taking it to be a River, they gave it the name of Rio de Bona Guia; known by that name, and continued in the Opinion of being a River, till the year 1620, or thereabouts. At what time some Adventurers, beating on these Coasts, fell accidentally upon a straight, but violent passage, on the North herof, which brought them with a strong Current into Mer Vermiglio: discovering by that accident, that the Waters falling into that Sea was not a River, as formerly had been supposed, but a violent breaking in of the Northern Ocean; by consequence, that this part of California was not a Demi-Island, or Peninsula, but a perfect Island. And looking on it as an Island, we have divided it into Nova Albion, and California, specially so called.

And first, 3. CALIFORNIA, specially so called, containeth the Southern parts herof, as far as to the Latitude of 38. where it bordereth on Nova Albion. Of which Country, though so near to New Spain, and New Gallicia, and though discovered so long since, we yet know but little: the Spaniards either wanting men for new Plantations, or finding small encouragements here to invite them to it. Furnished on the Sea-coasts with great plenty both of Fish and Fowl, which they find in great Islands of Weeds floating on the Seas; and more within the Land, with a kind of Beast haired like a Goat, and with Teats like a Cow, but otherwise resembling Deer, which they kill with their Dogs. Some Mountains in it are said to cast Fire-ashes, which the Spaniards for that reason call Cacofogo. The people are numerous, and thick set, inasmuch that on the Banks of the supposed River of Bona Guia were numbered three and twenty Nations, all of several Languages. In their persons like the rest of the Savages, but of different Dresses. Some of them painting their Faces all over, some half way only, others with painted Vizards, resembling Faces: Holes in their Nostriils for their Pendant; the tips of their Ears loaded, if not over-loaded with the bones of Fishes hanging at them; a Girdle about their Waite, to which they fasten a bunch of Feathers that hang down behind them like a Tail: the Women using the like Bunches before them also. Their chief God the Sun, (as that of Cibola is the Water) which they most affectionately worship, as the cause of the increase of their Fruits and Plants. Joyned in Communion with which God, they were taught by Alarcon a Spaniard to worship a wooden Cross (the more irrational Idolatry of the two) which he caused to be erected as he coming away, with instructions to kneel before it every morning, at the first rising of the Sun: so teaching them to worship their two Idols at once, or translate their Devotions from the Sun, a Creature of God, to a plain Wooden Cross (of which they knew nothing but the form) the work of a Carpenter. It is also told us of this People, that each Family is ordered by the Father of it, without other Government: yet so well managed, that they allowed but one Wife to a man, and punished Adultery with death; the Maids not suffered to converse or talk with men before their Marriage, but to abide at home and work: the Widows not to Marry again, till they had mourned at least half a year for the death of their Husbands. Matters more favouring an Utopian Commonwealth, than a Californian.

Places of most observation in it; 1. The Capes of S. Clara, and S. Lucas: the first on the South-east point of the Island, towards new Gallicia; the other on the South-West, towards Asia. 2. S. Croffer, (Sinus S. Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven near the Cape of S. Clara; so called, because discovered upon Holy-Rood day. 3. Cabo de las Plais, more within the Bay; so named, because the shore shewed in little Hills, without Grass or Shrubs; the Spanish word signifying as much. 4. Cabo Bexo, towards the bottom of the Gulf, (from whence the Land on the other side may be easily seen) in the Latitude of 29. 5. S. Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Island of the same name, with some Cottages in it. 6. S. Thome, an Island of 25 Leagues in compass, at the mouth of the Gulf; rising towards the South in an high Mountain, under which is a convenient Road for shipping, the Sea being thereabouts 25 fathoms. Then on the other side towards the Sea, we have 7. S. A-bad, a convenient Haven, surrounded with a Country which seemed rich and pleasant. 8. Cape Trinidad, a Promontory well known to Sea-men. 9. Cape de Cedra, so called from the Cedars growing near it, in the Latitude of 28 and 15 minutes; with an Island not far off of the same name also. 10. Cape Enganno, in the Latitude of 31. 11. Puebla de las Canoas, so named from the multitude of Boats (by themselves called Canoes) which the people used, four degrees more Northward than that Cape. And 12. Cabo de Galera, so named from the resemblance which it had to an Hat, in the Latitude of 36. But these two are placed by John de Laet within the Country of Seyo, one of the Provinces of Quivira. Underland here, that these are only the names of Places, not of Towns or Villages, (for whether there be any such, I am yet unsatisfied) and that there are many other Promontories, Bays, Rivers and Islands on both sides of this Region, which I find no names for.

The first Discovery of this Country we owe to Ferdinando Cortez, (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534, furnished out two Ships from the Haven of S. Jago, on the Western Shores of Hispania Nova, to search these Seas: who making some small progress in it, encouraged him the next year to pursue it in person; and passing up the Gulf, as high as to the River of S. Peter, and S. Paul, (so called, because discovered on the 29 of June, the Annual Feast of those Apostles) for want of Victuals and other necessary Provisions, he returned back again. The business having slept a while, was in the year 1539, awakened by Francisco de Ullaz, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before: who did not only search to the bottom of the Gulf, but having thoroughly canvassed all the Eastern Shores, he turned his course, and made as fortunate a Discovery also of the Western Coasts. Landing, he took possession of the Country with the wonted Ceremonies, for the King of Spain; and in the place set up a Cross to serve as a Remembrance of his being there. After him followed Ferdinando de Alarcon, who discovered many Leagues up the course of the supposed River of Buena Guia; where Naguanatun, one of the Chiefs of their Clans or Tribes, did submit unto him; advancing so far towards the North, that at the last he heard news of Cibola; but was unprovided at that time for a Journey thither. And on the other side, Roderico Cabrilla, in the year 1642, coasting along the Western Shores of this Country, discovered two small Islands beyond Cape Galera, the one of which he called S. Luke's, and the other the Island of Possession: and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinia. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver, and hungry Honour yielding but a poor subsistence; the farther Search of these Countreys was quite laid aside, almost as little known now, as before Columbus first set sail upon new Discoveries.

4. NOVA ALBION, formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but some part of this Island; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and so Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Discovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the world Anno 1577, and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England his own Country, which was once called Albion.

The Country is abundantly replenished with Herds of Deer, grazing upon the Hills by thousands; as also with a kind of Conies, in their Feet somewhat like a Want, and on each side a Sack, where they keep such Victuals as they cannot eat. The Flesh of these Conies serves the people for Food; and of their Skins the Kings or Chief of their several Tribes make their Royal Robes. The Men go quite naked, the Women with a piece of Mat instead of an Apron; chaste, and obedient to their Husbands. Their Houses made of Turf and Osier, so wrought together, as serves to keep them from the cold; in the midst whereof they have an Hearth where they make Fire, about which they lie along upon Beds of Bulrushes. What Towns they have, or whether they have any or not, and by what names called, if they have any, must be referred to a farther Discovery: there being nothing to that purpose delivered hitherto. And yet not feared so far North, but that it may be capable of a farther light, if any Noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The English were no sooner landed, but the Inhabitants presented themselves before the General with presents of Feathers, and Cauls of Network made of Bull-rushes; which he received, and requited with great humanity. The News of their Arrival being carried farther, one of their Kings thought fit to bestow a visit on them: A Person of a goodly stature, attired in Cow-Skins, with many tall men attending on him, one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged three Crowns, with as many Chains; the Chains of Bone, but the Crowns of Knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniously composed. After him followed many of the common sort, every one having his Face painted white, black, and some other colours; and every one with some Present or other in their hands, even the very Boys. Being brought into the General's Presence, the Mace-Bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not understood; and that being ended, the King caused the Crown to be put upon the General's head, and the three Chains about his Neck; the common people offering Sacrifices about the Field in great solemnity. Not to be interdicted those Superstitions, though the English (whom they took for Gods) seemed to be offended at them. Finally, after much kindness expressed on both sides, the General promising in the Name of the Queen of England to take them into his Protection, he caused a Pillar to be erected in the place; on which he fastned the Arms of England, the Queen's Name, and his own; and so returned unto his Ships. But the Country lying so far off, that no benefit could redound by it to the English Nation, but the honour of the first Discovery; the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at last quite left out of the Maps or Charts; only a Point or Promontory, by the name of Po. de Francisco Draco, being left unto us to preserve his Memory. And though we have caused the name of Nova Albion to be restored unto the Maps, as it was before; yet we must let the Reader know, that the name of Nova Albion hath been given lately with as much propriety, but more hopes of profit and advantage, to that part of Virginia which lieth betwixt Mary-Land and New-England, as before was noted.

Opposite to Cape Blanco, and the extreme North parts of America, the supposed Kingdom of ANIAN, from whence the Straights of Anian, which are thought by some to part America from Asia, do derive their Name, is conceived to lie. Supposed, and supposed only, for not certainly known: the very being of such a Kingdom, and such Straights, being much suspected.

OF NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the East and South with Nova Hispania, or New Spain; on the West, with Mer Vermiglio, better known heretofore by the names of the River Buena Guis, and the Gulf of California; the Countreys beyond it on the North not discovered hitherto. So called because of some resemblance which it was thought to have to Gallicia, a Province of Spain in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for distinction-sake.

It is situate between the 18 and 28 degrees of the Northern Latitude, which measured from the Port of the Nativity, (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Navidad) where it confineth on New Spain, to the most Northern border of Cinaloa, makes 300 Leagues: the breadth hereof, so much as is possessed by the Spaniards, being but an hundred onely. But taking in New Biscay and Nova Mexicana into the Account, the breadth will be greater than the length.

The Air hereof is generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat then cold; many times subject unto Thunders and great Storms of Rain, but for the most part of so found a Constitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old Age; contagious Diseases seldom known amongst them. The Ground by consequence somewhat of the driest, if not moistened with the morning Dews, which fall very frequently; and whether by the temperature of the Air, or Soil, apt to produce a kind of Gnat, (which the Latines call Cimicer) affirmed to be as big as a Bean, which by their stings do very often plague the people, and raise Blisters on their Bodies as big as Walnuts.

The Countrey more Mountainous than Plain, and in most parts Sandy. Quarries of Stone in many places, but little Marble, or any other Stone of value. Good store of Mines of Brasse and Silver, few of Gold or Iron; and amongst all their Metals a great mixture of Lead. The Soil so rich, that it yields 60 measures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, above two hundred: The Rivers plentiful of Fish, and the Woods of Beasts: great store of Bees without stings, which make their Honey in the Forests without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figs, Malacatos, and other European Fruits, they thrive better here than they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive: of which the last is most an end undetermined by Emmets; and the first thrusts out such a Harvest of Leaves, occasioned by the natural Rarkness of the ground, that they seldom come to their perfection.

The People are wavering and inconstant, apt upon any discontent to forsake their Houses, betake themselves unto the Woods, and many times to return to their Ancient Barbarism: Crafty, and docile even in matters which concern Religion; but slothful and impatient of any labour, to which not to be hired but for very great wages. Much given to singing, Dancing, and sometimes to Drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquor, few of them would betake themselves to the cares of Husbandry. Of Stature reasonably tall; their Garments for the most part a Shirt of Cotton, with a Mantle over it, fastened with two Buckles about their shoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatness of their several Tribes: those Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who succeed hereditarily; but subject to the Judges and other Officers of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themselves generally to Merchandize, and the search of Metals; some few to Husbandry and grazing, but make not the best use which they might of the Countrey: for though here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes and of Cochineel, yet they neglect to refine the one, or to attend the ordering of the other; finding perhaps an easier or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

The Mountain of most note in all this Countrey is that betwixt Guadalaajara and Zacatecas: a League in height, but of such a Precipice withal, that no Horse nor Cattel can ascend it: their other Hills rocky, but clothed with Woods full of vast Pines, large Oaks, and great store of Wolves. The River of most name is that called Bazania, which, rising out of the Lake of Mechuacan in Nova Hispania, falls down a Cataract about four Leagues from Guadalaajara of Ten Fathoms deep, and so tumbleth into Mare del Zur: in no place fordable, nor having any passage over it but on Reeds and Rafts, on which the Passenger sitteth with his Commodities, his Horse swimming by; not safe at any time, and at most times dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20, some of 12 Leagues compass: environed with rich Pastures on every side. Those of less note shall be remembered in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of 1. Cinaloa, 2. Couliacan, 3. Xalisco, and 4. Guadalaajara, on the Western Shores: 5. Zacatecas, 6. New Biscay, 7. Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all these somewhat shall be said, though of each but little.

1. CINALOA is the most Northern Province of New Gallicia, bounded upon the West with the supposed River of Buena Guis, and some part of the Bay of California; on the East, with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepestan; on the North, with the South parts of Cibola; on the South with Couliacan.

The Air for the most part clear and healthy, the Soil fat and fruitful, productive of Maize, Pulse, a sort of long Pease, which the Latines call Phasoli, but we have no proper English name for; of which abundantly plentiful. Great store of Cotton-wool, wherewith both Sexes are apparelled. Well watered with the Rivers, 1. Petatlan, 2. Tamochila, 3. Paschna, 4. Taquim; of no long course, all of them rising from the Hills of Tepestan, and those but 36 leagues distant from the Sea-shores. By reason of these Rivers, here are very rich Pastures, which breed great store of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattel.

The People are generally tall, higher than the Spaniards by an hand-breadth, warlike and strong; not conquered by the Spaniards without great difficulty; their Arms a Bow and poisoned Arrows, with great mastie Clubs. Their Garments for the most part of Cotton-wool: their Hair nourished to a great length, which the men tie up in a Knot, Knot, but the Women suffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes, at the first coming of the Spaniards thither, without Cloaths at all, but to hide their thames most miserably poor; worshippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongst them.

Chief Towns hereof. 1. S. Philip and Jacob, situate on the Bank of a River, about 42 Leagues from the Town of Couliacan, but of no great note. 2. S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards, planted here long since, and re-inforced by a Supply brought thither in the year 1554, by Francisco de Tharra; scarce able to defend themselves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon disturb them with a fresh Alarm. Besides these, here are onely some scattered Villages, and those not many: the Spaniards finding only 25 old Forts in all the Countrey, when they first made themselves Masters of it, under the Conduct of Nommez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People everywhere submitting without any resistance, or if they gathered to an Head, soon dispersed again. For what could naked men do against an Army?

2. COTULIACAN, or CULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coasting along the Bay of California, which it hath on the West, and part of New Biscay on the East. The Countrey well provided of Fruits, in our use none for all sorts of Provisions, and not without some Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Rio de Mueberas, or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; so called, because the Spaniards found there more Women than Men, occasioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons. 2. Rio de Sal, a goodly River, both sides whereof are very well peopled. 3. Piaflla, more towards Xalisco.

The People not much different from the rest of Gallicia; save that their Women were more handsome, both for Drefs and Personage; all clothed in Garments of Cotton Wool, when first known to the Spaniards; and yet the men not free from the sin of Sodom. Their Houses neatly thatched with Straw, and over the Lintels of the Doors some Paintings, as shameless as the very foulest of Aretine's Postures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted to their cost with Silver, which they are compelled to dig and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Piaflla, on the River so called, about a days Journey from the Sea, well built, and artificially contrived in respect of others; never recovered of that blow that it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conquest of this Countrey waited all before them. 2. Quinola, near Rio de Mueberas. 3. Quatraburrios, an old Town, but new named by the Spaniards, because it consisted of four parts. 4. El Leon, an old Burrough, which from a Lion there found had this new name also. 5. Couliacan, on a River so named, once the chief of this Province. 6. S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nommez de Guzman, in the Latitude of 25; but afterwards deserted, or removed rather to a fitter place; and now fixed in the Valley of Harroba, two Leagues from the Sea, in a flourishing and wealthy Soil both of Corn and Pasturage. The whole Countrey conquered by the Spaniards, Anno 1531, under Nommez de Guzman, most barbarously burning down the Towns, and destroying the people; as if they came not to subdue, but root out the Nation.

3. XALISCO, or GALESCO, as some Writers call it, hath on the North Couliacan; on the South, New Spain; on the East, the Province of Guadalaajara; on the West the large Bay of California. So called from Xalisco, the chief Town of it, when subdued by the Spaniards.

The soil hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good store of, but not often Herbage good for Cattel, which is reckoned for their greatest want. The North parts, called Chimetta, of the two most fruitful, and better peopled; having in it store of Wax and Honey, with some Mines of Silver. The people formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrel; from which reformed since their Conversion to the Gospel. Tenacious still of one of their ancient Customs, which is, to carry the smallest Burthen upon their Shoulders, and not under their Arms; which to do, they think very much misbecoming.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. S. Sebastians, 2. Rio de Spiritu Santo; and 3. the great and famous River of Barana, spoken of before. Upon the Banks of which are situate their most principal Towns, viz. 1. Xalisco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierre de Xalisco, thrusting it self into the Bay of California, over against the Islands called The Three Maries: the City taken and destroyed by Nommez de Guzman, Anno 1550. 2. Compofella, now the chief City of the Countrey, and a Bishop's See, founded by the said Nommez de Guzman, Anno 1531, when he had fully conquered the Countrey: by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Santo. But founded in so ill a place, and so bad an Air, destitute both of Food for Men, and Grass for Horses, as plainly shewed him to have better judgment in Souldiery than in Architecture. 3. Purification, a small Burrough on the Sea-side, and in the extremity of this Countrey towards Nova Hispania, near the Port of Natividad. 4. S. Sebastian in Chimetta, on the River so called, first built by Francisco de Tharra above mentioned; who having found hereabouts some rich Mines of Silver, brought hither in the year 1554, a new Spanish Colony, and building Houses for his Miners in convenient places, occasioned the whole Tract to be called de Tharra.

4. GUADALAJARA hath on the West, Xalisco; on the East and South, some parts of Nova Hispania; on the North, the Province of Zacatecas. Well watered with the River Barana, which runneth through the midst thereof, some of his by-streams moistening the other parts. The Countrey very wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentiful of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat, and such other Fruits as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the People we have before, applied in general to all the Natives of New Gallicia, but most peculiar unto these.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Guadalaajara, so called with reference to a Town of that Name in New Castile, and giving name unto the Province, situate on the Banks of the River Barana, or some branch thereof, in a sweet Air, and a most rich and pleasing Soil; there founded by Nommez de Guzman, Anno 1531: when he had perfected his Conquest: better advised in the choice of the place, then in that of Compofella before mentioned. A City of so good esteem, that it passeth for the Metropolis of all New Gallicia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the Residence of the Kings Treasurers, and a Bishop's See, removed hither from Compofella, Anno 1570. Beautified on this last occasion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciscans, and another of Augustine Friars. 2. Del Spiritu Santo, built by the said Nommez in that part of this Countrey which is called Tepeque; but not else observable. 3. Santa Maria de los Lagos, built by the same Founder, 30 leagues on the East of Guadalaajara; and the best defence of all this Province against the Chibchims, a barbarous and untamed people on the North and East parts of this Countrey, who harbouring themselves in the thickest of the Woods, and some unknown Caves; do many times prey upon the Country; which they would utterly destroy, if they were not thus repressed.

5. ZACATECAS is bounded on the South with Guadalupe; on the North, with New Biscay; on the West, with Calicut; and some part of Xalisco; on the East, with Panuco, one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Country is of a different nature. In the West parts, called properly Los Zacatecos, rich in Mines of Silver (no one Province more) but destitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other Provisions; as if it were designed for some wealthy Miser, who could live upon the light of Treasure. The Eastern parts, properly called Uxitiya, not so well furnished with Silver, but most abundantly provided with all sorts of fruits; their Woods replenished with Deer, their Fields with Corn, and every Tree giving Entertainment to some Bird or other: In a word, nothing wanting in it either for Necessity or Pleasure. Of the people I find nothing singular, but that they are affirmed to be more industrious than the most of their Neighbours; whether by force or nature, (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-Mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Los Zacatecos, neighboured by most wealthy Mines, 40 Leagues on the North of Guadalupe; inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciscans. 2. S. Martin, 27 Leagues from Zacatecas, the Mines whereof were first opened by Francisco de Tharra, before mentioned; who with many Slaves, and all things necessary for a War, was sent upon that Errand by Lewis de Velasco, then Viceroy of Mexico, Anno 1554. The Town inhabited by a Colony of 400 Spaniards, besides Women and Children. 3. S. Leger, and 4. De Avinion, built amongst Mines as wealthy as those before, by the same De Tharra: as also was 5. Erena, a small Town, but of the same Estate for Silver; distant from Zacatecas 25 Leagues towards the North-west. 6. Nombre di Dios, in the most Northern parts of this Country, 68 Leagues from Guadalupe, the foundation of the same De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quieted them after some Rebellions by gentle usage, built this Town in a pleasant and fruitful Soil: and having got the Government of the Countreys which he had discovered, drew hither to many of the Spaniards and chief men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of some Silver Mines, that it became the chief and best peopled Town of all this Province. 7. Durango, in the Valley of Guadalupe, about eight Leagues distant from Nombre di Dios, peopled by a Colony of Spaniards, conducted thither by Alonso Pacheco, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this Treasure. 8. Xeres de Frontera, first built for the repressing of some of the Savages, who used to infest the Borders towards Guadalupe, during the Regency of the Marquess of Villa Manrique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for UXITIYA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco, subdued by Lopez de Mendoza, employed therein in by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno, 1529, at that time Governour of that Province. Disinherited from it since the Conquest of Zacatecas, and made a Member of the Prefecture of New Galicia. The chief Town of it is called S. Lewis, built in a pleasant Valley by the said Pacheco, and by him peopled with a Colony of Spaniards: The Town not distant from Panuco above twenty Leagues.

6. NOVA BISCAYA, or New Biscay, hath on the South Los Zacatecos; on the West, Cinaloa; on the North, Novia Mexicana; the Countreys towards the East not discovered hitherto. So called by Francisco de Tharra, by whom first subdued, from the near Neighbourhood which it had unto Novia Galicia, of which it hath been always since reckoned for a part.

The Country is subject in the Winter to great Frosts and Snows; but notwithstanding well provided of all things necessary, and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have also some of Lead, which serve very fitly for the melting and purifying of the others, used to this purpose not alone in these Mines of New Biscay, but in those also of New Spain. The people resolute and stout, not conquered at the first Attempt, nor won so much by Force, as by fair Perswasions.

Places of most observation in it, 1. S. Barbara, and 2. S. John's, about three Leagues distant; built only for the benefit of the Mines adjoining. 3. Ende, the farthest Town which the Spaniards have towards the North, of whom a Colony was there planted (by reason of the adjoining Mines) by Rodrigo del Rio, who did also fortify it by the direction of De Tharra, under whom a Colonel. Distant from S. Barbara and S. John's about 20 Leagues, and 120 Leagues from Los Zacatecos. More North by 70 Leagues at least, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniards, are said to be those four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Ciudades; but I have nothing of them certain.

This Country was first subdued by Francisco de Tharra, who after he had built Durango in the North parts of Los Zacatecos, & assured that Province, advanced with a Troop of 130 Horse for the Discovery and Conquest of his Northern Neighbours. Encountered at the first more with hunger and thirst, than with any opposition of the Inhabitants; inasmuch that they were fain to eat their Horses: and afterwards by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greatest part of such Horses as were left un eaten. But not discourag'd herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his passage through the Woods by the Swords of his Souldiers, he prevailed at last; and having settled in peace, returned by the way of Cinaloa, which he also conquered, and planted there a Colony in the Town of S. John's, as was said before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA is bounded on the South with New Biscay; on the West, with Quivira; the Countreys on the North and East, not discovered hitherto, though some extend it Eastwards as far as Florida. Extended 250 Leagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that, none can tell; the Relations of this Country being so uncertain, and indeed incredulous, that I dare say nothing positively of the Soil or People, but much less of the Towns and Cities which are said to be in it. So named by Antonio de Espejo, a Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom discovered and subdued.

For first, they tell us of the People, that they are of great Stature, and that like enough; but not so probable that they have the Art of dressing Chamois and other Leather, as well as the best Leather-dresser in all Flanders: or that they have Shoes and Boots so well fowed and soaled, that no Shoe-maker in all S. Martins could do it better. Then for their Towns; that they are very fair and goodly, the Houses well built of Lime and Stone, some of them four Stories, and in most of them Stoves for the Winter season. The Streets even, and ordered in an excellent manner. Particularly, they tell us of a Town called 1. Chia, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cuamer, which is said to contain eight Market-places, and all the Houses to be plaistered and painted in most curious manner. 2. Of Acoma, that it is situate on the top of a Rock, a great Town, yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a pair of Stairs, but exceeding narrow, hewn out of the Rock; exceedingly well fortified by Nature, (they say true in that, if any things are true which they tell us of it) and all their Water kept in Cisterns, (but no body can tell from whence they have it.) 3. Of Comiba, on a Lake so called, the City seven leagues long, two broad; (a second Ninive) but the Houses scatteringly built amongst Hills and Gardens, which take up a great deal of the Room: Inhabited by a People of such strength and courage, that the Spaniards only faced it, and it went away. Much of this stuff I could afford you, but by this Taste we may conjecture of the rest of the Feast.

The Country was first discovered by Augustino Royaz, a Franciscan Frier, Anno 1580. who out of zeal to plant the Gospel in the North accompanied with two other Friers of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Savages, the Souldiers plaid the Poltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Beltram, a Frier of the same Order (from whose mouth we must have the former Fictions) desirous to preserve the Lives of his Fellows which laid behind, encouraged one Antonio de Espejo, a Native of Cordoba, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in such an holy Cause: who raising a Band of 150 Horse, accompanied with many Slaves and Beasts of Carriage, undertook the business. I omit the many Nations of the Conchi, Pasungates, Toboff, Patarabyer, Tarrabumucur, Tepoaner, and many others as hard names, which he passed through in his way. But coming at the last to a great River which he called Del Nord, there he made a stand; caused the Country on both sides of it to be called Novia Mexicana, and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, situate in the 37 degree of Northern Latitude; and distant from Old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name since changed to that of S. Foy, but still the Metropolis of that Province, the Residence of the Governour, and a pretty Garrison consisting of 250 Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming thither, viz. 2. Socorro, so called by the Spaniards, because of that Succour and Relief they found there for their half-starved Soldiers. 3. Seneca, 4. Pilabo, and 5. Sevilleta; old Towns; but new Christianized by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Gospel; each of them beautified with a Church. 6. S. John, built afterwards in the year 1599, by John de Onate, who with an Army of five thousand followed the same way which Espejo went, and having got a great deal of Treasure, laid it up in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance: This is the most I dare rely on for this Country. And this hath no fish Wonders in it, but what an easie Faith may give credit to: Though I had rather believe the Frier's whole Relations, then go thither to disprove any part thereof.

NOVA HISPANIA.

NOVA HISPANIA is bounded on the East with a fair and large Arm of the Sea, called the Bay of New Spain, and the Gulf of Mexico; on the West, with parts of Novia Galicia, and Mare del Zuro on the North, with the rest of New Galicia, some part of Florida, and the Gulf; on the South with Mare del Zuro, or the South-sea only. So called with relation to Spain in Europe, as the chief Province of that Empire in this New World; with reference to which, the Kings of Spain call themselves Reges Hispaniarum, in the plural number.

It extendeth from the 15 degree of Latitude to the 26 exclusively, i.e. measuring it on the East-side by the Bay of Mexico to the North of Panuco; but six degrees less, measuring it on the West side to the Port of Natividad, where it joyneth with Gallicia Nova. Or making our account by miles, it is in breadth from Panuco unto Mare del Zuro, 200 Spanish Leagues, or 600 Italian miles; but hardly half as much on the other side. The length hereof, from the East point of Jucatan, to the borders of Gallicia Nova, 1200 Italian miles, or 400 leagues; which is just double to the breadth.

The Air exceeding temperate, though situate wholly under the Torrid Zone; the heats thereof much qualified by those cooling Blasts which fan it from the Sea on three sides of it; and by those frequent Shours which fall continually in June, July, and August, the hottest seasons of the year. Abundantly enriched with inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, some of Brass and Iron; plenty of Coco-

Nuts, of which we have spoke before; great store of Cassia such a wonderful increase of Cochineal, that 5670. Arrobas of it (each Arroba containing 25 Bushels of our English measure) have been shipped for Europe in one year. Where by the way, this Cochineal groweth on a small Tree or Shrub, having very thick Leaves, which they call a Tuna; planted and ordered by them as the French do their Vines: out of the Seed whereof ariseth a small Worm, at first no bigger than a Flea; and the greatest not much bigger than our common Lady-Cows, which they much resemble; which feeding on the Leaves, and over-spreading all the ground in which they are, are gathered by the Natives twice a year, stitied with Althes, or with Water; (but this last the best) dried to a powder in the shade, and so transported into Europe. Here is also great plenty of Wheat, Barley, Pulse of all sorts, and of all such Plants and Roots as we set in gardens for the Kitchen; Pomegranates, Oranges, Lemons, Citrons, Malacatons, Figs and Cherries, even to superfluity; Apples and Pears in less abundance; few Grapes, and those few they have, not fit for Wine; plenty of Maize, and other plants unknown in Europe; Birds and Beasts wild and tame of all sorts, and of each no scarcity. Not thus in all places of it, nor in all alike; but some in one, some in another, according to the constitution of the Soil and Air; which is so different in this Country, that in such parts hereof as are hot and dry, their Seed-time is in April or May, their Harvest in October; but in such places of it as are low and moist, they sow their Corn in October, and reap in May: thus having two Harvests in a year, and yet but one.

The People more ingenious than the rest of the Savages, ges, exquisite at some Mechanick Arts, especially in the making of their Feather-Pictures; and so industrious withal, so patient both of Thirst and Hunger, that they will sit at it an whole day without meat or drink; turning every Feather to the light, upwards and downwards, every way, to see in which posture it will best fit the place intended to it. No better Goldsmiths in the World, nor men more expert any where in refining Metals; curious in painting upon Cotton whatsoever was presented to the Eye. But yet so barbarous withal, that they thought the Gods were pleased with the blood of men, which sometimes they sacrificed unto them. So ignorant, that when they first saw the Spaniards on Horse-back, they thought the Horse and Man to have been one Creature; and would ask what the horses said, when they heard them neigh. So careless of the worth of Gold, that they would part with great quantities of it for Knives, Glass Beads, little Bells, and such petty Trifles. But whatsoever they once were, is not now material: the Spaniards having made such havock of this wretched People, that in 17 years they destroyed above six millions of them, roasting some, plucking out the Eyes of others, consuming them in their Mines, and mercilely casting them amongst wild Beasts, where they were devoured. As for those who do remain, besides their own natural ingenuities, they have since learned the Civilities and Arts of Europe. What else concerns this Soil and People, we shall shew more particularly, if we find it necessary, in their proper places.

Amongst the Rarities of this Country, (though there be many Plants in it of a singular nature) I reckon that which they call Magney, or Mel, said to be one of the principal: a Tree which they both plant and dress, as we do our Vines. It hath in it 40 kind of Leaves fit for several uses. For when they be tender, they make of them Conserve, Paper, Flax, Mantles, Mats, Shoes, Girdles, and Cordage: upon them there grow certain Prickles, so strong and sharp, that the People use them instead of Saws. From the top of the Tree cometh a Juice like Syrup; which, if you seeth it, will become Honey; if purified, Sugar: they may make also Wine and Vinegar of it. The Bark of it roasted maketh a good Plaster for Hurts and Sores; and from the highest of the Boughs comes a kind of Gum; which is a sovereign Antidote against Poysons.

Nor is it less a Rarity, though less useful to the good of Mankind (except it be to keep them in continual mind of the Fires of Hell) that they have a Mountain in this Country called Propocampeche, (situate in the Province of Mexico) which vomiteth Flames of Fire like Ætna: and another in the Province of Guaxaca, which sendeth forth two burning streams, the one of red Pith, and the other of black; a fit resemblance of those Fountains of Fire and Brimstone. Though they have many other Mountains, yet these are most memorable. And as for Rivers, though very well provided of that watery Commodity; yet here are none remarkable for length or greatness, but Panuco onely, of which more presently. The want thereof supplied by some famous Lakes, and the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Mexico. Amongst the Lakes, the principal are those of Mexico, (whereof more anon) and that of Chapala, bordering upon Gallicia Nova; which for its greatness hath the name of Mare Chapalicum, out of which there is made yearly great abundance of Salt. But that which is of greatest beauty is the Gulf of Mexico, the greatest and goodliest of the World: in form completely Circular, in compass no less than 900 miles; environed with the main Land, the Peninsula of Florida and Jucatan, and the Isle of Cuba. Two only passages in and out, and both well fortified: the one betwixt the point of Jucatan and the Isle of Cuba, where the Tide with a violent Current entreth; the other betwixt the said Island and the Cape of Florida, where it makes as violent an Exit: the sea so heady in the midst, and yet safe enough, that ships are not to fail in it directly forwards, but must bend either towards the North or South, as their Journey lieth. Upon this Gulf the King of Spain hath always some Ships in readines, by which he more affureth his Estates in this part of America than by all his Garrisons.

It comprehendeth the Provinces of 1. Panuco, 2. Mechuacan, 3. Mexicana, 4. Tlascala, 5. Guaxaca, 6. Jucatan. Some others of less note, but reduced to these.

1. PANUCO, the most Northern Province of all New Spain, by some called Gustecan, is bounded on the East with the Gulf of Mexico; on the West with Uxiatapa, a Member of the Province of Zacatecas in New Gallicia; on the North, with Florida and some Countreys not yet discovered, from which parted by the River of Palm; on the South-west, with Mechuacan; and on the South with Mexicana. So called from Panuco the chief River of it, which rising out of the Hills of Tepehuan, bordering upon Cinaloa and Couliacan, and dividing New Biscay from the Province of Zacatecas, passeth through the middle of this Country, and so at last into the Gulf.

The length hereof is reckoned to be 50 Leagues, and the breadth as much, Divided into three Provinces. That towards Mexicana, called Aiotaxatlan, of a fruitful Soil, and not without some Mines of Gold; once very populous, till in the year 1522, dispeopled in a manner by Ferdinando Cortez in his War against them. The other called Chila, less fruitful, but possibly for want of people to improve the Land: for being formerly of a stout courageous nature, and trusting overmuch to their Fens and Fallinefles, they put the Spaniards to such trouble when they warred upon them, that the Conquerors, to secure themselves from all future dangers, endeavoured to root them out, and destroy them utterly. The third lieth towards the River of Palm, inclined to barrenness, and unpleasant: but the name I find not.

Chief Towns hereof, at the coming of the Spaniards hither. 1. Las Casas, 2. Ticucayan, 3. Nachapatan, 4. Taquinitre, 5. Tuzeteco, desolate and laid waste by the cruel Spaniards. Of most note now, 6. Tanehipa, and 7. Tameclipa, two small Burroughs in the Province of the River of Palm, (for so I call it) inhabited by the Natives onely. 8. S. Kallap, another small Town, but in the Province of Chila, inhabited by a few Christians, with a Convent of Augustinian Friars: sacked by the Savages in the year 1571. 9. Tampico, or S. Lewis de Tampico, a Colony of the Spaniards situate on the North Banks of the River Panuco, and at the very mouth thereof; where it hath a very large Haven, but so barred with Sands, that no Ship of great burthen can make use of it: the River otherwise so deep, that Vessels of 500 Tun might sail 60 Leagues at least in it against the Stream. 10. S. Stevan del Puerto, on the Southern side of that River, in the Latitude of 23. about 65 Leagues on the North of Mexico; from the Sea eight Leagues; now the Metropolis, and Town of greatest Trade in all this Country. Built by Ferdinando Cortez in the place where formerly had stood Panuco, once the chief City of the Province, but by him destroyed. Opposite hereunto, on the other side of the River lie great store of Salt-pits, out of which the people of this Town raise their greatest profit. 11. S. Jago de los Valles, or S. James in the Vallies, 25 leagues Westward (but inclining to the South withal) from S. Stevan del Puerto; situate in an open Country, and therefore fenced about with a Wall of Earth: To the Inhabitants whereof (all Spaniards, as in that before) the King of Spain hath granted many fair possessions, to defend those those parts (then being the borders of his Estates) against the Savages.

This Country first attempted by Francisco Garza, but the Conquest of it finished by Cortez, as before is said: each striving, as it seemeth, who should most deface it, and be enrolled for the greatest Man-slayer of the two. But having carried on the course of their Victories almost as far as to the River of Palm, they desisted there; either because already glutted with humane Blood, or that the conquest of those parts would not quit the charge. Inasmuch as in all that Country, from the River of Palm to the Cape of Florida, though lying all along on the Gulf of Mexico, the Spaniards have not one foot of ground: secure enough, because it lieth all along that Gulf, that no other Nation can possess it.

2. MECHUACAN hath on the North-East Panuco; on the East, Mexicana; on the South, part of Tlascala; on the west, the main Ocean; and on the North, the Province of Xalisco in New Gallicia. So called from the abundance of Fish, which their Lakes and Rivers did afford them; the word in their own Language signifying Locum Piscium, or a Country of Fish.

The breadth hereof on the Sea-coast is 80 Leagues, in the borders towards Mexicana but sixty onely. The length I find not yet agreed on. Blest with an Air so found and sweet, that sick Folks come hither out of other Countreys to recover their Health. Well stored with Rivers, some Lakes, innumerable Springs of Running Water, and here and there some hot Baths issuing from the Rocks. The Soil so plentifully productive of all sorts of Grain, (even to admiration) that in some parts hereof four measures of Seed have brought forth 600 measures of the same Grain in the following Harvest. Well wooded, and by reason of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Pastures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all America for Medicinal Herbs and Plants, of very sovereign nature for the Good of Mankind. It affordeth also store of Amber, Mulberry-Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and such other things as chiefly serve for Pomp and Pleasure.

The people tall of Stature, but strong and active; of a good Wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They speak four Languages of their own; but that most generally used is by the Spaniards called the Tarascan Tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious Language, yet most of them speak the Spanish also. More pliant to the Manners and Apparel of that Nation, than the rest of New Spain, (the Mexicans excepted onely;) and so inclinable to the Gospel, that they are almost all gained from their old Idolatries. Inasmuch that the whole Country being divided into fifty Parishes, every Parish hath its several Priests and inferior Ministers, who in the Language of the place do instruct the people in which they preach to them, and hear their Confessions: besides many Convents of Dominicans and of Augustine Friars.

It containeth in it upwards of 150 Towns of Burroughs, besides scattering Villages; ninety of which have Free Schools in them, and almost every one a Spittle for relief of the Sick. The Principal thereof, 1. Zimontezca, the Seat of the old Kings of Mechuacan; in the first Times of Christianity in this Country made a Bishop's See, till removed to Pascuar. The first Bishop Vasquez de Quiroga, 2. Pascuar, of no great note at present, but that the Bishop's See was removed thither, because nearer to Mexico; from which distant 47 Leagues. 3. Valladolid, now the chief City of this Province, and the Bishop's See, removed hither from Pascuar, and here finally settled in a Fair Cathedral, Anno 1544. situate near a large Lake, (said to be bigger than that of Mexico) which doth not onely afford the City great store of Fish, but yieldeth them the opportunity of several pleasures which they take in Boats upon the Water. The Lake and City by the Natives called Guayangaroo. 4. S. Michael, in the way from Mexico (from which distant about 40 Leagues) to the Silver Mines of Zacatecas. First built by Lewis de Velasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the People of this Province from the Chichimechas, a barbarous, and hitherto an unconquered People, who terribly molested the Nations upon whom they border. 5. S. Philips, built at the same time by the said Velasco. 6. Concepcion de Saylax, 17 Leagues from Valladolid, 35 from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez the Vice-Roy, Anno 1570. to be a Stage for Travellers in their Journeys Northwards. 7. Guaxanato, bordering on Panuco, and not far from S. Jago de los Valles, rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea we have, 8. Acatlan, on the borders of New Gallicia, two miles from the Ocean; a Town of not above 30 Houses, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and safe Road for Shipping, (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it seldom without the company of Sailors. 9. Natividad, (or Portus Nativitatis) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly set sail to the Philippine Islands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Cavendish in his Circumnavigation of the World. 10. S. Jago, (or S. Jago de Buena Esperanza) a little on the South of Natividad; the Shores whereof are said to be full of Pearls. 11. Colima, ten leagues from the Sea, but more South than the other; built in the year 1522, by Gonsalvo de Sandoval. 12. Zacatula, by the Spaniards called Concepcion; situate on the Banks of a large (but nameless) River, which rising about the City of Tlascala, passeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards hither was a distinct Kingdom of it self, not subject nor subordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were most of the Princes of these parts: the Frontiers of the Kingdom fenced with Stakes of Wood like a Palizado, to hinder any sudden Incurision of the Mexican Forces. The last King, called Tangayvan Bimbicha, submitted of his own accord to Cortez, Anno 1522, and willingly offered himself to Baptism. But the Spaniards were not pleased with either, because deprived thereby of the Spoil of the Country. But at last, Nemex de Guzman, then President of the Courts of Justice in Mexico, picked a Quarrel with him, accused him falsely (as is said by the very Spaniards) of some practices against his King, burnt him alive with most barbarous and unheard-of Cruelty, and so confiscated his Estate.

3. MEXICANA is bounded on the East with the Gulf of New Spain; on the West, with Mechuacan; on the North with Panuco, and some part of Nova Gallicia; on the South, with Tlascala and part of the Southern Sea. So called from Mexico, the chief City, not of this Province onely, but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, measuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130 Leagues; thence growing narrower, in the midland parts hardly above sixty; and on the Shores of Mare del Zur not above seventeen. The length hereof extendeth from the Sea to the other; that is to say, from the Point of Lobos in the Province of Papantlan, on the Gulf of Mexico, to the Haven of Acapulco on the Southern Ocean: but the determinate number of Miles I do not where find. But measuring it from 17 degrees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22, and allowing something for the slope, we may conclude it to be much of the same length as it is in breadth, that is to say, about one hundred and thirty Leagues.

The Countrey is inferior to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical and Ingenious Arts which are here professed, and in the abundance of Fruits and Cattel: of which last here is such store, that many a private man hath 40000 Kine and Oxen to himself. Fish is here also in great plenty; that only which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico standeth, being reported worth 20000 Crowns yearly to the Kings Exchequer. The people for the most part witty and industrious, full of Valour and Courage: good Handicraftsmen, if they stoop so low as to Trades and Manufactures; rich Merchants, if they give themselves to more gainful Traffick; and hardy Souldiers, if trained up and employed in Service. Their Ancient Arms were Slings and Arrows; since the coming of the Spaniards practised on the Harquebuse. In a word, what was said before of New Spain in general, as to the Soil and People of it most applicable to this.

Chief Rivers thereof, 1. Los Topes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlascala. 2. Citala, and 3. Mitla, both running Eastward towards the Gulf. 4. Papagayo, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco; with a fair Bridge over it. 5. Los Balsas, of a violent course, and in bigness equal unto Tagus in Spain; passable only by a Bridge made of Rafts and Reeds, not very strongly joyned together. 6. The River of S. Francis, both large and swift, but in some parts fordable. Mountains of note I find not any which require a more particular consideration; and so pass them over the more easily.

Towns of most note in it, 1. Mexico, the Seat of an Archbishop, and of the Spanish Vice-Roy, who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give Directions, and determine Controversies; unless it be in such great Causes which are thought fit to be referred to the Council of Spain. This City was first situate in the Lakes and Islands, like Venice; every-where interlaced with the pleasant Currents of Fresh and Sea-waters; and carrying a face of more Civil Government than any of America, though nothing, if compared with Europe. But the Town being destroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on a firm Land on the edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and spacious Plain. The Plain on which it bordereth is said to be 70 Leagues in compass, environed with high Hills, on the tops whereof the Snow lieth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the least of them forty miles in circuit, the one salt, and the other fresh: each of them alternately ebbing and flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the salt Lake standeth the City of Mexico, which many other goodly Towns and stately Houses: on which Lake also 50000 Wherries are continually playing. The Town in compass is six miles, and containeth 6000 Houses of Spaniards, and 60000 Indians. It is a by-word, That at Mexico there are four fair things; viz. The Women, the Apparel, the Houses, and the Streets. Here is also a Printing-House, an University, and a Mint, the Cathedral Church, ten Convents of Nuns, several Houses of Jesuites, Dominicans, Franciscans, Augustinians, and other Religious Orders; some Colledges, many Spittles and Hospitals, and other publick buildings of great state and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently called Tenistlan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occasion; of which more hereafter. Most miserably endamaged by the breaking in of the Waters, Anno 1629, which swelled so high, that they not only overwhelmed the meaner Houses, but the Vice-Roy's Palace; drowned many thousands of the People, and destroyed the Household-stuff of the rest. Occasioned by the Avarice of the Kings Ministers, who had inverted the Money to their private use, which should have fortified the Banks. But being a rich and wealthy City it soon recovered of that Blow, attaining in short time to such infinite Riches, that generally the Merchants, Trades-Men and Artificers, do brave it in a greater State and more splendid Equipage than any people under Heaven of the like condition. 2. Texcoco, situate on the same Lake, but six leagues from Mexico; heretofore twice as big as Sevil; and for the beauty of the Streets, and elegance of the Houses, not inferior to any. Served with fresh Water from the Hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though seated on the brink of a salt Lake. 3. Quilauaca, built wholly in the Lake, like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela; a City of 2000 Households: the way unto it over a Causey made of Plints, half a League long, and about twenty Spans in breadth. 4. Uxatlapala, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of fresh Water, and a beautiful Fountain. A City of 10000 Households, six Leagues from Texcoco, and two from Mexico. 5. Mexicaltzingo, a Burrough of 4000, and 6. Cuyoacan, one of 6000 Families; both upon the Lake: beautified in the Times of their Paganism with many Temples, so gorgeously set out to the Eye, that afar off they seemed of Silver; most of them now converted into Monasteries and Religious Houses. 7. Cholula, the fairest of all the Lake, scarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for state and bigness: said to contain 20000 Families, and to be beautified with so many Temples, that their Turrets equalled the number of the days of the year. The people so addicted unto their Idolatries, and so barbarous in their bloody and beastly Sacrifices, that no fewer then 6000 Infants of both Sexes were yearly murdered on their Altars. 8. Meltilan, seated on a high Hill, begirt about with most pleasant Groves and shady Woods. A Town of about 30000 Inhabitants, the Villages about the Hill being reckoned in: situate 14 Leagues or two days Journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Panuco, the Highway on both sides set with fruitful Trees, to the great comfort and refreshment of the way-faring man. 9. Clantinsleper, twenty Leagues from Meltilan, a Mannor to which 40000 of the Natives do owe Suit and Service. 10. Antepecque, on the South of the City of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Propopampech; a Town belonging to the Marquess of Valla, and seated in the most delicious place of all New Spain. 11. Acachicha, on the North-east of Mexico, betwixt it and the Gulf, bordering on the Province of Pepanila. 12. Acapulco, an Haven-Town of the South-sea, situate on a safe and capacious Bay, at the entrance of it a league broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations and Docks for Shipping: so that it is accounted the safest Haven of all those Seas. At the bottom of it towards the West stands the Town and Castle; the Castle opportunely seated on a little Foreland, both to command the Town, and secure the Port: well walled, and fortified with four very strong bulwarks, on which are planted good store of Ordnance; the Garrison consisting ordinarily of 400 Souldiers: strengthened the rather in regard of the usual intercourse which is betwixt this Port and the Philippine Islands.

The original Inhabitants of this Countrey (as far at least as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecs, now the most rude and barbarous Savages of these parts, together with the Otomies, somewhat more Civil than the rest, but yet rude enough. By these possessed till about the year 502, as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquished and dispossessed by some new Comers, whom they called by one Name Nauatlacoe: issuing, as it is conceived, from those parts of Galicia now, which are now called Nova Mexicana, Anno 720, or thereabouts, but lingering in their March, and waiting all the Countreys as they lay before them. Of these there were were seven Tribes in all, i.e. the Sachimilci, the Chalce, the Tepaneca, the Culuc, the Tlaximilci, the Tlascalteca; all of them settled in these parts, and the five first about the Lake, before the coming in of the seventh Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, so called from Mexi, their chief captain; who much delighted with the situation and conveniences of Tenistlan, then a ruined Town, caused it to be re-built and beautified, by the name of Mexico. This Town from that time forwards was reputed the Head City of their Common-wealth; the six Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of those Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Aristocratical manner. But weary at the last of this equal power, which the prevalency of some Tribes had made very unequal; the Mexicans, one of the weakest of the Tribes, oppressed by the rest, resolved to separate themselves, and to commit the ordering of their Affairs to a King of their own, at first elected by themselves, but afterwards, when once they had conquered most of the other Tribes, the choice was entrusted unto fix, one for every Tribe, (the Tlascalteca, which was the seventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlascala, governing themselves long before as a State apart: who in their choice had an especial eye on those which were strong and active, and fit for Military employments; the People holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their Kings, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Polity and Institutions of this Mexican Kingdom I forbear to write of, farther then as they lie before me in way of their Story, digested by the Government and succession of their several Kings, whose names and actions do occur in the following Catalogue of

- B. Ch. The Kings of MEXICO.
- 1322 1. Acamapitzli, Nephew to the King of Conliacan, but of the Mexican blood by the Fathers side, elected for the first King; who joyned Conliacan and Tongancan unto his Estate, and settled that Kingdom at his death in the way of election.
- 1373 2. Vitzovitzli, Son of Acamapitzli, subdued the Tribe of the Sachimilci, and others of the neighbouring Nations.
- 1394 3. Huizilbihuel, Son of Vitzovitzli, conquered the Tribes of the Chalce and Culuc, with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants.
- 1415 4. Chimalpuqua, Son of Huizilbihuel, won the Town of Tequixtliac, and reduced the rebellious Chalce under his Command.
- 1425 5. Ischualt, Brother of Huizilbihuel, by the Valour of his Cousin Tlascaltlec freed himself from the yoke of the Tepaneca, to whom the Mexicans had before that been Tributaries, and added their Dominions unto his Estate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whose death the Electors by a joint consent chose Tlascaltlec for their King, as a man of whose Vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refused it, saying, that it was more convenient for the Commonwealth that another should be King, and that he should execute that which was for the necessity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back: and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the Publick, as well as if he were. Upon this generous refusal they made choice of Motecuma the sixth.
- 1438 6. Motecuma, one of the Brothers of Chimalpuqua, brought in the Custom of using no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of such Prisoners as the new King should first take in the Wars. By the Valour and good Fortune of Tlascaltlec he subdued so many of the Nations, (whose names I hold unnecessary to here repeated) that he extended his Estate from one Sea to the other.

- 1467 7. Axayacaci, the Nephew of Ischualt by his Son Tecozomilqueto, enlarged his Empire by the Conquest of Tezempetque 200 miles from Mexico, to fit himself with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlaxcala, who rebelled against him, to so hard a freight, that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple.
- 1479 8. Ticocatzli, the Son of Axayacaci, added twelve Cities with their Territories to the Mexican Empire.
- 1484 9. Abuczogin, Brother of Ticocatzli, extended his Borders to Guatemala, repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico, and brought thither a Channel of fresh Water.
- 1502 10. Moteucuma II. Son of Axayacaci, before his Coronation conquered 44 Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian should bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18. year of his Reign was subdued by Cortez.

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards stand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medelline, a Town of Estramadura, 1485, and in the nineteenth year of his Age employed himself in the Trade and business of America, for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clerk unto the Treasurer for the Isle of Cuba; where he husbanded his Affairs so well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in short time he was able to put in 2000 Castellans for his stock, as Partner with Andrepe de Duero, a wealthy Merchant. Grown richer, he was taken to be Partner with Jamez Velasquez, in the Discovery of Tabasco and the parts near Juchitan, Ann. 1518. And now resolved to venture all his stock both of Friends and Money, he furnished himself of eleven Ships, and with 550 Men, set sail from Spain, and arrived at the Island of Acusamil, (now called Santa Cruz) and failing up the River of Tabasco, sacked the Town of Potonchm, the Inhabitants refusing to sell him Victual. After this by the help of his Horse and Ordnance, he discomfited 40000 of the naked Savages, gathered together to revenge themselves for the sack of that Town; and received the King thereof in Vassallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Westward he should meet with some Mines of Gold, he turned his course for the Haven of S. John de Ulloa; where landing he was entertained by Tendilla, Governour of the Town and Country for the King of Mexico; who understanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of so great an Emperour, (of which Tendilla had informed him by especial Messengers) sent him many rich Presents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the sight hereof, he resolved to go unto the place where such Treasures were, took possession of the Country in the name of Charles the fifth, King of Spain and Emperour, and building there the Town of la Vera Cruz, left in it 150 of his men, Attended by no more than 400 Foot, 15 Horse, and six pieces of Ordnance, he pursued his Enterprize; by practice gained unto him those of Zempoallan and Tlascala; whom he understood to be ill-affected to Motecuma: assisted with whose Forces he passed on for Mexico, sacked the Town of Chololla (a Town of 40000 Households) in his march: kindly received into Mexico by the frightened King, whom he caused to acknowledge himself a Vassal to Spain, and to present him, in the name of a Tribute, with so much Treasure as amounted to 160000 Castellans of Gold. A Quarrel growing not long after, Moteczuma, the unhappy King, was by one of his own Subjects killed in the Tumult; and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. But aided with the whole Forces of the Tlascalans, and a Regiment of more Spaniards, (sent thither on a Design against him) he made up an Army of 100000 Savages, 500 Spanish Foot, 80 Horse, 17 pieces of Ordnance; and having with great diligence made ready a Navy of 13 Gallies, and 6000 Canoes or Boats, laid siege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a Siege of three months, the City is taken, sacked and burnt August 13. 1521. But afterwards rebuilt more beautifully than it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hands of the Spaniards by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventurer; endowed for that good service by Charles the fifth with the Town and Territory of Tecoahtepaque, in the Province of Guaxaca, and many other fair Estates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the Title of Marquess of Valia.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are said to have worn a Crown resembling that which is now used by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation was held with great Pomp, but most bloody Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almost infinite, raised out of all Commodities, and paid in kind, whether Natural, or Artificial only: the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and sharing with them in their wealth: some paying in Cups full of powder of Gold, of two handfuls apiece; some Diamonds, and Beads of gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turquoise-stones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pictures, &c. not to say any thing of matters of inferior value. All which in such a wealthy and large Estate, must needs afford him a Revenue equal to the greatest Monarch. And for the encouragement of his Soldiers and Men of War, here were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at least such distinctions of personal merit as had resemblance to such Orders: ) the first distinguished by a Red Ribband, the second called the Lion or Tiger Knight, and the third the Grey Knight: all privileged amongst other things to be clothed in Cotton, wear Breeches, to adorn themselves with Gold and Silver, and to have Vessels gilt or painted; high points, and not permitted unto any else. But it is time that I proceed to the rest of the Provinces.

4. TLASCALA lieth betwixt Mexicana and Guaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred leagues; the breadth along the Shores of the Gulf reckoned 80 leagues, on the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their Bread of; the word in that Language signifying Locum Panis, or the Place of Bread, the same with Bethlehem in the Hebrew.

The Country is very plentiful both of Corn and Cattle, full of rich Pastures, and wonderfully stored with Maize; Level and plain, except towards the Sea, where occurreth a large Chain of craggy Mountains. The richer in the fruits of Nature for those fair and pleasant Rivers wherewith it is watered. The principal of which, 1. Rio de Grijalva, so called from John de Grijalva, who first discovered it; employed herein by James Velasquez, the advancer of Cortez. 2. Rio de Zempal, so called from the Town of Zempallan, about which it riseth. 3. Zahuatl, which makes its way through the Chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Gulf. 4. Rio di Zacatula, a River of the longest course in all this Province; rising near Tlascala, and falling many leagues off into Mare del Zur. The people much of the same nature with those of Mexico, though upon jealousies of State their more bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good use to advance their Conquests on that Kingdom.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tlascala itself, which gives name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Common-wealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate on a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, and in the middle of a large, but pleasant Plain, 60 miles in compass. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hither, that it contained 300000 Inhabitants, now scarce 50000. It had four Streets, (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of War: and in the midst a Market-place so fair and spacious, that 30000 persons might assemble in it to buy and sell, or for any other business. 2. Puebla de los Angeles, (the City of Angels) but most commonly Angelos: built by Sebastian Ramirez, Anno 1531. in the way from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, from which last 22 leagues distant. A Bishops See, and thought to contain in it 1500 Families. 3. Zempallan, on the River so named, the Inhabitants whereof did great service to Ferdinando Cortez in his Conquest of Mexico. 4. Napulucua, of great resort for a Fair of Cattle; and such a kind of Court for ordering the Trade thereof, as we call the Pie-powders. 5. Guaxacingo, a pleasant and well-peopled Town, situate at the foot of the burning Mountain before mentioned, by the ashes and embers whereof the Fields are many times annoyed. 6. Segura, or Segura de la Frontera, in the Region of Tepeac, built by Cortez the next year after the Conquest of Mexico, with fair Streets and handsome Houses; by whom peopled with Spaniards. 7. Vera Cruz, the first Town built in this Country by the said Cortez, now a Bishops See: situate near unto the Gulf, and a great Thorough-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which distant about 60 leagues. 8. S. John de Ulloa, the most noted Port of all this Province; fenced with a Pier against the fury both of Winds and Sea; defended naturally by Rocks and Quick-sands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both sides of the entrance. 9. Medellin, built by Cortez, Anno 1525; and planted with Spaniards: so called in memory of a Town of the same name in Ejtremaadura, in which he was born: situate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlascalans were originally one of the seven Tribes which drove the Chichimecas out of their possessions; and either finding no room left for them on the banks of the Lake, or else willing to subvert alone, withdrew themselves from the rest, founded the City of Tlascala, and there erected a Democratical Estate. Stomached for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by those of Mexico, after they had subdued the rest, they still maintained themselves against all Attempts; and in the end assisted Cortez in the destruction of that Kingdom they so deadly hated. Privileged for that reason by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of Tribute, (except it be a handful of Wheat for every person) and suffered to live under his Protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name is said to contain 200 good Towns and Burroughs, 1000 Villages and upwards; and in them 150000 of the Natives, besides Spanish Colonies. Distributed into 36 Classes or Rural Deanries for Ecclesiastical Government, in which are thought to be 30 Convents and Religious Houses.

5. GUAXACA is bounded on the West with Tlascala; on the East with Jucatan and Ghisapa, one of the Province of Guatimala; on the North, with the Bay of Mexico; and on the South, with Mare del Zur. Extended tended on the South-sea to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to 50 only: in breadth from Sea to Sea, where it bordereth on Tlascala, 120 leagues; not above 60 where it confineth on Chisapa. So called from Guaxaca, once the chief Town of these parts, now named Antequera.

The Air hereof is very sound and sweet, and the Soil as fruitful: plentiful not only of those Commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Country: but of such quantities of Silks, and store of Mulberries, that if the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue would suffice to endow five Bishops-ricks, as good as that which they have already. Scarce any River of this Country but hath Sands of Gold: such plenty of Cocobinel, (a rich Grain used in dying Scarlets, of which before) as also of Cassia, Gold, Silver, and other Metals; that if the people did but add some industry to the wealth of the Country, they might be the richest men in all America. But being naturally slothful, and impatient of labour, they lose all opportunities of gathering Riches. and live but from hand to mouth, as we use to say. Docile enough, and so indulgent unto those who take pains to teach them, that here are reckoned 120 Convents of Dominican Friars, besides other Schools: these last conceived the greater number.

It is subdivided into many particular Provinces, (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds; ) as 1. Misteca, 2. Tuimpeque, 3. Zapoteca, 4. Guaxacalco, 5. Guaxacatl, and the 6. Vale of Guaxaca, this last most memorable, in that it gave the Title of Marquess del Valle to the famous Cortez. Towns of most observation, 1. Tecoahtepac, once the chief Town of Zapotecas; and the Seat of their King. 2. Guatimala, of great note for a Labyrinth not far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3. Antequera, in the Valley of Guaxaca, a stately City and beautified with a fair Cathedral; as that is with Marble pillars of great height and thickness. 4. S. Ildefonso in the Province of Zapoteca. 5. S. Jago, in the Valley of Nexapa, seated upon a lofty Hill. 6. Del Spiritu Santo, distant about three leagues from the shores of the Gulf, in the Province of Guaxacalco; the foundation of Gonsalvo de Sandoval, Anno 1526. 7. Aguatulo, or Guatulo, a noted and convenient Port on the South Sea, much used by those which trade from Peru to Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern Seas. By consequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpose both by Drake and Cavendish, in their Voyages about the World. 8. Tacoatepeque, a Port of the same Sea also, but of far less note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650, inhabited by 150000 of the Natives liable to Tribute, besides Women and persons under Age; not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6. JUCUTAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Island, is said to the Continent only where it meeteth with Guaxaca, the farthest point of it opposite to the Isle of Cuba. Discovered first by Fernandes de Cordova, employed therein by Don Christopher Morante, Anno 1517. and called Jucutan, not as some conceit it, from Jotham the son of Heber, who they think came out of the East, where the Scripture placeth him, (Gen. 10. 30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucutan, which in the Language of the Country signifieth, What say you? For when the Spaniards at their first coming hither asked the name of the place, the Savages, not understanding what they meant, replied, Jucutan, that is, What say you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compass of it, taking the Province of Tabasco into the account, is said to be 900 miles, or 300 Leagues. The Air hot, and the Country destitute of Rivers; not otherwise provided of Water but by Pits and Trenches, which abundantly supply that want. Sufficiently barren, the Soil not bearing Wheat, or any European Fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Not have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal, to enrich the people; who must either live by Trades and Labour, or else beg their bread. Nothing remarkable in the Country, but that here seemed to be some remnants of Christianity, at the Spaniards first coming hither: the people constantly observing a kind of Baptism, which they call in their own Language a second birth, expressing by that word a Requestration; not suffering any one to marry until so initiated. And possible enough it is, that this may be the Country upon which Madoc ap Owen fell; who though he might by some good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he should make any such second Voyage hither as is said in their Chronicles, I by no means grant.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Merida, almost in the Navel of it, situate in the 20 degrees of Latitude, the ordinary Seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop: distant from the Sea on each side about twelve Leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought to have some resemblance. 2. Valladolid, 30. Leagues from Merida, beautified with a most sumptuous Monastery of Franciscan Friars. 3. Campeche, (or S. Francisco, as the Spaniards call it) situate on the Shore of the Gulf. A Town, when first known to the Spaniards, of 3000 Houses, and beautified with such Monuments of Art and industry, as shewed that there was somewhat in this people which was not barbarous: since that no more observable then for being suddenly surprized by Parker, an English Captain, Anno 1596, who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the Town, and many Prisoners; besides a great Ship full of Gold, Silver and other the like precious Commodities, designed for the King of Spain's own use. 4. Tabasco situate in the best part of this Country, so different from all the rest, that it is made by some a distinct Province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nuestra Señora de la Victoria, most commonly Victoria only; and that in memory of the first fortunate Victory which Cortez had upon this people, arming themselves against him for the Sacking of Pontonchan. 5. Pontonchan, sacked by Cortez for denying to supply him with Victual. 6. Salamanca, so called with reference to a Town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coast of this Country lie many Islands; viz. 1. La Zarza, 2. Desconocida, 3. Triangulus, 4. Vermeja, 5. Los Negrillos, 6. Los Alacranes, all within the Gulf. Without it, 7. Zaratana, 8. Pantoia, 9. Lamanay, 10. De Mucheres, or the Isle of Women, 11. Cozumel, by some called Acutamil. This last the biggest, as 15 Leagues long, 5 broad; and the most remarkable, as being the usual way which the Spaniards travelled in their Discoveries of this Country from the Isle of Cuba. For here first landed Ferdinando de Cordoba, Anno 1517, who passing over to Jucutan (but four Leagues distant) brought back nothing but Stripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grijalva, in the same pursuit; who passing by Jucutan to the Province of Guaxaca, left his name behind him to a River. And finally here landed the most fortunate Cortez, who, coasting about the Demi-Island; landed near Tabasco, and there first handled his good fortune with a notable Victory. Yet neither the Island nor peninsula were discovered perfectly till the year 1527, when both subdued by Francisco de Monteio to the Crown of Spain. The Island is now called Santa Cruz.

GUATIMALA.

GUATIMALA is bounded on the North by Jucatan and the Gulf of Honduras; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the East, (or the South-east rather) with Castilla An-rés; on the West, with New Spain. Extended 300 Leagues in length, upon the Coasts of Mare del Zur; but measuring by a straight line, not above 240. the breadth thereof 140 leagues where broadest; in most places narrower. So called from Guatimala the chief Province; as that from the prime City of it, honoured with the Seat of the Governor, and the Courts of Justice.

The nature of the Soil and People (if differing in any material thing from those before) we will consider in the View of those several parts into which this Country is divided. The principal wherof, 1. Chiapa, 2. Verapaz, 3. Guatimala, specially so called, 4. Honduras, 5. Nicaragua, 6. Veragua. The rest of less note easily reduced these.

1. CHIAPA hath on the West New Spain; on the East, Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucatan; and Mare del Zur on the South. Extended 40 leagues in length, not much less in breadth; and anciently inhabited by four Nations, all of several Languages.

The Soil not very natural for Corn or fruits, though Pot-herbs brought from Spain thrive well, as Beans and Lentils; yet Vines and other richer Fruits seldom come to good. Wood-Vines they have, which yield a very pleasant Pulp; and, if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their Trees most of them greater than in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypress; whole Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not so big as those of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Rosin, some such precious Gums as in other places are not usual; and some there are whose leaves being dried upon a powder, afford a sovereign Plaster for exulcerate Sores. And they have need too often to make use of these Plaisters, the Country being full of Snakes and other venomous Creatures, (some of the Snakes no less than 20 foot in length) whose poison, being strong and deadly, doth require such helps. Of the people nothing singular that I have met with, but that they are more musical and exact in Painting than the rest of the Natives.

Towns of most note in it, 1. Ciudad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Country of the Chiapenses, at the foot of an Hill; situate in a round Plain, encompassed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre; afterwards made a Bishops See, and privileged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by such City-Magistrates as they call Alcaldes. 2. Chiapa, in a Vale adjoining; before the building of the other, of most note in this Province, yet still before it in regard of its situation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, than all the rest of the Country. 3. Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zoqueques, possessed of 25 Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monastery of Dominican Friars. 4. Capanzatzila, the principal Town of twenty five, which the Quelenes held in this Tract; remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the same Dominicans. 5. S. Bar- tholomew, another Town in the Territory of the same Quelenes; near which is said to be a great Pit, or opening of the Earth, into which if any man cast a stone, though never so little, there presently followeth a loud and fearful noise like a clap of Thunder. 6. Gueuelan, built by Pedro de Alvarado when he was Governor of these parts; the chief Town of a little Province called Soconusco. 7. Cajapualca, a small Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the Fields adjoining, the Waters whereof are noted to rise and fall as the Ocean doth flow or ebb, and at equal distances of time. Of thirteen Townships which the Zelzales were possessed of, I find no one named; though painted all of them, and set forth to the Eye of the Traveller, with Cochineel, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon the Rarities of Nature, I cannot but take notice (though somewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which turns Wood to Stones: of a Spring in the Cantried of Tafixa, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry: of another in the same Cantried, which for one three years, though it rain never so little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and so successively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many lesser streams, is swallowed up near a Village of the Chiapenses, called Oriztutan, never after seen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are those of Guaxaca; though it be thought there be some Veins of Gold and Silver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work in the Mines.

2. VERAPAZ is bounded on the West with Chiapa; on the East, with Guatimala and Honduras; on the North, with Jucatan; and on the South, with the Territory of Soconusco. In Latine called Provincia Vera Pacis, by the Spaniards, Verapaz; because not conquered by the Sword, but won to the obedience of the King of Spain by the preaching of the Dominican Friars.

The Country is 30 leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high Hills and deep Valleys, but no fruitful Plains; generally overgrown with Woods, very large and thick, which do hinder the free passage of the Winds, that the Air hereof is very showry: inasmuch that for nine months in the year they have always rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reason of this moisture much annoyed with Mosquitos, a kind of Gnats very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwise (as with Fish and other necessaries) they were well provided. No Mines of Gold or Silver discovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. In stead whereof some of their Trees drop a kind of Amber, which they call Liquid Amber; some Mastic, and some other Gums: they have also many Medicinal Woods, as Sarsaparilla, that called China-Wood, and many others.

The people tractable and conform to the Spanish Government, except the Lecandones and Pachutecs, some Remainers of the ancient Savages; who, keeping in the Mountains and craggy Rocks of this Country, have hitherto hitherto retained both their native Freedom and their old Idolatries. No Towns herein possessed by the Spaniards, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. The principal of these S. Augustines, not so much memorable in it self, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains: from which the Rain descending turns into Alabaster, naturally fashioned into Pillars and other Pourtraitures. Into which also many Springs do convey their waters, which there being joyned into a body make an handsome River, able almost at the first appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they also have at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce: but of so little use and trading, that I find no name for it, unless it should be that Xatapa which Herrera speaks of, by whom it is placed in Guatimala.

3. GUATIMALA specially so called, is bounded on the West with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalapa; on the East, with Nicaragua; on the North, with Honduras; and on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the Pacifick Ocean. Extended 30 leagues from the North to the South, and on the shores of Mare del Zur not above seventeen. But reckoning in Tzucacar, Chalteca, and S. Savionrs, three adjoining Regions, by some made Provinces distinct, the dimensions of it must be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Country is Mountainous, but withal very full of Rivers; by consequence commodious both for Fishing and Hunting. Fruitful of Wheat, Maize and other Provisions, but those Fruits not lasting. Not so much subject unto Rain as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with Winds. Full of rich Pastures, and those Pastures of great Heads of Cattel: good store of Cotton-wool, some Balsamum, and other Medicinal liquors; also of the best Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs, which I have no skill of. The People pusillanimous and fearful, greater Proicients in Christianity and Civility than most of the Savages; but so that it is thought they would relapse again to their ancient Paganism, and revive again their old barbarous Customs, if not held in by the bridle of Fear and the curb of Power. The men affirmed to be good Archers, and the Women good Spinners.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Guacapa, a River of a course but of 13 leagues, yet of great depth, and navigable half the way, which falleth into the Mare del Zur. 2. Lempas, watering the Burrough of S. Savionrs; which hath its rise from a great Lake, and his fall into the same Sea also. Here is also said to be a Lake near the Village of Istepeque, of the Waters whereof are made both Sulphur and Alum. And here is said to be a Volcano, or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited no Fire of late, the matter of it being spent, yet the sad Monuments of his Furies do remain among them: another not far off which still casts out smoke.

Towns of most note, 1. Guatimala, or S. Jago de Guatimala, the chief Town of the Province, situate on a little River betwixt both Volcano's, by one of which most terribly wasted, Anno 1541. But being re-edified, it hath since exceedingly flourished, by reason of the Bishops See, the residence of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice. 2. S. Salvador, 40 leagues Eastward from Guatimala, by the Natives called Guzcutlan; situate on the River Guacapa, seven leagues from the Sea, and neighboured by a great Lake of five leagues compass. 3. Acaxutla, at the mouth of the same River, the Port Town to S. Savionrs. 4. S. Trinidad, by the Natives called Samsfonate, the most noted Empory of this Country; the place of Bartery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain and those of Peru. 5. S. Michaels, two leagues from the Bay of Ponfeca, which serves unto it for an Haven. 6. Xeter de la Ponera, the chief Town of the Cantried of Chu-

Intecan, (by which name it was formerly known) situate on the Frontiers towards Nicaragua, and to the South-east of the Bay of Ponfeca: that Bay so named in honour of Roderico Ponfeca Bishop of Bruger, and President of the Council for the Indies, Anno 1532. by Giles Gonzales de Avila, who first discovered it: About and in this Bay are ten little Islands, four of them inhabited, and plentifully furnished with Wood, Water, and Salt.

4. HONDURA hath on the South Guatimala, specially so called; on the West, the Bay, or Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz: on the North and East, the Sea called Mare del Noordo; on the South-east, Nicaragua; on the South, Guatimala specially so called. In length from East to West by the banks of that Sea 150 leagues, and about 80 leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras, imposed upon it from the depth of the Sea about the principal Head-land of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Countrey is either Hills or Valleys little Champain in it; fruitful of Maize and Wheat, and of very rich Pasturage; made so by the constant overflowings of their Rivers about Michalms, which do not only soil their Grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them, 1. Hungara, 2. Chamalucan, 3. Ulna; all neighboured by fertile Fields and pleasant Meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here; but not yet discovered: the people being solothful and given to idleness, that they rather live on Roots, than take pains in tilling of their Land; and therefore not easily entreated to toil for others, but where necessity and strong hand do compell them to it.

Towns of most note, 1. Valladolid, by the Natives called Commyagua, 40 leagues distant from the Sea, situate in a pleasant and fruitful Valley, on the banks of the River Chamalucan; and honoured with a Bishops See, fixed here about the year 1558. but built near the place where once Francisco de Monteiro, Governour of this Province, had planted a Colony of Spaniards, Anno 1530, by the name of S. Maria de Commyagua. 2. Gracior de Dios, 30 leagues Westward of Valladolid, built by Gabriel de Rojas, Anno 1530. to be a place of defence for those who worked in the Mines against the Savages. But finding himself unable to make it good, he desisted and left it. Re-edified again by Gonzalvo de Alvarado, and since well inhabited. 3. S. Peters, eleven leagues distant from the Port of Cavallos, but seated in a most healthy Air; and therefore made the dwelling-place of the Farmers of the Kings Customs, who have their houses in this Town, and follow their business in the other, as occasion is. 4. Porto de Cavallos, so called from some Horses thrown overboard in a violent Tempest: the most noted Haven of these parts, and strong by natural situation; but so ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591. it was pillaged by Captain Christopher Newport, Anno 1566. by Sir Anthony Sherley. Deserted on those spoils, and not since inhabited. 5. S. Thomas de Castille, 18 leagues from Cavallos, naturally strong, and fortified according to the Rules of Art: to which, as to a place of more strength and safety, Alphonso Briado de Castille, President of the Sessions of Guatimala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6. Traxillo, seated on the rising of a little Hill betwixt two Rivers, (one of them that which is called Haguara) distant from Cavallos 40 leagues to the East, and 60 leagues to the North of Valladolid; surprized and pillaged by the English, Anno 1576. Not far hence towards the North-east lieth the Cape of Honduras, from whence the shore drawing inwards till it join with Jucatan, makes up a large and goodly Bay, called the Gulf of Honduras: 7. S. George de Olancho, so named from the Valley Olancho, in which it is seated; a Valley noted heretofore for some golden Sands, which Gujape, a River of it, was then said to yield.

5. NICARAGUA is bounded on the North with Honduras; on the East, with Mar del Noordo; and the Province of Veragua; on the South, with Mar del Sur; on the West, with Guatemala. By Didaco Lopez de Salcedo, who first subdued it, it was called the New Kingdom of Leon; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither would not be so lost.

The Country is destitute of Rivers, except that part thereof towards Veragua called Costa Rica, reckoned a Province of itself. The want thereof is supplied by a great Lake, or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 Leagues in compass, ebbing and flowing like the Sea; upon the banks of which stand many pleasant Villages and single Houses. A Lake well stored with Fish, but as full of Crocodiles: and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it self into the Sea about four Leagues off. Not very rich in Corn, (most of which is brought them from Peru) but well stored with Cattel: level and plain, and shadowed with frequent Trees; one amongst others of that nature, that a man cannot touch any part of it, but it withereth presently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrots as England of Crows; stored with great plenty of Cotton-wool, and abundance Sugar-Canes. In a word to pleasing generally to the Eye, that the Spaniards call it by the name of Mahomet's Paradise.

The People for the most part speak the Spanish Tongue, and willingly conform themselves to the Spanish Garb, both of behaviour and apparel: well weaned from their old barbarous Customs, retained only by some Mountainers, whom they call Chontales. All of good Stature, and of colour indifferent white. They had before they received Christianity a settled and politic form of Government. Only as Solon appointed no Law for a man's killing of his Father, so had this people none for the killer of a King; both of them conceiving that men were not so unnatural as to commit such Crimes. A Thief they judged not to death, but adjudged him to be a Slave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his Service he made satisfaction. A course more merciful and not less just, than the loss of Life.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, situate on the Lake aforesaid, the Residence of the Governour, and the Bishop's See; built in Sandy Soil, and begirt with Woods. 2. Granada, on the same Lake, sixteen Leagues from Leon; beautified with a fair Church and a strong Castle, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordova: the City seated in a liberal and wealthy Soil, well furnished with Sugar-Canes; for the refining of which here are many Work-houses, which they call Ingenios. 3. Segovia, distant from the former about 30 Leagues, rich in Veins of Silver. 4. Jaen, (all called according to the names of some Towns in Spain) situate at the end of the Lake aforesaid; from whence by a long and narrow Channel it disembogueth into the Sea near the Port of S. John. 5. Realio, about a League distant from the Port of Possession, in the Latitude of 12 degrees and 40 minutes; inhabited for the most part by Shipwrights and Mariners. 6. Nicoia, giving name to a little Territory, within the bounds whereof standeth. 7. Avarriner also. 8. Cartago, 40 Leagues from Nicoia, equally distant from both Seas, on each of which it hath a convenient Port: this Town is the principal of that part which is called Costa Rica.

6. VERAGUA hath on the West Costa Rica; on the East, bounded with the District of Panama; washed on both other sides by the Sea; extended 50 Leagues in length from West to East; not above 25, where narrowest, from one Sea to the other. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of greatest note in it at the first Discovery.

The Soil hereof is Mountainous and exceeding barren, not fit for Tillage, and less useful in feeding Cattel; sufficiently provided of Maize and Pot-herbs, but else of little necessary for the life of man, unless the people could eat Silver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Metals, but especially of Gold, here are such never perishing mines, that the Spaniards think them able to supply all Wants, and cure all Diseases. Once being asked what made them so greedy of that Metal, it was answered, That they were much troubled with Grief of Heart, for which Gold was a most sovereign Medicine. And as the Country, such the People, hardy, courageous, and warlike, and such as bear the Spanish Yoke with great impatience: the stoutest and most untameable people being bred most commonly in mountainous and woody Countreys.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1. Veragua, which gives name unto it. 2. Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Tebra; at the mouth of which Columbus purposed to have settled a Spanish Colony, for the better transporting of his Gold. But finding that the Channel, on the ceasing of some Rain which had fallen before, was become so shallow that no Ship could go in or out, he gave over that purpose. 3. La Trinidad, 4. La Concepcion; all falling into Mar del Noordo. Their chief Towns, 1. Concepcion, upon the Mouth of that River, the Seat of the Governour. 2. La Trinidad, on the banks of that River, near the Port of Belen, and six Leagues Eastwards of La Concepcion. 3. S. Foy, (Oppidum S. Fidei) twelve Leagues from Concepcion on the South; where the Spaniards melt and cast their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4. Carlos, not far from the Shores of Mar del Sur. 5. Philippina, on the West of Carlos. Each seated on a large and capacious Bay. Before which Bay lie a Frig of Islands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongst them. Thirty in all; the principal, Zebaco, Cabain, S. Marie, S. Mariba, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented; the people being dragged into the Continent to work in the Mines.

This Country oweth its first discovery unto divers men according to the several Members and Divisions of it. The last in order being the first that was discovered, but the last that was conquered had the honour to be visited by Columbus himself. Who driving up and down these Coasts in the year 1502, hit on the entrances of the River which afterwards he caused to be called Belen; where, hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Horira not far off, he intended to fortifie. But the River failing him, as was said before, and finding nothing fit to sustain his men; he bent himself, though unwillingly, to a farther search. He had before touched upon Honduras also, but I find not that he landed on it: the settling of these Countreys being destined to another hand. Twenty years after this the most fortunate Cortez, having fully quieted and composed the affairs of Mexico, resolved to make his Master Lord of the rest of America; and to that end sent out his Officers and Commanders into several parts. By Pedro de Alvarado he subdued Guatemala; Honduras, by Christopher de Olid; Veragua and Nicaragua, by Gonsalvo de Cordoba. But fearing lest the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he resolved to visit them in person. Attended by a choice Band 150 Horse, and as many Foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his journey in October 1524, and held on his Progress as far as to Traxillo, where finding that Gonsalvo de Cordoba had so plaid his Game as there was no necessity of going farther, he made a stand, having marched above 400 leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526, he came home to Mexico: with whose return we conclude also our Survey of the Northern Peninsula, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexicana.

And so much for MEXICANA.

OF PERUANA.

PERUANA, the other of the two great Peninsulas, into which the vast Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now stand divided, hath the form of a Pyramis reversed; more answerable thereunto than Africa, though that be so resembled. Joined to the other by a straight and narrow Isthmus, called the Streights of Darien, whereof we shall have opportunity to speak more anon: which looks but like a Stone mislaid in so great a Building; or the first step by which we are to climb the top, as in other Pyramids.

The name is derived from Peru, the chief Province of it: the Circumnavigation said to be 1700 miles. Nothing else to be said in the general, but what will serve more fitly for particular places; except it be the description of some prime Mountains and principal Rivers, which being of too long a course to be reckoned unto any one particular Province, may more properly deserve place here. Of these the chief are, 1. Orellana, or the River of Amazons: called by the first name from Francisco de Orellana, a Spaniard, who first discovered it; by the second, from the Amazons, a kind of stout and warlike Women, who are said to have inhabited on the Banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Peru, the Fall in the North Sea, or Mar del Noordo. A River of so long a course, that the said Orellana is reported to have failed in it 5000 miles, the several windings and turnings of it being reckoned in: and of so violent a Current, that it is said to keep its natural taste and colour above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea; the Channel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accounted 60 leagues from one point to the other. 2. Orenoque, navigable 1000 miles by Ships of burthen, and 2000 miles by Boats and Pinnaces. Having received into it an hundred Rivers, it openeth into the same Sea with 16 mouths, which part the Earth into many Islands, (some equal to the Isle of Wight): the most remote of those Channels 300 miles distant from one another. By some it is called Rafiana, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the Discovery and Description of it; or rather in discovering it so far, as to be able to describe it. 3. Maragnon, of a longer course than any of the other, affirmed to measure at the least 6000 miles from his first rising to his fall; and at his fall into the Sea to be no less than 70 leagues from one side to the other. More properly to be called a Sea, than many of those great Lakes, or largest Bays, which usually enjoy that name. 4. Rio de la Plata, a River of a less course than the other, but equal unto most in the World besides: In length from its first Fountain 2000 miles, in breadth at his fall into the Sea, about 60 leagues; and of so violent a Stream, that the Sea for many leagues together altereth not the taste of it. All these, as they do end their race in the Atlantick, so they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at least some spur or branch of that body.

But before we venture farther on more particulars, we are to tell you of these Andes, that they are the greatest and most noted Mountains of all America; beginning at Timania, a Town of Papayan, in the new Realm of Granada, and thence extended Southwards to the Streights of Magellan, for the space of 1000 leagues and upwards. In breadth about 20 leagues, where they are at the narrowest; and of so vast an height withal, that they are said to be higher than the Alps, or the head of Caucasus, or any of the most noted Mountains in other parts of the World. Not easie of ascent, but in certain Paths, by reason of the thick and unpaffable Woods, with which covered in all parts thereof which lie towards Peru (for how it is on the other side, or by what People it is neighboured, is not yet discovered;) barren and craggy too withal, but so full of venomous Beasts and poisonous Serpents, that they are said to have destroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Peru, in his march that way. Inhabited by a People as rude and savage as the place, and as little hospitable. The most noted Mountain of America, as before was said, and indeed the greatest of the World. Of fame sufficient of themselves, not to be greatened by the addition of impossible Fictions, or improbable Fictions. Amongst which last I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius, a right learned man, who will have these Mountains to be that which the Scripture calleth by the name of Sepphar, Gen. 10. 30. and there affirmed to be the utmost Eastern limit of the Sons of Jockan: the vanity and inconsequences of which strange conceit we have already noted, when we were in India.

Proceed we now unto the particular Descriptions of this great Peninsula, comprehending those large and wealthy Countries which are known to us by the names of, 1. Castella Aurea, 2. The new Realm of Granada, 3. Peru, 4. Chile, 5. Paraguay, 6. Brasil, 7. Guzana, and 8. Paria, with their several Islands. Such other Isles as fall not properly and naturally under some of these, must be referred unto the general Head of the American Islands, in the close of all.

CASTELLA del ORO.

CASTELLA del ORO, Golden Castile, (Aurea Castella, as the Latines) is bounded on the East and North with Mare del Noords; on the West, with Mare del Zur, and some part of Veragua; on the South, with the new Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Castile, with reference to Castile in Spain, under the favour and good fortune of the Kings whereof it was first discovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for distinction sake, and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the first Discoverers found in it. It is also called Terra Firma, because one of the first parts of Firm Land which the Spaniards touched at, having before discovered nothing but some Islands only.

The Soil and People being of such several tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will consider both apart in the several Provinces of, 1. Panama, 2. Darien, 3. Nova Andaluza, 4. S. Martha, and 5. the little Province De la Hacha.

1. PANAMA, or the District of Panama, is bounded on the East with the Gulf of Uraba, by which parted from the Land of this large Peninsula; on the West, with Veragua, one of the Provinces of Guatemala in Mexicana; washed on both the other sides with the Sea. So called of Panama, the Town of most esteem herein, and the Juridical resort of Castella Aurea.

It taketh up the narrowest part of the Strait or Isthmus, which joins both Peninsulas together: not above 7 or 8 Leagues over in the narrowest place, betwixt Panama and Porto bello, if measured by a straight line from one Town to the other; though 18 Leagues according to the course of the Road betwixt them, which by reason of the Hills and Rivers is full of turnings. Of some attempts to dig a Channel through this Isthmus, to let one Sea into the other, and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by Land, we have spoken already.

The Air hereof is foggy, but exceeding hot, and consequently very unhealthy, chiefly from May unto November: the Soil either Mountainous and barren, or low and miry; naturally so unfit for Grain, that it yieldeth nothing but Maize, and that but sparingly; better for Pasturage, in regard of its Plenty of Grass, and the goodness of it: so full of Swine that the Spaniards first coming hither, that they thought they never should destroy them; now they complain as much of their want, or paucity. As for the Inhabitants, whatsoever they were formerly is not now material: most of the old stock rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their room; so that the Country in all parts, except towards the Seas, almost desolated, or forsaken.

The Country, as before was said, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers: the principal whereof, 1. Chagre, by the Spaniards called Rio de Leguano, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Noords betwixt Nombre de Dios and Porto Bello, 2. Sardinilla, 3. Sardina, 4. Rio de Colubras, or the River of Snakes, and 5. Rio de Comagre; all falling into the same Sea. Then on the other side, 6. Chepo, whose Sands in former times yielded plenty of Gold.

7. Rio de las Balsas, on the banks whereof growth great store of Timber for the building of Ships. 8. De Congo, emptying it self into the Bay of S. Michael.

Towns of most note, 1. S. Philip, seated on a safe and strong Haven, called Porto bello: built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the second, but by the Counsel of John Baptista Antonelli, to be the Staple of the Trade betwixt Spain and Panama; partly, in regard of the unhealthiness of Nombre de Dios, where it was before; but chiefly, because that Town was found to have lien too open to the Invasions of the English. Fortified with two strong Castles; (on each side of the Haven one;) but for all that surprized and pillaged by the English under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. 2. Nombre de Dios, conveniently seated in the upper Sea for a Town of Trade; and for that reason made the Staple of such Commodities as were trucked betwixt Peru and Spain, which brought from Spain, and landed here, were from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there shipped for Peru; or brought from Peru, and landed at Panama, were by Land brought unto this place, and here shipped for Spain. It took this name by Didaco Niquez, a Spanish Adventurer, who having been distressed by Tempests was driven in here, and bid his men go on shore on Nombre de Dios in the name of God. In reference hereunto by the Latines, borrowing a Greek word, it is called Theonyma. Of great Trade once, on the occasion before mentioned: but in the year 1584, the Trade was removed unto Porto bello, by the counsel of Antonelli before named; and some years after that, the Inhabitants also. To hasten which, the taking of this Town by Sir Francis Drake served exceeding fitly.

3. Acla, on the Coast of the same Sea also, but on the South-east of Nombre de Dios. 4. Nata, or S. Jago de Nata, situate on the lower Sea on the Borders of Veragua, about 30 Leagues on the West of Panama. 5. Panama, the chief City of Castella Aurea, the Residence of the Governour and the Courts of Justice, honoured with a Bishops See, a Suffragan to the Arch-bishop of Lima, and beautified with three fair Monasteries, and a College of Jesuites. Seated in the 9. degree of Northern Latitude; and so near the Sea that the waves come close unto the Wall. A Town through which the Wealth of Spain and Peru passed every year; yet not containing above 350 Houses: the number of the Souldiers greater than that of the Citizens. 6. S. Cruz la Real, a League from Panama, inhabited totally by Negroes, brought out of Guinea.

This Province was the first of those on the Firm Land which were discovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Island lying on the Shore near Porto bello, which he caused to be called Los Bastimentos; because being cast thereon by chance, he found good store of Maize and other Provisions, called Bastimentos by the Spaniards. But the chief Islands of this Province are those which Columbus never saw, called the Islands of Pearls, situate in the Southern Sea, opposite to Panama, from which distant 17 Leagues, or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called led Tarrequi, the other Del Rio; the rest of them rather Rocks than Islands. Much famed not only for the abundance, but the excellency of the Pearls there found; fairer than those of Margarita and Cubagua, so much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniards, till by their cruelty and covetousness they unpeopled the Islands and destroyed the Pearls. Inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and some Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Masters Cattel in the Fields and Pastures.

2. DARIEN hath on the North the District of Panama; on the South, New Granada; on the East, the River of Darien, whence it hath its name, and the Gulf of Uraba; and on the West, the main Southern Ocean.

The Country is of a temperate Air, and a fruitful Soil: so happy in the production of Melons, and such other Fruits, that within twenty days after they are sown they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes and other Fruits; either natural hereunto, or brought hither from Europe. A Tree here is called Hono, not elsewhere known; the shade of which is conceived to be so wholesome, that the Spaniards seek them out to sleep under them. Out of the Blossoms of it they distil a perfumed Water; of the Bark a Bath or Lavatory good for the opening of the Pores, and redress of Weariness; and from the Roots they draw a Liqueur, which they use to drink of. Of Beasts and Fowl great Plenty, whether wild or tame; and some of them not heard of in other places.

Principal Rivers hereof, 1. Darien, whence it hath the name. A clear Water, and much drank of, but of a slow course and a narrow Channel; able to bear no bigger Vessels than those of one piece of Wood, used among the Savages, we may call them Troughs. But with this slow course it falleth at last into the Gulph of Uraba, a large Arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is said to be eight Leagues over. 2. Rio de los Redos, and 3. De la Trepadera; both emptying themselves into the Gulf of Uraba. 4. Corobaci, on the same side of the Country also. 5. Bern, a River of the South-Sea, not much observable, but that some have laboured to derive the Etymology of Peru from thence.

Towns of most note, though few of any, 1. Darien, on the Bank of the Gulf of Uraba; oftentimes too unhealthy by the Mists which do thence arise, that the Inhabitants use to send their sick people to the fresh Air of Corobaci to revive their spirits. By the Spaniards it was called S. Maria Antigua, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Enesio a Spanish Adventurer, Anno 1510. and grew so suddenly into Wealth and Reputation, that within four years it was made an Episcopal See. But being built too near the banks of the Darien, in a moorish and unhealthy place, both the Episcopal See and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planned here; but either forsaken by themselves, or destroyed by the Savages; so that now from Acla to the bottom of the Gulf of Uraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but some few scattered houses in all that Tract, for the use of the Natives; who formerly made their Nests like Birds, on the tops of Trees. 2. Bizen, 3. Los Angadefos; two small Villages on the other side of the Country, possessed by the Savages. Besides these, and some sorry Sheds here and there dispersed, all the rest is a Desert. So that not being able to maintain the Reputation of a distinct Province, the Government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Prefect of Panama.

3. NOVA ANDALUZIA hath on the West the River Darien, and the Gulf of Uraba; on the East, the Province of S. Martha; on the North, the main Ocean; and on the South, the New Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andaluza, a Province of Spain. Called also by some Writers Carthagena, from Carthago now the chief City of it.

It is in length, from the Gulf of Uraba to the River of Magdalen, 10 Leagues, and near upon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of Woods, but in those Woods great store of Robin, Guins, and some kinds of Balfams. Here is also said to be a Tree, which whosoever toucheth, is in danger of poisoning. The Soil, by reason of the abundance of Rain which falls upon it, very moist and spewy; inasmuch that few of our European Fruits have prospered in it. Few Veins of Gold in all the Country, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena; where the Spaniards at their first coming found great store of Treasure. But it was taken out of the Graves and Monuments of the Dead, not found in Mines, nor digged for, as in other places: such being the Reputation of that Territory in former times, that the Nations far and near did carry the Bodies of their Dead to be buried in it, with great quantity of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and stout, whilst they were a people; But giving the Spaniards many overthrowes before fully conquered, they have been so consumed and wasted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1. Rio de los Redos, and 2. Rio de los Anades, both falling into the Bay of Uraba. 3. Zenda, which passing through the Province above-mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean over against the Island Fuente. 4. S. Martha, of long course and much estimation. For rising in the most Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada; near the Equinoctial, it passeth through the whole length of that Kingdom, and at the last tangleth its stream with that of the River Magdalen, not far from Mopox. By the Natives it is called Cocora. And as for Mountains, those of most note are a continual ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Cordillera, by the Natives Abibe; craggy and difficult of ascent; in breadth affirmed to be 20 Leagues, but the length uncertain, the farthest ends of them towards the South not discovered hitherto.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Carthagena, situate in a sandy Peninsula, ten degrees distant from the Equator: well built, and for the signals of it of great Wealth and State; consisting of 500 Houses, or thereabout; but those neat and handsome. Beautified with a Cathedral Church, three Monasteries, and one of the best Havens of all America. Well fortified on both sides, since the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585, took it by Assault, and carried thence, besides inestimable sums of money, 240 Bras pieces of Ordnance. 2. Tolus, by the Spaniards called S. Jago, twelve Miles from Carthagena, memorable for the most sovereign Balfam of all these parts, called the Balfam of Tolu; little inferior, if at all to the Balfam of Egypt. 3. Mopox; or Santa Cruz de Mopox, near the Confluences of the Rivers of Martha and Magdalena. 4. Baranca de Melambo, on the Banks of the River Magdalen, six Leagues from the Ocean, where such Commodities as are brought by Sea for the New Realm of Granada use to be unhipped, and carried by Lighter or small Boats up to the River. 5. Sebastia de Buena vista, built by Alonso de Ojeda, Anno 1508, in the first Attempt upon this Country; situate on a rising ground, near the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a League and a half from the Sea. 6. Villa de Maria, 30 Leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4. S. MARTHA hath on the West Nova Andaluza; on the East, Rio de la Hacha; on the North, the main Ocean; on the South, the New Realm of Granada: about 70 Leagues in length, and as much in breadth.

breadth. So called from S. Mariba the chief City of it.

The Country is mountainous and barren, not fit for Pasturage or Tillage; productive notwithstanding of Limons, Oranges, Pomegranates, and such other Fruits as are brought hither out of Spain. The Air on the Sea-coasts very hot and scalding, and in the mid-land parts as cold, because of the neighbourhood of some Mountains always covered with Snow. The principal of those Mountains, a long ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nivadas, or the Snowy Mountains; discernable by the Mariners 30 Leagues at Sea, by whom called, the Mountains of Tairona, from a Valley of that name beneath them, the Inhabitants whereof, by the advantage of those Hills, have hitherto preserved their liberty against the Spaniards. The rest, though subject to the Spaniards, have their several Kings, affirmed to be an arrogant and ill-natur'd people; made worse perhaps than indeed they are, by reason of their hate to the Spaniards, whose Government they live under with great unwillingness.

Chief Rivers of this Province are, 1. Rio Grande de la Magdalena; which hath its Fountain in the Hills of the New Realm of Granada, not far from the Equator, but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and S. Mariba, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; where dividing it self, it maketh an Island of 5 Leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; discernable for ten Leagues space from the rest of the Main by the taste and colour of the Water. 2. Rio de Cazaze, which falleth into the Magdalen; as doth also 3. Cesar, by the Natives called Pompatan; which having its Fountain near the City of Kings in the Vale of Upur, passeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4. Ayumas, another River of this Tract; accompanied with whom he runneth Westward for the space of 70 Leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalen, as before is said, near the Forest of Alpuente. 5. Bubia. 6. Pirau. 7. Don Diego. 8. Palamini. 9. Gayza, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of most observation, 1. S. Mariba, situate on the Shores of the Ocean, in the Latitude of ten degrees and 30 minutes: neighboured by a safe and convenient Haven, defended from the Winds by an high Mountain near unto it, and honoured with an Episcopal See. Small, and ill-built when it was at the best; nor well recovered of the Spoil it suffered by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595, and by Sir Anthony Shirley, the next year after. 2. Tenariffe, on the Banks of the Magdalen, 40 Leagues from S. Mariba. 3. Tanalamque, by the Spaniards called Villas de las Palmas, 20 Leagues to the South of Tenariffe. 4. Ciudad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Vale of Upur, on the Banks of a deep and violent River, called Guatavira, which not far off falleth into the Cesar: ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Tairona, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5. Ramada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the same Valley of Upur; as liberally furnished with Vains of Brasi, as it is with Stones. 6. O- canna, on the Western Reach of the River Cesar, equally distant from its Confluence with Ayumas, and its fall into Magdalen.

5. RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-East of S. Mariba, environed on two sides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the East) with a large and spacious arm of the Sea called Golfo de Venezuela, the extremities hereof North-west, called Cabo la Vela; on the North-east, Cabo di Coquitococa.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a small Town, consisting of no more than an hundred Houses, but big enough to give name to so small a Province; built on a little Hill about a Mile from the Sea: the Haven inconvenient, and exposed to the Northern Winds, but the Soil about very rich, fruitful of all such Plants as are brought from Spain, well stored with Vains of Gold, excellent Salt-wiches, and some Gems of great worth and virtue. Distant eight Leagues from New Salamanca, and 18 Leagues from the Cape la Vela: surprized and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. 2. Rancheria, six Leagues on the East of De la Hacha, inhabited for the most part by such as get their living by Pearl-fishing. 3. Topia, five Leagues from La Hacha, and almost as much from the Sea: the fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca were terribly wasted by the English in the year aforesaid, because the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000 Ducats not to burn that Town, would not stand to his Bargain.

These Countries, discovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was said, were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two several men, employed in the subduing of their several parts, Anno 1508. To Didaco Niqueza was allotted the Government and Conquest of those parts hereof which lie on the West of the Bay of the Uraba, containing the Prefectures of Darien and Panama, by the name of Castella del Oro; and to Alonso Ojeda, all that lay on the East of that Gulf, by the name of Nova Andalusia. But these two finished not the work, though they first began it: Enesius discovering farther on the River of Darien than Niqueza had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South-Sea, where Panama and the best of their Trading lieth, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Prefectures of S. Mariba, and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and subdued by the Spaniards) being added to it. One of their last Kings which held out against the Spaniards was called Abibea, who had his Palace on the top of a Tree, (as most of his Subjects had their Houses;) from which when Francisco de Vasquez, a Spanish Captain could by no other Rhetorick win him to descend, he laid his Axe to the Root, and began to fell it: which seen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his Life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

OF NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the New Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North with Castella Aurea; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Venezuela. The Countries lying on the South, are not yet discovered, shut up with vast Hills, and impassable Mountains, except only in those parts which lie near the Sea, where the way lieth open to Pernu. Thus called by Gonzalvo Ximenez, the first Discoverer; who, being a Native of Granada in Spain, gave this name unto it.

It is in length 130 Leagues, and as much in Breadth; reckoning Popayana for a part of it, though by some made a distinct Government. So that we may divide the whole into these two parts, 1. Granada specially so called, lying on the West; and 2. Popayana, lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA, specially so called, hath an Air for the most part well tempered betwixt heat and cold; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and shortness of dayes. The Country is full of Woods, but of great fertility, well stored with Corn and Pasturage, many Herds of Cattel, some Vains of Gold and other Metals, and in that part hereof which is called Tunia, great plenty of Emeralds; and amongst their Woods, that called Guaia-cum, medicinal for the French Disease, grows in great abundance. The People are tall and strong of Body, not very industrious, the greatest part of their time being spent in Songs and Dances. The women of a white and more clear Complexion than any of their Neighbours, and more handsomely habited, apparelled in black or parti-coloured Mantles girt about their middles; their Hair tied up, and covered most an end with Chaplets intermixed with Flowers, and artificially composed.

Rivers of note I find not any, but those of S. Mariba and S. Magdalena, described before: nor any distinction of it into several Provinces, but by the names of Tunia, Bagota, Panches, Colyme, and Musi, by which the Savages were distinguished when first known to the Spaniards; with reference to which the Principal of their Towns are by some described.

Towns then of greatest note, 1. S. Foy de Bagota, but commonly S. Foy, the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of the Governour. Built by Gonzalvo Ximenez de Quisada, at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the Lake of Guatavira, on the banks of which they used to sacrifice to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, besides those of the Natives; and situate in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude. 2. S. Michael, 12 Leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well traded Market. 3. Tocama, in the Territory of the Panches, a barbarous and man-eating people, till reclaimed by the Spaniards; and Matters of the richest part of all the Country. The Town is about 15 Leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-east; and seated on the banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is swallowed up in the body of Magdalen. 4. Tudela in the Country of the Musi and Colyme, two warlike Nations; situate on the banks of the River Zarbi; and made a Colony of the Spaniards at their first coming hither; but deserted by them not long after, for fear of the Savages, though the want of Provisions was pretended. 5. Trinidad, on the same River, but somewhat lower, and more remote from the Savages, by them notwithstanding much annoyed: the Fields thereof full of Vains of Crystal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalcedonies. 6. La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the same Territory of the Musi and Colyme, Anno 1572. 7. Tunia, so called according to the name of the Tribe or Province in which it is situate; built on the top of an high Hill, that it might serve for a Retreat and Fortrefs against the Savages; now a well-traded Empory, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to impress 280 Horse for present service. 8. Pampelona, 60 Leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-east, rich in Mines of Gold and Herds of Cattel. 9. Merida, on the North of Pompiana, the farthest Town of all this Province on the North-east towards Venezuela: as 10. S. John de los Planos, or S. John upon the Plains, is in the South-east, 50 Leagues from S. Foy, and seated in a corner full of Vains of Gold.

2. POPAYANA lieth on the West of New Granada strictly and specially so called; from which parted by the River Mariba, which hath its original in this Country: on the North bounded with Nova Andalusia, or Carthagena; and with Mare del Zur upon the West. Extended in length from North to South 130 Leagues at the least; and from the River to the Sea betwixt 30 and 40.

The Country over-cloy'd with Rain, breeds but little Maize, less Wheat, and almost no Cattle; though in some places richer than it is in others. The People anciently Man-eaters, and as rude as any; now more industrious and affable than the other Americans, especially about Popayan, where the Soil is also better tempered than in other places. The Rivers of most note, beside that of S. Mariba, which we have spoken of already, and some lesser streams which fall into it, are 1. Rio de S. Juan. 2. Rio de Cedror. 3. Rio de S. Jago; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greatest note, 1. Popayan, called by the name of the King hereof, when first known to the Spaniards; situate on a nameless, but pleasant River, in the midst of a Plain, of great Wealth and healthy Air, in two degrees and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude; the ordinary residence of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop. The Building fair unto the Eye, but slight; excepting the Cathedral, and a Monastery of the Friars called De Mercede, which are strong and lasting. 2. Antiocha, (or Sancta fides de Antiocha) on the borders of Nova Andalusia, 100 Leagues distant from Popayan. Seated upon a little River which falls into the Mariba, from which twelve Leagues distant. 3. Caramanta, on the Mariba it self. 4. Patia, in a pleasant Valley, on the banks of a small River, but of excellent water. 5. S. Anne, in in the Centred of Anzerman, by which name it is sometimes called: built on a little Hill betwixt two sweet Rivers, and compassed round about with a Grove of most pleasant Fruits. 6. S. Jago de Arma, the chief Town of the Centred of Arma; situate in a Territory very rich in Gold, but otherwise unprovided of all manner of necessaries: six Leagues to the North-east of Popayan. 7. Arribage, in the Province of Quimbaya, 22 Leagues from S. Jago de Arma; seated in a Plain betwixt two Torrents, seven Leagues from the River of S. Martha. 8. Cali, a League from that River, but on the Banks of another, in the Latitude of four degrees: neighboured by a vast and mighty Mountain, at whose feet it standeth; there built by Sebastián de Betalcazar, the first Discoverer of this Country. 9. Bonaventura, on a Bay so called in the Southern Ocean; a small Town, but of great use for the ready conveyance of the Commodities of New Spain unto Popayan, and to other Towns of this Province. 10. Timana, 80 Leagues from Popayan towards the East, at the foot of that vast ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which hereabouts taking their beginning, extend as far Southwards as to the Straights of Magellan. 11. S. Juan de Pasto, situate in a pleasant Valley, but one degree from the Equator. 12. Sebastián de la Plata, so called from its Silver Mines in the South-east confines of the Province. 13. Almagra, on the sides of a Plain, but barren Mountain. 14. Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Chico; in a barren Soil, were not Gold a Supplement of all wants, which is there found in some abundance.

To this Province belong also some Islands in the Southern Ocean: that is to say, 1. The Isle of Palmer, South of the Cape of Corientes, so called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2. Gorgona, opposite to the mouth or Outlet of Rio de S. Juan, an Island of three Leagues in compass; the Hills so high, the Valleys so extremely low, the Sun so little seen amongst them, and the Woods so dark, that some have likened it to Hell. Not much observable, but that it did afford a lurking-place unto Francis Pizarro in his attempts upon Peru, when repulsed from landing on that Coast. 3. Del Gallo, a small Island, not a League in Circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Country thus divided into two Prefectures, but both subordinate to the Juridical Resort in the City of S. Foy de Bagota, is indebted for its first Discovery to two several persons. Granada specially so called was first discovered by Gonzalvo Ximenez de Quesada, employed therein by Ferdinando de Lugo, Admiral of the Canary Islands, Anno 1536, who passing up the River of Magdalen without molestation (more than the difficulties of the ways through Fens and Forests) as far as the Centred of Bagota, was there encountered by that King, whom he easily vanquished; and waiving all his Territories, carried with him thence great quantity of Gold, Emeralds, and other Treasure. The residue of those Petit Princes, which then governed in their several Tribes either submitted to him without opposition, or else were vanquished at the first rising. Having discovered and subdued every several Province, and miserably murdered Sangipa the last King of Bagota, of whom he had made use in subduing the Panches, he caused it to be called the New Realm of Granada, for the reason formerly laid down: and summing up the Spoils he had gotten in this case War, he found them to amount to 18000 Emeralds, 191294 Pieces of the finest Gold, 35000 of a coarser and inferior Alloy. In his return, he heard the news of Sebastián de Betalcazar's marching on the other side of the River of S. Martha; who having at the same time discovered and subdued the Province of Popayan, was beating out his way towards the North-Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Betalcazar, being by Francisco Pizarro, the Conquerour of Peru, made Governour of the Town and Province of Quito, and having secured all the Country to the very Sea, resolved to open a way homewards through those Regions, which lay betwixt his own Province and Mare del Noords. And this he did resolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Country, full of Gold, was in that Tract possessed by Popayan and Columbaz, two petit Princes, but yet the greatest in those parts. Encountered in his March by the Royeleits of Patia and Pasto, he soon made them weary, and retire themselves into the Woods and impassable Mountains; and passing slowly on, came at last to Popayan. Where, though the Savages entertained him with some frequent Skirmishes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to possess themselves of their best Towns, and to build others in such place as they thought convenient. But this was after the first Conquest, according to the coming over of succeeding Colonies. The first Conquest being finished Anno 1536, when the New Realm of Granada was subdued by Ximenez.

PERU.

PERU is bounded on the East with that vast ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the North, with Popayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada; on the South, with Chile. So called from the River Peru, which being one of the first of Note which the Spaniards met with in this Country, occasioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700 Leagues, but the breadth not equal. In some places 100 Leagues broad, in others 60, in the rest but 40; more or less, according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of so different a nature from one another, as if they were far distant both in Site and Soil. These parts are, the Plains, the Hill-Countries, and the Andes; the Plains extend on the Sea-shore, in all places level without Hills; the Andes, a continual ridge of Mountains without any Valleys; the Sierra, or Hill-Countries, composed of both. Each part stretcheth out from North to South, the whole length of the Country: the Plains from the Sea-shore to the Hill Countries, for the most part ten Leagues broad, in some places more; the Hill-Countries 20 Leagues in breadth, where where narrowest, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth, on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill Countries it raineth from September to April, being after that fair weather. In the Hill-Country the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may travel from Summer to Winter in one day, be frozen in the morning at his setting forth, and scorched with heat before he come to his journey's end. Some other differences there are: as that the Andes are covered with Woods and Forests, whereas the Hill-Countries are bare and naked; the Plains, where there are store of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea besides, sandy and dry, and in most places destitute both of Fruits and Corn: in some parts of the Hill-Countries, where there are no Rivers, and Rain but seldom, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other necessaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southerly Wind, though it bring no Rain with it; and in the Hills Winds from every Coast, and of every nature; some bringing Rain, some Snow, some claps of Thunder, and others fair Weather at the heels of them. Inasmuch that it is observed, that such of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do find such pains in the Head and Stomach, as Freshwater Soldiers when first Sea-sick.

Not to pursue these differences any farther in the several parts, we will look upon the whole in gross; which we shall find but meanly furnished for the bigness with those Commodities which so large a Country might afford: inasmuch as many of the people live most on Roots, here being little Wheat, and not such quantities of Maize (the ordinary Bread-grain of the Americans) as to serve their multitudes. Nor find I, that the Cattle of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increase. Instead of which they have in their Woods and Pastures infinite numbers of Beasts, somewhat like wild Goats (which they call Vicaguers) and great store of a kind of Sheep, by them called Pacos, profitable both for Fleeces and Burthen; as big as a small breed of Horses, but in taste as pleasing as our Mutton, and no less nourishing. A creature so well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himself over-loaded, no blows or violence shall make him move a foot forwards, till his load be lessened; and of so cheap a Diet, that he is content with very little, and sometimes passeth three whole days without any water. The Camels of these parts are not much unlike them.

This, as it is by some accounted for a Creature proper to this Country only, (though in that mistaken) so may it pass among the Rarities hereof: many of which it hath both in Beasts and Plants, and in inanimate Bodies also. Among their Plants they have a Fig-tree, the North-part whereof, looking towards the Mountains brineth forth its fruits in the Summer only, the Southern part looking to the Sea, fruitful only in Winter. Some as deservedly do account the Coca for a Wonder, the Leaves whereof being dried, and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding useful in a Journey. For melting in the mouth, they satisfy both hunger and thirst, and preserve a man in strength, and his spirits in vigour; and generally are esteemed of such sovereign use, that it is thought that 100000 Baskets full of the leaves of this Tree are sold yearly at the Mines of Potosi only, each of which at the Markets of Cusco would yield 12 pence or 18 pence a piece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I find no name for it, which if put into the hands of a sick person, will instantly discover whether he be like to live or die. For if on the pressing of it in his hand he look merry and chearful, it is an assured sign of his Recovery: as on the other side, of Death, if sad and troubled. Amongst their Beasts, besides those spoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huanao: of which it is observed, that the Males stand Sentinel on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Valleys; and if they see any men coming towards them, they set out their throats, to give their Females notice of some danger near; whom, when they come up to them, they put in the Front of the Retreat, interposing their own bodies betwixt them and their Enemy. Nor want they Rarities of Nature even in things inanimate: here being said to be a round Lake near the Mines of Potosi, whose water is so hot, though the Country it self be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themselves are not able to endure the heats thereof, if they go but a little from the Banks; there being in the midst thereof a boiling of above twenty foot square. A Lake which never doth decrease, though they have drawn a great stream from it to serve their Metal-Mills.

More profitable, though less rare, are those Metals which those Mills are made for; and not less profitable, one of those vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here than in other Countries of America: for which cause, and the resemblance which it hath to Hembane in form and quality, it is called the Hembane of Peru by Gerard, and some other of our Modern Herbalists. A Plant; which (though in some respect, being moderately taken, it may be serviceable for Physick, yet) besides the consumption of the purse, and impairing of our inward parts, the immoderate, vain and phantastical abuse of this stinking Weed, corrupteth the natural sweetness of the breath, stupefieth the Brain; and indeed is so prejudicial to the general esteem of our Country-men, that one faith of them, Anglorum corpora, qui huic plante tantopere indulgent, in Barbarorum naturam degenerasse videntur. The two chief Virtues ascribed unto it (pardon me I beseech you this short Digression) are, That it voideth Rheum, and is found to be a sovereign Antidote against Lues Venerea, that loathsome Disease of the French Pox. For this last, like enough it is, that so unclean a Disease may be helped with such an unfavourable Medicine. But for the first, it may perhaps confute more in Opinion than truth or reality, the Rheum, which it is said to void, being no more than what it breedeth at the present. We may as well conclude, that Bottled Ale is good for the breaking of Wind, (which effect we find commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the same Wind which it self conveyed into the Stomach. But Tobacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times grown a good fellow, and fallen from a Physician to a Complement. An Humour which had never spread so far amongst us, if the same means of prevention had been used by the Christian Magistrates, as was by Moritz Bassa among the Turks; who commanded a Pipe to be thrust through the nose of a Turk, whom he found taking Tobacco, and him to be carried in derision all about Constantinople. It is observed, that the taking of Tobacco was first brought into England by the Mariners of Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1585. And that it hapned not untill in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate use of Drinking, which our Low-Country Soldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time, Anno 1582. Before which time, the English of all Northern people were deemed to be most free from that Swinish vice, wherein it is to be feared, that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken so excessively by both these Nations, that I may justly say with a learned Fleming, Herbæ ejus, non dicam usus, sed abusus, non modo in Anglia, sed in Belgio, & alibi, insanum in modum jam adevit.

But the greatest Riches of this Country is most out of sight fight, hid in the Bowels of the Earth, but found in those never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver, more eminently abounding in this one Province than in all America. For instance whercof we may take the Silver-Mines of Potosi, discovered in the year 1545, the fifth of which, payable into the King's Exchequer, amounted in forty years to 111 Millions of Pezos, every Pezo being valued at six shillings and six pence; and yet a third part of the whole was discharged of that payment. By this one we may guess somewhat of the rest, as by the proportion of one member the Dimensions of the whole Body may be probably aimed at: unless the riches of these Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by some knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold than Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arius Montanus, and some other very learned men, That this Peru is that Land of Opbir to which Solomon's Navy went for Gold; induced thereunto by that Text of the Chronicles, lib. 2. cap. 3. verf. 6. That the Gold was the Gold of Parvaim. A fancy not so fondly a Foundation as many others of that kind, if Peru had been the old name of this Country, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whercof, not only Spain but all Europe also is better furnished with Gold and Silver than ever formerly. For in the first Ages of the World our Ancestors, the Britains, (I must digress here once again) had no other money than Iron-rings and Brass-Rings, which they used for Instruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the most usual materials of their Coin was most times Brass, and sometimes Leather. Corium formâ publicâ percussum, as it is in Seneca. Of which last sort we find, that Frederick the Emperour made use at the Siege of Millain, and the English in the time of the Barons Wars. And why not so? considering that no longer since than in the year 1574, the Hollanders being then reduced to some Extremities made money of Palte-board. But this happeneth only in cases of Necessity, the two Metals of Gold and Silver having for many hundred years (though not in such abundance as in later times) being the chief Instruments of Exchange and Bartery betwixt man and man, and questionless will so continue to the end of the World. I know Sir Thomas More in the second Book of his Utopia, preferreth Iron before Gold, because more necessary for all uses: U sine quo non magis quam sine igne atque aqua vivere Mortales queant: and that he giveth us there a Plot to bring Gold and Silver into contempt; telling us how the Utopians use to employ those Metals in making Chamber-pots and Vessels of more unclean necessities, eating and drinking for the most part in Glasse or Earth. He telleth us also how they make Chains and Fetters of Gold to hold in their rebellious Slaves and Malefactors; how they punish infamous Persons by putting Gold-Rings upon their Fingers, Jewels of Gold in their Ears, and Chains of Gold about their Necks: how they adorn their little Children with precious Jewels, which Gayeties, when they come to Age, and see them worn by none but such little Children, they use to cast away of their own accord; as with us our elder Boys leave off, without constraint, their Babies, Cobnuts, and other Crepundia. He farther telleth us, how the Ambassadors of the Anemolii, (a confederate State of the Utopians) coming amongst them richly and gloriously attired, were took for Slaves, by reason of their Golden Chains, and the meanness of their Followers thought to be the Ambassadors: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing Jewels, as if they had been Children still: and how the people laught at their Chains of Gold, as being too weak to shackle such sturdy Fellows. Now though it pleased that wise State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongst them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any esteem which themselves had of it; but therewith to provide themselves of Foreign Aids, and pay their Armies, when the necessities of their Affairs or other reason of State did require the same. How this Device would sort with the humours of those People whom Lucian anciently did fable, and some of later times more really do fancy, to have their dwelling in the Moon, I am not able to say, as having hitherto had no Commerce nor correspondence with the Inhabitants thereof; though possibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and find it to sort well enough with their Condition. Certain I am, this sublimary World of ours will never brook it. And so I leave it, and look back again on the Mines of Peru: the extraordinary plenty of Gold and Silver, which those and the rest of the New World have furnished the Old World withal, being conceived by many knowing and judicious men to be the cause of the dearth of all Commodities at the present times, compared unto the cheapness of the times foregoing. For where much is, there greater prices will be given than in other places. And yet there want not some that add allo other causes of the high prices of our dayes, viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and Crafts-men, Transportation of Grain, pleasure of great Personages, the excess of private men, and the like: but these last I rather take to be Con-causes, the first being indeed the principal. For (as that excellent Sir Henry Savil hath it in the end of his Notes on Tacitus) the excessive abundance of grain utrum, things which consist merely on the Constitution of men, draweth necessarily in quædam utrum, those things which Nature requireth, to an higher Rate in the Market. Capit ab Augusto Alexandria, (saith Orosius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit, ut dupla majora quàm antebac rerum venalium pretia statuerentur. As for that Question, Whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which supplieth it self with Money by Traffick and the works of Art, or that which is supplied by Mines growing as the gift of Nature; I find it by this Tale in part resolved. Two Merchants, departing from Spain to get Gold touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buying Moors to dig and delve with, the other freighteth his Vessel with Sheep; and being come to the Indies, the one finding Mines, let his Slaves to work; and the other happening in grassy Ground, put his Sheep to grazing. The Slaves grown cold and hungry, call for Food and Cloathing; which the Sheep-malter by the increase of his flock had in great abundance: so that what the one got in Gold with toil, charges, and hazard both of life and health, he gladly gave unto the other in Exchange or Bartery, for the continual supply of Victuals, Clothes, and other Necessaries for himself and his Servants. In the end the Mines being exhausted, and all the money thence arising exchanged with the Shepherd for such Necessaries as his Wants required; home comes the Shepherd in great Triumph, with abundance of Wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his Travels. But I dare not take upon me to determine this point. Only I add, that the English and Hollanders, by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick, did in conclusion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the Second, and outwied him (as it were) in Wealth and Treasure; notwithstanding his many Mines of Gold and Silver in Barbary, India, Mexicana, Guinea, some in Spain and Italy and these of Peru which now we handle, and which have given occasion unto this Discourse, or Digression rather.

It is now time to take a view of the People also, affirmed to be (for the most part) of great simplicity; yet some of them (those especially which lie near the Equa- tor) to be great dissemblers, and never to discover their conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in Wars, well skilled in managing such Weapons as they had been used to, and fearless of Death: the rather prompted to this last by an old opinion held amongst them, that in the other world they shall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great person, who was attended on in his life, they use to kill and bury with him one or more of his Servants, to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living much like the Jews, but not in Habit: conforming therein to the other Savages, but that those cover their upper parts with some decent Garment, and leave the other members bare. But this is only near the Equator; both Sexes elsewhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one fashion over all the Country, except the dressing of their Heads, wherein scarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his Fashion to himself. The Women less esteemed here than in other places, treated as Slaves, and sometimes cruelly beaten upon slight occasions: the men (as S. Paul saith of the ancient Gentiles) leaving the natural use of the Woman, and burning in their lust towards one another. For which, if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompence which was meet.

Rivers of most note, u. S. Jago, on the borders towards Popayana; a River of a violent course, and so great a depth, that it is 180 Fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2. Tombes, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over against the Isle of Puna, on the further side of the Equator: an Island of twelve Leagues in compass, and exceeding fruitful. 3. Guayaquil, of a longer course than any of the other two, and falling into Mare del Zur, on the South of the other two, and falling into the Isle of Lobo. No Island after this of note upon all this Coast. If any come in our way which runneth towards the East, we shall meet with them in view of the several Provinces; and so we shall with the Hills or Mountains which are most considerable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaca, in which twelve Rivers are reported to lose themselves; in compass 80 Leagues, and usually navigable with Ships and Barks. The Waters of it not so salt as those of the Sea, but so thick that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many Habitations, as good as any in Peru. By a fair Water-course or River it passeth into a less Lake, which they call Aulaga; and thence most probably findeth a way into the Sea, or else is swallowed in the bowels of that thirsty Earth: but the first more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Juridical Reforts; viz. of 1. Quito. 2. Lima: and 3. Charcos; each having under it many several and subordinate Provinces, too many and of too small note to be here considered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greatest reckoning: 1. Quito. 2. Los Quixos. 3. Lima. 4. Cusco. 5. Charcos: and 6. Collao; three on the Sea, and the other three in the mid-lands; to which the Islands of it shall be joyned in the close of all.

1. QUITO, is bounded on the North with Popayana; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Province of Lima; and on the East, with that of Los Quixos. So named from Quito, the chief Town and Province of the first Division.

The Soil is as fertile, and as fit for the Fruit of Europe as any other in Peru: well stored with Cattel, especially the Paco's or Peruvian Sheep; and plentifully furnished both with Fish and Fowl. In many parts great Store of Nitre, of which they make most approved good Gunpowder; and in some Rivers, especially that of S. Barbara, many veins of Gold. The People generally industrious, especially in making of Cloth of Cotton, equal almost to Silks for fineness: of constitution strong, and healthy, but given to lying, drinking, and such other Vices; with which they are so much in love, that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Christian Faith, not willingly reclaimed from their ancient Barbarisms. Extremely punished with the Pox, an hereditary Disease amongst them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins so infected with it; that neither Tobacco, Guaiacum, nor Sarsaparilla, all which this Country doth afford in a great abundance, is able to preserve them from it.

Towns of most observation in it, 1. Cavangue, a large and sumptuous Palace of the ancient Kings; so named, because situate in in the Territory of the Cavangue, a barbarous, bloody, and man-eating People; subdued by Guayanacapa, one of the mightiest of the Kings of Peru; from whom revolting, and withal killing many of his Ministers and Garrison Soldiers, they were upon a second Conquest brought to the banks of a great Lake, into which 20000 of them being killed, were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Taguareda, or the lake of blood. 2. Oravalla, another Palace of the Kings, but far inferior to the other; yet giving name unto the Canal in which it standeth. 3. Quito, the chief of this Refort and once the Regal Seat of its proper Kings, (till made subject by Guayanacapa before mentioned) the Ruines of whose Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Francisco: built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30 minutes from the Equinoctial; well fortified, and as well furnished with Ammunition: inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, besides the Natives. The Streets thereof strait and broad: the Buildings decent: the principal of which, the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Justice, and two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a flaming Mountain, or Volcano; which in the year 1560, cast out such abundance of Cinders, that if a Rain had not hapned beyond expectation, had made great spoil upon the place. 4. Tacunga, fifteen Leagues from Quito; and 5. Rhibamba, in the Territory of the Purvasi, 40 Leagues from that: each of them honoured with another of these ancient Palaces. 6. Thombamba, neighbored by another of the King's Palaces, but more magnificent than the former, situate in the Country of the Canaries, amongst whom anciently the Women tilled the Land, and did all without doors, whilst the men tilled at home and spun, and attended Housewifery. 7. Cuenca, 64 Leagues from Quito, on another Road, situate in a Country full of Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, and Veins of Sulphur. 8. Lexa, sixteen Leagues Southward of Cuenca, situate in the fifth degree of Southern Latitude, and in a sweet and pleasant Valley called Guxibamba, between two fine Rivulets. The Citizens well furnished with Horse and Armour, but not otherwise wealthy. 9. Zamora, twenty Leagues on the East of Lexa; and 10. Jacu, 35 from that: both situate in the Province of Quichimayo, and both so called in reference to two Cities of those names in Spain. Thereto on the Sea-coasts there are, 11. Portus Veius, (Porto Veio, as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea-side, but in foill an Air, that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the first Towns of this Country possessed by the Spaniards, who digged up hereabouts the bones of a monstrous Giant, whose Cheek-teeth were four fingers broad. 12. Mantu, the Port-Town to Porto Veio; from whence the Trade is driven betwixt Panama and Peru; the Town it self situate in a rich Vein of Emeralds. 13. Guayaquil, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called also Gulata; seated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, near the influx of the River Guayaquil, a noted and much frequented Empory. 14. Cajito, a Colony of Spaniards planted Anno 1568, in that part of this Country which they call Provincia de los Esmeraldas, bordering on Popayan. 15. S. Michael, by the old Natives called Pitrua; the first Colony which the Spaniards planted in Peru, but otherwise of no estimation. 16. Paya, a small Town, but neighbored by the safest and most frequented Haven of all this Country, as guarded from the Wind by the Cape of S. Helen on the North, and Punta Pitrua on the South. Two eminent Promontories. The Town burnt Anno 1587, by Captain Gavendish; who at the same time also pillaged the Isle of Puna, the most noted Island of this Tract, situate in the Bay of Tombes, as was said before. Fruitful of all things necessary to the life of man; Paros for pleasure, Sorsapavilla for his health. The people in preceding times so stout and warlike, that they maintained a long War with those of Tombes, till in the end composed by the mediation of the King of Peru, to whom the King hereof, (for a King it had) became an Homager, as since their embracing of the Gospel, to the Kings of Spain.

2. LOS QUILQOS lieth on the East of Quito and the West of El Dorado. (one of the Centred of Quilques, so called from its abundance of Gold:) little different in the nature of the Soil and People from the Province of Quito; but that this is somewhat the more barren, and less stored with those rich Metals which the Spaniards come for. The People have also a distinct Tongue of their own, though they both understand and speak the Peruvian Language.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Baeza, built in the year 1559. (which was within two years of the first Discovery of this Region) by Giles Ramirez de Avila; 18 Leagues from Quito towards the East: now the Seat of the Government. 2. Archidona; 20 Leagues on the South-East of Baeza. 3. Avila, on the North of Archidona; so called with reference to Ramirez de Avila before-mentioned; or to a Town of that name in Spain. 4. Sevilla del Oro, a Colony of Spaniards, as the others are.

On the East of this Province lieth the Centred of Canelan, inhabited by a blockish and ignorant people, and destitute of all things necessary for the comforts of Life. Most mercilessly tormented, and cast to Dogs to be devoured, by Pizarro, because they could not shew him the readiest way to some richer Country than their own; this being the most barren Region of that part of Peru which they call La Sierra, or the Hill-Countries. More Eastward yet, in that part which they call the Andes, lie the Centreds of the Bracomori, commonly called Judan de Salinas, by the name of the first Discoverer of it. A Country not inferior unto many for the quantity of Gold; superiour to any for the pureness of it. Chief Towns of which, 1. Palladolid. 2. Lolita, by the Natives called Cumbinama. 3. S. Jago de las Montanas, (or S. James of the Mountains;) all Spanish Colonies; and all of the foundation of John de Salinas a Lolita, once the Pro-Prefect of the Province, by whom first thoroughly subdued to the Crown of Spain.

3. LIMA, called also LOS REYES, is bounded on the North with Quito; on the South, with Churcas; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Colloa, and the Province of Cusco. So named from Lima, or Los Reyes, the chief City of it. Extended from the sixth to the sixteenth degree of Southern Latitude: or, measuring from the Promontory of Aguajal North, to Arequipa on the South, it reacheth to 250 Leagues. The Soil is of the same nature with that of Quito, but more distributed into Valleys, and better peopled.

Places of most observation, 1. Miraflores, in the Valley of Zuma, 110 leagues on the North of Lima, and about 5 leagues distant from the Sea; on which it hath an Haven belonging to it called Chenepen. The Town is well seated, and inhabited by a wealthy People, made such by the abundance of Sugar-canes in the neighbouring Valley.

2. Truxillo, in the rich and flourishing Valley of Chimo, on the banks of a small but pleasant River, and about two Leagues from the Sea, where it hath a large but unsafe Haven, which they call El Azucife de Triguillo. The Town it self situate in the seventh degree and 30 minutes of Southern latitude; well built and rich, one of the principal of Peru; inhabited by 1500 Spaniards, besides the Natives, and beautified with four Convents of several Orders. 3. La Parilla, in the Valley of the Santa, in which it standeth, and by which it is furnished with a safe and convenient Road for Shipping: 20 Leagues Southwards of Truxillo, and neighbored by rich Mines of Silver, not long since discovered. 4. Armedo, seated amongst Vineyards in the Valley of Chancay, ten Leagues North of Lima: 5. Lima, by the Spaniards called Ciudad de Los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Valley of Lima, the most fruitful part of all Peru, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees and an half. Built with much Art, for all the chief Streets answer to the Market-place; scarce any private House which hath not Water conveyed into it from the River; environed round about with sweet Fields and most pleasant Gardens. The Founder of it Francisco Pizarro, who laid the first Stone on Twelfth-day, (which the Spaniards call the Feast of Kings) whence it had the name; Anno 1533. A Town of greater Wealth than Bigness, the Riches of Peru passing yearly through it; well housed, whether we respect the private or publick Edifices: the Cathedral Church made after the model of that of Sevil; the Convents of Religious Orders, the Courts of Justice, and the Palaces of the Archbishop and Vice-Roy, being all fair and goodly Buildings; the Cathedral Church so well endowed, that the Revenues of the Archbishop do amount to yearly to 30000 Ducats, besides what belongeth to the Canons and other Ministers. 6. Collao, the Haven-town to Lima, from which two Leagues distant; a Town of 600 Families, for the most part Seamen: every House having some Cellar in it for the stowage of Wine, Tobacco, Cables, Pitch, &c. for the use of Mariners; besides those publick Ware-houses for the several Commodities which pass from Lima hither, or from hence to Lima. Unfortified till the year 1579, when sacked and spoiled of infinite Treasures by Sir Francis Drake; since that time strengthened by two Bulwarks and a Wall of Earth, with 30 pieces of Brass Ordnance planted on the Works. 7. Pachacama, in the Valley so called, but four Leagues on the South of Lima: memorable for a Temple, in which Pizarro found above 900000 Ducats of Gold and Silver, not reckoning in those infinite Treasures which the Soldiers had laid hands on before his coming. 8. Guauro, a Colony of 300 Spaniards, sixteen Leagues on the South of Pachacama, environed with the best Fields for Wheat in all Peru. 9. Valverde in a Valley of the same name, so called from the perpetual Greenness of it; best furnished with Vines, and those affording the best Wines of all this Country. A large Town, consisting of 500 Spaniards, besides Women and Children, and other Inhabitants of the Country, well Traded, considering its distance from the Sea, (Puerto Quemado, the Haven to it being six Leagues off) and beautified with a fair Church, an Hospital, three Frieries, and the handsomest Women of these parts: Distant from Lima 35 leagues. 10. Cajito Verreyra, in the Valley of Chocolococha, 60 leagues from Lima, enriched with Mines of the purest Silver, digged out of a dry and barren Hill always covered with Snow; and standing in so sharp an Air, that the Spanish Women will not be delivered in it, but are carryed farther off to be brought to bed. From hence, as I conjecture, comes that vein of Tobacco, which our Good fellows celebrate by the name of the right Verrinas. 11. Arequipa, in the Valley of Quiles, 120 Leagues from Lima, a pleasing and delightful Town; which, situate at the foot of a flaming Mountain, (from which in the year 1600 it received much harm) enjoyeth a fresh and temperate Air, and a Soil always flourishing. The Silver of Plata and Potosi passeth through this Town, and is shipped for Panama, at an Haven belonging to it situate at the mouth of the River Chile, (upon which Arequipa standeth, but distant from the Town about 14 Leagues. 12. Caxamaleca, more within the Land, but more towards the North, heretofore beautified with a Royal Palace of the Kings of Peru, memorable for the imprisonment and murder of Atahualpa, or Athualpa, the last King of this Country, vanquished not far off by Francisco Pizarro. 13. Cachapoyaro, in the Centred so called; the best inhabited of any one Centred of those parts, supposed to contain in it 20000 of the natural Inhabitants, which pay Duties to the King of Spain; and so esteemed for beautiful Women, that from hence the Kings were anciently furnished with their Concubines. 14. Leon de Guanaco, (the addition given it from the Province in which it standeth) a Colony of Spaniards, rich, sweet and very pleasantly seated: beautified heretofore with a most magnificent Palace of the Kings; as now with some Religious Houses, a College of Jesuites, and the dwellings of many of the Nobility. Many other midland Towns there are, but of no great note, and therefore purposely passed over.

4. CUSCO comprehendeth, as the chief, all those several Provinces of the Hill-Countries, and the Andes which lie Southwards of the Province or Centred of Guanaco. Blest with a sweet and temperate air, not over scalded with the Sun, nor dulled with the distempers of the Evening mists: the Country full of fresh Rivers, notable good Pasturage, and great Herds of Cattel; well stored with Coco, which is gathered here in some abundance, and most excellent Venison.

Places of most repute in it, 1. Bombon, in the same Latitude with Lima, neighbored by a Lake called Laguna de Chiusca cocha ten Leagues in compass, begirt about with pleasant Hills, and built upon with many rich and as pleasant Villages: out of which runneth the River Maranon, one of the greatest of these parts, supposed by the Inhabitants to end his course in Mare del Noordo. 2. Parcos, once beautified with a regal Palace, seated on the top of a little Hill, and begirt about with craggy Mountains. 3. Guananga, by the Spaniards called S. Juan de la Victoria, situate under the 13<sup>d</sup> degree of Southern Latitude, on the Banks of a fresh and pleasing Stream; well built, the Houses being all of Stone, and tiled or slated; three Churches, one of them a Cathedral, besides divers Convents. 4. Bicar, supposed to be built in the very Centre of Peru; where still remain the ruins of a sumptuous Palace. 5. Guanacabellica, a new Town, or but newly raised into esteem, supposed to contain at the present 2000 Spaniards, and double that number of the Natives. Increased, since the year 1566, from a beggarly Village to this greatness, by the Mines of Quick-silver then discovered: Mines of such Riches, that the Kings part out of them amounteth yearly to above 40000 Pezaos, which is about 130000 l. of our English money. And yet this is not all the benefit he receives from them neither; that Mineral being found so necessary for the purifying and speedy extraction of their Gold, that it is not laid without cause by the Chymists, that Quick-silver gives the matter to Gold, and Sulphur the form. 6. Cusco, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees and 30 minutes, about 130

Leagues on the East of Lima, and situate in a rugged and unequal Soil, begirt with Mountains, but on both sides of a pleasant and commodious River. Once the Seat-Royal of the Inga or Peruvian Kings; who the more to beautify this City, commanded every one of the Nobility to build here a palace for their continual abode. Still of most credit in this Country, both for beauty and bigness, and the multitudes of Inhabitants; here being thought to dwell 3000 Spaniards, and 10000 of the Natives, besides Women and Children. The Palace of the King, advanced on a lofty Mountain, was held to be a work of so great magnificence, built of such huge and massive Stones, that the Spaniards thought it to have been the work rather of Devils than of men. Now miserably defaced, most of the Stones being tumbled down to build private Houses in the City: some of the Churches raised also by the ruins of it: and amongst them perhaps both the Bishop's Palace and Cathedral, whose annual Reits are estimated at 20000 Ducats. Yet did not this vast Building yield more lustre to the City of Cusco, than a spacious Market-place, the Centre in which those Highways did meet together, which the Inga had caused to be made cross the Kingdom, both for length and breadth, with most incredible charge and pains for the use of their Subjects. Of which more hereafter. 7. S. Francisco de la Victoria, at the foot of the Andes, a Spanish Colony, and about 20 Leagues from Cusco. 8. S. Juan del Oro, in the Valley of Caravayan neighbored with rich Mines of the purest Gold, whence it had the name; a Colony of Spaniards also. Beyond the Andes lie some Countries, much famed for Wealth; the Discovery whereof hath often been attempted by the Spaniards, sometimes with loss, not seldom with some hopes of a better fortune; but hitherto without success.

5. COLLAO lieth on the South of those Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Cusco; having on the West the rest of Lima: on the South, Los Charcos; on the East, those unknown Countries beyond the Andes. Shut upon on the East and West by two mountainous Ridges, which keeping in one main body till they come beyond the City of Cusco, do there divide themselves, and grow wider and wider, not to meet again.

The Country is plain and full of Rivers, well stored with rich Pastures, and those Pastures with great Herds of Cattel, barren of Corn, and not well furnished with Maize; in stead whereof they make their Bread of a Root called Popa, dried in the Sun and bruised to powder: of which the Spaniards make great gain at the Mines of Potosi. Yet notwithstanding this great want, it is thought to be the most populous part of all Peru: the soundness and temperature of the Air (which is here very much commended) as much conducing to the populosity of a Country, as the richness and plenties of the Soil. The People are also of a clearer and more solid Judgment than the rest of Peru, and so well skilled in the observation of the Course of the Moon, that the Spaniards at their coming hither, found the Year distinguished into months, Weeks, Days, for each of which they had a proper and significant name. The famous Lake of Titicaca is within this Province.

Places of greatest note in it, 1. Chuquinga, naturally strong and almost inaccessible, environed either with unfordable Waters, or impassable Mountains; one Cause only leading to it, which for the space of three Leagues is said to be capable but of one at once. 2. Ayavire, ennobled with many fair and costly Buildings; especially with Monuments of the dead, which exceed the rest both in cost and number: for that cause by the Spaniards called Las Sepulchras. The Inhabitants of this

Tract

Track were much wasted by the Civil wars which the Spaniards had among themselves. 3. Huancolla, the Metropolis or chief Town of this Province, as the name doth signify: not far from which the famous River Cavayes, famous for the abundance of Gold in the sands thereof, hath its first original. 4. Chiquita, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the banks of the Lake of Titicaca: a Town of so great Trade and Riches, that the Governour heretofore is named immediately by the King; his place being estimated at the worth of 50000 Ducats yearly. 5. Tiaguanaco, at the mouth or out-let of that Lake; supposed to be the most ancient Burrough of Peru: now most remarkable for the Ruines of certain great and stupendous Buildings, some of the Stones whereof are said to be 30 foot long, fifteen foot in breadth, and six in thickness; not to be brought thither without the help of Iron Engines: (which this people had not till of late) but by some strange Arts. 6. De la Paz, or Nuestra Señora de la Paz, by the Spaniards called also Pueblo Nuevo, and by the Natives Cbiquiabu, according to the name of the Cantred in which it standeth, is situate at the foot of a little Mountain, by which defended from the injuries of Wind and Weather, but over-looking a large Plain of great fertility: well watered, and well wooded both for Fruits and Fewel. 7. Cbilane, 8. Acot, 9. Pomata, 10. Cepita: and some others of as little note.

6. LOS CHARCAS on the North is bounded with Lima and Collao; on the South, with Chile; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with some Countreys not well discovered, interposed betwixt it and the Province of Rio de la Plua. This is also called by the name of Plata, according to the name of the chief City of it.

The Countrey extendeth in length from north to south but 300 Leagues, but measuring by the sea-shores, above 400. Not very rich in Corn or Cattel, though in many places furnished with good Pasture-grounds; but for the inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, not to be equalled in Peru. Of these the principal are those of Porco and Potosi, but these last the chief: out of which comes that Mass of Silver which yieldeth the King so much profit yearly, as before was mentioned. The Mine 200 Fathoms deep, to which they do descend, by Ladders made of raw Hides, 800 steps: some of the Workmen see not the Sun for many months together; many fall down with their loads of silver on their backs, pulling others after them, and many die in the Works for want of Air. For the refining of this Silver there are 52 Engines, or Silver Mills, upon a River near unto it; 22 more in the valley of Tarapia not far off, besides many which they turn with Horises. The Poets words never more literally verified then in these deep Mines, where speaking of the Iron Age, he describes it thus:

*Nec tantum segetes alimenta que debita dives
Possederat humus, sed itum est in viscera terre;
Quasque reconsiderat Stygisque admovent Umbra, Effunduntur opes, irrisamenta malorum.*

Which I find thus rendered by George Sandys:

Nor with rich Earth's just nourishments content,
For Treasures there her secret Entrails rent.

That powerful evil, which all power invades,
By her well hid and wrapt in Stygian Shades.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Plata, so called from the rich Mines of Silver found in Mount Porco near adjoining, well emptied by the ancient Ingas, but searched into again by Francisco Pizarro, who (it is thought) might have raised hence 200000 Ducats of yearly Income, if hopes of greater at Potosi had not took him off. The Town is commodiously seated in a fruitful soil in the 19. degree of Latitude, and 180 Leagues distant from the City of Cusco, honoured with the seat of the Governour and the Courts of Justice, and beautified (besides many Religious Houses) with a fair Cathedral, the See of the best endowed Bishoprick in all Peru; his Revenues being estimated at 8000 Ducats of yearly Rents. By the Natives it is called Chiquisaca. 2. Oropesa, twenty Leagues from Plata, built by Don Francis de Toledo, when Viceroy here, in the rich and pleasant Valley called Cochabamba, Anno 1565. 3. Potosi, neighboured by those wealthy Mines already mentioned. Discovered first in the year 1545, before which time this Town was but a sorry Village; now the best peopled and frequented in all the Province: said to be constantly inhabited by four or five thousand Spaniards, many more of the Natives: not so few as 30000 Workmen appertaining to it, but lodged in the Villages adjoining: besides the infinite resort of Merchants in pursuit of profit, and idle Gallants, who come hither for their lulls and pleasures. Situate in the 21. Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, in a cold and very barren Soil; yet plentifully furnished with all Commodities both for Necessity and Delight. For as the money is, so is the Market always. 4. Misqa, a small Town, but one which furnisheth Potosi with good plenty of Wine: as 5. Lagunilla, and 6. Tarixa, do with Wheat, Maize, Sugar, and choice of Fruits. 7. Arica, the most noted Haven of this Countrey, in the Latitude of 19 degrees, and 80 Leagues, or thereabouts from the Mines of Potosi; the wealth whereof, brought hither on the backs of their Sheep is here shipped for Lima. The truth hereof was experienced by Sir F. Drake, who seized here on three Spanish Ships, in one of which was 57 Bars of Silver, each of them twenty pound weight apiece. Few other Towns, if any, upon all this Coast, which is altogether Rocky, barren, and unfit for Habitation; accordingly but little peopled, or not at all.

Come we now to the Peruvian Story, which we shall sum up with as much brevity as we can. The People are generally governed by the chief of their Tribes, as in all Countreys else, where neither the Arms of Foreinners nor the Ambition of some few of the Natives had diminished any thing of those natural Rights. Not subject to any one supreme till these later times; the Ingas or Monarchs of Peru growing unto their greatness but a little before their fall. Their Territory at the first so small, that it was not above five or six Leagues in compass, situate in that part of the Countrey where the City of Cusco now standeth. Opposed at their first Encroachments by the Cannarees, a valiant Nation, and likely to have had the better, if the Ingas had not helped themselves by a piece of Wit; giving it out, that their Family had not only been the Seminary from which Mankind came, but the Authors of that Religion also which was then in use; particularly that the whole World had been destroyed by a Flood, except only seven, (so far they hit upon the truth) which seven had hid themselves in a Cave, called Paitambao, where having lived in safety till the fury of the Waters had been asswaged, they came abroad at last and re-peopled the Countrey; that Viracocha, the Creatour and great God of Nature, had appeared to one of them, and taught him how and with what Rites he would be worshipped, which Rites were afterwards received over all Peru; and finally, that the same Viracocha had appeared lately to the chief of their Family, assuring him that he would aid him with invisible Forces against all their Enemies. This Tale soon gained belief amongst those Barbarians, and that belief drew many to take part with the Ingas, by that Aid victorious. This is supposed to have happen'd 400 years before the Spaniards put an an end to this flourishing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Countrey which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoining Provinces, under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Ingas, as the Egyptians Pharaohs, the Tartars Cham; the word Inga signifying an Emperour, as Capa Inga (by which they sometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much revered by their Subjects, and so faithfully served, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treason: Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to incare their Subjects, and keep them out of leisure to foment new Factions. The way of incarement, by the fair and satisfactory distribution of the spoils gotten in the Wars, whether Lands or Goods; all which they divided into three parts: allotting the first unto the service of the Gods; the second, for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A Distribution far more equal than that Lycurgus, or the Lex Agraria or the Romans. But when there was no cause of wars, they kept the people busied in the works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the conquered Provinces, which served not only as Forts to assure the Conquest, but were employed as Store-houses to lay up Provisions, distributed amongst the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work of greater trouble, so of chiefest use, was the Crofs ways they made over all the Countrey, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 Leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome and Aegypt. For they were forced to raise the ground in many places to the height of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flattest Plains, to cut through some Rocks, and underprop others that were ruinous; to make even such ways as were uneven, and support the Precipices; and in the Plains to vanquish to many difficulties as the uncertain foundation of a sandy Countrey must needs carry with it. Kept to these Tasks, the people had no leisure to think of Practices; yet well content to undergo them, in regard they saw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques, (so they call the Nobility) the Inga did not only command them to reside in Cusco, to be assured of their persons; but caused them to send their Children to be brought up there, that they might receive Hostages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered also, that all such as repaired to Cusco, the Imperial City, should be attired according to his own Countrey fashion; so to prevent those Leagues and Associations which otherwise, without any note or observation, might be made amongst them. Many such Politick Institutions were by them devised, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and clearly shewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads besides those of Chibna. What else concerns the Story of them, offereth it self in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of PERU.

1. Mango-Capac, descended of the chief of the first seven Families, the first who laid the foundation of this puissant Monarchy: he subdued the Cannarees, and built the City of Cusco.

2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldest son of Mango, subdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chucura.

3. Lonque-Inpaquini, the son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Avavire, the Cannus, and the Inhabitants about Titicaca: the first Advancer of the service of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many Virtues.

4. Mayta-Capac, the son of Tupanguini, subdued all the rest of Cusco, the Provinces of Chiquisapa, and a great part of the Chacaras.

5. Capac-Tupanguini, or Tupanguini II. the son of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdom Westward unto Mare del Zur.

6. Rocha II. of Tucha-Rocha, eldest son of Tupanguini the second, enlarged his Kingdom towards the North, by the Conquest of the great Province of Antabryallam, and many others.

7. Tahuar-Huacac, Son of Rocha the second, added to his Estates (by the Valour of his Brother Mayta) all the southern parts from Arequipa to Tacaman. Deposed by the practice of his son.

8. Viracocha, the son of Huacac, having settled and enlarged his Empire, raised many great and stately Works, and amongst others many Aqueducts of great use, but charge. For fear of him, Hanc-buala, King of the Chuncus, with many thousands of his people, forsook their Countrey.

9. Pachacutec Incha, son of Viracocha, improved his Kingdom by the Conquest of many Provinces lying towards the Andes and south sea; with that of Caxamalca Northwards.

10. Tupanguini III. or Tucha-Inpachchi, son of Pachacutec, subdued the Conches and Moxes, with some part of Chile.

11. Tupanguini IV. or Tapac Incha Tupanguini, Son of Tupanguini the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.

12. Huayna-Capac, or Guaynacapac, son of Tupanguini the fourth, the most mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is supposed to be the Founder of those two great Roads spoken of before.

13. Huascar, or Guaschar-Incha, the eldest Son of Guaynacapac, after a Reign of five years deposed and slain by his Brother.

14. Athualpa, or Arubaliba, the third Son of Guaynacapac, by the Daughter and Heir of the King of Quitos into which Kingdom he succeeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his Brother to do Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with such power, that he overcame him, and so gained the Kingdom. Vanquished afterwards by Pizarro at the battle of Caxamalca he was taken Prisoner. And though he gave him a ransom for his Life and Liberty, an House piled up on all sides with Gold and Silver, valued (as some say) at ten Millions of Crowns; yet they perfidiously slew him.

15. Mango-Capac II. the second son of Guaynacapac, substituted by Pizarro in his Brothers Throne, after many vicissitudes of Fortune, was at last slain in the City of Cusco; and so the Kingdom of the Ingas began and ended in a Prince of the same name, as it happened formerly to some other Estates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who subdued this most potent and flourishing Kingdom, and made it a Member of the Spanish Empire. And we shall find that he was born at Trujillo, a Village of Navarra, and by the poor Whore his Mother laid in the Church porch, and so left to Gods Providence: by whose direction (there being none found that would give him the Breast) he was nourished for certain days by sucking a Sow. At last one Gonsalez a Soldier, acknowledged him for his son, put him to Nurse, and when he was somewhat grown, set him to keep his Swine: some of which being strayed, the Boy durst not for fear return home, but betook himself to his heels, ran unto Sevil, and there shipped himself for America; where he attended Alphonso de Oieda, in the discovery of the Countreys beyond the Gulf of Uraba; Balboa in his Voyage to the South-sea; and Pedro de Avila in the Conquest of Parana.

nama. Grown rich by these Adventures, he associated himself with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Loques a rich Priest; who betwixt them raised 220 Soldiers, and in the year 1525. went to seek their Fortunes on those Southern Seas which Balboa had before discovered. After divers Repulses at his landing, and some hardship which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took some of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the Wealth of the Country; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the Kings Commission for the Conquest of it; excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furnished and landed in Peru again, at such time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two Brethren for the Kingdom, and taking part with the Faction of Guscar, marched against Ambaliba; whom he met with in the plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a Parley, then to fight a Battle. Pizarro taking this Advantage, picked a Quarrel with him, and suddenly charged upon him with his Horse and Ordnance, slaying his Guard without resistance; and coming near the Kings Person, (who was then carried on mens shoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him Prisoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 8000 Castellans, and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks, (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his Household Plate; and in the spoil of Caxamalca, almost infinite Riches. This, with the Kings Ransom, came to so great a sum, that besides the fifth part which Pizarro, sent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his Brethren kept unto themselves, every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horseman twice as much, for their part of the Spoil; besides what they had gotten in the way of plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miserable King, their prisoner, hath been shewn already. Upon which A& though they put many fair pretences, yet God declared that he was not pleased with their proceedings; few of the greatest undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro, in reward of so great a Service, was made the first Vice-Roy of Peru, and created Marquess of Anatilla; yet having put to death Almagro, his chief Companion, who had raised a strong Faction in that State, he was after slain at Lima by some of that Faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befel all the rest: his Brother John slain by the Peruvians; Martin in Lima with himself; Ferdinando secretly made away in Prison; and finally, Gonsales the fourth Brother, with the son of Almagro, severally executed for their Treasons and Insurrections, which they had acted in this Country against their King. So little Joy doth Wealth ill gotten bring along with it to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whose strange both fortunes and misfortunes in the course of his Life are to be paralleld only with the like of Sinan, a great Basha in the Court of Selimus the first; who being born of base Parentage, as he (being a Child) was sleeping in the Shade, had his Genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkish Officers which usually provided young Boys for the service of the Grand Signiour, being in Epirus, (for that was Sinan's Country) and hearing of this so extraordinary an Eunuch, took him among others along with them to the Court: where under Mahomet the Great, Bajazet the second, and his son Selimus, he so exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Basha of the Court; and so well deserved it, that he was accounted Selimus's right hand; and was indeed the man to whose Valour especially the Turks owe their Kingdom of Egypt: in which Kingdom then not fully settled he was also slain.

But to return to Peru. No question but the Forces and Revenues of it were exceeding great. For, though we find no particular musters which they made of their men, or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field, yet by their great Successes and many Victories, we may conclude them to be Masters of great Bands of men, and skilful in the Arts of Conduct. Nor can we otherwise conjecture at the greatness of their yearly income, but by the greatness of their Treasure; so infinite and almost incredible, that all the Vessels of the Kings House, his Table and Kitchen, were of Gold and Silver: Statues of Giants in his Wardrobe, together with the resemblances in proportion and bigness of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, Plants and Fishes, which were found in that Kingdom, of the purest Gold: Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, Chests, all of Gold or Silver; Billets of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billets of Wood cut out for the fire; a three Houses full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, besides infinite other Treasures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew so wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an Horse, 60 Crowns for a small Vessel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shoes; consuming all upon their lusts, and sacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

CHILE.

CHILE is bounded on the North with the Defart of Alacama, 90 Leagues in length, interposed betwixt it and Peru; on the West, with Mar del Zur; on the South, with the Straights of Magellan; and on the East, as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantick;

the Countreys lying on the East betwixt it and Paraguay not well discovered.

This Country lieth wholly beyond the Tropick of Capricorn, by consequence in the temperate Zone, extended in length, from the borders of Peru to the mouth of the Straights, 500 Leagues; but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile from the word Chil, (which in more Tongues then ours doth signifie as much as Cold) from the extreme coldness of the Air and Clime; so vehement here in our Summer Solstice, that many times both the Horses and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardened like a piece of Marble.

The Soil hercof in the midland parts Mountainous and unfruitful; towards the Sea-side level, fertile, and watered tered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: productive of Maize, Wheat, and most excellent Pasturage: plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, store of Cattel and Wine enough for the use of the People; the Vines brought hither out of Spain prospering here exceedingly, as do also all the Fruits and Plants, which are sent from thence into this Country. The people very tall and warlike, some of them of a Gigantick Stature, affirmed (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high; yet well conditioned with his greatness, where not much provoked. Their Garments of the Skins of Beasts, their Arms Bow and Arrows: white of Complexion, but as hirsute and shaggy-haired as the rest of the Savages.

Rivers of note there are not any but what will fall within the view of its several Provinces. Divided commonly into 1. Chile specially so called, and 2. Magellanica.

1. CHILE specially so called is bounded on the North with the Defart of Alacama; on the South, with Magellanica; on the West, with Mar del Zur; and on the East, with some unknown Countreys, lying betwixt it and Paraguay, or the province of Rio de la Plata: not above 20 Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reason of the name, together with the nature of the soil and people, we have seen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1. Rio de Copayabo, giving name unto a Promontory near the Influx of it, in the Northern borders of this Province. 2. Rio de Coquimbo, 3. La Ligua, 4. Topocalma, 5. Cacapo, 6. Caspen: all falling into Mar del Zur. And besides these, a nameless, but more famous, River, which in the day-time runneth with a violent Current, and in the night hath no Water at all. The reason of it is, because this River, having no constant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains, which in the heat of the day, melted into Water is precipitately carryed into the Sea: but congealed in the coldness of the night yields no Water at all, whereby the Chancel becometh empty.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Copayabo, giving name to a fertile Valley in the most Northern Tract hercof, and neighboured by a small, but commodious Haven. 2. Serena, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the Sea-side; not far from the Influx of Rio de Coquimbo, on whose banks it is seated, there built by Baldivia, the Conquerour and first Governour of this Province, Anno 1544. The Territory round about it is rich in Mines of Gold: The Town it self of 200 Houses, but so well peopled, that at the landing of some of the English under Captain Drake, they plentifully sent out 300 Horse and 200 Foot to compel them back unto their Ships, which they did accordingly. 3. S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80 Houses in it) because the Residence of the Governour and the Courts of Justice; adorned with a Cathedral Church, and some Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars; situate in the 34. Degree of Southern Latitude on the Banks of the River Topocalma, at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val Paraisa, the best and most noted of this Country; out of which the English under Drake took a Spanish Ship, and there in 25000 Pezos of the purest Gold, besides other Commodities. 4. Concepcion, 70 Leagues on the South of S. Jago, situate on the Shores of a large and capacious Bay, (by the Natives called Penco) by it and the Mountains on all sides so strongly fenced, that the Governour, when distressed by the Savages, (as sometimes they are) retireth hither for safety. Well fortified in such places as are accessible, and garrisoned with 500 Soldiers, besides the Townsmen. Opposite herunto lieth the Isle of

S. Mary, so near the Shore, that it seems to have been rent from it by the force of the Sea: fruitful and very well provided of Swine and Poultry; but the people so in fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Concepcion, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5. Auracosa, (so I think they call it) a strong Fortrefs in the Country of the Auracans, the most potent Nation of these parts; who, weary of the Spanish Yoke, revolted against Baldivia, overcame him in a set fight, and at last killed him: this piece being thereupon forsaken, and of no more use. 6. De los Confines, built by Baldivia in the borders of the Country of those Auracans, to serve for a defence to the Mines of Ongol near adjoining: distant from the Sea shores about 18 Leagues, enlarged by Garcias de Mendoza, and by him called Villa Nueva de los Infantes. 7. Imperial, in the 38 Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, situate on the banks of the River Cauten; an Episcopall See, and the best Fortrefs of the Spaniards in all this Province. Fortified and made a Colony of Spaniards in the year 1551, and by Baldivia called Al Imperial, because they found an Eagle with two heads made in Wood on the doors of their houses; a Monument perhaps of some Germans who had here been shipwreckt. A Town of so great Wealth and Power, before known to the Spaniards, that in a War betwixt them and the Auracans, spoken of before, they are said to have brought into the Field 30000 men. 8. Villa Rica, another Colony of Spaniards, 16 Leagues on the South-East of Imperial, and 25 Leagues from the Shore of Mar del Zur. 9. Baldivia, the most noted Town of all these parts, situate in the Valley of Guadallaguen, in the Latitude of 40 Degrees, or thereabouts: adorned with a safe and capacious Haven, and neighboured by Mines of Gold of such infinite Riches, that Baldivia (by whom built for defence of those Mines) received thence daily by the labour of each single Workman 25000 Crowns a man, and sometimes more. Sacked by the Savages Anno 1599; since repaired by the Spaniards. 10. Osona, on the Banks of the Bay of Chiloe, (or Ancud, as the Savages call it) situate in a barren soil, but well stored with Gold, and thought to be more populous then Baldivia it self. 11. Castro, the most Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44: built in a large and fruitful Island of the Bay of Ancud, said to be 50 Leagues in length, but the breadth unequal: in some parts nine, in others not above two Leagues. 12. S. Juan de la Frontera, on the farther side of the Andes towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong also certain Islands lying on the Coasts and shores hercof, 1. S. Mariæ, spoken of before. 2. Mocha, upon the south of that, 5 Leagues from the Continent, fruitful of Grain, and very good Pasturage, sufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the descendents of those Americans who fled hither to avoid the tyranny of the Spaniards, hitherto have made good their Liberty against that Nation: of which they are so jealous, that they would not suffer the English under Drake and Cavendish to land amongst them for fear they had been Spaniards, or some Friends of theirs. 4. Castro, which we have spoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA is bounded on the North with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata: on the south, with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Straights of Magellan, on the West, with Mar del Zur: on the East, with Mar del Nord, or the Main Atlantick. So called from Magellanus, by whom first discovered: of whom we shall speak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Straights 300 Leagues in breadth: from one face to the other, where broadest, above 400 Leagues, in some some but 90 only, and in others less, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyramide. The Inland parts of the Country not yet discovered, those on the sea side observed to be rocky and unfruitful, exposed for the most part of the year to such bitter colds, that the Snow lieth always on the Mountains. The People said to be tall of Stature, and some of them of a Gigantick bigness, reported to be ten or eleven foot high: and by the Spaniards for that reason called Patagons. Both great and less sufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurnished of any Houses, notwithstanding the rigour of the Cold.

No Houses doth imply no Towns, and therefore we must look for none in so rude a Country, as hath not hitherto conversed with more civil Nations. So that the most that we can do is to coast the Shores, and see what names of Ports or Promontories we can find therein. And first upon the Sea-coasts towards Mare del Zur, they place (beginning at the North, and so descending) 1. the Promontory called Cabo de las Islas. 2. The Port or Haven of S. Stephen. 3. The Valley of Nuestra Señora, or our Ladies Valley. 4. The Promontory called Punta Delgado. 5. Porto delos Reyes. 6. Anchón Sinfalds, on the banks of a semi-circular Bay, the receptacle of many Rivers, and not a few Islands. 7. Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victory, situate betwixt that Bay and the mouth of the Straights; so called from the name of the ship, in which some of the Magellan's soldiers did first compass the World. For Ferdinand Magellan, a noble Portugal, and well skilled in Navigation, at the persuasion or command of Charles the fifth, to whom (upon some discontents received in the Court of Emanuel King of Portugal) he had made offer of his service, undertook the finding out (if possible) a shorter cut to the Moluccas than discovered formerly. In the year 1520, he began his Voyage, his Fleet consisting but of 5 ships, whereof that called S. Antonio forsook him in some great displeasure, and returned to Spain; another of them being lost not long after in a storm. Keeping along the Coast to the south of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October he fell upon the Cape of Virgins, at the very entrance of this Straight, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon; and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of these Narrow Seas, since called Fretum Magellanicum, and entered into Mare del Zur. Having refreshed himself in a little Island called Juvaganova, he passed unto that also, but not far from the Philippines: the Prince whereof, called Humabar, he persuaded to become a Christian, baptizing him by the name of Charles: and finally engaging in a Quarrel of his against the King of Mantan, or Mattan, an adjoining Island, he was there unfortunately slain, Anno 1521. After his death Seran chief Pilot of the Navy, together with 70 of his men, being treacherously slain by Humabar, the other three ships departed with no more than 115 men aboard them, which put them to a necessity of burning one of their Ships, that they might have men enough to make good the others. With these two Ships they came at last to the Moluccas, where being kindly entertained by the King of Tidore, they divided themselves: that called the Trinity, under Captain Spinosa, deligned for Panama in New Spain, but from thence driven back by contrary Winds to the Isle of Tidore, was seized on and spoiled by Antonio Brito, a Captain commanding there a small Navy of the King of Portugal. The other Ship, which by a happy Omen was called Vitoria, having in her but 47 Spaniards, under the command of Sebastião del Cano, after a very long and dangerous Voyage, wherein it was thought that he had failed at the least 14000 Leagues, returned to Spain in safety, and brought the welcome news of their good Success. We use to say that Sir Francis Drake was the first that failed round about the World: which may be true in a qualified sense; viz. that he was the first Capt. or man of note that achieved this Enterprize, Magellanus perishing in the midst of it: and therefore he is reported to have given for his Device a Globe, with this Motto, Tu primus circumdediti me. This Navigation was begun Anno 1577, and in two years and a half with great vicissitude of fortune finished. Concerning which his famous Voyage, a Poet then living directed to him this Epigram:

Drake, pererrasti novis quem terminus Orbis,

Quemque simul mundi vidisti uterque Polus;

Si taceant homines, facient te Sydera notum.

Sol nescit comitis non memor esse sui.

Drake, whom th' enconspic'd Earth so fully knew,
And whom at once both Poles of Heaven did view;
Should men forget thee, Sol could not forbear

To Chronicle his fellow-Traveller.

This Fretum Magellanicum, these Magellan Straights, are in the 52 degree, and are by Mr. John Davis, who professeth to know every Creek in them, thus described. "For 14 Leagues within the Cape of S. Mary lieth the first Straight, where it ebbereth and floweth with a violent swiftness, the Straight not being fully half a mile broad, and the first fall into it very dangerous and doubtful. "Three Leagues this Straight continueth, when it openeth into a Sea eight miles long, and as much broad; beyond which lieth the second Straight, right West-South-West from the first, a perilous and unpleasant passage, three Leagues long, and a mile in breadth. "This Straight openeth it self into another Sea, which is extended even to the Cape of Victory; where is the Straight properly called the Straight of Magellan; a place of that nature, that which way soever a man bend his course, he shall be sure to have the Wind against him. The length hereof is 40 Leagues; the breadth in some places two Leagues over, in others not fully half a mile. The Chancel in depth 200 Fathoms, so no hope of Anchorage; the course of the Water full of turnings and changings, withal so violent, that when a ship is once entred, there is no returning. On both sides of it are high Mountains continually covered with snow, from which proceed those Counter-winds which beat with equal fury on all parts thereof. A place assuredly not pleasing to view, and very hazardous to pass. So far, and to this purpose Mr. Davis.

But to proceed: the way thus opened was travelled not long after, Anno 1525, by Garcia de Loyasa, next in the year 1534, by Simon de Alcazar, and four years after by three Ships of the Bishop of Placenza in Spain: but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure through till undertaken and performed by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1577, after which it grew more familiar amongst the Seamen. Howsoever, we are so much Debtors to the Attempts of others, as that we owe to them the most part of the names of those Bays and Promontories which they discovered in the search: though many of them be since new named by the English and Hollanders. Those of most note, proceeding from Cabo de la Victoria, are 1. Cabo de Quade, 2. Cape Gallant, 3. Cordes Bay, 4. Cape Forward, being the very point or Corners of this great Pyramis. 5. Porto Famine, 6. A little Isle called Elizabeths Island, and at the Exit of the Straight in Mare del Zur, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending Northward toward the great River of Plata, we find upon the Main Ocean, 1. Rio de la Cruz, neighboured by a Promontory called Cabo de las Barreras, where Magellan died all September, and the greatest part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to discover farther. 2. The Bay of S. Julian, out out of which he set sail for this Adventure about the latter end of August, leaving there two of his Companions condemned of Mutiny. 3. The Port of Desire. 4. A large Promontory, called the Cape of S. George. 5. The out-lets of a fair River, named Rio de los Camerones. 6. A goodly Haven, entitled Puerto de los Leones. 7. The Cape called Punta de terra plana. 8. The Bay of Amegada. 9. The Promontory called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10. the River of S. Anne, beyond which lieth the Province of the River of Plata. This is the most that I can say touching Magellanica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points, and Promontories; and this is nothing (as we see) but a Nomenclator; it must be better peopled and more discovered before it can afford Discourse of more variety. All we can add is, that the passage back again from Mare del Zur, to the Atlantic hath not been found so safe and easy, as from the main Atlantic unto Mare del Zur. Attempted first by Ladrillero a Spaniard, at the command of Garcia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile, and attempted only: performed not long after the Voyage of Sir Francis Drake by D. Pedro Sarmiento, employed therein by Francis de Toledo, Viceroy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no less danger; so much, that few have since endeavoured to return that way.

As for the Fortunes and Affairs of the Province of Chile, to which we have made this an Appendix, we are to understand that it was first discovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief Friends and Associates. But he having other delings in his head about Peru, which he intended for himself, and to out Pizarro, did discover it only; the Conquest of it being reserved for Baldivia, whom Pizarro, on the settling of his Affairs by the death of Almagro, had employed in that action. He, going Soldier-like to work, not only did subdue the people; but, as he gained ground, built some Fortresses, or planted Colonies of Spaniards, in convenient places. This done, about the year 1544, his ill luck was to meet with a more stubborn and untractable people than either Cortez or Pizarro had done before him; who, quickly weary of the Yoke, besieged one of his Forts, encountered Baldivia himself coming with too small a power to relieve his people, vanquished and slew him in the field. Some add, that they poured Gold into his Throat, (as the Parthians are reported to have done to Craesus) bidding him satiare himself with that which he so much thirsted after. After this blow given, in the year 1551, The Savages recovered the rich Valleys of Auranco, Tucapel, and Parrenes, which they keep from them till this day. The Towns of Los Confiner and Villa Rica, both on the borders of those Valleys, were deserted also. Nor staid they there, though they took time to breathe a little. For in the year 1599, (having provided themselves of 200 Corslets and seventy Muskets) they break out again, surprised and sacked the Town of Baldivia, forced Imperiale, after a whole years Siege to surrender without any Conditions, and in the year 1604 took Osorno by Famine. Of thirteen Cities which the Spaniards had possessed amongst them, they had taken nine: some of them since recovered, but the most demolished. As ill it thrived with them in Magellanica, where Fedro de Sarmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies to command those Straights, Anno 1584. The one he settled near the mouth of the Straight, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jesus, and left therein 150 of his men: the other he intended on the narrowest place of the Straight, to be called Ciudad del Rey Philip, which he resolved to fortifie and plant with Ordnance. But winter coming on, he left there others of his men, promising to relieve them shortly with all things necessary. But such was his unhappy fate, that after many Shipwrecks and disappointments which befel unto him in the pursuit of his Design, he was at last taken by the English, under the command of Sir Walter Raligh, who was there in person; and his two Colonies, for want of timely Succours, either starved at home, or eaten by the Savages, as they ranged the Country.

And so much for CHILE.

OF PARAGUAY.

PARAGUAY is bounded on the South with Magellanica; on the East, with the main Atlantic; on the North, with Brazil; on the West, with some unknown Countries betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River Paraguay (one of the greatest of the World) which runneth through it: the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great store of Silver they expected from it.

The Country (for so much as hath been discovered) is said to be of a fruitful soil, capable of Wheat and other of the Fruits of Europe, which thrive here exceedingly: nor do the Cattel encrease less which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horses multiplying in a wonderful manner. Well stored with Sugar-Canes, and not unfurnished of Mines both of Brass and Iron, some Veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethysts. Of Stags great plenty, and of Monkeys almost infinite numbers; not to say any thing of Lions, Tigers and such hurtful Creatures, of which a few would be thought too many. Of the people there is nothing said but what hath been observed of other Savages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. De la Plata, whose course we have described already. 2. Rio de Buenos Ayres, so called from the chief Town, by which it runneth. 3. Zarcarana, which riseth in the Country of the Diagnias, and falling into a Lake at the end of his course, doth from thence pass into the body of De la Plata. 4. Estero, which rising in the Valley of Chalacqui, and passing through two great Lakes, meets with 5. the Bermeio, and both together fall into De la Plata near the Town of S. Fe. 6. Pilcomayo, which hath its Fountain near the Mines of Potosi, in the Province of Charcas; but his fall in the same River with those before: Then on the North-side of that River: there is, 7. that of S. Salvador, or S. Salvador, as the Spaniards call it. 8. Rio Negro, of the Black River, of a longer course, but buried in the end, as the other is, in the depths of La Plata. 9. Yguazú, and 10. several others, whose united Streams make the great River Paraná, the second River of esteem in all this Country, but swallowed in that of Plata. Besides these, 11. Rio de S. Martín, and 12. Rio grande, falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of, 1. Rio de la Plata, 2. Tucumán, and 3. S. Cruz de Sierra. The rest not conquered by the Spaniards, or not well discovered cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA FLATA, or the Province of De la Plata, lieth upon both sides of that River, ascending many Leagues up the Water, but not extended much upon either side. The reason of the name, the quality of the Soil and People, we have seen before.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Buenos Ayres, or Nuestra Señora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Ciudad de la Trinidad, seated on the Southern Bank of the River of Plata, there built by Pedro de Mendoza, Anno 1535. Defended by the Inhabitants, and again new-peopled by Cabeza de Vacca, Anno 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned; and finally, in the year 1582, re-edited and planted with a new Colony. Situate on the rising of a little Hill, in the 34. degree and 45 minutes of the Southern Latitude, and about 64 Leagues from the mouth of the River. Fortified with a Mud-wall and a little Castle, with some pieces of Ordnance: yet neither large, nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. 2. S. Fe, or S. Fides, 50 Leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the same side of the Water, near the confluence of it with the River Estero: of the same bigness as the other, but somewhat richer; the people here being given to Cloathing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Brasilians for Sugar, Rice, and other necessary Commodities. 3. Nuestra Señora del Assumption, but commonly Assumption only, higher up the River, from the mouth thereof 300 Leagues distant: situate in the Latitude of 25, and almost in the midst betwixt Peru and Brasil, well built, and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Country. Inhabited by three sorts of men: first, natural Spaniards, of which here are accounted 400 Families; 2. the Mestizos, begotten by the Spaniards upon the Natives; and 3. Mulatto's, born of the Spaniards and Negroes: of which two last here are thought to be many thousands. Not far off is a great Lake called Tupumá, in the midst whereof is an huge Rock, above 100 Fathom high above the Water. 4. Ciudad Real, by the Spaniards called also Ontiveros, by the Natives Guaýra, 80 Leagues North from the Town of Assumption, situate on the banks of the River Paraná, in a fruitful soil, but a sickly Air; for which cause, and the frequent Insurrections of the Savages, but meanly peopled. 5. S. Anne, on the banks of the same River Paraná. 6. S. Salvador, on a River of the same name. Besides these, there are up the River above Assumption three noted Ports: 7. Puerto de Guaybiama, 8. Puerto de la Candelaria, and 9. Puerto de los Reyes; but whether Towns, or only Havens on that River for dispersing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to say. The last have one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas, and the death of 80 of his men by the hands of the Savages.

2. TUCUMAN lieth on the West of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the Confines of Chile, through which they make their way unto Mare del Norte; as through the Province of Rio de la Plata unto Mare del Norte; the exact bounds hereof to the North and South not yet resolved on.

The Country, for so much hereof as lieth towards

Chile, is well manured and fruitful, that towards Magellanica barren, untilled, and not well discovered. No Veins of Gold or Silver in it, though situate in a temperate and agreeable air. Watered by the two Rivers of, 1. Salado, so called from the brackishness and saltness of it; and 2. Del Estero, spoken of before, so named, because sometimes it breaketh out of his Banks. The Inhabitants now civilized both in manners and habit, in both which they conform to the Gait of the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Jago del Estero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Varco, the principal of that small Province, honoured with a Bishop's See, and the Seat of the Governour, and distant about 180 Leagues from Buenos Ayres. 2. S. Michael de Tucumán, seated at the foot of a Rocky Mountain, but near a very fruitful soil both for Corn and Pasturage, distant 28 Leagues from S. Jago. 3. Talavera, or Nuestra Señora de Talavera, but by the Natives called Esteco, situate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitful soil, and inhabited by an industrious People, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton-wools, which grow hereabouts in great abundance, with which they drive a great Trade at the Mines of Potosí, from hence distant but 140 Leagues. 4. Cordoba, in a convenient place for Trade, as being equally distant from S. Juan de la Frontera, in the Prefecture of Chile, and S. Fe, in Rio de la Plata, 50 Leagues from each, and seated in a Road from Peru unto Buenos Ayres, much travelled consequently by those who go from Peru to Brasil or Spain. 5. New London, and 6. New Cordoba, built at such time as Garcias de Mendoza, Son of the Marquess of Cannete, and Vice-roy of Peru, was Governour of this Province; but both abandoned not long after. Besides these, 7. Morata, 8. Chocoma, 9. Sucocoma, and 10. Calabina; Townships belonging to the Natives.

3. S. CRUX DE SIERRA, is the name of a little Territory lying towards Peru, on the North of the River Guaýra, and in the Country of the Chiquitos and Chiriguanoes, two Tribes of the Savages. By some accounted to Peru, because under the Jurisdiction of Charco, but so far distant from the nearest bounds of that Province, (100 Spanish Leagues at least) that I think fitter to account it to the Province of Paraguay, betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guaýra it is wholly seated.

The Soil is abundantly productive of Maize and Wines, plenty of most sorts of American Fruits, which I can give no English name to, a kind of Palm; of whose Trunk they make great store of Meal, of good taste and nourishment. But neither Soil nor Air agreeable to the Fruits of Europe, which ripen slowly, and soon die. So destitute of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make use of Rain-water preserved in pits: the cause of no small Wants, and of many great Murders; the people either dying for thirst, or killing one another for some Water to quench it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Santa Cruz, situate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but situate in an open Field, enlarging it self into many Plains and thirly Valleys: neighboured by a Brook, or Torrent, breaking from the Rocks, which four Leagues from the Town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth supply the Town with fish. 2. Baranca, 60 Leagues from the Mines of Potosí. 3. Tomina, 4. Lagunilla, and 5. Tarixa, three Forts erected for defence of this Province against the Incursions and Alarms of the Chiriguanoes. 6. Neyva Rijja, once a Colony of the Spaniards, but sacked and dispeopled by the Chiriguanoes, when the Count of Neyva was Vice-roy of Peru: at what time Nesfo de Chaves, who in the year 1548 first discovered those parts, darts, was treacherously slain by one of the Savages.

The principal Nations of this Country, when first known to the Spaniards, were the Querandies, Timbues, and Caracares, the Chanes, Chimines, Guaranies, the Guaýcurues, Caovues, Guaxarapi, &c. on both sides of the river of Plata; the Tucumanoes, Jurries, and Diagnitis, in the Cantred of Tucumán: more Northward, where the Spaniards have as yet no Hold, the Chunettes, Xaquettes, Xacooes, and the Xarayer, great and powerful Nations, hitherto unconquered. The first Discovery of this Country is ascribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spanish Adventurer; who in the year 1515, passing up the River to the Latitude of 34 Degrees and 40 minutes, and unadvisedly landing with too small a power, was there unfortunately slain. The Design was after prosecuted by Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1526. who failed against the stream as high as the River Paraná; at the reception of which, the great River, called till then by the name of Paraguay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Fortrefs called Fort Cabot, and 30 Leagues more up the River that called S. Anne, (both long since ruined) where Diego Garcias, a Portugal, found him in the year next following. In the year 1535, the business was resumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres, and sent John de Ayolas to discover Northwards; of whose unhappy end we have heard before. Not fully settled till the year 1540, when Alvares Nunez, commonly called Cabeza de Vacca, made a more full discovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing since done for the farther planting of the Country, though some places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and consequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the work.

And so much for PARAGUAY.

OF BRASIL.

BRASIL is bounded on the East with Mare del Noordo, or the main Atlantick; on the West, with some undiscovered Countries lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North, with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragony; and on the South, with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reason of the name I find not, except it came from the abundance of that Wood called Brasil-wood, which was found amongst them; as the famous Isle of Cyprus, from its plenty of Cypresses.

It reacheth from the 29 to the 39 Degree of Southern Latitude; or measuring it by miles, it is laid to be 1500 miles from North to south, and 500 miles in breadth from the sea to the Andes: which must be understood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwise all that which is possessed by the Portugals under the name of Brasil is so short of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they possess nothing but the sea-coasts, and some few Leagues (comparatively) within the Lands the greatest part of it being so far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been discovered.

The Country is full of Mountains, Rivers, and Forests, diversified into Hills and Plains always pleasant and green. The Air for the most part sound and wholesome, by reason of the fresh Winds which do reign amongst them; there being all along the Coasts certain quick Winds rising from the south about 2 hours before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants; yet in regard it is somewhat moist, it is held to be more agreeable to old men than to young. The soil is in most parts very fruitful, were it not cloyed with too much Rain: but howsoever liberally provided with Sugar-canes, (no one Country more) for the refining of which they have their Ingenios, (as they call them) or sugar-houses, in most parts of the Country, in which they entertain many thousand slaves, brought hither yearly from Guinea and Congo, and other Maritime parts of Africa. A Trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years, in each of which they bring not out of Brasil to Portugal 150000 Arrobes of Sugar; every Arrobe containing 25 Bushels of our English measure. Here is also infinite quantities of that red Wood used in dying cloth, which we commonly call Brasil-wood; (but whether the Wood took that name from the Country, or the Country rather from the Wood, I determine not;) the Trees whereof are of that incredible greatness, that whole Families live on an arm of one of them, every Tree being as populous as the most of our Villages. In other Commodities, common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular instance.

Amongst the Rarities hereof are reckoned, 1. the Plant called Copiba, the Bark of which being cut doth send out a Balm, the sovereign virtue whereof is so well known to the very Beasts, that being bit by venomous Serpents, they resort unto it for their Cure. 2. The Herb called Sentida, or Viva, which roughly touched will close the Leaves, and not open them again till the man that had offended it be gone out of sight. 3. A kind of Wheat in the Valley near unto S. Sebastian, which is continually growing, and always ripe; or never wholly ripe, because always growing, for when one Ear doth grain, another doth Bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4. The Ox-fish, with Eyes, and Eye-lids, two Arms a Cubit long, and at each an Hand with five Fingers and Nails, as in a Man; under the Arms two Teats, Inwards like a Cow, in every Female. 5. A Creature found of late about the Bay of All-Saints, which had the Face of an Ape, the Foot of a Lion, and all the rest of a Man; of such a terrible Aspect, that the Soldier who shot him fell down dead. But this I rather look on as an Aberration of Nature, than a Rarity in her. 6. Beasts of such strange shapes, and such several kinds, that it may be said of Brasil, as once of Africa, Semper aliquid apportat novi, every day some new object of Admiration.

The people here are endowed with a pretty understanding, as may seem by him who tartly blamed the Covetousness of the Spaniards, for coming from the other end of the World to dig for Gold; and holding up a Wedge of Gold, cried out, Behold the God of the Christians! But in most most places they are barbarous, the Men and Women go stark naked, and on high Festival days hang Jewels in their Lips. These Festival days are when a company of good neighbours come together to be merry over the roasted body of a fat Man, whom they cut in Collops, called Bacon, and eat with great greediness and much delectation. They have two vile qualities, as being mindful of Injuries, and forgetful of benefits. The Men Cruel without measure, and the Women infinitely lascivious. They cannot pronounce the Letters L. F. R. The reason of which, one being demanded, made answer, because they had amongst them neither Law, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able Swimmers, as well Women as Men; and will stay under Water an hour together. Women in Travel are here delivered without any great pain, and presently go about their business belonging to good Housewives: the good man (according to the fashion of our kinder sorts of Husbands in England, who are said to breed their Wives Children) being sick in their stead, and keeping their Bed; so far that he hath Broths made him, is visited by his Gossips, or Neighbours, and hath Junkets sent to comfort him. And amongst these there are some Rarities, if not monstrosities, in nature: it being said of those which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like Beasts, such as Orson is feigned to have been in the old Romance, and probably so ingendred; also that the Guaymires disbowel Women with Child, and roast the Children; and finally, that the Savage Nation of Camucurars have their Paps almost down unto their Knees, which they tie about their waste when they run, or go faster than ordinary.

Rivers of note I find not any till I come to Maragnon, though that be a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, then proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way as we cross the Country, we shall not pass them over without some remembrance. And so proceed we to the Division of the Country, not into Provinces or Nations, as in other places, but into Prefectures, or Captainships, as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13 in all, which we shall severally touch on as we trace the Coast, from the Province of Rio de la Plata unto that of Guiana; that is to say,

1. The Captainship of St. VINCENT, bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the most civil people of all Brasil. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Santos, at the bottom of an Arm of the sea, capable of good Ships of burthen, but distant from the Main three Leagues. A Town of no more than 120 Houses, yet the best of this Prefecture; beautified with a Parish Church, and two Convents of Friars. Taken and held two months by Sir Tho. Cavendish Anno 1591, since that environed with a Wall, and fortified with two Castles. 2. S. Vincent, better built, but not so well fitted with an Haven, of about 70 Houses, and 100 Inhabitants. 3. Itanga, and 4. Cananea, two open Burroughs, but capable of lesser Vessels. 5. S. Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleasant Rivers, which fall not far off into the River of Iuambia. A Town of about 100 houses, one Church, two Convents, and a College of Jesuits; neighboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains called Pernabiscabos. 6. S. Philip, a small Town on the banks of Iuambia, which there begins to enlarge it self and passing thence falleth at last into the River Parana, one of the greatest Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. OF RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of Jannary, so called, because entered into that month by John Dias de Solis, Anno 1515, neglected by the Portugals, it was seized on by the French, under the conduct of Villegagnon, employed herein by Admiral Chastillon, a great Friend of the Hugonots, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge, (as New-England afterwards for the likes,) but within three years after their first coming thither (Anno 1558,) regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the sword. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Collignia, the Fort and Colony of the French, so named in honour of Gaspard Colligni, (commonly called Chastillon) by whose encouragement it was founded. Situate on the Bay of the River Janeiro, which the French called Ganabara. 2. S. Sebastians, built at the mouth of the same Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French, and fortified with four strong Bulwarks. 3. Angra des Reys, distant 12 Leagues Westward from the mouth of the Bay; not long since made a Portugal Colony. Besides these, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Brasilians, in which are said to be above 2000 Inhabitants.

3. OF THE HOLT GHOST, (del Spiritu Santo) one of the most fertile Provinces of all Brasil; well stored with Cotton-wool, and watered with the River Parayba, large, and full of Fish. The only Town of note in it is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200 Portugals. The chief building of it, a Church Dedicated to S. Francis, a Monastery of Benedictines, and a College of Jesuits: the chief convenience, a safe and commodious Haven, capable of the greatest Vessels.

4. OF PORTO SEGURO, the secure haven, so called by Capralis, who first discovered it, when being tossed at sea by a terrible Tempest, he had here refreshed himself. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven, of more Antiquity than Fame, of more fame than bigness, as not containing fully 200 Families. 2. Santa Cruz, three Leagues from the other, a poor Town with a poor Harbour. The Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Aveira in the Realm of Portugal. 3. Santo Amaro, or S. Omers, once of great note for making Sugars, for which use here were five Lugonirs, or Sugar Engines; deserted by the Portugals for fear of the savages, against whom they had not power enough to make good the place, and the Sugars destroyed of purpose, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous people.

5. OF DES ILHEOS, or of the Isles, so named from certain Islands lying against the Bay on which the principal Town is seated, called also Ilheos, or the Island, with like Analogy as a Town of good note in Flanders hath the name of Isleule or Lisle: the Town consisting of about 150 or 200 Families, situate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12 Leagues in compass, (out of which that River doth arise) full of a great, but wholesome Fish, which they call Monatos, some of which are affirmed to weigh 28 pounds. This Colony was much endangered by the Guaymurs, a Race of Savages more savage than any of their Fellows, who, being driven out of their own Country, fell into this Prefecture, which they had utterly destroyed, if some of S. George's Reliques, as the Jesuits tell us, (but I bind no man to believe it, sent by their General from Rome, Anno 1581, had not stayed their fury, and given the Portugals the better.

6. OF TODOS LOS SANTOS, or All Saints, so called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lieth, in breadth two Leagues and an half, 18 Fathoms deep, and full of many little Islands; but flourishing and pleasant, and well stored with Cotton-wool. A Bay in which are many safe stations and Roads for shipping, and therefore of great use and consequence in those furious seas. Memorable for the hardy Enterprize of Peter Heyns, a Dutch-man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces, who, in the year 1627, seized on a Fleet of Spaniards, consisting of 26 fail of ships, (four of them being Men of War) all lying under the Protection of the Forts and Castles, built for the safety of that Bay. For thrusting in amongst them with his own Ship only (the rest not being able to follow the fo laid about him, that having sunk the Vice-Admiral, he took all the rest, conditioning only for their lives, notwithstanding all the shot which was made against him from the Ships and Castles and 42 pieces of Ordnance planted on the shore. Chief Towns hereof, 1. S. Salvador, built on a little Hill on the North-side of the Bay by Thomas de Sousa, adorned with many Churches and Religious Houses, and fortified (besides the Wall) with three strong Castles; the one called S. Anthony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tapepe. Yet not so strong by reason of some Hills adjoining, which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders, Anno 1624, recovered by the Spaniards the next year after, and since lost again. 2. Paripe, more within the Land, four Leagues from S. Salvador. 3. Servigipe del Rey, a small Town, and seated on a small River, but amongst many rich Pastures, and some Vines of Silver.

7. OF FERNAMBUCK, one of the richest Prefectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Brasil-wood which is brought hence yearly for the Diers, in all this Country; but destitute of Corn and most other necessities, with which supplied from the Canaries, and sometimes from Portugal. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Olinda, the largest and best peopled of all Brasil, containing above 2000 persons; is not reckoning in the Church-men, nor taking the great number of Slaves which they keep for their Sugar-works into the account: for whose use they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious Houses, and some Hospitals. Situate near the Sea-side, but on so uneven a piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a regular Fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance by a well-built Castle, and that well planted with Brasil-pieces. Which notwithstanding, in the year 1595, the Castle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they used to stow all their chief Commodities) were taken by Captain James Lancaster and some few of the Englishs, who having tarried in the Haven above a month, brought home with him eight of his own Ships, four French men, and three Hollanders which came in by chance, all laden with the chief Merchandise of Brasil and India. 2. A mata de Brasil, ten miles from Olinda, the Inhabitants whereof live by selling the Brasil-wood. 3. S. Lawrence, a well-frequented Village, but as yet unwall'd. 4. Princur, upon a River so named. 5. Antonio de Cabo, near the Cape of S. Augustines; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugars which are made in each. 6. Garrisa, about five Leagues from Olinda, inhabited for the most part by poor and Mechanical persons, till the year 1632, when taken by the Hollander, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Prefecture, belonging formerly to the Dukes of Albuquerque, (a great House in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces united: the Town of Olinda being taken by them in the year 1629, the Port and all the Avenues unto it so strongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it.

8. OF TAMARACA, so called from an Island of that name, distant about five miles from Olinda, of no great note but for the Haven, and an impregnable Castle on the top of an Hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a strong Bulwark at the mouth of the Port, and so blocked it up, that it hath since been of no use to the Spaniard. This is the least Prefecture in Brasil, but withal the ancientest; extended three Leagues only in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earls of Monsanto in Portugal, who received hence yearly, when entire, thirty thousand Ducats. But his Rents are much diminished, if not quite inverted, since the loss of the Haven.

9. OF PARAIBA, so called from a River of that name (but by the Spaniard called Domingo, of most note herein, on the banks whereof standeth Paraiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the sea, about 3 Leagues from the main, but capable of pretty good Ships to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long since by 500 Portugals, besides Slaves and Negroes. Not walled, till they began to stand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loss of Olinda; but more secured by a strong Castle on the Promontory called Cabo Delo, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, then by any works within the Land. A Castle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were possessed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoining Haven, called, Port Francois, but outed by the Portugals, Anno 1585, who have since held their footing in it, but with fear of the Hollanders; especially since their taking of a little Island lying over against them, called the Isle of Noronha.

10. OF RIO GRANDE, so called from the River Potengi, (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River; not made a Prefecture till of late. For lying open, as it were, to the next Pretender, some of the French began to fix here, Anno 1597. But the King of Spain, not willing to have any such Neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiba to drive them thence; which was done accordingly. But then the Savages beginning to rise up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiba was fain to seek aid from him of Fernambuck; by whose help having slain five thousand, and took three thousand of them, the rest became Vassals to the Portugals, who built here an impregnable Castle, (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned, and furnished with Ammunition and all other Necessaries; very few Portugals, except those of the Garrison, being yet come over.

11. OF SIARA, a late Prefecture also, in which the Portugals have no more than a Castle, with a dozen Houses, or thereabouts, besides that of the Governour adjoining to it. So named from an Haven called Siara, but of no great note, and capable but of little Vessels. Of some Trade in regard of the Crystal, Cotton-wool, and some precious stones found in the Country hereabouts: and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and pursue the Conquest, here being great plenty of Sugar canes, but no Works to make it.

12. OF MARAGNON, an Island lying in the mouth of the great River so called, in the farthest parts of Brasil Northwards, and many Leagues distant from Siara, the last of their Prefectures; the Country intervening not yet discovered, or otherwise made known unto us, then by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coast. An Island of a fruitful soil, it pains and Husbandry were not wanting; affording naturally Maize, and a root called Manioc, both which the Savages use for Bread; good store of Cotton-wools, Saffron, Brasil-wood, and the best Tobacco; and in some places Balm and Amber. Watered with many fresh Rivers and pleasant Springs; well wooded both for Timber and Fuel; and, in a word, blessed with so temperate an Air, (though so near the Equinox) that no place can be more commodious for the Life of Man. The People strong of body, healthy and long-lived, without any baldness, industrious in their Feather-works and Manufactures of Cotton; the Women curious in ordering their Hair, fruitful in Child-bearing, and that till 80 years old, and sometimes more. Both Sexes naked till their Marriage, and then apparelled only from the Waste to their Knees.

The Villages hereof possessed by the Natives consisted but of four great Houses; each of them two or three hundred foot in length, and twenty or thirty foot in breadth.

breadth so placed as they resembled a quadrangular Cloyster; and in each House for many Households, that commonly each of their Villages, or Laves, (for so they called them) contained three hundred persons, and some twice that number. Of these were twenty seven in all, whose names I hold impertinent to be multered here: the total estimate of the people when the French came thither amounting to 12000 Souls. For the French trading in this Island, and carrying themselves courtously amongst the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colony of that Nation, if sent over to them, by whose Aid they might free themselves from all other Pretenders, and be instructed in the Gospel. Accordingly a Colony and four Capebin Friars are sent over to them, Anno 1612. some Savages gained unto the Faith, and a strong Castle, called S. Lewis, commodiously built, and planted with 22 pieces of Ordnance; the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not rested there when discovered by the Portugals, sent thither under the conduct of Hierome de Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Castle of S. Lewis, which the French had built, added those of S. Mary, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Island by the names of S. Andrew, and S. Jago, and ever since have held it without molestation.

13. Of P. A., the most Northern Prefecture of Brasil towards Guiana; so called from the River of Para, (supposed to be a branch of the River of Amazon) which runneth through it. The River at the mouth of it is two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Channel fifteen Fathoms deep: on the banks whereof (but on an higher ground than the rest) the Portugals have built the Castle of Para, in form quadrangular, and well-walled, except towards the River: the Country therabouts being inhabited by 300 Portuguese, besides the Garrison.

Now for the Fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supreme. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countries. These Tribes for many, and the Multer of their names so useless, that I now forbear it. In this estate they lived when discovered first, but by whom first discovered will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get some colour of a Title for the Crown of Castile, ascribe it to John Pinson and Diego de Lope, two of their own Country, who, as they say, had landed on it in the year 1500 before the coming of Capralis, though the same year also. The Portugals attribute the Discovery of it to Pedro Alvarez de Capralis, sent by their King Emanuel to the East-Indies; who being driven over hither from the Coast of Guinea, took possession of it, and as a Monument thereof, advanced a Cross, giving the name of Sandie Cruzis; or the Holy Cross, to this new Discovery. That name changed afterwards to Brasil, from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongst them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Vesputius, a noble Florentine, Anno 1501. and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation, in the year 1503, were by Emanuel employed in a farther Discovery. Who speeding fortunately in it, the Portugals did accordingly send over some Plantations thither. But a great controversy growing betwixt them and the Spaniards, to whether of the two it of right belonged; the Spaniard was content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull or Edict of Pope Alexander the sixth (by whom the whole undiscovered World was divided betwixt those two Kings) it seemed to fall within the Grant made to the Crown of Castile. Enjoyed by this Emanuel, and the Kings succeeding, till the death of Sebastian, (which Sebastian the Jesuits look on as the Founder of all their Colleges in this Country) and by the Spaniards since the death of Henry, (whose Reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal; that Nation being so prudently jealous of their Interest in it, that they would not suffer any of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongst them. By them possessed entirely without any Rivals, (I mean, for so much of the Country as they had subdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part, and got the Prefectures of Fernambuck and Todos los Santos (or the Bay) by the right of War. The rest with all the other Members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, submitting unto John the fourth, of the House of Braganza, whom the Portuguese had made their King, Anno 1639.

And so much for BRASIL.

GUIANA.

GUIANA is bounded on the East with the main Atlantick; on the West, with the Mountains of Peru, or rather some undiscovered Countries interposed betwixt them; on the North, with the River Orenouque, and on the South, with that of the Amazons. The reason of the name I find not, unless it be so called from the River Wia, of which more anon.

It is situate on both sides of the Line, extended from the fourth Degree of Southern to the eighth of Northern Latitude. The Air, notwithstanding this situation under the Equator, is affirm'd to be temperate, the Eastern winds (which they call the Briezes) constantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extrem heat thereof by their cooler blasts. The Country towards the Sea-side flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and swelled with Hills: in all places so adorned with Natures Tapestry, the boughs and branches of the Trees never unclothed or left naked, (Fruit either ripe or green growing still upon them) that no Country in the World could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we shall see anon, when the particular parts hereof come into discourse.

Of the People it is said in general, that they have amongst them no settled Government, and though they acknowledge some Superiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they please. Adultery and Murder, which are only punishable, are not otherwise expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer sort have two or three Wives, and sometimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her: they that have more, and they who have but one, alike jealous of them; and if they take them in Adultery, without any farther Ceremony or Formalities of Law they beat out their Brains. Their Wives, especially the elder, they use for Servants; and he which hath most such is the greatest man. Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not so far forwards on the way to the worship of the true God, as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatry be mistaken in the proper Object, it supposeth a Deity; and they who have this principle, that there is a God, have learned one, and not the least, of the points of their Catechism. Their Accounts amongst themselves they keep with a bundle of sticks, which they diminish or increase according to the times of their Contract. Their Funerals they solemnize with a Feast, but with such diversity in the deportment of both Sexes, that while the Women howl extremely, the men perform the Obsequies with singing and excessive drinking; the one as improper for a Feast, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of most note in it, besides 1. Orenouque, and 2. the River of Amazons, and those rather Boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, then proper unto this alone. 3. Arrawari. 4. Conawini. 5. Casprrough, or Cassipure; all falling into the same main Atlantick, betwixt the River of Amazons and Wiapoco: the last rising out of the Lake of the Arachosi, half a mile broad at the mouth or Influx into the Sea, and but five spans deep. 6. Wiapoco, of which more hereafter. 7. Wia. 8. Cajane. 9. Marvine. 10. Estiquebe, a River of twenty days journey long, betwixt Wiapoco and the River of Orenouque, or Raliana.

The whole divided commonly into these four parts: 1. Rio de las Amazonas, or the River of Amazons. 2. Wiapoco, or Guiana specially so called. 3. Orenouque. And 4. The Isles of Guiana.

1. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazons, containeth that part of this Country which lieth along the Tract of that famous River. The Soil is in some places dry and barren, in others fertile and productive of the choicest Fruits, full of large Woods and in those Woods most sort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongst others of most note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana) which they call the Totocke; a Tree of great bulk, and as great a Fruit; this last as big as a mans head, and so hard withal, that when the Fruit grows ripe and ready to fall, the people dare not go into the Woods without an Helmet, or some such shelter over their heads, for fear of beating out their Brains. The kernels of it, for the most part ten or twelve in number, have the taste of Almonds, and are said to be provocative in point of Venery. Of which the Savages have this By-word, Pigue seek in Sacowe pingan Totocke; that is to say, Eat Totocke if thou wouldst be potent in the acts of Venus. Here are also Sugar-canes in some places; and the Plant called Piza, the taste whereof is said to be like Strawberries, Claret Wine, and Sugar.

The principal Inhabitants of this part of the Country, the Taoes, Cockettway, Patecui, Tockjaner, Tomoer, and Wackebanes, dwelling on the Continent; the Maraons and Arawians, possessed of the Islands. Towns of note I have met with none amongst them, though every house (most of them 140 foot in length, 20 in breadth, and entertaining at the least an hundred persons) might pass sufficiently for a Village. Yet they are safer housed than so, for otherwise their Houses would afford them but little comfort in the overflowings of the River, which drown all the Country: and therefore they betake themselves to the tops of Trees, and there remain like Birds, with their several Families, till the Waters be drawn in again, and the Earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find some of these their dwellings called by proper Names: as, 1. Mutarem. 2. Roskyer. 3. Anasaprock. 4. Hasman. 5. Womians: and 6. Cogemymne. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The first Discoverer of this River and the parts adjoining was Orellana, the Lieutenant of Gonzales Pizarro, whom his Brother Francisco Pizarro, then Vice-roy of Peru, had made the Governour of Quito. Moved with the noise of some rich Countries beyond the Andes, he raised sufficient Forces, and passed over those Mountains, where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a Boat, and sent this Orellana to bring in Provisions. But the River which he chanced into was so swift of course, that he was not able to go back; and was therefore of necessity to obey his fortune in following the course of that strong water. Paddling along by divers desolate and uncropled places, he came at last into a Country planted and inhabited; where he first heard of the Amazons, (by whose Savages called Comanyaras) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people. And in the end, having spent his time in palling down this river from the beginning of January, to the end of August 1540, he came at last into the Sea, and getting into the Ile of Cubagua, sailed into Spain. The course of this Voyage down the Water, he estimated at 1800 Leagues, (or 5400 English miles) but found no Amazons in his passage, as himself affirmed; only some masculine Women shewed themselves intermixt with the Men, to oppose his landing; and in some places he found Men with long Hair like Women: either of which might make these parts believed to be held by Amazons. But to proceed, arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commission for the Conquest of the Countries by him discovered; and in the year 1549, he betook himself unto the service. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at least, he could never hit upon the Channel which brought him down, though he attempted often. Which ill success, with the consideration of his loss both in Fame and Fortunes, brought him to his Grave, having got nothing but the honour of the first Discovery, and the leaving of his name to that famous River, since called Orellana. The Enterprize was pursued, but with like success, by one Pedro de Orsina, Anno 1560, after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the English and the Hollanders have endeavoured an exact Discovery, and severally begun some Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the other; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Portugals, before they were sufficiently fortified to make any resistance.

2. WIAPOCO, or GUIANA specially so called, taketh up the middle of this Country, on both sides of the River of Wiapoco, whence it hath its name. A River of a long Course, but not passable up the Stream above 16 miles, by reason of a Cataract or great fall from the higher ground: in breadth betwixt that Cataract and the Estuarium, about the tenth part of a mile; at the Estuarium, or Influx, a whole mile at least, and there about two Fathoms deep.

The Country on both sides of this River very rich and fertile; so natural for Tobacco, that it groweth to nine handfals long. Sugar-canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the Shrubs great store of Cotton, and the Dye by some called Orellana. Plenty of Venison, in their Woods, and of Fish in their Rivers: their Fields well stored with Beasts, which themselves call

Moyres;

Moyres; in shape and use resembling Kine, but without any Horns. The people generally of a modest and ingenuous countenance, naked, but would wear cloaths if they had them, or knew how to make them. Their Bread is made of a Plant called Cassavi, of which also being dried and chewed, and then strained through a Wicker Vessel, they make a kind of Drink, in colour like new Ale, but not so well tasted, and of less continuance. The greatest part of their Food is Fish, which they intoxicate with a strong-scented Wood, and so take them up as they lie floating on the top of the Water. Much troubled with a Worm like a Flea, (by the Spaniards called Niguis) which get under the nails of their Toes, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no less torture of the Patient, without speedy prevention. No better Remedy found out, then to pour Wax melted hot on the place affected, which being pulled off when its cold, draws the Vermin with it, sometimes 800 at a pull. The women have such easie child-birth, that they are delivered without help, and presently bring the Child to his Father, (for they have so much natural modesty as to withdraw from company upon that occasion) who washeth it with water, and painteth it with several colours, and so returneth it to the Mother.

Rivers of note here are very many; no Country under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleasant and goodly streams. The names of some of them on both sides of the Wiapoco we have had before: the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long course, a goodly River all the way, and at the Mouth thereof to be large and broad, which passing through the heart of the Country, in the fourth Degree and 40 minutes of Northern Latitude, may possibly occasion both the whole and this part more specially to be called Wiana, and by the Dutch, who cannot pronounce the W. Guiana. Certain I am, that by the name of Wiana, I have found it written in approved Authors. But what need farther search be made after lesser Rivers, (which will offer themselves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to pass over like a Sea for bigness, (magnum, fons, et vastum, instar maris, as my Author hath it) by the Tos or Jas called Rapomaiuin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Country) Parimen; situate about a days journey from the River Essequibo, and neighbored by the great and famous City Manoa, which the Spaniards call El Dorado, (or the Golden City) from the abundance of Gold, in Coin, Plate, Armour, and other Furniture, which was said to be in it. The greatest City, as some say, not only of America, but of all the World. For Diego de Ordaz, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican Wars, and by him continued for a Mutiny, put into a Boat alone without any Victual, and so cast off to seek his Fortune, affirmed at his return; that being taken by some of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King, then residing at Manoa, he entered the City at high-noon, travelled all the rest of that day, and the next all unto night, before he came to the Kings Palace; but then he saith that he was led blind-fold all the way: And therefore possibly enough this City might be no such Miracle as the story makes it; Don Diego being either abused by the Reports of the Savages, or willing to abuse the World with such empty Fictions: For though the Spaniards and the English have severally sought, and that with incredible diligence, to find out this City; yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be said in the Poets Language.

Et quod non invenit usquam,
Esse putat nusquam. — i. e.

That which is no where to be found,
Think not to be above the ground.

Nor is there much more credit to be given unto his Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Incas; who being, forsooth, one of the younger Brethren of Atabaliba, the last King of Peru, at the Conquest of that Kingdom, with many thousands of his Followers, came into this Country, and subduing the Caribes, erected here a second Peruvian Monarchy. For, besides that Atabaliba had no Brethren but Guscar and Mango, who both died in Peru, how improbable must it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing so well the thirst of the Spaniards after Gold, would either suffer him to return and disclose the Secrets of his State, or send him away loaded with Gold, as 'tis said he did? Who sheweth his Treasure to a Thief, doth deserve to lose it. And therefore letting pass these dreams of an El Dorado, let us descend to places of less Magnificence, but of greater Reality. Amongst which I reckon, 1. Caripo, most memorable for a Colony of English there planted by Captain Robert Harcourt, Anno 1600. situate on the Banks of the Wiapoco, near the Mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock so difficult of access, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Air so found and answerable to the constitution of an English body, that of 30, which were left there for three years together, there died but six, and those six rather by misfortune, and some cross accident, than by any Difficulties. 2. Gomeribo, on the top of an Hill, near the mouth of the Bay of Wiapoco, possessed a while by some Hollanders, but soon deserted. 3. Moyemon, a Village of the Paragiti, on the banks of the River Marmimin. 4. Creninay, on the other side of the same River, possessed by the Caribes. The King of the first (for each Tribe had its several Princes) being named Maperitaka, affirmed to be a virtuous man, and kind to Strangers; of the latter, Minapa. 5. Tanparamuney, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River; and 6. Morehego, four days journey from the other: both possessed by the Caribes. The King or Cacique of those last, at Captain Harcourt's being there, (of which time we speak) was named Arenaitas, affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Buff.

The principal Families of this part, besides the Tos or Jas, and the Maraons, spoken of before, who possess almost all the Sea Coasts of this Country, are said to be the Armaccas, the Sapayis, the Mayas, and the Aracoris; of different Languages and Customs, though near neighbours unto one another. Originally Inhabitants of the Island of Trinidad, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants, whom they call by the common name of Caribes, higher into the Country, possessed themselves of the Sea shores and the parts adjoining: each Tribe or Family being governed by its several Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlanders for a time had some footing in it, but they quickly left it; esteeming nothing more in the time of their short stay amongst them, then to made the people disaffected to the English, of whose pretensions to these parts, and designs to plant them, they had good intelligence. And so much was confessed by some of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance how much the English were abused in those Mis-reports. Afterwards in the year 1603, Captain Charles Leigh set sail from Woolwich on the Ibanes, and in May fell upon the River of Wiapoco, where he was kindly entertained, gratified with an House and Garden, and his Aid craved against the Caribes and their other Enemies. He took possession of the Country in the name of King James, and the Crown of England, and caused the River of Wiapoco to be called (by his own name) Caroleigh: but that name ended with his Life, and that shortly after, he dying in his return on Ship-board. The design went forwards notwithstanding, withstanding, and in the year 1608. an English Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new possession taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before mentioned, the Country farther searched into by that noble Gentleman then ever formerly by any or by many since. After three years, the Colony, wanting fit Supply, returned home again; the Plantation never since pursued, though by some projected. Yet so far are these Savages beholden to the English Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there against the Caribes, so at their going off they taught them the use of Arms, and put them into a posture of defence, enabling them thereby to preserve themselves against all their enemies.

3. O KENOQU, or the Province of the River Orenoque, comprehendeth the North parts of Guiana, lying upon and towards the Banks of that famous River, of which we have already spoken. The Country is very rich and pleasant, consisting of large Plains many miles in compass, adorned with the Embroidery of Flowers and unknown Plants, exceeding pleasant to the Eye; and sometimes interlaced with Hills, reported to be furnished with rich Mines of Gold, and Silver. The Rivers liberally stored with Fish, and the Forests both with Beasts and Fowls. No Country in America, not Peru it self, said to be comparable to it for abundance of Treasure. Some also add a whole Mountain of Crystal to be seen afar off from Wineaporo; and tell us (but in general terms) of more goodly Cities then elsewhere in all Pernana: but neither the Spaniards nor the English could ever see them, though they diligently searched into most parts of the Country.

The People, as of several Nations, so of several Natures. The Capuris and Macureos, for the most part Carpenters, live by making Canoes or Boats, which they sell into Guiana for Gold, and to Trinidad for Tobacco, in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dieth, they make great lamentation; and after the Flesh is putrified and fallen from the Bones, they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the House where he dwelt, decking his skull with Feathers of all colours, and hanging Gold Plates about the bones of his Arms and Thighs. Of the Tritivits, dwelling upon some of the Northern Branches, it is affirmed by Sir Walter Raleigh, that they are a goodly and valiant people, and to have the most manly and most deliberate speech of any Nation in the World. A people which eat of nothing that is set or sown; the Children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholden for their livelihood unto Art or Industry; using the tops of the Palmito-Tree for Bread; Fish, Deer, and Swines-flesh for the rest of their sustenance. The Assamay, Sayme, Wikeri, and Aroras, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with smoother Hair; and to use Arrows dipt in so strange a poison, as doth not only bring death, but death with most unspeakable torments, especially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Armace of this Tract I find nothing singular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their Wives and nearest of the Kindred beat their Bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink, like Spice.

Places of most importance in it (for to speak anything particularly of those many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque were an endless labour) are, 1. Comolaba, on the south of Orenoque, but somewhat distant, in which they keep some annual Fairs for the sale of Women. One of our English men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595, affirmed that he bought eight of them (the eldest not above eighteen) for a half-penny red-hot Knife, which he brought from England. But wistful tell us, for his credit, that he gave them to some Savages of his acquaintance. 2. Morequibo, a known Port upon some branch of the Orenoque; of much use to the English in their first Discovery of these parts. 3. Wineaporo, so called from another branch of that River bearing this name; from whence was shewed an high Hill, said to be of Crystal, but so far off, that it was thought better to believe then to go and see. Others report of this Mountain, that above it there is a mighty River, which, falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noise, as if a thousand Bells were knocked one against another. And possible enough it is, that this great fall of Water discerned far off may (with the help of Sun-shine) carry some resemblance of a Crystalline Mountain. 4. S. Thome, situate on the main Channel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 Houses, stretched out in length for half a mile, but slightly built; a Parish Church in the midst of it, and at the west end a Convent of Franciscan Friars. The only Town of all Guiana possessed by the Spaniards; not fortified till against the last coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617, but taken by him at that time, and since that by the Hollanders, Anno 1629; though by both quitted not long after, it returned to the Spaniards.

The several Nations of this Tract have been named before. Discovered first by Diego de Ordaz, Anno 1531, furnished with a Patent for the Conquest of it by Charles the Fifth, But not hitting on the right Channel, or otherwise not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain, effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hierome de Ortal, Anno 1533, and after by Herrera, who proceeded farther then the others, Anno 1536, and finally by Gonsalvo Ximenez de Quisada and Antonio Berreo, with far better fortune: who beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the search of Guiana, fell casually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazon. But yet not perfectly discovered till the year 1595, in which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Prisoner this Antonio Berreo, and learning of him the success of his Expedition, resolved upon the Undertaking; and searched so far into the Country by the course of this River, that some have since called it Raliana. The business was followed the next year (after his return) by Captain Laurence Keymis, employed by Raleigh in that Service, who at his coming found the Country possessed by the Spaniards, by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable houses of the Savages had been laid together like a Town, and all the Natives, who wished well to the English, dispersed and scattered. So that without any other effect of his journey, then the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he first discovered) he set sail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of English should be planted there, and some proportionable force sent over to make good the Action. But the motion was upon good advice rejected, first in regard of the distance of it from the main body of our strength; and secondly, because the Spaniards, bordering near upon it, might easily cast out small forces, and make the enterprise dishonourable to the English Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of honourable Achievements. It was permitted notwithstanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State: whereupon, followed the Voyages of Leigh and Harcourt, before spoken of. But they, not being able to go through with so great a business, let it fall again. And so it rested till the last unfortunate Voyage of Sir Walter Raleigh, licensed by Commission under the Great Seal to search into some Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Country. A design followed with great hopes by the Undertakers, most of them being persons of honour, and well attended: but so unfortunate in the issue, (the Spaniards being being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking of S. Thome he lost his own Son, and a great part of his Forces, and after his return (not able with the residue to make good his ground against the enemy) was executed on a former Attainder in the old Palace of Westminster, Octob. 29. Anno 1618. Of whom I cannot chuse but note what is said by Camden Clarendieux in his Annals: Vir erat nunquam satis laudato studio & Regiones remotas detegendi, & Navalem Angliæ gloriam promovendi. And so I leave him to his rest in the Bed of Peace.

4. The ISLANDS which properly are accounted of as parts of Guiana, lie either scattered on the shore, or in the mouths or bodies of the greater Rivers; some of them not inhabited, others of no name, and none at all of any reckoning. Only the Isle of 1. Trinidad, and 2. Tabago, are of some esteem: which though somewhat farther off from the shores of this Country, yet being that of Trinidad lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana pass but for one Prefecture, or Provincial Government, we shall describe them in this place.

1. TRINIDAD, or Insula S. Trinitatis, lieth at the mouth of the River Orenoque, over against Paria, from which separated by a Frith, or Streight, by Columbus, who first discovered it, called Bocca del Drago, or the Dragons mouth, because of the dangerousness of the passage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth Degree of Northern Latitude; the most Southern Angle of it called Punta del Gallo, as that on the North call Punta de Galera. The Frith, or Streight but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the Interposition of four or five little Islands, which the Sea breaketh through with great violence, leaving only two entrances for Shipping into the Gulf, called the Gulf of Paria. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth 18. Of a cloudy and unhealthy Air, but a fertile soil, abundantly well stored with such Commodities, as are of the natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-canes, Cotton-wool, and the best kind of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidad. Here is also a sufficiency of Fruits and Cat-tel for the use of the Natives; and here and there some Veins of Gold, and other Metals: such store of Pitch, that innumerable Ships might be laden with it; but that it is conceived to be unfit for the calking of Ships, because it softneth in the Sun. The place in which it groweth is by the Spaniards called Terra de Brea, by the Natives Pichen.

The People of the same nature and disposition with the other Americans, distinguished into several Tribes, but most of them reduced under the power of two petty Princes. But the greatest part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, forsook their Country, and ferried over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Joseph, situate on the South-side of the Island, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Carone, the ordinary Residence of the Governour, who hath under him besides this Island the Provinces of Guiana and El Dorado, (for so goes his Title) yet a small Town, consisting but of 40 Houses when it was taken, Anno 1595. by Sir Walter Raleigh; Antonio Berreo the Governour of it being then made Prisoner, who furnished his taker with many Notions (and some merely fabulous) towards the Discovery of Guiana.

This Island, first discovered by Christopher Columbus, in his third Voyage, Anno 1497. was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with some reference to the form hereof, shooting into the Sea with three points or Promontories. Nothing else memorable in the fortunes and Story of it, but what is touched upon before.

2. TABAGO lieth on the North-east of La Trinidad, from which eight miles distant: full of safe Harbours for the bigness, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well stored with Woods; amongst which some Palmito Trees, some like that of the Brasil-wood, others not elsewhere to be found. Of Fowl and Fish sufficient to maintain it self. Now called New Walcheren, with reference to an Island of that name in Zealand, by some of the Low-Country men, who begin to plant there.

And so much for GUIANA.

O F

P A R I A.

PARIA is bounded on the East with Guiana, and the Islands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the West, with the Gulf or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada, on the North, with the main Atlantic Ocean, or Mare del Noords; the the Countrys lying on the South not discovered hitherto.

It took this name from a mistake of the Spaniards, (as Perru and Jucatan on the like) who asking, as all men do, the names of those new Regions which they discovered, and pointing to the Hills afar off, were answered, Paria, that is to say, high Hills or Mountains, (for here begins the Ledge of Mountains which are thence continued for the space of 3600 miles, to the Straights of Magellan;) and so hath it ever since held the name of Paria. By some writers it is called Nova Andalusia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the Soil and People being very different, will be more properly considered in the several parts. The whole divided into the Continent and the Islands, which, with their Sub-divisions may be branched into these particulars, viz. 1. Cumana, 2. Venezuela. 3. S. Margarita. 4. Cubagua; and 5. the lesser Islands.

1. CUMANA hath on the East the Gulf of Paria, and the River Orenoque on the West, Venezuela on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it on the banks whereof some Dominican Friars (who first set footing in this Country) built themselves a Monastery; that name being communicated afterwards unto all the rest of this Tract.

It is extended East and West to the breadth of 110 Leagues; the length thereof, from North to South, said to be 400. But there is little of it known, and less of it planted by the Europeans; except some places near the sea: there being no part of all America, the description on whereof hath come so imperfectly to our hands, as it hath of this. For except it be the names of some Bays or Promontories, and of two or three most noted Rivers, there is not much that doth require our consideration.

The Country, for so much as hath been discovered, neither rich nor pleasant; and consequently the less looked after: covered with shrubs, and overgrown with unprofitable Briers and Bushes. Heretofore famed for Pearl-fishing all along the Coast, from the Gulf of Paria to that of Venezuela, called therefore Costa de las Perlas; but that gainful Trade hath long since failed it. Now only of esteem for a Vein of most excellent salt, found near the Promontory of Araya, and the Bay of Cariaco, gathered and digged up thereabouts in great abundance, and yet never diminishing. The parts adjoining take from hence the name of Salina; the Promontory bordering on the Frith called Bocca del Drago, the Title or Appellation of Cape Salinas. Of some strange Creatures in this Country, as the Beast called Capa, the soles of whose Feet are like a Shoe, a kind of Hog, which lives altogether upon Ants or Pismires, Parrots and Bats of more than ordinary greatness, I forbear to speak.

Of the people I find nothing singular, except it be, that having plenty of good Fruits as of Fish and Flesh, they use themselves to a far worse diet, feeding on Horle-leeches, Bats, Spiders, Grasshoppers, Worms, Lice, and such other Vermin. In other things they seem to have a mixture of all ill Customs used amongst the Savages of Asia, Africa and America: as multitudes of Wives; prostituting these Wives for the first Nights Lodging to the Pisacos or Priests, and for any after, to their Guests; taking great pains to black their Teeth, and putting strange colours on their Bodies instead of Garments; high-minded, treacherous, and revengeful; accustomed to the use of poisoned Arrows, which they envenom with Snakes Blood and other mixtures. In one thing only differing from the rest of their Neighbours, which is, the fencing of their Grounds or Orchards with a Cotton-thred, as high as ones Girdle; and an opinion which they have, that whosoever breaketh it, or goes over or under it, shall die immediately. More safe in that persuasion than by brazen Walls.

Rivers of most note, though of little, 1. Rio de Camas, 2. Rio de Neveri, 3. Cumana de Bardoner. The chief Havens or Roads for shipping, 1. Moxino, 2. S. Foy, and 3. that called Commenagot. The places of most consideration, 1. Cumana, a Colony of Spaniards on the Bank of the river of that name, but distant about two miles from the sea, on which it hath a safe and convenient Harbour: the Town so hedged about with Woods, that nothing can be seen of it till one come into it, except it be the Governour's House, seated upon the top of a lofty Mountain. 2. S. Jago, a strong Fortrefs built by the Spaniard for defence of the salt Lake, or Salinas, in the year 1622. on some intelligence that the Hollanders had a purpose to take them from him; fortified by the Rules of Art, and planted with 30 pieces of Ordnance, the one half of brass. 3. S. Michael de Neveri, on the River so called, a Fort of the Spaniards; 4. Guaniba, a Village of the Natives.

The Country was first discovered in the third Voyage of Christopher Columbus, but the possession of it was first taken by two Dominicans, who out of a Religious zeal to plant the Gospel in these parts, founded themselves a little Cell in the place where the Burrough of Cumana was after built, Anno 1513; and doubtless had sped very well in their holy purpose, if some covetous Spaniards had not treacherously seized upon one of the Chiefs of their Tribes; and carried him with his Wife and Train into Spanish bondage. For this the poor Monks suffered death;

I may call it Martyrdom: which was revenged by Alfonso de Oieda, Anno 1520; and he not long after slain by the Savages, who also at the same time destroyed two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Fryers, which had been founded in the year 1518. A second force sent hither under Gonzalvo de Ocampo, wasteth a great part of the Country, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs some of his people. But that strength being withdrawn or defeated also, Diego de Castellon is sent over by the Council resident in Hispaniola, to secure the possession of the Country; by whom the Castle first, and after the Burrough of Cumana was built and planted. Some other attempts there were for a farther Conquest, but they proved nothing but attempts; except the building of the Castle of S. Michael de Neveri, by Hierom of Oriol, and the Discovery of some of the inland Provinces, 150 Leagues from the sea-side, by Antonio Sidenio, Anno 1537. of which nothing followed, but the Registering of that tedious March.

2. VENEZUELA is bounded on the East with Cumana; on the West, with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the new Realm of Granada. So called by Alfonso de Oieda, one of the first Discoverers of it, Anno 1599. because he found a Burrough of some of the Savages situate in the midst of the waters, to which was no passage but by Boat: the word importing as much as Little Venice.

It is in length from East to West 130 Leagues; in breadth where broadest about 80. The soil so plentiful of all sorts both of Fruit and Grain, the Country so replenished with all kind of Cattel, and excellent Pastures to maintain them, that the Neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granary. Such store there goeth from hence of Wheat Meal, Bisket, Cheese, Hogs-flesh, Ox-hides, and Cloth of Cotton ready made, as very well deserves that Title. Here is also very great plenty of Fish, wild Beasts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other Metals: besides an infinite deal of Sassa-parilla sent to Europe yearly. The people are of the same Nature and Disposition with those of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The Women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and swim, as well as the men to Till the Land; and look to the business of the house, whilst the men hunt or fish to bring in Provision. They count it a great part of Beauty to have very thick Thighs; which they effect by binding their Legs hard below the Knee from their very Childhood. Shameless enough till married, after more reserved; though rather for fear of a Divorce, than for love of Modesty.

Rivers of note I meet with none, instead of which are many convenient Harbors and capacious Bays. The chief that called Golfo Triste, from some Shipwrecks, or the like misfortune happening to the Namer of it. 2. The Bay of Coro, or Venezuela, large and spacious, which by the Frith or Streight of half a League over, receiveth the Tribute of 3. The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lago de Nuestra Señora, or our Ladies Lake, in compass about eighty Leagues; on the Banks whereof dwell many Nations of the Savages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain Commerce with one another.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Maracaybo, the farthest Port upon the East, and one of the best on all this Coast, in which the Spaniards of Cubagua had once a Garrison, under colour of defending the Country against the Savages, but in plain truth to use it for an opportunity to seize upon their persons, and carry them away for Slaves. Those parts are hereby unpeopled, or but monthly meanly populous. 2. Venezuela, the most Western Town of all the Province, commonly called Coro, situate in the Latitude of 11 Degrees: built on the sea, where it hath an Haven on each side; the one capacious but not safe, the other safe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a sweet and healthy air, and neighboured by the richest soil of all the Country, it hath been long the ordinary seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop. (Suffragan to the Archbishop of Domingo in Hispaniola.) Once suddenly surprized by the English, Anno 1595. and burnt to ashes; but as suddenly repaired again. 3. Caravalleda, or Nuestra Señora de Caravalleda, 80 Leagues from Coro towards the East, seated upon the sea near an unsafe Haven, and defended from assault by the Castle of Caracas, so called from the name of the Tribe in which it standeth. Near unto which the Hills rise to so great an height, that they seem to equal the Pike of Tenariffe so much talked of. 4. S. Jago de Leon, in the same Tribe of Caracas, taken by the English in the same year. 5. Nova Valentia, 25 Leagues from S. Jago de Leon, and from Coro 60. 6. New Xeres lately built, fifteen leagues on the south of New Valentia. 7. Nova Segovia, one league only from New Xeres; situate on the Banks of Baraquicemiti, the most noted River of this Tract. 8. Tacayo in the Valley so called; not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich sugar-canes, for which some sugar-works or Ingenios are here lately built. 9. Truxillo, or Nuestra Señora de la Paz, 18 leagues on the south of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants heretofore have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factory for the sale of their Wares. 10. Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake itself; not else observable but for the multitude of Tigers which do haunt about it.

This Country, discovered by Columbus, and named by Alonso de Ojeda, as before is said, was first pretended to, for Neighbourhood sake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagua. Afterwards John de Ampiez, by order from the Council resident at Domingo in Hispaniola, was employed in the Discovery of it, Anno 1527. But Charles the Fifth, having taken up great sums of money of the Vesperi, a wealthy Family of Augsburg, pawned this Country to them, by whom Ambrosius Alfinger was sent with 400 Foot, and 80 Horse to take possession. But he and his successors, in that Employment not minding so much the Conquest as the Spoil of the Country, the Council of Domingo undertook the business once again; and in the year 1545, sent over one John de Caravayal who treading in the steps of the Germans, or rather out-going them in all sorts of Rapine, was ousted on a second Order by one John Perez de Tolosa, by whom the Province was reduced into some good order. In the year 1550, the Negroes, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africa, began to mutiny; but their design was discovered, and themselves all slain. Peace and contentment following after all these Troubles, the Country was in little time so thoroughly planted, and the Natives so encouraged in their several Tribes, that notwithstanding the destructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, here were reckoned not long since above 100000 of the Savages; not numbering those above fifty, or under 18 years of age; who, by an Order of the Council of Spain for these parts of America, are exempt from Taxes.

3. MARGARITA is an Island situate over against the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana, from the main Land whereof it is distant above seven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the first discovery, which the Latinists call Margaritas, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it signify no other than the vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were also store of those of the greater climate, such as the Romans by the figure of Antiphrasts called Uniones, because they always grew in couples. Nulli duo reperuntur indiffereti, faith Pliny; unde nomen Unionum scilicet Romane imposture delicia.

The Isle is affirmed to be 16 Leagues in length, and fix in breadth; situate under the 11 Degree of Northern Latitude. Well stored with Pearls upon the Shores, when first discovered; but even then, when most plentifully stored with that Commodity, she had not water of her own to quench her thirst, compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwise plentiful enough both of Maize and Fruits. The people obsequiously fervent to their Lords, the Spaniards; so long accustom'd unto Bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of most importance in it, 1. Monaster, in the East corner of the Island; a Fort of the Spaniards, built for securing their rich Trade of Pearl-fishing, and to defend their Ships which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Burrough, and the House of the Governour. 2. El valle de Santa Luzia, two leagues from the Sea; a Spanish Colony. 3. Makanao, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Island, first discovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, Anno 1498, grew suddenly into great esteem, by reason of the rich Pearl-fishing which they found on the Shores thereof. And in regard the Natives were so ready to betray their Treasures, (of which themselves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more Liberties from the King, than the rest of the Savages. Infomuch that the Spaniards either could not, or would not compel them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negro Slaves from Guinea and the Coasts of Africa, whom they inforced with great Torments to dive into the bottom of the Sea, many times seven or eight fathom deep, to bring up the shells in which that Treasure was included: where many of them were drowned, and some maimed with Sharks and other Fishes. But that rich Trade is much diminished of late, if it fail not quite. The cause thereof to be imputed to the insatiable Avarice of the Spaniards, so greedy upon Pearl, that they destroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatsoever they could meet with, for a little present profit, lost the hopes of the future. The Island is since less famous, and not much frequented. Visited to its cost in the year 1601, by the English under Capt. Parker, who received here 500 l. in Pearls for the ransom of Prisoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coast of Angola, laden with 370 Negroes to be sold for Slaves.

4. CUBAGNA is an Island lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Aroa upon the Continent; from the first distant but one League, from the other six; it self in compass about three. Rich on the shores by the abundance of Pearls which were found about them, but very beggerly on the Land. Destitute both of Grass and Water, by consequence of Cattel also, except only Cornies, and but few of those. So that like many a Gallant, who spend all upon the Back, and nothing on the Belly, she had her out-side laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their Bread and water brought them out of other Countries, and their Fruits too, if they desired to have any; here being very few Trees, and those most of Guaianum. But so abundant in this treasure, that the Kings Fifths for many years amounted to 15000 Ducats yearly out of this poor Island.

In this respect it was presently referred to and possessed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony, which they called New Cadix, and grew in short time unto so great power, that they made themselves Masters of the Port of Maracaybo in Venezuela, one of the best upon those Seas. But in the year 1521, hearing that the Savages of Cumana had destroyed the Convent of Francis- can on the opposite shore, they cowardly forsook the Island, and fled to Hispaniola. Sent back again by the Council there, under the Conduct of James de Castellon, by whom the Town was made more beautiful and strong then ever formerly. In great esteem as long as the Pearl-fishing did continue; now, with that, decayed. Yet still the Island doth deserve some consideration for a Fountain on the East part of it near unto the sea, continuing, though the Pearls be gone, which yieldeth a bituminous substance like Oil, medicinal for Dileafes, and is found 2 or 3 Leagues off floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of mankind, and more easily found, than the Pearls, which sunk unto the bottom, and maintained our Pride.

can

Four miles from hence, but appendent to it, lieth a little Island called Cuche, 3 miles in compass, but so abundantly stored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one commodity, for some months together, above a thousand pounds a month of our English money. First peopled upon that occasion, Anno 1529, but the occasion failing, the Plantation ended, the Isle being now unpeopled, as not worth the looking after.

5. The LESSER ISLANDS of this Prefecture, or Provincial Government, lie all along upon the Coast of Venezuela, from East to West. The principal of which, 1. Tortuga, 12 or 14 miles on the West of Margarita: four miles in length, hardly one in breadth, but yielding such good store of Salt, that three or four Ships are laden with it every year. Well furnished with Goats and Guaianum, but not else considerable, except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks, and yielding a convenient Harbour for the use of Mariners. 2. Castina, by the English called The Isle of Providence, as the former is by the name of Association; both which, being void of all Inhabitants and tame Beasts, were possessed by them about the year 1629, at such time as there was open War between England and Spain. After which, not being claimed by the Spaniards in making up the Peace ensuing, they were granted by King Charles, by his Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, to certain Noblemen and Gentlemen, and their Successors, who for the space of 20 years, or thereabouts, have enjoyed them quietly; the Islands being planted by them with their several Colonies, and all things necessary to maintain and enrich the same. 3. Bonaire, opposite to the Bay of Golfo triste, in the Latitude of 12 degrees; well furnished with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattel brought out of Spain, and peopled with some Savages out of Hispaniola, whom the Spaniards Christened and sent thither: some Spaniards with their Governour intermixt amongst them. The Island 16 miles in compass; not fruitful naturally, but in Trees, which are great and numerous. 4. Curacao, nine miles on the West of Bonaire, and as many in compass, of a more fertile soil by far, and of very rich Pastures. The people are given to Grazing, and make good store of Cheese, transported thence to other places; the Island having toward the North a convenient Harbour. 5. Aruba, on the North-East of Curacao, from which 9 miles distant, in compass not above 5 miles, for the most part level. One Hill it hath (amongst some others) fashioned like a Sugar-loaf. Inhabited by few Savages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Islands on this Coast, as 1. the Tostigos, lying Eastward of Margarita, 2. Blanca, 3. Orchilla, 4. Rocay, and 5. the Ile des Aves, or of Birds, interposed betwixt Tortuga and Bonaire, some of them rather Rocks than Islands, few stored with any living Creatures for the use of men, and none of them at all with men to manure and dress them, I pass over here, and so proceed from these Islands of the Province of Paria, to those which are subordinate to the Council of S. Domingo, and make a Province of themselves, But first we must go back, and bring up some of the Islands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And so much of P E R U A N A.

Of the American Islands:

And first of those which are in

M A R E del Z U R.

THE AMERICAN ISLANDS scattered up and down the Shores of this New World, are commonly divided into those of Mare del Zur, or the Pacific Ocean, and those of the Atlantick, or Mare del Noords. The first so called by Magellanus, the first Discoverer, who, passing through those troublesome and tempestuous Streights which now bear his name, found such a change upon his coming into the main, that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur, (quod à tranquillitate vocavit Mare del Sur, faith the Author of the Atlas Minor) from the calm and peaceable temper of it; by the Latinists called Mare Pacificum, in the same regard. Called also the Southern Ocean, because of its situation on the South-side of America, in reference to some part of the Gulf of Mexico, and the Streights of Anian. Not known unto the Spaniards till discovered by Nonnius Vasquez de Balboa, conducted hither by one of the Caciques or petty Kings of the Country about Numbre de Dios; who seeing the Spaniards so greedy after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirst should be satisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the opposite shore, this Balboa being the chief man in that Adventure: who discovering farther on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the rest that followed, to the golden Treasures of Peru. He was executed notwithstanding this good service, by Don Pedro de Ayala, within short time after. But the more full discovery of it is to be ascribed unto Magellanus, and some later Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly, as long as the Southern Sea was unknown to any but themselves, they conveyed their Gold and treasures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without loss or charge, and thought their Ports upon that Shore to be unaccessible:

But

But after the way unto this sea was found out by Magellan, Drake, Cavendish, and the rest of our English Adventurers did so fount these Coasts, that they left them neither Port nor ship, which they did not sail; as hath been evidenced before in some particulars.

As for the Islands of this sea, they lie most of them so near the Shores, as if placed there by Nature to serve as Outworks to defend the Continent. Many in tale, but few of considerations; and of those few, some of the chief have been described already in their proper places, as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The residue, which lie too far off to come under such consideration, must be mentioned here; and those reduced to these two Heads, 1. Los Ladrones, 2. The Islands of John Fernandez.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Islands situate betwixt the main Land of America and the Philippine Islands, in the Latitude of 18 deg. and the 4. Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus, who first discovered them, because of the Thievisness of the Inhabitants, (Insule Latronum is their name in Latine) who had stolen his Cock-boat, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue still both their name and nature. Found such by Cavendish and Noort in their several Voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron, (a commodity which they highly prize) but either closely or openly stealing whatsoever they met with. The People tall of stature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulency, extremely active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the Water, as it alike fitted to both Elements; inasmuch as the Hollanders then with Noort, to make trial of it, cast five pieces of Iron into the sea, all fetched out by one of them. The Women as good at it as the Men. Both sexes given to filthy and promiscuous Lusts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their Incontinency, the Pox having eaten up both their Lips and their Noses.

Their Religion is worshipping the Devil, whose Images they have in Wood on the Head of their Boats; the Chappel and the Saints fit for such Devotions. But for the nature of these Islands, and what Subjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to seek. But like enough they yield as little as some others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authors to be parts of America.

2. The Islands of John Fernandez are two in number; so called from John Fernandez, the first Discoverer, Anno 1574; each of 5 or 6 miles in compass, and about 300 miles distant from the shores of Chile. Situate in the 33 Degree of southern Latitude; rocky and barren, but well wooded, and those woods replenished with Goats, but their flesh not favourable as in other places. Some store of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms no scarcity. Plenty of Fish upon the shores, for which cause visited sometimes by the Spaniards lying in Peru, and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for shipping, which makes them not neglected by other Nations as they pass this way. None else of note in all this sea, but such as lie upon the shores of their several Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore passing through the Straights, and coming up unto the Islands of Paria, where before we left, we will now look on those of Mare del Norte, or that part of the Atlantic which washeth the Shores of this New World (the reason of which Names we have seen before) subordinate to the Council or Government of S. Domingo, viz. 1. the Caribes, 2. Porto Rico, 3. Hispantola, 4. Cuba, and 5. Jamaica. The rest are already spoken of in their proper places.

1. The CARIBES.

THE CARIBES, or Cannibal Islands, are in number many; 27 of them known by their proper names; the rest of less note, (though some of these of little enough) not yet so distinguished. Called thus in general, because inhabited by Cannibals, & man-eating people (at their discovery) as the word Caribes doth import. They lie extended like a Bow from the coast of Paria unto the Ille of Rico: of different temper, as must needs be in such variety, & therefore not within the compass of a general Character. Some of the principal we shall consider more distinctly; and for the rest, 'tis enough to name them, or else we will pass them by.

1. GRANADA, the nearest of this crew to the Main Land of Cumana, is situate in the Lat. of 20 Deg. and 15 Min. in form like a Crescent or half Moon, the two horns not a mile asunder, the whole length but 6. Shaded all over with thick woods, but notwithstanding of a rich and fruitful soil. A Haven in it of good use, but no Town of note. The people of the same ill condition with the other Savages, but more wit to hide it most mischievously intended when they seem most kind, & then most to be avoided.

2. S. VINCENT, 18 miles on the North of Granada, is of so blessed a soil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugar-canes without charge to the Husbandman; watered with many pleasant Rivers, and full of safe and convenient Bays for the use of Mariners. In figure Circular: the Diameter being 6 miles over the circle by consequence 18. The people but of mean stature, slothful, and audacious only for the Belly: their love to which, makes them adventure in their small Boats, hewn out of the body of a tree, to pass into the Continent, and return again without the help of a compass though distant from it, at the nearest, above 30 miles.

3. BARBADOS, on the North-east of S. Vincent, in the Latitude of 13 Deg. and 20 Min. Of an Oval form, 17 or 18 miles in compass. The soil in few like that of England, but far more fruitful. On the East-side thrusting out itself with Points and Angles, which yield some Bays, but full of Quick-sands, and unsafe for shipping: on the south furnished with a large and commodious Harbour. Not very well provided of for Fruits or Cattel, till made a Colony of the English, who brought thither from their own Country Swine and Kine, Oranges and the like from others. The chief Commodity hitherto made of this Plantation comes by the planting of Tobacco, and by a kind of coarse Sugar called Barbados Sugar, which must be quickly spent, or it will melt to nothing. Were they in stock, and not forced to make a quick return of their commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation is said to be worth all the rest which are made by the English, who (as I take it) are the sole Colony in the Island; but at the courtesy of the Spaniard, without whose leave and liking not of force to hold it.

4. MANTININO on the North-west of the Barbados, by the Savages called Mandanimam, with little difference. Every where swelled with hills: of which 3 are most eminent for height: one of them, which way forever a man looks upon it, carrying the resemblance of an Hat. Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr, the Historian, with none but women; afterward with a more fierce & barbarous people than the rest of these Islands: but neither men or women to be seen of late: whether destroyed, or removed farther from the shores for fear of their destruction, is a thing uncertain.

5. DOMINICA, seated on the North of Mantinino, nino, 12 leagues in length; exceeding fruitful of Tobacco, which they sell unto the Europeans for Hatchets, Knives, and other Instruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of hot water, and a commodious Haven at the West-side of it, into which falleth a River 20 paces broad. The people as barbarous as ever, Cannibals or Man-eaters to this very day. At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, & to no man trusty, but where they cannot hurt, or dare not. Both Sexes wear their hair long, & colour their bodies over with Oaker. Yet bloody & barbarous though they be, they are ruled by a King of their own, distinguished from the rest in his dress or habit, whom they most readily obey.

6. DESEADA, or the Land of Desire, on the north-east of Dominica, discovered by Columbus in his second Voyage, naked of Trees, and at the first sight afar off not unlike a Galley. Of great use to the Spaniards, who always take it in their way to the Canaries to these parts of America, and back again at their return.

The like use do they make of 7. The Ille of GUARDALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Westward: at which the Fleets which come from Spain use to take fresh water, and there disperse themselves to their several Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in most parts of the Sea adjoining. North-east from hence lieth

8. S. Maria del Antigua, commonly called ANTIGUA only, and by some mistakingly ANTEGO. Seven leagues in length, and as many in breadth; difficult of access, and destitute of fresh waters; but well replenished with woods and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colony of the English, who do still possess it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHERS, on the North-west of Guadalupe, in the Lat. of 17 Deg. and 20 Min. The length six miles, the breadth in many places four, and in some but two much swelled with Hills, and towards the East provided of several Salt-wiches. The French and English had sometimes in it several Colonies, by whom the Natives were destroyed; or otherwise compelled to forsake their dwellings; convict, as was pretended, of some manifest Treacheries. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the sole possessions ejected by Frederick de Toledo, as he passed this way with his Navy; though suffered to return to their former dwellings, as rather profitable than dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief Employment and commodity lies in their Tobacco, by some much commended. Joining hereto, or but a league from it at the most, is

10. The Ille of NEVIS, which is affirmed to be five leagues in compass, well wooded, and as pleasantly watered; inasmuch as the Inhabitants of the Ille of Dominica used to come hither for their pleasures, but for hunting chiefly. Now famed for some Baths or Hot-waters, found out by the English, who, in the year 1528, placed a Colony in it. But whether subsisting of it self, or a part of their Plantation in S. Christophers, I am yet to learn.

11. SANCTA CRUX, by the Inhabitants called Ayay, on the North-west of S. Christophers, and the South-east of Porto Rico, from which last distant 15 Leagues. Woody and Mountainous, not well provided of fresh waters; but on the west side furnished with a safe and commodious Road, under the covert of the Mountains. Amongst their fruits are some that resemble a green Apple, which tasted, inflames the Tongue, that for 24 hours it swellth in so great extremity, as makes it altogether useless; but after that by little and little it abates again. The like happeneth also to the Face, if washed before Sun rising with their Fenwaters, which are very frequent in this Island; after the rising of the Sun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colony of the English also, but of later standing than those of S. Christophers and Barbados.

Some of the principal of the rest are 1. Anguilla, 2. Barbada, 3. S. Bartholomew, 4. S. Lucies, 5. S. Marias, 6. Montserrat, 7. Rotunda, 8. Saba, 9. Virgordia, and 10. Sunbbero, of which we have little but the names: the rest, though known by several names, are not worth the naming. Only we are to add concerning the whole Nation of Caribes, once here inhabiting, that they did usually hunt for men, as men for Beasts, loving as far as Porto Rico, to seek after their prey; and what they caught was sure to go to the pot, in the worst sense too. Columbus, when he was at the Ille of Guadalupe, found 30 Captive Children which were reserved to be eaten, and in their houses divers Vessels filled with Man's flesh, and some upon the Spit ready to be roasted. Nor had they laid aside this Diet till after the year 1564. but how long I know not: For at that time a Spanish Ship coming to water at the Ille of Dominica, they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the Land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Islands have been of late times well cleared of those Monsters; some of them brought unto better order, but the most destroyed, as the common enemies of mankind; the Islands where they dwelt being either totally deserted, or taken up by Europeans, and their several Colonies.

2. PORTO RICO AND MONICO.

PORTO RICO lieth on the North-west of Santa Cruz, from which distant about 15 Leagues, and near upon as many from Hispantola; 136 Leagues from the main Land of Paria, and not much less from the Cape of Cogniboco in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Castilla Aurea. It took this name from the chief Town and Haven of it, but was called by Columbus at the first Discovery S. Johannis Insula, or the Ille of S. John, by the Natives Boriquen.

It is situate under the 18 and 19 Degrees of Northern Latitude, in form quadrangular, but of a greater length than breadth, such as the Geometricians call oblongam: the length hereof being 30 Leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Air hereof is very pleasant and temperate, not scorched with furious Heats in Summer, nor made offensive by the fall of continual Rains; exposed sometimes (chiefly in August and September) to the troublesome winds of sudden tempests, called Hurricanes. The soil is indifferently fruitful, though somewhat Mountainous: here being (besides other Hills of inferior note) a Ridge of high Hills which run cross the Country from the one end unto the other. Their chief Commodities are Sugarcanes, Ginger, Cassia, and great store of Hides: the Europeans Cattel having so abundantly increased, that they kill thousands for their Skins, leaving the flesh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and Silver, but consumed long since. And so are all the Natives also, of whom, in that respect, it is impertinent to give any Character.

Chief Rivers of the Island, 1. Cairobon, 2. Boyaman; of divers Fountains, and of several divided Courses. 3. Luyfa, and 4. Toa; two Rivers growing out of one. The Spring of that one is in the Mountains of Gnayamo, whence running Northwards in one Channel 16 Leagues together, it afterwards divides it self into those two streams. 5. Guiano, 6. Azeibo, 7. Gwadiabo, of lesser notes; but all of them, as well as all the rest before, concluding in some safe and capacious Haven.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Porto Rico, the chief Town, built in a little Island, on the North-side of the greater greater, but joyn'd unto it with huge Piles at vast expences, by the command of Philip the First, Anno 1504. well built, with large Streets and convenient Houses, according to the Model of the Cities of Spain, and beautified with a fair Cathedral; the Bishop one of the Suffragans of the Archbishop of S. Domingo in Hispaniola. The Town unwall'd, but fortified with two strong Castles; the one of which secures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loss of 40 or 50 men, by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpose to have peopled it with an English Colony. Discouraged from it by the death of 400 of his Men, by change of Air, and some intemperance of Diet, he set sail for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Island, but the disfigurement of 70 pieces of Ordnance, and some part of their Treasure, which he brought home with him. 2. S. German, in the Western part of the Island, now both unfortified and small: 3. Arceibo, on the River so called. 4. Luyfs, the most noted Port of the Eastern parts, situate on the mouth of the River so named.

Eastward hereof, betwixt it and Hispaniola, lies the Island of Mona (might not this, think we, be so called by Madoc ap Owen Gwynedd, of whom before?) three leagues in compass Rocky, and of a brackish Earth, but fit for the production of Limons, Oranges, and such kind of Fruit, which are here in plenty. Not far off, but more towards the West, Monico, or Monetta, as our English call it; where they found such infinite store of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as Hail, and made them almost deaf with the very noise; their Eggs so thick upon the ground that they loaded two Boats with them in three hours, and could hardly pass forwards without treading on them.

But to return to Porto Rico, or the Island of S. Johns: it was touched upon by Columbus in his second Voyage, Anno 1493. but first inhabited by John Ponce de Leon, Anno 1510. who being courteously entertained by Aiguabana, the chief Prince thereof, planted a Colony of Spaniards in the North part of the Island, which he called Caparra. The Colony 10 years after that removed to Guanica, and from thence to S. German: carrying with it the repute of the chief Town of all the Island, upon every remove, till the building of Porto Rico, where it since hath fixed. The Island very populous for the bigness of it when the Spaniards came to it: but the Natives were long ago consumed by several Butcheries; and, as some write, not above 1500 Spaniards are in all the Country. What else concerns the Story of it, we have seen before.

2. HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA lieth on the West of Porto Rico; the distance we have seen already. By the Inhabitants called Haiti, and by some Quisiqua; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hispaniola, or Little Spain, and of late times beginneth to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it.

The form thereof is Triangular, extended in a sharp Angle, called Cabo del Engano, towards Porto Rico; the Western end fashioned like a Bay or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas, the Southern Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150 Leagues, the breadth in some places 60, in some but 30, thence growing less and less, till it come unto the Eastern Angle; the whole compass climated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18 and 20 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infested with Morning-heats; but cooler in the Afternoon, by the constant blowing of a Sea-Gale, which they there commonly call Virfon.

The Country is for the most part beautiful and flourishing; the Trees always in their Summer-livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual spring. In many places wel'd with high craggy Mountains, whence the name of Haiti, that word so signifying in the natural Language of the Natives. Of such an excellent Herbage, that the Cattel brought hither out of Spain have increased almost beyond Arithmetick; grown wild for want of proper owners, and hunted unto death like the Stags of the Forrest, though only to rob them of their skins. The soil so fertile, that in the space of 16 days Herbs and Roots will grow ripe, and be fit to be eaten. So plentifully stored with Ginger and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587. there were shipped hence 27500 pound weight of Ginger, and 900 Chests of refined Sugar: an evident argument of the richness and fertility of it. A farther proof hereof may be, 1. The rich Mines of Gold, in which they used to find Gold without mixture of dross or other Metals. 2. The great increase of Sugar, one Cane here filling 20. sometimes 30 measures. 3. The wonderful yield of Corn, amounting in some places to an hundred-fold. But the mines were long ago exhausted, inasmuch as the Inhabitants are fain to use brass money: but instead of those of Gold, they have found out others of Brass and Iron, and some few of silver; but not much searched into of late, for want of Workmen.

The reason of that want is to be ascribed unto the Covetousness and cruelty of the Spanish Nation: who, out of an insatiable thirst for Gold, consumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirst for Blood, killed so many of them, that in few years they destroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably supposed, that had not Charles the Fifth restrained them by a penal Edict from compelling the Natives against their wills to those works of servitude, there had not been one Native left in all this Island, nor in any other part of their Plantations. Such as are left are said to be of a low stature, of black hair, and a complexion somewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in Manners, Habit, or Religion, from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of most note are, 1. Ozama, on whose Banks stands Domingo, the chief Town of the Island capable of the greatest ships to the very Wharf. 2. Nigua which passing through the rich Pastures, or making the Pastures rich by its secret virtue, runneth towards the West: as do also, 3. Taquimo, 4. Nizao, and 5. Neyba, 6. Huana, of a contrary course to the other three. 7. Taquu, or Jaco, which falleth into the Northern seas. 8. Nicayagu, 9. Cocitonic, 10. Xanique. These three last famous heretofore for their sands of Gold. Some speak of 30000 Brooks and Rivers which are found in this Country; two parts of which vast number had their golden sands. A thing so far beyond the charity of the strongest Faith, (though reported by a Grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-course, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The whole divided when the Spaniards first came amongst them, into several Provinces or Kingdoms: as, 1. Higuty, 2. Jacaguia, 3. Samana, in the Eastern parts: 4. Taquimo, 5. Boaruco, and 6. Xaragua, towards the South; and 7. Gnahabu, and 8. Cabaya, in the West; and in the North, 9. Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold, 10. Marien, the Landing place of Columbus, and 11. Maguana in the Centre of the Island, the King whereof in the time of Columbus was named Canabo, of greatest power of any of those petit Royalties. Another division of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all rising from one Mountain in the midst of the Island, into four Divisions:

ns; 1. the River Jaco, running towards the North, 2. Nubiba, halting to the South, 3. Tuna, or Junna, towards the East, and 4. Haitibonico, to the West. But these divisions being long since grown out of use, we will survey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us.

And they are, 1. S. Domingo, first built by Bartholomew Columbus, Anno 1494, on the East Bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1502) removed by Nicholas de Obando, then Governour of the Island, to the opposite shore. Situate in a pleasant Country among wealthy Pastures, and neighboured with a safe and spacious Haven: the Houses elegantly built, most of them of stone, and the whole well walled; beside a Castle at the West end of the Peer to defend the Haven: enriched by the Residence of the Governour, the Courts of Justice, the See of an Archbishop, and (besides many Convents and Religious Houses) an Hospital endowed with 20000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Esteemed of greatest trade and commerce of Merchants, till the taking of Mexico and the discovery of Perru; since that time sensibly decaying, and now reduced unto the number of 600 Families of Spaniards; the greatest part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negroes, Mulattos, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586 took it by force, and held it for the space of a month, burning the greatest part of the Houses, and suffering the rest to be redeemed at a certain price. 2. S. Salvador, 68 Leagues to the East of Domingo. 3. Jaguana, called also Santa Maria del Porto, from a late and beautiful Haven adjoining to it; situate in the West part of the Island: of no great bigness, consisting of no more than 150 Houses when it was at the greatest; but made much less by Captain Newport, who, in the year 1591, burnt it to the ground. 4. Corny, in the North of the Island, opposite to Santa Domingo, from which distant almost sixty Leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great esteem for its Mines of Gold. 5. Concepcion de la Vega, the foundation of Christopher Columbus, for whose sake afterwards adorned with a See Episcopal. 6. Puerto de la Plata, 40 Leagues from Domingo on the Northern shore, there built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando before mentioned, by him also fortified, the second Town of Wealth and Trade in all the Island. 7. Azuza, now called Compostella, a noted Haven, and resorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Island was first discovered by Columbus, (for I believe not that it was any of the Fortunate Islands which we read of in the life of Serapion) in the first Voyage which he made, conducted hither by some of the Inhabitants of the Isle of Cuba. Landing, and gaining the good will of the Savages by gentle usage, he obtained leave of one of their Kings or Caciques to build a Fortress in his Country, which he called Navidad, or Natividad, leaving in it 36 Spaniards to keep possession: whom he found both murthered and murdered at his coming back. Being now better furnished for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Isabella, (in honour of Isabella Queen of Castile) near the Mines of Cibao; which afterwards was deserted also, and the Colony removed unto S. Domingo; the Spaniards sending one Colony after another, till at last their number was increased to 14000, besides Women and Children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite cruelties, and exhausted the riches of the Country with as infinite Covetousness, they betook themselves to fresher Quarters, abandoning the Island to devour the Continent. Once had the Islanders rebelled and fortified themselves in the Province of Bauruco; a place so naturally strong, that there was little need of the helps of Art. Not brought to leave that Fastness but on such Conditions as made the Spaniard less insolent, and themselves less Slaves.

4. CUBA.

CUBA lieth on the West of Hispaniola, from which parted by a Frith, or narrow Channel, interposed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas, and that of Mexico, backed on the North with a Frith of Islands called the Lucayas, and some part of the Peninsula of Florida; extended towards the East to the extrem point or Foreland of Jucatan, called Cape de Cetache, from which distant about 50 Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Isle of Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West, that is to say, from Cape Maxie towards Hispaniola, to the Cape of S. Anthony, 230 leagues; in breadth where broadest hardly 40, but 15 in others. For the fertility of the soil contending with Hispaniola for the pre-eminence, but in the temperature of the Air a great deal before it. Liberally stored with Ginger, Cassia, Mastic, Aloes, Cinamon, and Sugar, (not reckoning such commodities as are common unto this with others) besides great plenty of Flesh and Fish, and of Fowl no scarcity. The Gold more dresse in the Mine then in Hispaniola, but the Brags more perfect. Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but these Mountains clad with divers Trees, some of which drop the purest Rosin, and the Hills sending to the Valleys many notable Rivers. Pestered with many sorts of serpents, not so much out of any ill condition of the soil and air, as by an old superstition of the Savages, in former times not sufficed to kill them when they might, (this being a Dish reserved for the higher Powers) not able afterwards to destroy them, when it would have been suffered.

What other savage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they should not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may add in memory of the first Inhabitants, that an old man of 80 years, one of the Caciques of the Island, addressed himself unto Columbus at his first coming hither, advising him to use his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the souls of men have two journeys when they leave this world, the one foul and dark, prepared for the injurious and cruel person; the other delectable and pleasant, for the men of Peace. It is said also of them, they knew not the use of money, nor understood the niceties of Meum and Tuum; Tenants in common to the Blessings which the Earth brought forth, and Cohers of Nature.

Amongst the Rarities of this Island, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy substance, which is found frequently on the seas into which it falleth, excellent for the calking of ships. Secondly a navigable river (but the name not told us) the waters of which were so hot that a man could not endure to hold his hand in them. They tell us also, thirdly, of a Valley 15 leagues from S. Jago, which produceth stones exactly round, as if made for pleasure; but yet merely natural. But these are no greater rarities than in other places, nor altogether so great as in Hispaniola. In which they tell us of a fair river whose waters are salt, and yet none but fresh streams fall into it. Of another Lake (three leagues in compass) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of these so strange or rare as the Cucuy, a kind of Scarabe or Beetle; the eyes and wings whereof, when opened, give so great a light in the darkest places, that a man may see to read and write by it, as well as by a Candle.

Rivers of most note, 1. Came, much annoyed with Crocodiles, (a Beast not common in these Islands, nor elsewhere in this) exceeding dangerous to such as repose them-themselves on the Banks of the River. 2. Arima, which disburtheneth it self near the Port of Xagua. 3. Rio di Porcos, full of Rocks and Quick-sands at the entrances of it. 4. Rio Escondida, passing betwixt Habana and the Port of Maracaibo. 5. Marion, and 6. Tanue, of less note. Besides these there is Xagua, a safe Station and Road for Shipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and spacious when once entered; above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all sides from the Winds, that Ships lie here in safety without any Anchor. Some other Bays there be as useful, though not so considerable.

Towns of most consequence, 1. S. Jago, in the south part of the Island, situate about two Leagues from the Main, but in the bottom of a large and capacious Gulf, the most noted Port of all these Seas. Built by Don Diego de Velasquez, Anno 1514; afterwards made a Bishop's See: beautified with a Cathedral, some Religious Houses; once not inferior unto any for numbers of people, though now few enough. 2. Caracas, 30 Leagues on the East of S. Jago; the same foundation as the other, and neighboured by great quantities of Eben-wood. 3. S. Salvador, by some called Bayma, according to the old name of the Province in which it standeth; built by Velasco in the most pleasant and richest part of all the Island, but not so fitly as the other for Trade and Merchandize. 4. Porto del Principe, an Haven-town in the North parts; not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchy or bituminous Liquor, spoken of before, which I conceive to be much of the same nature with the Fountains of Naphta in the East. 5. Trinidad, another of Velasco's foundations, nine or ten Leagues Eastward of the Port of Xagua; once well frequented, but now forsaken, and mere nothing. 6. Havana, in the North parts, opposite to Florida, a noted and well traded Port; so strongly situate and fortified both by Nature and Art, that it seems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Castles; a greater then either opposite to the mouth of the Haven; all so commodiously built and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and scatter the greatest Navy. Near one of them standeth an high Tower, from the top whereof notice is given unto the Guards of every Ship that cometh within view of the Watchmen. The best assurance not only of this Island but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the most part with the Seat of the Governour, and the greatest Trade of all these Seas: the Ships which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Gulf tarrying here for one another till all meet together, and setting sail from hence by the Straights of Babama, amongst the Isles of the Lucias.

This Island was one of the first which was discovered by Columbus: who having almost tired the Spaniards with the expectation, first fell upon the Island of Guabanan, one of the Lucias, to which he gave the Name of S. Salvadors. From thence he sailed to Baracoa, on the North of this Island, which he caused to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholick King of Castile and Aragon, at whose charge, and the encouragement of Isabella his Heroick Queen, he pursued this Enterprize. Landing, he asked the people if they knew Cipango, (by which name Paulus Venetus calls the Isle of Japan;) and they conceiving that he enquired after Cibao, (of great note for the richest Mines in Hispaniola) pointed towards Haiti; some of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba was by this means laid aside, and all the thoughts of Spain unto Hispaniola, where they found many golden Provocations to invite their stays, till hungering after more Gold, and some new Plantations, they passed over hither, and in few years, by the prudent conduct of Velasco, got such footing in it, and made that footing good by so many Colonies, that their Title and Possession was beyond dispute, and so continues to this day.

S. JAMAICA.

JAMAICA lieth on the South of Cuba, from which distant 20 Leagues, and as much, or very little more from Hispaniola. Discovered in the second Voiage of Columbus, by whom named S. Jago; that name changed afterwards to Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West about 50 Leagues, and in breadth 20; the whole compass estimated at 150; the middle of it under the 18 Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich soil, abundantly provided of all things necessary; well stocked with Cattel, and no less plentifully stored with most sorts of Fruits, which either industry or Nature have supplied it with. Great store of Cotton-wool, and such abundance of Jucca, (a Root whereof the Savages once made their Bread, that it was deemed the Granary of the neighbouring Island. And were it not dis-furnished of convenient Ports, (which is all the want of it) it would be as much frequented by sea-faring men as any other in those parts. Once very populous, now destitute of all the natural inhabitants; this Island, and that of Porto Rico, losing in few years 60000 by the Spaniards' Cruelties. Cruelties which not only saged upon the Men, but destroyed Posterity: the Women, here and elsewhere, so abominating their sad condition, that they strangled their Children in Birth, to the end they might not live to serve such a cruel Nation.

Chief Towns hercof, (for though it be well watered it hath no great Rivers,) 1. Sevilla, in the North part of the Island, beautified with a goodly Monastery; the Abbot whereof hath all Episcopal Jurisdiction, and is privileged to wear a Mitre: in nothing more ennobled, then that Peter Martyr the Historian (to whose Decads all succeeding Ages are beholden for the Chorography and History of these parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2. Mellilla, a small Town, but memorable for the unfortunate Shipwreck of Columbus on the Shores adjoining. 3. Orizaba, on the South of the Island, fourteen Leagues from Sevilla. 4. De la Vega, now a Ruine only, once a Spanish Colony; and of great fame for giving the Title of Dukes to Christopher Columbus, and his Brother Bartholomew. Since whose time nothing happened prejudicial to the state of this Island by the hands of any but the Spaniards, till conquered, but not held by Sir Anthony Sherley, Anno 1596.

Thus having took a short survey of the several parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government is committed chiefly to two great Vice-Roys; the one of Nova Hispania, who resides at Mexico, the other of Peru, who abideth at Lima, the principal Cities of those Kingdoms. The first hath Jurisdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Galicia, Nova Hispania, Guatimala, Castella Aurea, and the Provinces of the Mexican Islands; the other over those of Peru, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the new Realm of Granada. Such scattered pieces as they hold in Guiana, Paria, and the Cariber, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to some of these. Of these the Vice-Roy of Peru is of greatest power, because he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government; which in the other are reserved to the King himself. But that of New Spain is counted for the better preferment, because of its nearness unto Spain, (in respect of the other) the Beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the People. For the administration of Justice, and ordering the Affairs of the several Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lieth

no appeal: that is to say, 1. Guadalajara, for Gallicia Nova; 2. Mexico, for New Spain; 3. S. Domingo, for the Province of the Islands; 4. Guatimala, for the Division so named; 5. Panama, for Castella Aurea. Then for the other Government, 6. Quitos, 7. Lima, and 8. Characa, in the Realm of Peru, 9. Imperial, for Chile; 10. S. Foy, for the New Realm of Granada. From these though no appeal do lie in matter of Justice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Roys an Appeal may lie in affairs of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a standing Council in the Court of Spain, which is called the Council of the Indies, consisting of a President, eight Counsellours, two Proctors Fiscal (which we call the Solicitors general) and two Secretaries, besides other Officers; to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of these Countreys, to appoint the Vice-Roys, to dispose of all the great Offices (except those of the Government of Peru) and spiritual dignities, to appoint Visitors to go into those Provinces for the examining the actions of all Officers hearing the Grievances of the People, and to displace or punish as they find occasion, but with the Kings privacy and consent.

As for the Estates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalties from the Crown of Spain hold them but for life, (except it be the Marquess of Valla in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their deaths returning to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldest son, or the next of blood; but so, that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not for any right of theirs. And though they have many times attempted to make these Commanderies and Estates hereditary, and offered great sums of money for it, both to Charles the fifth and Philip the second, yet they could never get it done; the Kings most prudently considering, that these great Lords having the command of the Estates and Persons of their several Vassals, would either grind them to powder without any remedy, or upon any Inquisition into their proceedings take an occasion to revolt. Both dangers of no small importance; both by this uncertainty of their present Tenure exceeding happily avoided.

The Revenue which the King receiveth hence is said to be three Millions of Ducats yearly: most of it rising out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and Silver; the rest by Customs upon Manufactures and all sorts of Merchandize, and the Acknowledgments reserved upon Lands and Royalties. But out of this there go great Exits: that is to say, to the two Vice-Roys 12000 Ducats; to the President and Officers of the Council of the Indies in Spain 20000 Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the several Courts of Judicature very liberal Pensions; to every Archbishop and Bishop, of which there are 29 in all 2000 Ducats at the least, and to some much more, to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite charges in maintaining Garrisons, and entertaining standing Bands both of Horse and Foot, in several parts of this Estate and the continual keeping of a strong Armada to conduct his Plate-Fleets to Spain; there must be made a great abatement, and the sum will bear it. For howsoever at the first his Revenue came from thence without any great charge, more than the keeping of a few Soldiers to awe the Savages; yet after he fell foul with England, and startled the Hollanders to Rebellion, he was compelled to fortifie all his Havens, and secure his Ports, and to maintain a strong Armada at the Sea, to convoy his Treasures. Before which time the English (as is instanced in several places) did so share in his Harvest, that they left him scarce enough to pay his Workmen; which if they should attempt again upon any Breach, they would find it very difficult, if not impossible, to effect any thing upon the Coasts as in former times; or indeed any other way, but by making themselves too strong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from coming to him to supply his needs.

And so much for the AMERICAN Islands.

Having thus travelled over (with Gods Blessing) the Known Parts of the World, and failed through the most difficult Seas which embrace the same; we should now man our Barque again, and try what Discovery we can make of the Parts Unknown, or not fully known to us as the others are.

Reddiderint tibi pulsa diem, revocabis ab alto
Nos Triton Scopulo, atque iterum tentabimus Equos.*

That is to say,

But whither goes my Bark? Return: for we Have slid'd the Capering Brine enough: see, see,
The South-wind 'gins to gather Clouds apace;
'Tis no safe tarrying in so fierce a place.
Whilst thou halt time, retire, thou wearied Bark,
Into safe Harbour, when the Clouds which dark
The World's Bright Eye shall be dispell'd away,
And shining Phœbus make a lightsome day.
Triton's shrill Trump shall thee recall again,
From the safe Harbour to the foaming Main:
And we with all our Powers will boldly try
What of this UNKNOWN WORLD we can descry,

AN
FORMER WORK,
Endeavouring a Discovery of the UNKNOWN PARTS of the WORLD.

AND here we are upon a new and strange Adventure, which no Knight Errant ever undertook before. Of things unknown, as there is commonly no desire, so less Discourse can probably be made upon them. By unknown therefore we must understand left known, or not well discovered; and in that sense we may as well endeavour to say somewhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the Discovery. And to say truth, even in the known parts of the World there is much unknown; as in the best and most flourishing Kingdoms of the Earth there is some waste ground, either not cultivated at all, or not so well inhabited as the rest of the Country. For besides many vast Tracts of ground in the North and North-west parts of Tartary, and such parts of India as lie Northwards towards Delanguer, Nangracot; the East parts of Caucasus, and the Realms of Cathay it is conceived that the greatest part of the Midlands of Africa are undiscovered to this day, or the knowledge of them so imperfect as comes near a Nescience; and for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders, (which are in part to be the Subject of this Enquiry) it is affirmed of the Midlands by John de Laet, (who hath made the most exact description of it that ever was extant) minima sui parte perlustratum esse, that the least part of them hath been discovered hitherto to any purpose. Leaving these therefore as before without farther search, we will divide the UNKNOWN WORLD into these two parts: 1. Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2. Terra Incognita Australis: which with their subdivisions we will now pursue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS is that part of the Unknown World which lieth towards the North; and is to be considered in these three Notions: 1. As directly under the Pole, which for distinction sake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2. as lying to the North-east on the back of Europe and Asia; or 3. on the North-west, on the back of America.

1. ORBIS ARCTICUS is that part of Terra Borealis Incognita which lieth under or about the Arctic Pole; the situations and dimensions of which being taken with the Astrolabe by an Oxford Frier, are by Mercator thus described out of the Itinerary of James Chocxe of Bour le due, or the Bosche, a Town of Brabant.

"Under the Arctic Pole (saith he) is said to be a black Rock of wondrous height, about 33 Leagues in "compass, the Land adjoining being torn by the sea into four great Islands. For the Ocean violently breaking through it, and disgorging it self by 19 Channels, maketh four Euripi or fierce Whirl-pools, by which the Waters are finally carried towards the North, and there swallowed into the Bowels of the Earth. That Euripus or Whirl-pool which is made by the Scythick Ocean hath five Inlets, and by reason of his streight passage and violent course is never frozen: the other on the back of Greenland, being 37 Leagues long, hath three Inlets, and remaineth frozen three moneths yearly. Between these two there lieth an Island on the North of Lappia and Biarmia, inhabited, as they say, by Pigmies, the tallest of them not above four foot high. A certain Scholar of Oxford reporteth, that these four Euripi are carried with such furious violence towards some Gulf, in which they are finally swallowed up, that no ship is able with never so strong a Gale to stem the Current, and yet that there is never so strong a Wind as to blow a Windmill. The like is reported by Giraldus Cambrensis in his Book De mirabilibus Hibernie. So far and to this purpose he. But Blondeville our Countryman is of another opinion, (as indeed who not?) neither believing that Pliny or any other of the Roman Writers came hither to describe this Promontory; or that the Oxford Frier, without the assistance of some cold Devil of the middle Region of the Air, (and consequently able to endure all Weathers) could approach so near as to measure these cold Countries with his Astrolabe, or take the height of this black Rock with his Jacob's staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucian's Dialogues than any serious Discourse: we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

2. The NORTHWEST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis are those which lie on the back of Estotiland, the most Northern Province of America: by which it hath been much endeavoured to find out a passage to Cathay and China, and not to go so far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the Streights of Magellan. Attempted first by Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1497, at the charge of Henry the 7. of England. But having discovered as far as to the 67. Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutiny of his Mariners he was forced to return; when finding great preparations for a war with Scotland, that business for the present was laid aside. Resumed by Gasper Cortereal a Portugall, Anno 1500, and after by Stephen Gomez a Spaniard, in the year 1523; but neither of them went so far to the North as Cabot. The Spaniards notwithstanding would not so give over, but first with five Ships from the Green, and afterwards by two from New Spain, sent out by Cortez, pursued the Enterprize: which Proving as successful as the former had been, occasioned Charles the 5, then preparing for Italy, on the payment of 35000 Ducats by King John the third, to suspend the Prosecution of it. Followed with greater industry, but as bad success, by Sir Martin Frobiher, who made three Voyages for these parts, (the first of them in the year 1579,) and brought home some of the Natives; a Sea-unicorn's horn, (still kept in the great Wardrobe of Windsor Castle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Country, found upon trial, when in England, not to quit the Coast. A great Promontory which he passed by he called Queen Elizabeth's Foreland, in whose name he took possession of it and the Sea running not far off he called Frobiher's Straights. The Seas full set with Icy Islands some of them half a mile about, and eighty Fathoms above Water: the People like the Samedis, the worst kind of Tatars, in their lives and habit. John Davier followed the delign Anno 1585, at the encouragement of Sir Francis Walsingham, then principal Secretary of Estate: and having in three Voyages discovered to the Latitude of 73, by reason of the many difficulties which he found in the enterprise, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over; leaving unto a narrow Sea on the North of Estotiland the name of Fretum Davier, in the Latitude of 65 and 20 Minutes, by which name it is still called. After him followed Weymouth, Hall, Hudson, Burton, Baffin, Smith; all English. The result of whole Endeavours was the finding of some cold Isles and points of Land, which they named King James his Cape, Queen Ann's Cape, Prince Henrie's Foreland, Saddle Island, Barren Island, Red-goose Island, Diggs his Island; all of them betwixt 80 and 81: and the imposing on some passages and parts of the Sea the names of Hackluy's Headland, Smith's Bay, Hudson's Straights, Mandlin's Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and monuments of their Undertakings. Nothing achieved of publick moment, but the Discovery of an Island called Cherry Island in the Latitude of 74 and the Shores of a large piece of the Continent, which they caused to be called King James his New Land, most commonly Greenland; where they found many white Bears, with white, gray and dun Foxes, Partridges, Geese, and some other Provisions. Sea-unicorns Horns, great store of Morfeis, (or Sea-Horfeis) the Oil and Teeth whereof yield no small Commodity. But most considerable for the Trade of Whale-fishing, which our men use yearly upon those Coasts; of whose Oil, Bones and Brain (this last supposed to be the true Sperma Ceti, now used as Medicinal) they raised very great profit.

3. The NORTH-EAST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis are those which lie on the North of Russia and Tartary, by which the like passage towards Cathay and China hath been oft attempted; and hitherto with like success. Endeavoured first by Sebastian Cabot, the son of John Cabot, so often mentioned before, by him trained up in the Discovery of the North-east parts of America. His Employment failing here in England, he betook himself unto the service of the King of Spain; and coming out of Spain, Anno 1549, was by King Edward the sixth made grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Pension of 166 l. 13 s. 4 d. In the year 1553, he was the chief Draught-maker and Procurer of the Discovery of Russia and the North-east Voyages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellor, Burroughs, Jenkinson; and after prosecuted by Pet and Jackman. Some of which perished in the Action, and were frozen to death: their Ship being found, the next year hemmed about with Ice, and a particular account of all things which had happened to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Russia, (since that time made a common Voyage, without dread or danger) and passing down the Volga to the Caspian Sea, and by that to Persia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophie. The Hollanders in the year 1594, and in some years after, tried their Fortune also, under the Conduct and Direction of one William Barren, their chief Pilot; but went no farther than the English had gone before them; yet gave new names unto all places as they passed, as if they had been the first Discoverers, with Pride and Arrogance enough. Nothing since done of any note or consideration for the opening of this North-east passage, or giving us any better account of the North of Tartary, or any Countries beyond that but what we had many Ages since out of Pausanias: so that we are but where we were, in a Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly discourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant Undertakings, yet when I look upon the natures of those Shores and Seas, those tedious Winters of ten months, with no Summer following, the Winds continually in the North, and the main Ocean paved with Ice so long together; I cannot chuse but rank the hopes of these Northern Passages amongst those Adventurers which are only commendable for the Difficulties presented in them.

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA.

With better hopes we may go forwards on the next Discovery, and try what may be done on Terra Australis, or the Southern Continent, though hitherto Incognita also, almost as much unknown as the Arctic Islands, which none but my good Friend of Oxford had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our Learned Brerewood to be as large as Europe, Asia, and Africa: and that upon such strength of Reasons as cannot be easily overborn by any opposite. His Arguments in brief are these. 1. That as touching Latitude, some parts thereof come very near to the Aequator, if they come not also on this side of it: and as for Longitude, it keepeth along, though at several distances, the whole continual course of the other Continents. 2. It is clearly known, that in the other two Continents the Land which lieth on the North-side of that Line is four times at the least as large as that which lieth South thereof; and therefore, since the Earth is equally poized on both sides of the Centre, it must needs be that the Earth in answerable measure and proportion must advance it self in some places above the Sea on the South-side of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By consequence, what is wanting in the South parts of the other two Continents to countervail the North-parts of them, must of necessity be supplied in the Southern Continent.

The Country being so large, so free from the Incumbrances of Frosts and Ice and endless Winters, I have oft marvelled with my self that no farther progress hath been made in Discovery of it: considering chiefly by the Site and Position of the Country, especially in those parts which lie nearest Asia, that there is nothing to be looked for elsewhere, either of profit or of pleasure, but may there be found. Whether it be that there is some Nit superfluous to humane endeavours, or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Gospel, or that the great Princes of the Earth think it no good Policy to engage themselves in new Discoveries, till the old be thoroughly planted and made sure unto them; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerful influence, thinks his hands full enough already, and being settled in so many and so wealthy Factories, will not adventure upon more: Which of all these, or whether all these together be the cause of this Stop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that here is a large Field, enough for Covetousness, Ambition, or desire of Glory, to to spend themselves in, enough to satiate the greatest and most hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth and Worldly pleasure; besides the Gallantry and Merit of so brave an Action. Most which hath hitherto been done in it hath been by the encouragement of the Vice-Roys of New Spain and Peru: by the first of which we came acquainted with the Coasts of Nova Guinea; by the latter, with those Countries called the Islands of Solomon, but whether Continent or Islands, not yet fully known.

And yet we must not rob Magellanus of his part of the Honour, who, passing through the Straights which now bear his name, discovered those parts of it, which, from the Fire thence seen, he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James le Maire to be an Island. Nor do the English or the Dutch want their parts herein, though what they did was rather accidental than upon Design. For in the year 1593, Sir Richard Haklins, being bound for the Straights of Magellan, was by a cross wind driven on some parts of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Haklins his Maiden Land; a Promontory of it shooting in to the Sea with three Points he called Point Tremontain, and a pleasant Isle not far off by the name of Fair Island. Sailing along these Coasts in the 50. Degree of Southern Latitude, for the space of sixty miles and upwards, he found the Country as he passed to be very pleasant; and by the Fires which he saw in the night, to be well inhabited. By the like accident, Anno 1599, Sibald de Weert, a Hollander, in his return from the Straights of Magellan, fell upon some Islands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of fifty Degrees and forty Minutes, which he caused to be called Sibald's Islands. And besides these we owe to the Portugals the Discovery of such parts hereof as they fell on in their way to the Eastern Indies, of which we have little but the names: as 1. Piscacorom Terra, so called from the abundance of Parrots which they saw on the Coasts over against the Cape of good Hope; 2. Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and possessed by Idolaters, with the two Kingdoms of, 3. Lucah, and 4. Maletur; all three against the Isles of Java, from which little distant.

But the greatest light we have to see by into this dark business is by the Voyages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Vice-Roys of Peru and Mexico, as before was said. For in the year 1543, the Governour of New Spain, then being, sent Villa Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccas, who in that Voyage made a Discovery of a rich and flourishing Country, which he named Nova Guinea, by others since his time called Terra de Picinaceli: and in the year 1563, Castro the Licentiate, then Vice-Roy of Peru, sent a Fleet from Lima, which under the Conduct of Lopez Garcia de Castro, discovered the Islands of Solomon. To which if we subjoin the success of the Hollanders in the discovery of Fretum le Maire, and the Lands adjoining, the best Description we can make of this Southern Continent must be in the Chorography and History of their Adventures; viz. 1. Terra del Fuego, 2. Insule Solomonis, 3. Nova Guinea: beginning first with Terra del Fuego, because nearest to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO lies on the other side of the Straights of Magellan, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now discovered to be an Island by one Jacob Maire of Amsterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Schouten of Hoorn, both Hollanders. They began their Voyage on the 15 of June, Anno 1615, and on the 19. of January following they fell even with the Strait of Magellan. On the 24. of the same Month they had the sight of another Strait, which seemed to separate this Terra del Fuego from the rest of the Southern Continent; and on the 25. they entered into it. That part of the Land which (being entered into the Straights) they had on the West, they called Terra Mauritijs de Nassau; that on the East, Statenland; the Strait it self, Fretum le Maire. The entrance into the Strait they found to be in 55 Degrees of Southern Latitude and 50 Minutes; the water running into the North Sea with so violent an Eddy, as adversum maris ætum difficultè sperare possunt, (saith he who in the way of Journal or Ephemerides hath described the whole course of this Voyage. In the whole course thereof nothing so much observable (besides the Discovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had lost a Day, (as must needs happen unto such as in so tedious a Voyage had travelled Westward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders and the rest of Europe; though they had calculated the Days since their going out with all exactness. So that if there were any such Morality in the Sabbath as some men pretend, these men must either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the rest of their Countrymen, or otherwise, to comply with them, must be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath all the rest of their lives. But of this more at large elsewhere. To return therefore to this Strait: it is said to be seven Dutch miles or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentiful of good Fish, especially of Sea-Calves and Whales. About the inserting of which Strait into the third Edition of my Microcosm, I received a Letter at such time as the Parliament was held in Oxon Anno 1625. subscribed G. B. and a little under that, Sub grando floridus: which whether it were the Gentlemans Motto, or the Anagram of his name, I am not able to say, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his desire were satisfied in the next Edition of that Work. For my encouragement wherein he gave me this direction following. "The News (saith he) of this New Strait coming into Spain, it pleased the King, in the year 1618, to send and search whether the truth were answerable unto the Report. And finding it to be much broader than the other, and not above seven Dutch miles long, he decreed, that being the more easy and compendious way for Navigators, and less subject to dangers, his Auxiliary Forces should be sent that way into the East-Indies to defend the Philippine and Molucca Islands, and the way by the Cape of good Hope to be left. In regard that every such Voyage requireth twice as much time; besides the variety of Winds, and often change of the Air, not only troublesome, but full of Diseases, consumeth the one half of the men before they return. Whereas this way gaineth time (and, if need be, they may dispatch business in the West as they travel into the East) without any extraordinary danger or loss of men. So far the very words of my Letter. The Intelligence given me in this Letter I find confirmed in a Relation of the Voyage made by Captain Don Juan de More, Anno 1618, at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who presently armed and furnished eight tall Ships to send this new way unto his Philippines and Moluccas, under the conduct of Petrus Michaelius de Cordelen. Since it hath been found by experience that even from our parts to the Moluccas through this Fretum de Maire, is but a passage of eight Months, sine ulla insigni navigantium clade, saith the Narrator. But of this Strait enough to satiate my unknown Well-willers Request, and inform my Reader: being extremely sorry that the Gentleman was not pleased to impart his name, that so his memory might have lived in these Papers, if they themselves be destitute to a longer life.

Now for the nature of the Soil, it is said to be very full of Mountains; but those Hills appalled with Woods

Woods, intermixt with Valleys; the Valleys for the most part full of little Brooks, which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good Pasturage; the Sea-coasts well provided with Bays and Roads, not unsafe for Shipping: though the Air every where, but chiefly near the Sea, be much subject to Tempests. As for the People, they are said to be of a white Complexion; but their Faces, Arms and Thighs, coloured with a kind of Oker: of full Stature and well-proportioned, their Hair black, which they wear long, to seem more terrible. The Men most generally naked, the Women only shaded on their secret parts with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deserve the name of Houses: so that the most which we can do is to coast the Island. In which we find towards Mare del Noordo, 1. A large Arm of the Sea called Entrada de S. Sebastian. 2. The Cape of S. Iser. 3. Mauritius Land. 4. Promontorio de Buen Suceso, or the Cape of Good Success. Opposite whereunto in another Island is the Cape of S. Bartholomew, and betwixt them the Strait called Fretum le Maire. Then in the New South-Sea, as they call it, there are, 5. Barnucel's Island. 6. The Islands of S. Ildefonso. 7. Cape Horn, on a fair Promontory, in the South-west Ande, which doubled, the Country goes along with a straight Shore, on which I find some Bays and Capes, but no names unto them; till we come to the Western entrances of the Strait of Magellan, opposite unto Cape Victoria, so often mentioned.

2. INSULÆ SOLOMONIS, or the Islands of Solomon, are situate on the West of Terra del Fogo, 11 Degrees on the South of the Equinoctial. Discovered in the year 1567, by Lopez Garcia de Castro, sent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to find out new Countrys. By him thus named, in hope that men would be rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from these Lands of Ophir.

In number they are many, but 18 the principal: Some of which 300 miles in compass, others 200, and others of them less, till we come to fifty, and beneath that, none. All liberally furnished with Dogs, Hogs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinamon, and some Vains of Gold. The chief of these eighteen are, 1. Guadalcanal, supposed to be the greatest of them; upon the Coast whereof the Spaniards failed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and sacked, because the people of it, by a sudden surprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2. S. Isabella, 150 Leagues in length, and 18 in breadth; the Inhabitants some black, some white, some of brown Complexion. 3. S. Nicholas, 100 Leagues in compass, inhabited by a People which are black of hue, but said to be more witty than the other Savages. All of them situate betwixt the Straights of Magellan and the Islands of Thiener; and yet not well agreed upon amongst our Authors, whether to be accounted Islands, or a part of the Continents, the Spaniards having failed 700 Leagues on the Coasts hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they pass generally in account for Islands, and by that name are under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governours, let them pass so still.

3. NOVA GUINEA lieth beyond the Islands of Solomon in respect of us, proceeding, as we have begun, from the Land of Fire. Discovered, as before was said, Anno 1543, by Villa Lopes; (Herrera attributes the Discovery of it to Alvarez de Saavedra, and sets it higher, in the year 1527,) more perfectly made known, if I guess aright, by Ferdinando de Quir, who being sent with two Ships to make a more full Discovery of the Islands of Solomon, and taking his course about the height of the Magellan Straights, discovered a main Land coming up close to the Equinoctial; on the Coasts whereof he sailed 800 Leagues, till he found himself at last in the Latitude of 15 Degrees, discovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purposed to settle a Plantation, and to that end presented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Country I conceive, by the Site and Position of it, to be Nova Guinea, coming up close as that doth to the Equinoctial; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Maleur. And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I shall afford the Reader this Description of it, out of his memorials, in which it is soberly affirmed to be a Terrestrial Paradise for Wealth and Pleasures. The Country is plentiful of Fruits, Coco-nuts, Almonds of four sorts, Pome-citrons, Dates, Sugar-canes and Apples; plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Partridges, and other Fowl, with some Kine and Buffals. Nothing inferior (as it seemeth) to Guinea in the Land of Negroes, and from thence so named. For, as he saith, he saw amongst them Silver and Pearls, and some told him of Gold; the Countrys on the Coast seeming to promise much felicity within the Land. The Air he found to be wholesome and temperate, the Sea-shores to be full of Bays, Havens, and the Exits of Rivers, making shew of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, some white, some like the Malaters, others like the Negroes; diversified in Habit, as well as Colour. Their Bread made of three sorts of Roots: without Government, but not without Religion; for they had their several Oratories and places of burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in dayly Wars with one another: their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other Weapons, but all made of Wood. Of this Country, whatsoever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took possession in the name of the Catholic King, and set up both a Cross and a Chappel in it; the Chappel dedicated to the Lady of Loretto.

The precise time of this Discovery I have now here found, but that the time spent about it is by him affirmed to be 14 years, to the no small endamage of his Health and Fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing else done by others in pursuance of his Propositions. Whether it were on any of the Reasons before laid down; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Bays or Promontories as he passed along; but he either took such names as were given before, or found not any thing worth the naming. And for such names as were given before, (still taking Ferdinando Quir's new Country for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontory called Cape Hermosa, in the East parts hereof, near the Islands of Solomon, and not far from the Equator. 2. Another in the Western part, but as near the Equinox, called Point Primiro. 3. A third in the first bendings of the Coast towards the South, called Cape de Buena Deseada, or the Cape of good Desire. 4. Rio de Valcaner. 5. Rio de Lorenzo. 6. Rio de S. Augustino, on the East of Cape Formoso towards the Straights. 7. The Rivers of S. Peter. 8. S. Paul. 9. S. Andrew, and 10. S. James, betwixt Cape Formoso and Primiro.

But being there is little certain of these last Discoveries, and the greatest certainty we have of that little is nothing but a list of names without any thing observable in the state and story of the same, they may still retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore I try my fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Roy of Peru and Mexico, or taking out Commission for a new Discovery, will make a search into this Terra Australis for some other Regions, which must be found either here or no-where. The names of which are, 1. Mundus alter & idem, 2. Utopia, 3. New Atlantis, 4. Fairy Land, 5. The Painter's

Painter's Wives Island. 6. The Lands of Chivalry, and 7. The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, Another world, and yet the same, is a witty and ingenious Invention of a Learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger days, (but well enough becoming the austerity of the gravest Head) in which he distinguisheth the Vices, Passions, Humours, and ill Affections most commonly incident to mankind, into several Provinces, gives us the Character of each, as in the description of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it; and sets them forth to the Eye in such lively Colours, that the Vicious man may see therein his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own Imperfections. The Scene of this Design is laid by the Reverend Author in this Terra Australis, the Decorum happily preserved in the whole Discovery; the stile acutely clear, in the Invention singular. Of whom and his New World I shall give you that Eulogy which the Historian doth of Homer, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, neque post illum qui eum imitari posset, inventus est.

2. UTOPIA is a Country first discovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellor of England, and by him made a Scene of a Commonwealth, which neither Solon, nor Lycurgus, nor any of the Legislators of former times did ever dream of; nor had been sanctified by Plato, Aristotle, Tully, or any who have written the Ideas of a Form of Government, though not reducible to practice. Some of his Plots we have taken notice of already: viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt by making of those Metals Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans of Close-stools, Chamber-pots, and Vessels of such unclean use; by imposing it as a penalty on infamous persons, to wear Gold-rings upon their Fingers, and the like devices: as also his device to prevent mistakes and dislikes in Marriages, by giving the parties a full view of each other naked. Many more projects of this nature, some of them possible enough, but so unpracticable, so beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Commonwealth, that we may reckon this device amongst those strange Fancies, que nunquam antea spe concepta, nedom opere tentata erant. The man indeed (considering the times he lived in) was of rare abilities; but this Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continent, this Terra Australis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place else.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Island of this Southern Continent discovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the Learned Viscount of St. Albans; one of Sir Thomas More's Successors in the place of Lord Chancellor, but far before him in the excellency and fecundity of his Invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Island of the Western or Atlantick Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato, both alike invincible. But for his falling into this Island, his description of it, the City of Bensalem, and the manner of his reception there, such handsome probabilities, and so fairly carried, that to one not acquainted with the state of the World it would seem a Reality. But above all things, the Inventions and Designs of Solomon's House; for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving Nature to the best advantages of Life, and the benefit of mankind, are beyond comparison. The man I must confess had his personal errors, (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded: Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtissimi, as Paterculus once said of Piso, none one amongst many thousand (to pursue that Character) qui aut otium validius diligeret, aut facilius sufficeret negotio. A man of a most strong Brain, and a Chymical Head, who, if he had been entertained with some liberal Salary, abstracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature, and furnished with sufficiency both of means and helps for the going on in his Design, would, I am confident, have given us such a Body of Natural Philosophy; and made it so subservient to the publick good, that neither Aristotle, nor Theophrastus amongst the Ancients, nor Paracelsus, or the rest of our later Chymists would have been considerable.

4. FAIRY LAND is another part of this Terra Incognita, the habitation of the Fairies, a pretty kind of little Fiends or Pigmy-Devils, but more inclined to sport than mischief; of which old Women, who remember the times of Popery, tell us many fine Stories. A cleaner and more innocent Cheat was never put upon poor ignorant People, by the Monks and Friars. Their habitation here or no where; though sent occasionally by Oberon and their other Kings, to our parts of the world. For not being reckoned amongst the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils, (but such a kind of midling Spirits as the Latines call Lemures, or Larvæ) we must find out some place for them, neither Heaven nor Hell, and most likely this. Their Country never more ennobled then by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem called the Fairy Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greatest persons in her Court; but shadowed in such lively colours, framed so exactly by the Rules of Poetic, and representing such Ideas of all Moral goodness; that as there never was a Poem more artificial, so can no Ethical discourse more fashion and enflame the mind to the love of Virtue. Juvissimum facilius aliquem quam imitaturum, shall be Spencer's Motto; and so I leave him to his rest.

5. The PAINTERS WIVES ISLAND is an Island of this Tract, mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his History of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedro de Sarmiento, a Spanish Gentleman, employed by his King in planting some Colonies on the Straights of Magellan, (which we have touched upon before) who being taken Prisoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about some Island which the Maps presented in those Straights, and might have been of great use to him in his Undertaking. To which he merrily replied, that it was to be called the Painters Wives Island, saying, that whilst the Painter drew that Map, his Wife sitting by, desired him to put in one Country for her, that she in her imagination might have an Island of her own. His meaning was, that there was no such Island as the Maps presented. And I fear the Painter's Wife hath many Islands, and some Countries too upon the Continent in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the strictest search.

6. The LANDS OF CHIVALRY are such Islands, Provinces, and Kingdoms, in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World, and therefore must be fought in this. A gross absurdity, but frequent in those kind of Writers, who in describing the Adventures of their Knights, in despite of Geography, (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not only disjoyined Countries which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the description of many Islands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the ingenious Author of the History of Don Quixote merrily observeth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this sort is the Isle of Adamant in Sir Henry de Burdeaux's the Firm Island, in the History of Amadis de Gaul, the Hidden Island, and that of the Sage Alart, in Sir Palmerin of England's; the Islands of Lindaraza, and the Devilish Fanno, with the Kingdom of Lyra, (of which the Amazonian Lady Anchiflora was the rightful Queen) and many others of that kind, in the Mirror of Knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primaleon, and Belianis of Greece, Parisans, the Romanice manee of Romances, and indeed whom not of all that Rabbie? handſomly humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Iſland of Barataria, of which the famous Santo Panca was ſome time Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicona. And yet I cannot but confeſs (for I have been a great Student in theſe Books of Chivalry) that they may be of very good uſe to Children or young Boys in their Adoleſcency. For beſides that they divert the mind from worſe cogitations, they perfect him that takes pleaſure in them in the way of Reading, beget in him an habit of ſpeaking, and animate him many times to ſuch high conceptions as really may make him fit for great Undertakings.

7. The NEW WORLD IN THE MOON was firſt of Lucius diſcovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a Conſcience, poſtantiſing from the Faith in which he was bred. Ariſtophanes had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nepheleſceſyſia, or a City of Cuckoos in the Clouds. But Lucian was the firſt who found out this New World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he aſſertheth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that World which he there fancied and propoſed but as a fancy only, is become a matter of a more ſerious Debate; and ſome have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by perſons of divers Languages, Cuſtoms, Politics and Religions: and more then ſo, ſome means and ways propoſed to conſideration for maintaining an intercourſe and Commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other world is ſuppoſed to be? Certainly there are ſtronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Australis then in the body of that Planet, and ſuch perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleaſure the later Discoveries of America.

But I am no diſcourager of Industry and Ingenuity, which I love and honour whereſoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been ſtarted upon leſs preſumptions. Nor would I be miſtook, as if in my purſuit of this Terra Incognita I put ſcorn on any of ſublimier thoughts, or that I would have any man ſo much in love with the preſent World, as not to look for another world in Heaven above. It is reported, that in ſome Controverſie betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Moſcovy, the King of Poland ſent the Moſcovite a curious Globe, repreſenting the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each ſeveral Sphere. To which the Moſcovite returned this unworthy answer, Tu mihi Cælum miſiſti, at redde mihi Terras de quibus contendimus; You ſend me Heaven, ſaith he, but that will not ſatiſſie, unleſs you give me back thoſe Lands which are now in queſtion. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not loſe their part on earth for all Heaven it ſelf: whom I deſire, if any ſuch perſuade theſe Papers, to conſider, that as much as the moſt flouriſhing Country which is here deſcribed doth fall ſhort of that Paradife wherein God placed our Father Adam, ſo much, and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradife fall ſhort of the unſpeakable Glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and careful ſearch of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of God which are here preſented, and that vicifſſitude of humane Affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to ſome ſerious thoughts of that mighty God who made all theſe Works, in whom is noſhew nor ſhadow of change; to whom be given all Glory both in this World, and that to come.

*Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variæque vices, trepidoque tumultus
Æſtuat, & nunquam ſentit pars una Quietem.
Nam ruit in ſeſe, & civili vulnere ſemper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; alioque renaſcitur ore,
Rurſus ut intereat: ſic non eſt omnibus unum
Partibus Ingenium, non viſ nativa. Sed Orbes
Altrixeri, & nidi ſublimis Regio Cœli
Immuti ſenii, & vultu immutabilis uno,
Perpetuum ſervant ſolida & ſuccra tenorem.*

The Verſes are G. Buchanan's in his Book De Sphæra, which I thus Tranſlate, and therewithal conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon its ſhapes doth vary,
And change from this to that; nor can it tarry
Long in one ſtate, but with it ſelf doth jar,
Kills and is kill'd in endless Civil War.
New form'd again, 'tis but to die; the frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Minds the ſame.
But that above the Spheres, the Heavens on high,
In which GOD Reigns in glorious Majesty,
Free from old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Always preſents it ſelf in equal Grace.

Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.

FINIS.
